As played by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston men, it is guaranteed to restore something of the old pride in youthful, pioneering America before we had pulled ourselves up by the bootstraps to the troublesome position of a world power.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN

Orchestras In Boom

July 9/36

Three Major Groups Are Reporting Great Success With Promise Of Better Business

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK, (AP).

THE theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt. The orchestral "big three" has administered it.

Three of the finest symphony orchestras in the East, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society.

Boston had not had a visit by a first-string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. The city had grown to think Boston Symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately twenty days ahead of last year.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 2 - 1936

Boston Symphony Orchestra Which Will Be Heard At Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitky, conductor, now in Paris has cabled that the opening number at the festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge on August 13 will be Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from

Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. —, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale. The Chorale Prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Witsuntide Hymn"; the German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold according to announcement today by trustees and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

JUL 19 1936

Three Major Orchestras Face Prosperous Season

NEW YORK, July 18—(AP)—The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt.

The orchestral "Big Three" has administered it.

For three of the finest symphony orchestras in the East, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society.

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

* * *

Boston had not had a visit by a first string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and condutcors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted, they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately 20 days ahead of last year. The shorter Tuesday series is 30 days ahead. The concerts in New York are in better shape, he added, although accurate estimate is impossible, because they have been increased in number from eight to ten.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boom. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

* * *

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which of course really represents an increase.

Last year Toscanini was to conduct. This winter he is not. The management had resigned itself to a slump, but seems likely to reap an increase, even without Toscanini.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 2 - 1936

BACH'S CHORALE IS CHOSEN TO OPEN BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

A cable from Dr Serge Koussevitzky now in France, identifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, on August 13 as Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm-Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the three day festival in the Berkshires, August 13, 15 and 16. Olin Downes music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, August 12, 14 and 16 will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale.

The Chorale Prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn:" The German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heilirer Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1932 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold acording to announcement today by trustees and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 2 - 1936

BACH PRELUDE TO OPEN MUSIC FESTIVAL

A cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now in France, identifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge on Aug. 13 as Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, Aug. 13, 15 and 18. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16 will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 5 - 1936

Koussevitsky to Open Festival With Chorale

A cable from Dr Gerge Koussevitsky, now in France, indentifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, on August 13 as Bach's chorale prelude, "Kom Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with the Boston Symphony orchestra in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, August 13, 15, and 16, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge, August 12, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale.

The chorale prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn." The German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Kom Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonberg set for large orchestration in 1932 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold, according to announcement by trustees, and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES 2/36

Cultural Pursuit Aided By Financial Upturn

By JOHN SELBY

New York, Aug. 1 (AP) — The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt.

The orchestral "big three" has administered it.

For three of the finest symphony orchestras in the east, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society.

Accounts for Gain

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain, the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

Boston had not had a visit by a first string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted, they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

'Cash Position'

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately 20 days ahead of last year. The shorter Tuesday series is 30 days ahead. The concerts in New York are in better shape, he adds, although accurate estimate is impossible, because they have been increased in number from eight to 10.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

Resigned to Slump

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which of course really represents an increase.

Last year Toscanini was to conduct. This winter he is not. The management had resigned itself to a slump, but seems likely to reap an increase, even without Toscanini.

N.Y. American

The Loudspeaker

Boston Band Gives Lesson to Radio's Musicians in How to Play "Blue Danube."

By Louis Reid

Armchair Impressions: I trust radio's busy bandmen, who all too carelessly find a regular place on their music racks for "The Blue Danube," were listening to the Boston Symphony's "pop" concert. If so, they received a lesson in how the daddy of all waltzes should be played.

Rep. Virginia E. Jenckes.

Here was the waltz for the first time this year in all its zestful spirit, its ingratiating melodic charm, its hauntingly insistent suggestion that youth and time are fleeting and you'd better seize the day ...There was no slurring over of various phrases. Respect was given the composer's finely measured accents. Old Johann is resting easier in his grave today. He had been having quite a turbulent time of it of late.

* * *

It was the kind of playing that halts conversation, bridge-bidding, newspaper-rattling...For beneath the infectious lilt of "The Blue Danube" there's an inescapable wistful sadness, evoking the faded picture of a gay and glamorous civilization. Not only is the old Vienna gone, but those who, like its music, were once young and charming and full of the joy of living.

* * *

The Boston band also focussed its attention upon old America. It dusted off one of the best of the hoedowns, gave new and uncommonly rich and hearty expression to "The Arkansas Traveler"...For those despairing of our growing effeteness, of our standardization, of the pasing of the oldtime ruggedness of soil and personality, here's a musical dish made to order.

As played by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston men, it is guaranteed to restore something of the old pride in youthful, pioneering America before we had pulled ourselves up by the bootstraps to the troublesome position of a world power.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN

Orchestras In Boom

[illegible]

Three Major Groups Are Reporting Great Success With Promise Of Better Business

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK, (AP).

THE theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt. The orchestral "big three" has administered it.

Three of the finest symphony orchestras in the East, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society.

Boston had not had a visit by a first-string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. The city had grown to think Boston Symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately twenty days ahead of last year.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 2 - 1936

Boston Symphony Orchestra Which Will Be Heard At Berkshire Symphonic Festival

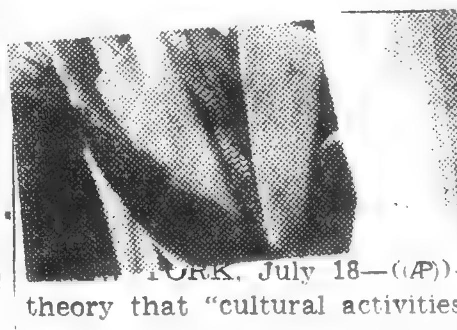
Dr. Serge Koussevitky, conductor, now in Paris has cabled that the opening number at the festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge on August 13 will be Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony orchestra in preparation for the three day festival in the Berkshires, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale. The Chorale Prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Witsuntide Hymn"; the German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold according to announcement today by trustees and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

[illegible]



YORK, July 18—(AP)—The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt.

The orchestral "Big Three" has administered it.

For three of the finest symphony orchestras in the East, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society.

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

* * *

Boston had not had a visit by a first string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and condutcors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted, they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately 20 days ahead of last year. The shorter Tuesday series is 30 days ahead. The concerts in New York are in better shape, he added, although accurate estimate is impossible, because they have been increased in number from eight to ten.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boom. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

* * *

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which of course really represents an increase.

Last year Toscanini was to conduct. This winter he is not. The management had resigned itself to a slump, but seems likely to reap an increase, even without Toscanini.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 2 - 1936

BACH'S CHORALE IS CHOSEN TO OPEN BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

A cable from Dr Serge Koussevitzky now in France, identifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, on August 13 as Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm-Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the three day festival in the Berkshires, August 13, 15 and 16. Olin Downes music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, August 12, 14 and 16 will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale.

The Chorale Prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn:" The German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heilirer Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1932 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold acording to announcement today by trustees and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 2 - 1936

BACH PRELUDE TO OPEN MUSIC FESTIVAL

A cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now in France, identifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge on Aug. 13 as Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, Aug. 13, 15 and 18. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16 will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 5 - 1936

Koussevitsky to Open Festival With Chorale

A cable from Dr Gerge Koussevitsky, now in France, indentifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, on August 13 as Bach's chorale prelude, "Kom Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with the Boston Symphony orchestra in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, August 13, 15, and 16, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge, August 12, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale.

The chorale prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn." The German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Kom Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonberg set for large orchestration in 1932 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold, according to announcement by trustees, and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

REDUCTION

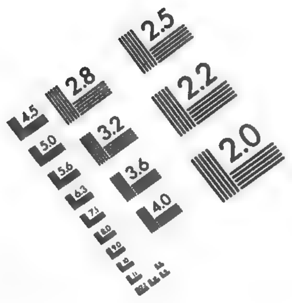
RATIO

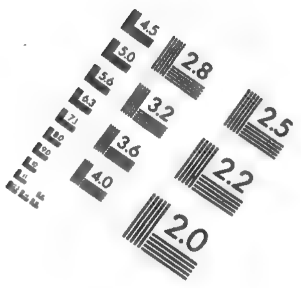
16x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

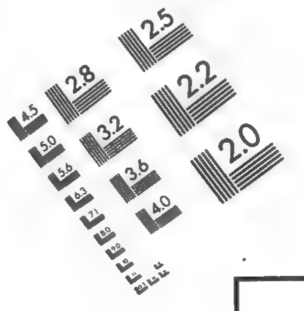
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

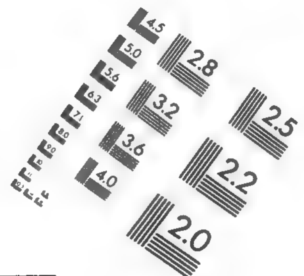
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

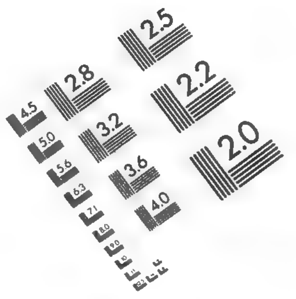


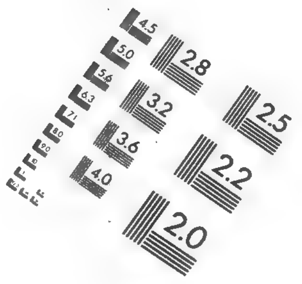


PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC





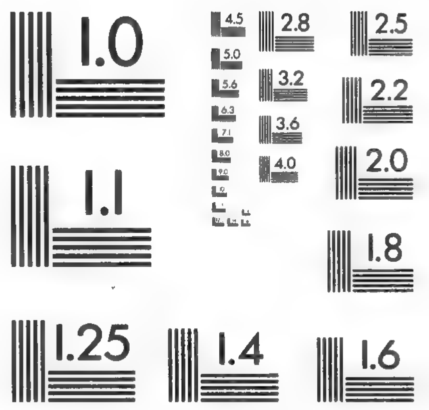




200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



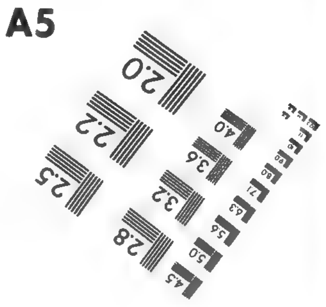
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.0 mm

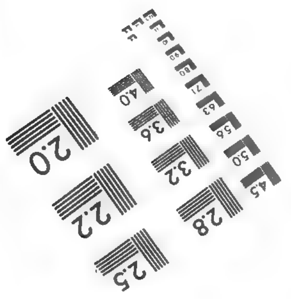
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.5 mm

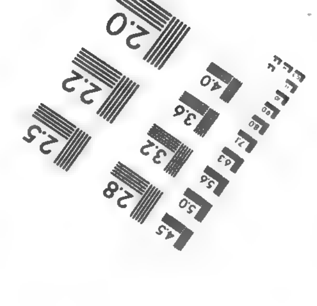
A5

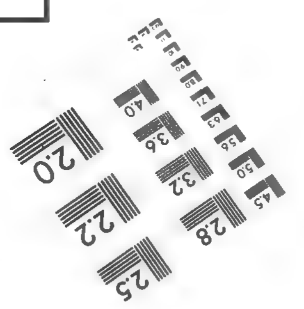




A4

A3





PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 5 - 1936

50

Berkshire Festival Week Tops Program With Boston Symphony's Outdoor Concerts

Throng Expected to Come From Many States Reflects Interest in Orchestra Leader's Hope to Build Up Summer Music Center

Series Scheduled for August 13, 15 and 16 Will Be Koussevitzky's First Open Air Performances in This Country—To Be Held At Holmwood Between Stockbridge and Lenox—Other Attractions of Week Include Ted Shawn Dancers, Chamber Music Concerts and Lectures by Olin Downes

FROM THE NORTH, east, south and west, music lovers will assemble in the Berkshire hills in August to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. The occassion will be the third annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

Festival records show that this throng will come from distant Kansas and Florida, from the Hudson and Connecticut valleys and all neighboring New England states. Subscriptions have been taken in a score of states reflecting the widespread interest in the approaching event and in Dr Koussevitzky's ambition—to build here in Western Massachusetts a great festival that will rival some day those of Europe. There is no reason why Americans should have to go to Europe to enjoy great music in the summer time, in his opinion.

Never before has Dr Koussevitzky conducted out of door concerts in America. And it is not because he has not had the opportunity. He has declined former invitations because of the compromises that have stood in the way of realizing an outstanding artistic success. He says the Berkshire plan appealed to him from the first because of the consistently high quality it exacted for its program and because of the natural beauty of the setting. Many years ago Dr Koussevitzky chartered a boat, assembled his orchestra and cruised up the Volga river to bring great music to inland Russia.

OLIN DOWNES

(Photo New York Times Studio)
Music critic of New York Times will lecture on symphonies.

Outdoor Auditorium at Holmwood

The scene of the festival this year will be at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's lovely estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, on Route 7, the north-south highway through the Berkshires. A huge canopy will be placed on the gently sloping lawn from which can be seen in the immediate foreground Laurel lake in Lee and in the distance the Hoosac range. Great cathedral pines form a horseshoe about the festival grounds. The approach from the main highway is through an avenue of more pines. Adjacent to the concert field is a parking area sufficient for more than 3000 cars. This field will be under police supervision and parking will be free.

An an additional attraction, the festival has arranged a series of three lectures on the symphonies by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. These lectures to be given at the Berkshire Playhouse will be on August 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and August 16 at 12.15 noon.

Three Symphony Programs

The complete programs for the three concerts will be as follows:—

August 13 at 8.30 p. m.
Bach	Chorale
Beethoven	Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven	Symphony No 7
Sibelius	Symphony No 2
August 15 at 4.30 p. m.
Handel	Larghetto
Moussorgsky	Prelude to "Khovanstchina"
Debussy	Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"
Rimsky-Korsakov	Spanish Caprice
Brahms	Symphony No 2
August 16 at 8.30 p. m.
Mendelssohn	"Italian" Symphony
Wagner	Prelude to "Lohengrin"
	Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"
Tschaikovsky	Symphony No 5

It is interesting to note that each of the symphonies chosen by Dr Koussevitzky is associated with the out of doors and reflects a period in the composer's life when he was closely in touch with nature. Of Portschach, where he wrote the Second symphony, Brahms wrote to a friend:—

"In this beautiful place, so many melodies fly about, that one must be careful not to tread upon them."

Beethoven wrote most of the Seventh symphony among hills and meadows of Wienerwald near Vienna in the summer of 1912. Tschaikovsky was at his country home at Frovlovskoe near Moscow when he composed his Fifth symphony in 1888. The Sibelius symphony reflects the forests, sunlight and mountains of the land in which the composer lives. Mendelssohn wrote the "Italian" symphony upon returning from Italy in 1831 and it is filled with the gay carnival spirit.

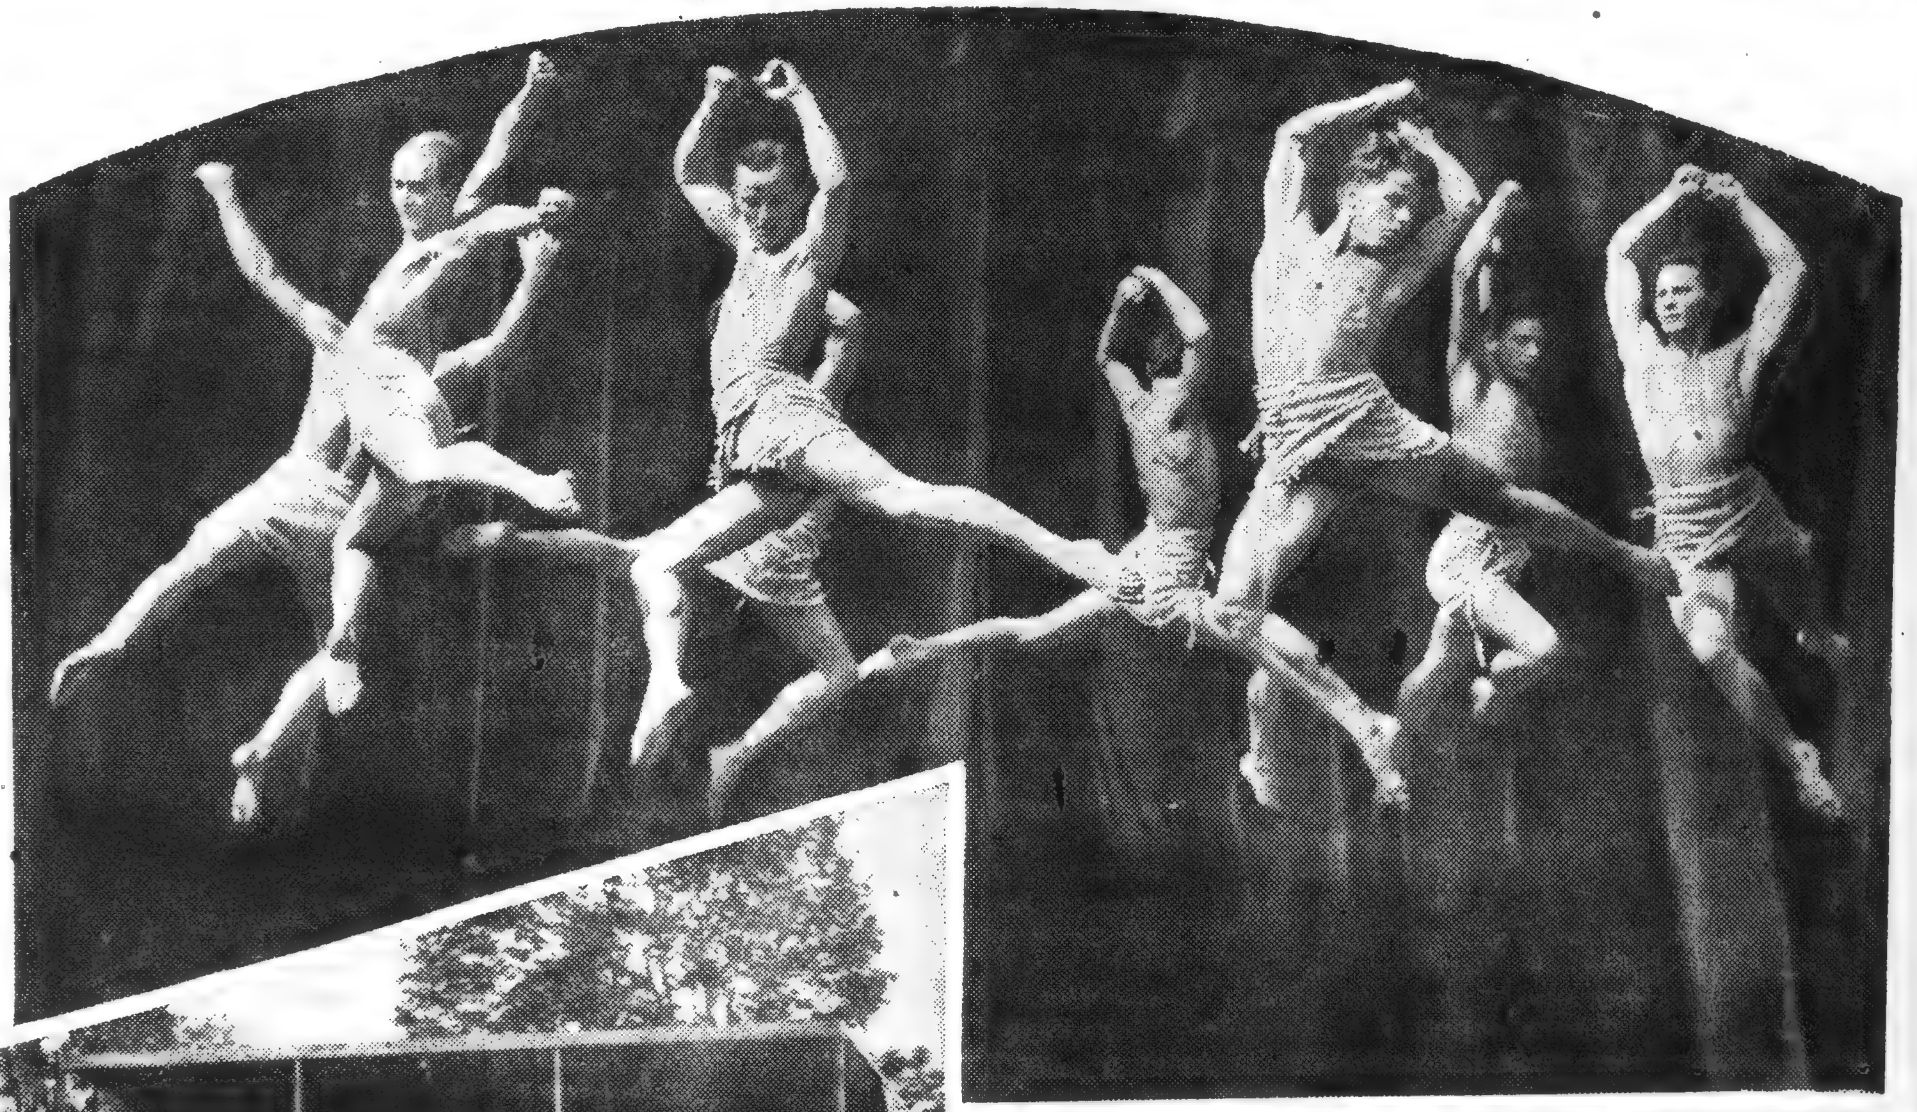
Other Events of Festival Week

Many other attractions will be offered festival week. William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, has arranged for an outstanding performance at his summer theater. Ted Shawn and his male dancers will present a lecture-demonstration at their summer studio, Jacob's Pillow in West Becket. Chamber music will be played on Sunday afternoon, the 16th, at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's music temple in Pittsfield, at Miss Katherine Frazier's Playhouse-in-the-hills at Cummington and at Jacques Gordon' Music mountain in Falls village.

There will also be a showing of drawings of the orchestra members by Gerome Brush, son of the well known painter, George deForest Brush.

Many familiar names are found among the supporters of this year's festival. Among them are Albert Spalding, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Norman H. Davis, Owen Johnson, Prof Philip Marshall Brown, Adolf A. Berle Jr., Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs Bruce Crane, Mrs W. Murray Crane, Mr and Mrs Samuel G. Colt, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Watson, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Robert G. Stewart, Giraud Foster, Grenville N. Winthrop, Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mr and Mrs Walter Atherton, Mrs John Bross Lloyd, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mrs Ramsay Hoguet, Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia, Miss Gerturde Robinson Smith, John C. Lynch, Mr and Mrs William A. Whittlesey, Mr and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller, Miss Marjorie Miller, Walter Prichard Eaton, Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway, Mrs Henry L. Dawes, Mrs Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Dr William Mather Lewis, Sidney Howard, Prof and Mrs Charles L. Safford and many others.

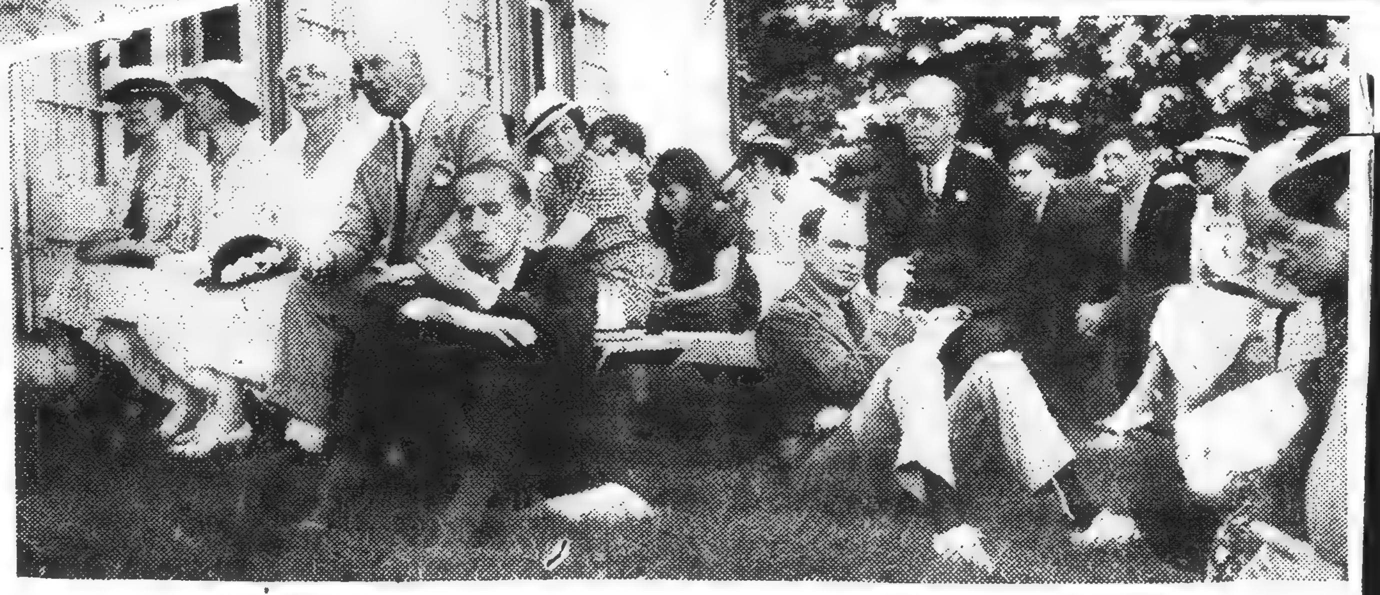
Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, summer resident of Glendale, is president of the festival. She will return from Europe next month and in her absence, George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk of the board of trustees, is chairman of the coordinating committee. Vice presidents are Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox and New York and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge is the treasurer. Miss Elizabeth Downing, executive secretary, is in charge of the office at Stockbridge and will be pleased to answer all inquiries concerning the festival.



TED SHAWN'S TROUP TO DANCE AT JACOB'S PILLOW

FESTIVAL CROWD OF 1935

CONCERT HOUR AT MUSIC BOX, CUMMINGTON



SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT MUSIC TEMPLE, SOUTH MOUNTAIN

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 3 - 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY CHOOSES CHORALE PRELUDE FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, July 3.—A cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now in France, identifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, on Aug. 13, as Bach's chorale prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony orchestra, in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Glendale.

The chorale prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn"; the German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold, according to announcement today by trustees, and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

JUL 12 1936

Brisk Demand For Festival Seats Noted

Koussevitzky Announces His Plans for Opening of Series

Practically all boxes for the August Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been sold and business in reserved seats is reported brisk.

With that announcement from Stockbridge, where the festival is to be staged, comes a cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitsky in France, declaring his intention to open the concert series with Arnold Schonberg's score of Bach's chorale prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky is expected to return to Boston late this month to be ready for rehearsals for the festival programs to be staged on the Margaret Emerson estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 12 1936

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Three Festival Concerts.

Ballet will muscle its way into the hallowed "Cavalleria"-"Pagliacci" combination at Cincinnati's Zoo opera this week and dislodge the Mascagni work from its traditional place. "Nocturne and Dance" [music by John Haussermann, choreography by Blake Scott of the Chicago City Opera company ballet] is paired with "Pagliacci" tonight, Wednesday, and Friday.

The Berkshire hills, those round green mountains you hit between Boston and Albany, will provide the setting for three festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra on Aug. 13, 15, and 16. Serge Koussevitzky directs, and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, lectures on the principal symphonies. The Berkshire symphonic festival will be held on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

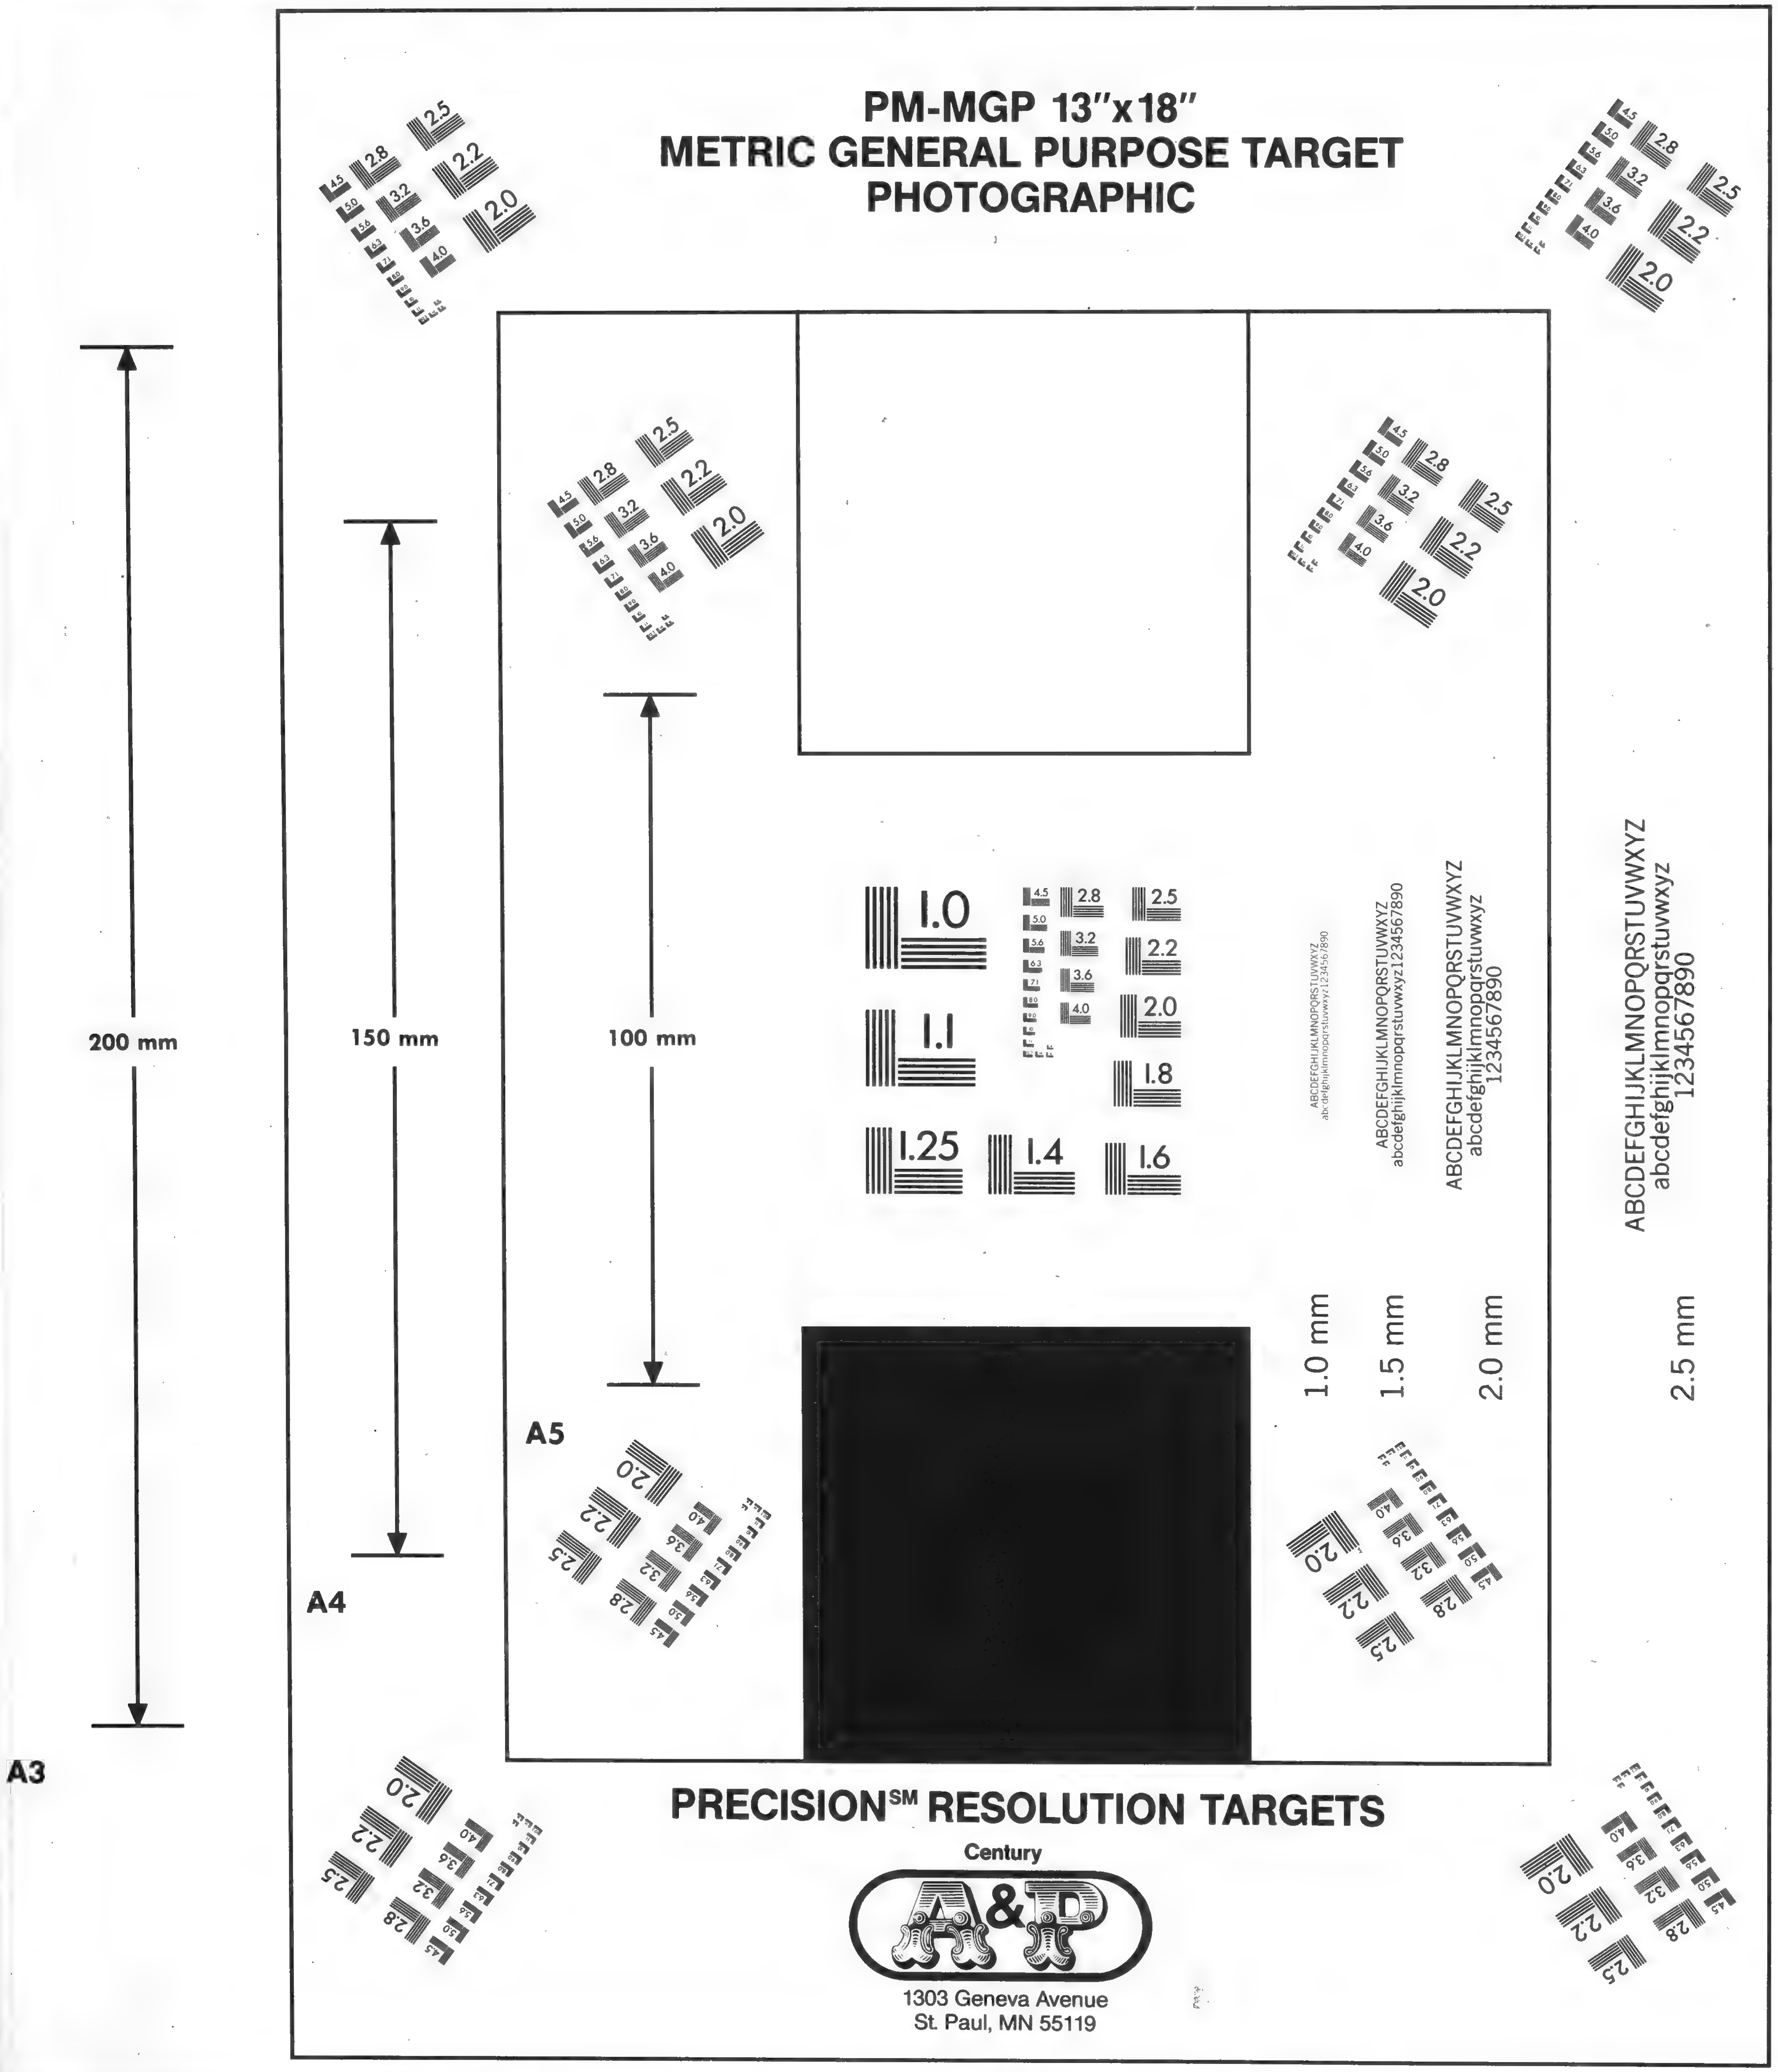
There will be organ music from 7 to 7:30 in the University of Chicago chapel every evening this week except Saturday. Among the artists announced are Edward Eigenschenk, Erwin Fischer, and Cecil Michener Smith. The last named will accompany Ruth Emery Riddle, soprano, on Wednesday.

Barrett Spach, organist and choir director of the Fourth Presbyterian church, announces a series of four Tuesday evening organ recitals during July. The programs are under the auspices of the American Guild of Organists.

The American Conservatory of Music will present a joint recital by Rudolph Reuter, pianist, and Hans Hess, cellist, in Kimball hall this coming Wednesday afternoon. Juul Rosine Hess is to accompany the cellist.

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 5 - 1936

50

Berkshire Festival Week Tops Program With Boston Symphony's Ou

Throng Expected to Come From Many States Reflects Interest in Orchestra Leader's Hope to Build Up Summer Music Center

Series Scheduled for August 13, 15 and 16 Will Be Koussevitzky's First Open Air Performances in This Country—To Be Held At Holmwood Between Stockbridge and Lenox—Other Attractions of Week Include Ted Shawn Dancers, Chamber Music Concerts and Lectures by Olin Downes

FROM THE NORTH, east, south and west, music lovers will assemble in the Berkshire hills in August to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. The occasion will be the third annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

Festival records show that this throng will come from distant Kansas and Florida, from the Hudson and Connecticut valleys and all neighboring New England states. Subscriptions have been taken in a score of states reflecting the widespread interest in the approaching event and in Dr Koussevitzky's ambition—to build here in Western Massachusetts a great festival that will rival some day those of Europe. There is no reason why Americans should have to go to Europe to enjoy great music in the summer time, in his opinion.

Never before has Dr Koussevitzky conducted out of door concerts in America. And it is not because he has not had the opportunity. He has declined former invitations because of the compromises that have stood in the way of realizing an outstanding artistic success. He says the Berkshire plan appealed to him from the first because of the consistently high quality it exacted for its program and because of the natural beauty of the setting. Many years ago Dr Koussevitzky chartered a boat, assembled his orchestra and cruised up the Volga river to bring great music to inland Russia.

OLIN DOWNES

(Photo New York Times Studio)
Music critic of New York Times will lecture on symphonies.

Outdoor Auditorium at Holmwood

The scene of the festival this year will be at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's lovely estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, on Route 7, the north-south highway through the Berkshires. A huge canopy will be placed on the gently sloping lawn from which can be seen in the immediate foreground Laurel lake in Lee and in the distance the Hoosac range. Great cathedral pines form a horseshoe about the festival grounds. The approach from the main highway is through an avenue of more pines. Adjacent to the concert field is a parking area sufficient for more than 3000 cars. This field will be under police supervision and parking will be free.

An an additional attraction, the festival has arranged a series of three lectures on the symphonies by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. These lectures to be given at the Berkshire Playhouse will be on August 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and August 16 at 12.15 noon.

Three Symphony Programs

The complete programs for the three concerts will be as follows:—

August 13 at 8.30 p. m.

Bach	Chorale
Beethoven	Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven	Symphony No 7
Sibelius	Symphony No 2

August 15 at 4.30 p. m.

Handel	Larghetto
Moussorgsky	Prelude to "Khovanstchina"
Debussy	Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"
Rimsky-Korsakov	Spanish Caprice
Brahms	Symphony No 2

August 16 at 8.30 p. m.

Mendelssohn	"Italian" Symphony
Wagner	Prelude to "Lohengrin" Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"
Tschaikovsky	Symphony No 5

It is interesting to note that each of the symphonies chosen by Dr Koussevitzky is associated with the out of doors and reflects a period in the composer's life when he was closely in touch with nature. Of Portschach, where he wrote the Second symphony, Brahms wrote to a friend:—

"In this beautiful place, so many melodies fly about, that one must be careful not to tread upon them."

Beethoven wrote most of the Seventh symphony among hills and meadows of Wienerwald near Vienna in the summer of 1912. Tschaikovsky was at his country home at Frovlovskoe near Moscow when he composed his Fifth symphony in 1888. The Sibelius symphony reflects the forests, sunlight and mountains of the land in which the composer lives. Mendelssohn wrote the "Italian" symphony upon returning from Italy in 1831 and it is filled with the gay carnival spirit.

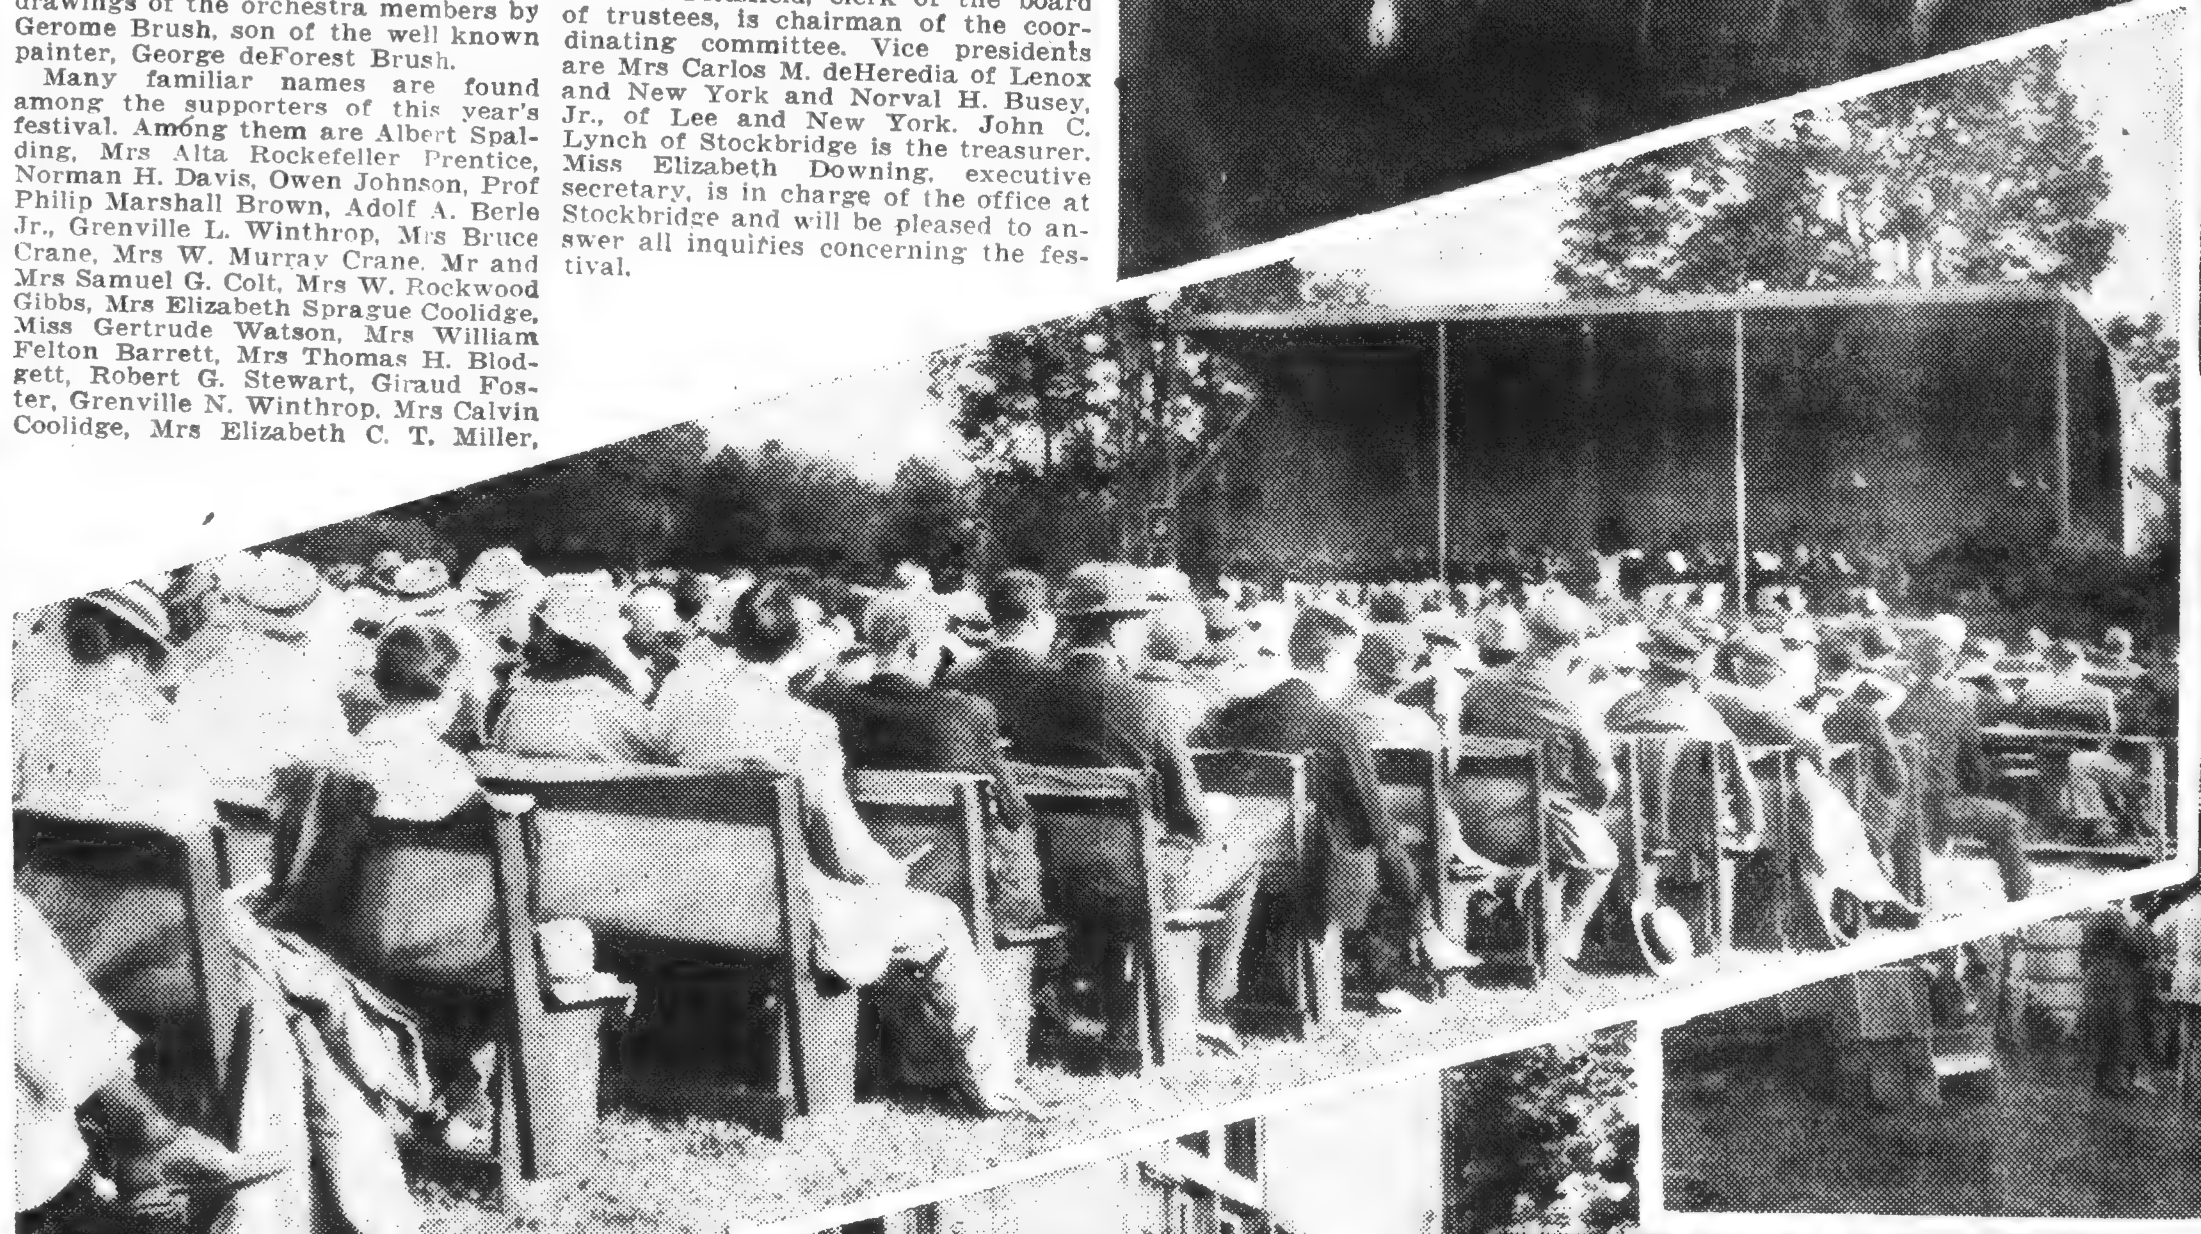
Other Events of Festival Week

Many other attractions will be offered festival week. William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, has arranged for an outstanding performance at his summer theater. Ted Shawn and his male dancers will present a lecture-demonstration at their summer studio, Jacob's Pillow in West Becket. Chamber music will be played on Sunday afternoon, the 16th, at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's music temple in Pittsfield, at Miss Katherine Frazier's Playhouse-in-the-hills at Cummington and at Jacques Gordon' Music mountain in Falls village.

There will also be a showing of drawings of the orchestra members by Gerome Brush, son of the well known painter, George deForest Brush.

Many familiar names are found among the supporters of this year's festival. Among them are Albert Spalding, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Norman H. Davis, Owen Johnson, Prof Philip Marshall Brown, Adolf A. Berle Jr., Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs Bruce Crane, Mrs W. Murray Crane, Mr and Mrs Samuel G. Colt, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Watson, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Robert G. Stewart, Giraud Foster, Grenville N. Winthrop, Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mr and Mrs Walter Atherton, Mrs John Bross Lloyd, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mrs Ramsay Hoguet, Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia, Miss Gerturde Robinson Smith, John C. Lynch, Mr and Mrs William A. Whittlesey, Mr and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller, Miss Marjorie Miller, Walter Prichard Eaton, Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway, Mrs Henry L. Dawes, Mrs Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Dr William Mather Lewis, Sidney Howard, Prof and Mrs Charles L. Safford and many others.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, summer resident of Glendale, is president of the festival. She will return from Europe next month and in her absence, George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk of the board of trustees, is chairman of the coordinating committee. Vice presidents are Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox and New York and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge is the treasurer. Miss Elizabeth Downing, executive secretary, is in charge of the office at Stockbridge and will be pleased to answer all inquiries concerning the festival.



FESTIVAL CROWD OF 1935

TED SHAWN'S TR
CONCERT HOU

SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT MUSIC TEMPLE, SOUTH MOUNTAIN

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 3 - 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY CHOOSES CHORALE PRELUDE FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, July 3.—A cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now in France, identifies the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, on Aug. 13, as Bach's chorale prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony orchestra, in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few weeks, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Glendale.

The chorale prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn"; the German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold, according to announcement today by trustees, and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

JUL 12 1936

Brisk Demand For Festival Seats Noted

Koussevitzky Announces His Plans for Opening of Series

Practically all boxes for the August Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been sold and business in reserved seats is reported brisk.

With that announcement from Stockbridge, where the festival is to be staged, comes a cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitsky in France, declaring his intention to open the concert series with Arnold Schonberg's score of Bach's chorale prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky is expected to return to Boston late this month to be ready for rehearsals for the festival programs to be staged on the Margaret Emerson estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 12 1936

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Three Festival Concerts.

Ballet will muscle its way into the hallowed "Cavalleria"-"Pagliacci" combination at Cincinnati's Zoo opera this week and dislodge the Mascagni work from its traditional place. "Nocturne and Dance" [music by John Haussermann, choreography by Blake Scott of the Chicago City Opera company ballet] is paired with "Pagliacci" tonight, Wednesday, and Friday.

The Berkshire hills, those round green mountains you hit between Boston and Albany, will provide the setting for three festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra on Aug. 13, 15, and 16. Serge Koussevitzky directs, and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, lectures on the principal symphonies. The Berkshire symphonic festival will be held on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

There will be organ music from 7 to 7:30 in the University of Chicago chapel every evening this week except Saturday. Among the artists announced are Edward Eigenschenk, Erwin Fischer, and Cecil Michener Smith. The last named will accompany Ruth Emery Riddle, soprano, on Wednesday.

Barrett Spach, organist and choir director of the Fourth Presbyterian church, announces a series of four Tuesday evening organ recitals during July. The programs are under the auspices of the American Guild of Organists.

The American Conservatory of Music will present a joint recital by Rudolph Reuter, pianist, and Hans Hess, cellist, in Kimball hall this coming Wednesday afternoon. Juul Rosine Hess is to accompany the cellist.

50

e Festival Week Tops Program With Boston Symphony's Outdoor Concerts

ected to Come From Many States
Reflects Interest in Orchestra Leader's Hope to Build Up Summer Music Center

August 13, 15 and 16 Will Be Koussevitzky's First Open Air Performances in This e Held At Holmwood Between Stockbridge and Lenox—Other Attractions of Week awn Dancers, Chamber Music Concerts and Lectures by Olin Downes of the setting. Many years ago Dr Koussevitzky chartered a boat, assembled his orchestra and cruised up the Volga river to bring great music to inland Russia.

Outdoor Auditorium at Holmwood

The scene of the festival this year will be at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's lovely estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, on Route 7, the north-south highway through the Berkshires. A huge canopy will be placed on the gently sloping lawn from which can be seen in the immediate foreground Laurel lake in Lee and in the distance the Hoosac range. Great cathedral pines form a horseshoe about the festival grounds. The approach from the main highway is through an avenue of more pines. Adjacent to the concert field is a parking area sufficient for more than 3000 cars. This field will be under police supervision and parking will be free.

An an additional attraction, the festival has arranged a series of three lectures on the symphonies by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. These lectures to be given at the Berkshire Playhouse will be on August 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and August 16 at 12.15 noon.

Three Symphony Programs

The complete programs for the three concerts will be as follows:—

August 13 at 8.30 p. m.

Bach ....Chorale
Beethoven ....Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven ....Symphony No 7
Sibelius ....Symphony No 2

August 15 at 4.30 p. m.

Handel ....Larghetto
Moussorgsky ..Prelude to "Khovanstchina"
Debussy ....
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"
Rimsky-Korsakov ....Spanish Caprice
Brahms ....Symphony No 2

August 16 at 8.30 p. m.

Mendelssohn ...."Italian" Symphony
Wagner ....Prelude to "Lohengrin"
......Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"
Tschaikovsky ....Symphony No 5

It is interesting to note that each of the symphonies chosen by Dr Koussevitzky is associated with the out of doors and reflects a period in the composer's life when he was closely in touch with nature. Of Portschach, where he wrote the Second symphony, Brahms wrote to a friend:—

"In this beautiful place, so many melodies fly about, that one must be careful not to tread upon them."

Beethoven wrote most of the Seventh symphony among hills and meadows of Wienerwald near Vienna in the summer of 1912. Tschaikovsky was at his country home at Frovlovskoe near Moscow when he composed his Fifth symphony in 1888. The Sibelius symphony reflects the forests, sunlight and mountains of the land in which the composer lives. Mendelssohn wrote the "Italian" symphony upon returning from Italy in 1831 and it is filled with the gay carnival spirit.

Other Events of Festival Week

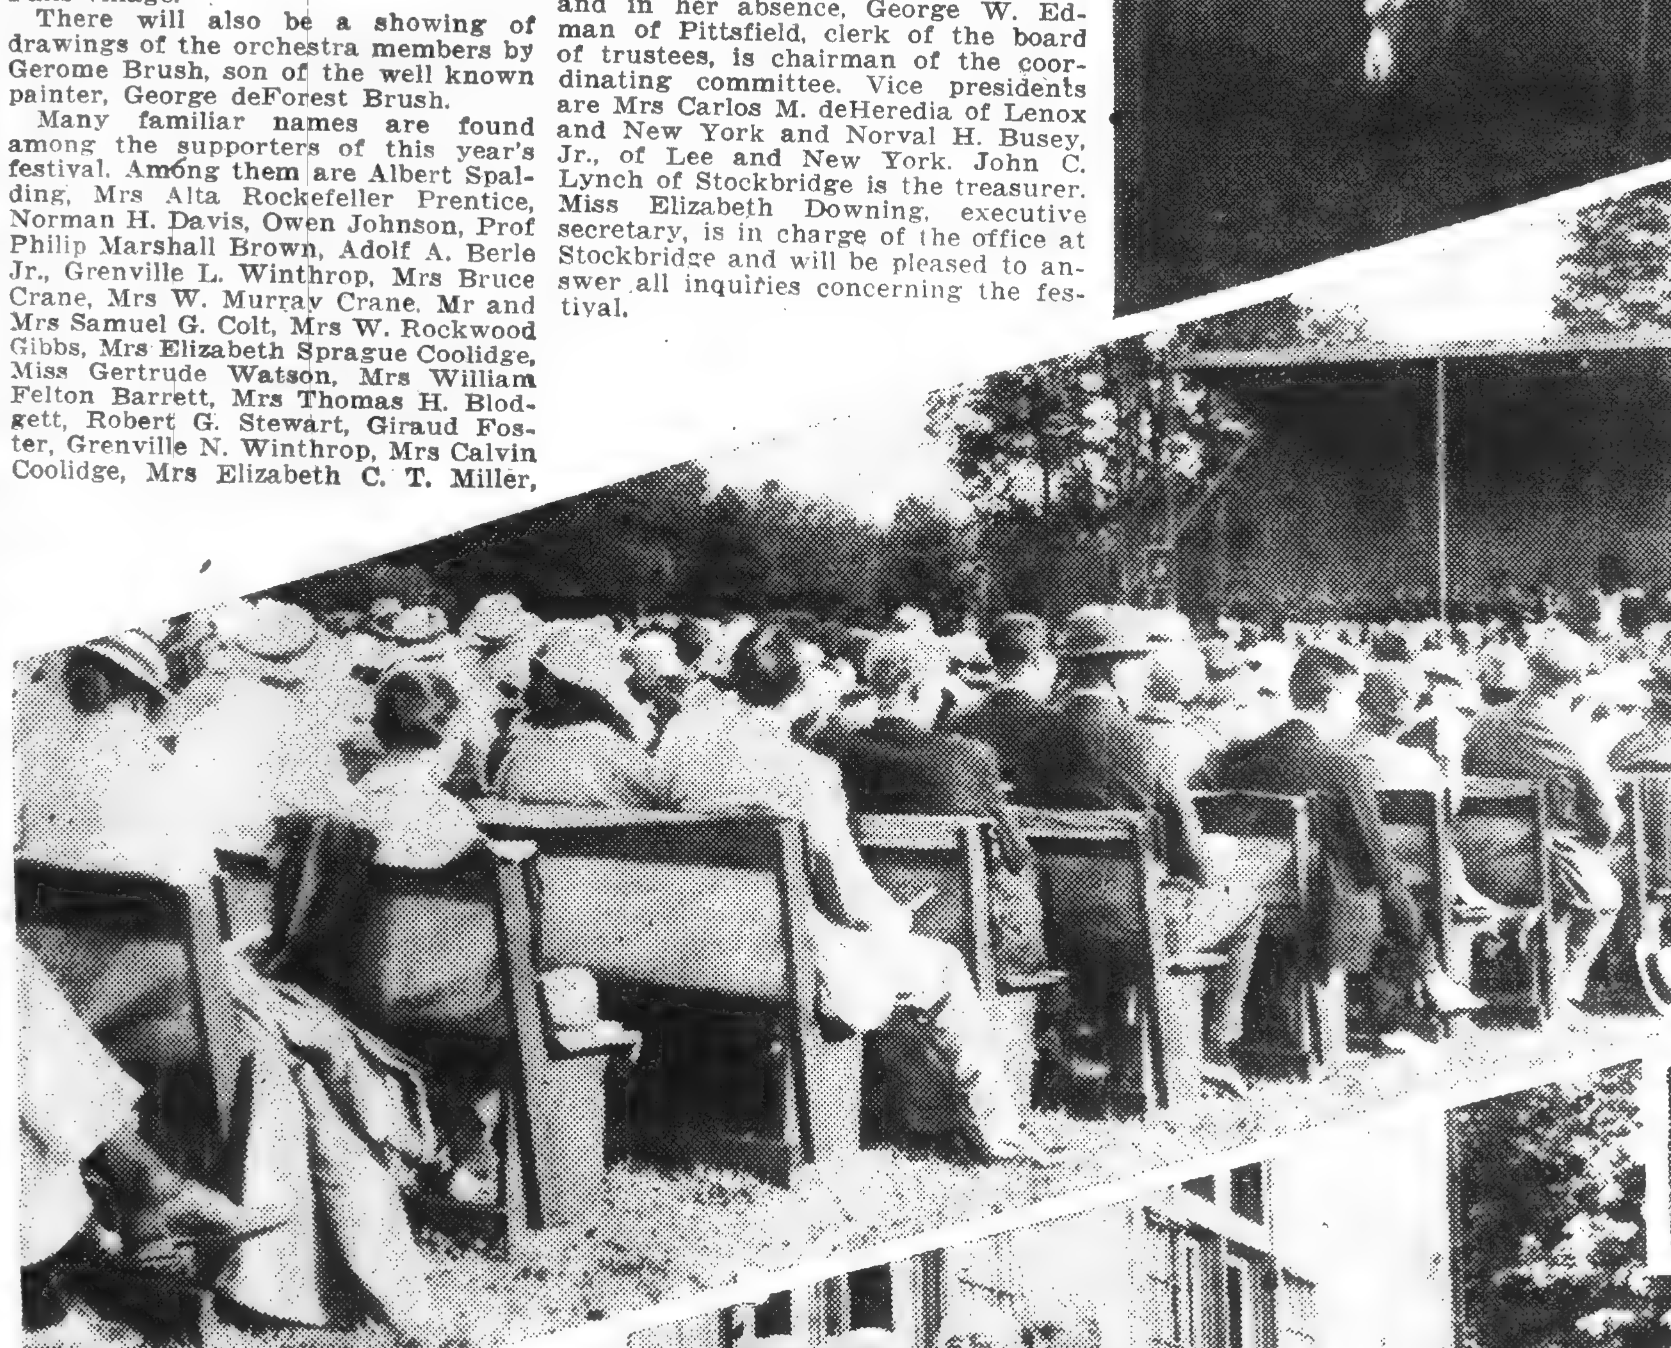
Many other attractions will be offered festival week. William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, has arranged for an outstanding performance at his summer theater. Ted Shawn and his male dancers will present a lecture-demonstration at their summer studio, Jacob's Pillow in West Becket. Chamber music will be played on Sunday afternoon, the 16th, at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's music temple in Pittsfield, at Miss Katherine Frazier's Playhouse-in-the-hills at Cummington and at Jacques Gordon' Music mountain in Falls village.

There will also be a showing of drawings of the orchestra members by Gerome Brush, son of the well known painter, George deForest Brush.

Many familiar names are found among the supporters of this year's festival. Among them are Albert Spalding, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Norman H. Davis, Owen Johnson, Prof Philip Marshall Brown, Adolf A. Berle Jr., Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs Bruce Crane, Mrs W. Murray Crane, Mr and Mrs Samuel G. Colt, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Watson, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Robert G. Stewart, Giraud Foster, Grenville N. Winthrop, Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mr and Mrs Walter Atherton, Mrs John Bross Lloyd, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mrs Ramsay Hoguet, Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia, Miss Gerturde Robinson Smith, John C. Lynch, Mr and Mrs William A. Whittlesey, Mr and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller, Miss Marjorie Miller, Walter Prichard Eaton, Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway, Mrs Henry L. Dawes, Mrs Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Dr William Mather Lewis, Sidney Howard, Prof and Mrs Charles L. Safford and many others.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, summer resident of Glendale, is president of the festival. She will return from Europe next month and in her absence, George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk of the board of trustees, is chairman of the coordinating committee. Vice presidents are Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox and New York and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge is the treasurer. Miss Elizabeth Downing, executive secretary, is in charge of the office at Stockbridge and will be pleased to answer all inquiries concerning the festival.

TED SHAWN'S TROUP TO DANCE AT JACOB'S PILLOW
CONCERT HOUR AT MUSIC BOX, CUMMINGTON



FESTIVAL CROWD OF 1935

SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT MUSIC TEMPLE, SOUTH MOUNTAIN

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

JUL 12 1936

Brisk Demand For Festival Seats Noted

Koussevitzky Announces His Plans for Opening of Series

Practically all boxes for the August Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been sold and business in reserved seats is reported brisk.

With that announcement from Stockbridge, where the festival is to be staged, comes a cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitsky in France, declaring his intention to open the concert series with Arnold Schonberg's score of Bach's chorale prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky is expected to return to Boston late this month to be ready for rehearsals for the festival programs to be staged on the Margaret Emerson estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The chorale prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn"; the German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding, as Parry points out, "the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation."

"Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) is the second of two chorale preludes which Arnold Schonber set for large orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic society.

Practically all of the boxes for the festival have been sold, according to announcement today by trustees, and there is a brisk demand for reserved seats.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 12 1936

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Three Festival Concerts.

Ballet will muscle its way into the hallowed "Cavalleria"-"Pagliacci" combination at Cincinnati's Zoo opera this week and dislodge the Mascagni work from its traditional place. "Nocturne and Dance" [music by John Haussermann, choreography by Blake Scott of the Chicago City Opera company ballet] is paired with "Pagliacci" tonight, Wednesday, and Friday.

The Berkshire hills, those round green mountains you hit between Boston and Albany, will provide the setting for three festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra on Aug. 13, 15, and 16. Serge Koussevitzky directs, and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, lectures on the principal symphonies. The Berkshire symphonic festival will be held on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

There will be organ music from 7 to 7:30 in the University of Chicago chapel every evening this week except Saturday. Among the artists announced are Edward Eigenschenk, Erwin Fischer, and Cecil Michener Smith. The last named will accompany Ruth Emery Riddle, soprano, on Wednesday.

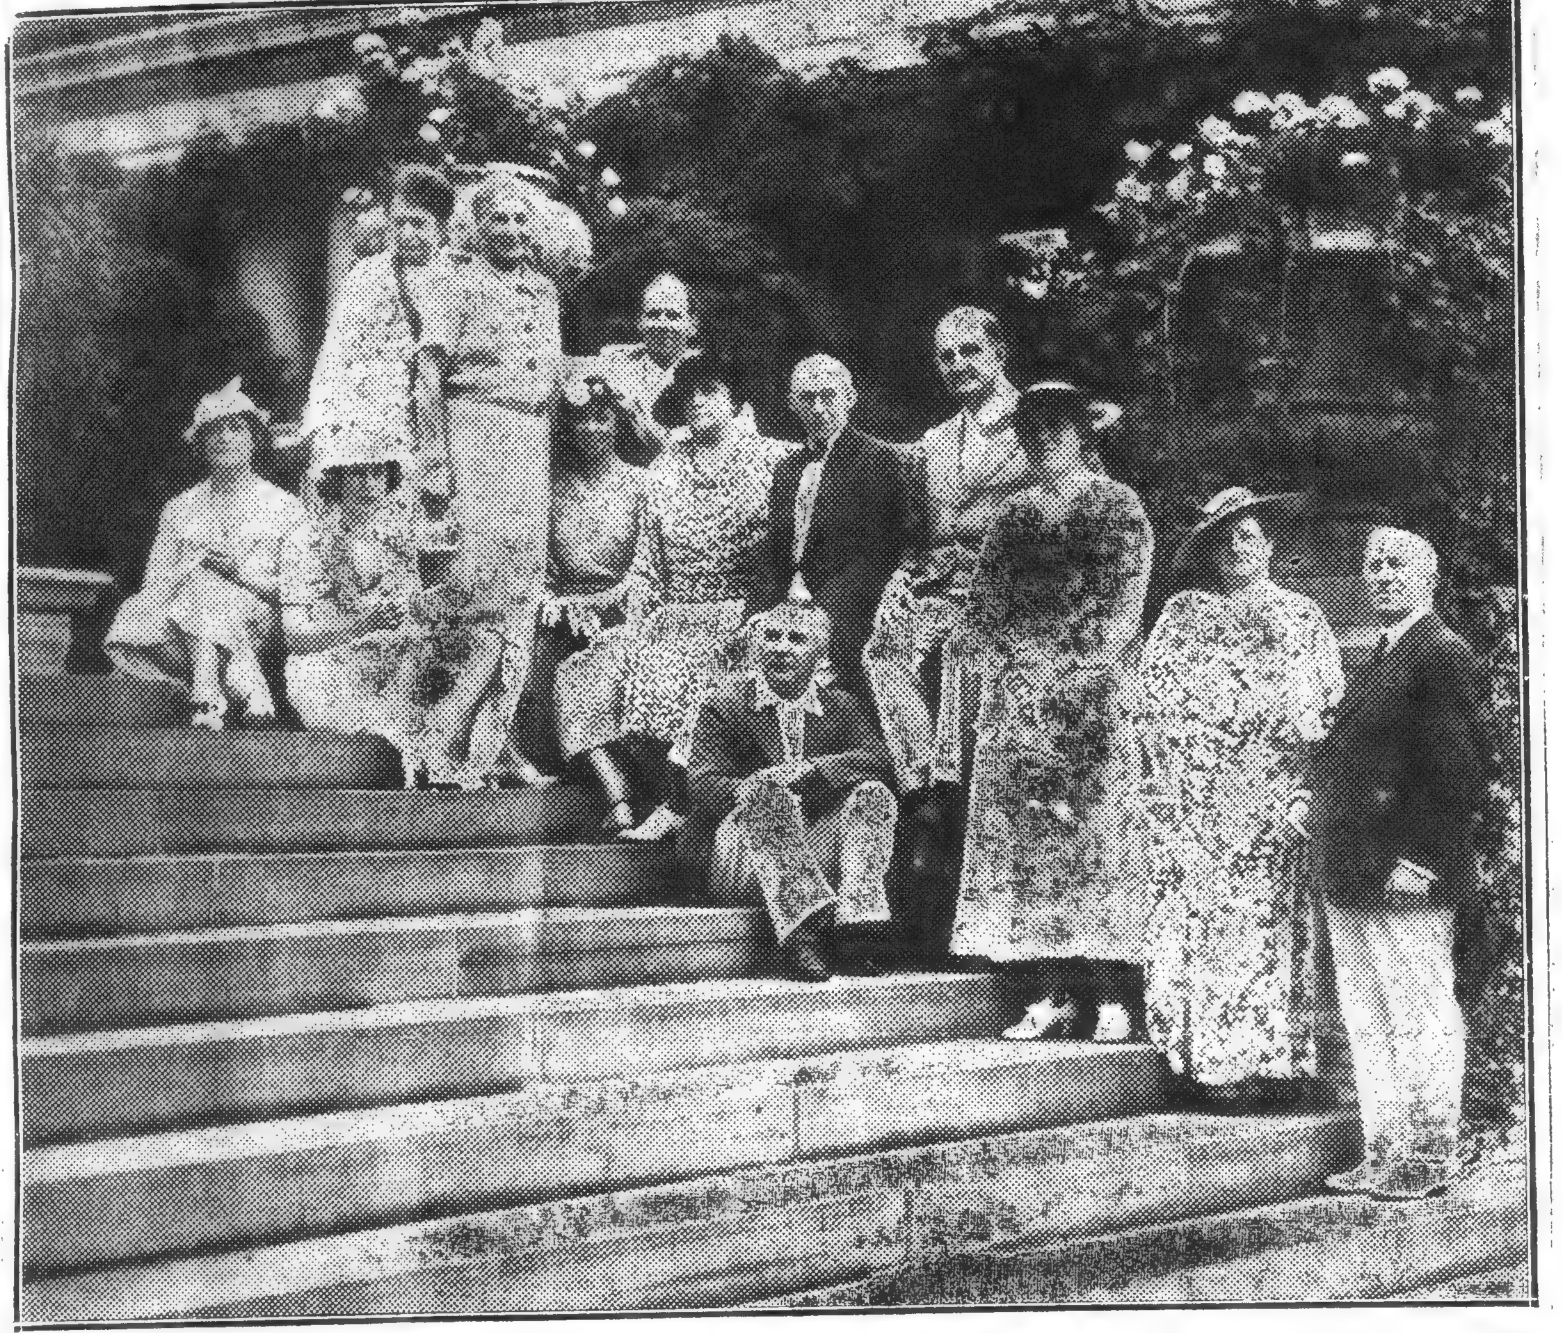
Barrett Spach, organist and choir director of the Fourth Presbyterian church, announces a series of four Tuesday evening organ recitals during July. The programs are under the auspices of the American Guild of Organists.

The American Conservatory of Music will present a joint recital by Rudolph Reuter, pianist, and Hans Hess, cellist, in Kimball hall this coming Wednesday afternoon. Juul Rosine Hess is to accompany the cellist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

July 11/36

Symphonic Festival Trustees Meet in Lenox With Acting President, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia



Festival trustees hear good news at Wheatleight:—Left to right (front): Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of Stockbridge, Miss Elizabeth Downing, executive secretary; Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge; (rear), Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, acting president; Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Great Barrington, George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn of Lenox, Attorney Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield, Edward S. Rogers of Lee, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Lee, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor and John C. Lynch of Stockbridge.

Actually 76 boxes have been sold and the remaining four have been spoken for, trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival were told yesterday as they met with the acting president, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia in Lenox yesterday. The trustees were also told that if the concerts were held today, there would be an assured audience of at least 2500.

Treasurer Reports

John C. Lynch, treasurer, of Stockbridge, reported that subscriptions were coming into the office at Stockbridge at a fair rate and inquiries were averaging 15 a day. He estimated that it would be necessary to dispose of the remaining boxes and the equivalent of 600 subscriptions for the $6 seats if the Festival is to be a success financially.

"Must Not Fail"

"We must not permit this great musical event in the Berkshires to fail at any cost," declared Mrs. deHeredia. "We may not appreciate it, but the eyes of the musical world and other recreational areas are on us. Our returns indicate a widespread response from Canada, and distant points in this country. But the goal is not reached yet. Write your friends, speak to them. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky are an attraction that we should be proud of. The Berkshires are on the map."

Other reports were submitted by Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, in charge of the Festival stamps; Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge in charge of construction at the Holmwood, where the concerts will be given August 13, 15 and 16, and George W. Edman of Pittsfield, chairman of the coordinating committee.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 19 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

FOR the first time in its history the Boston Symphony will perform beneath a canvas canopy when it gives its three programs at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. These concerts will also be the first ever conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky out of doors in America.

The festival will be held at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate of 500 acres of lawn, gardens and woodland, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., where the amphitheatre is located within a horseshoe of cathedral pines. The tent to be used will be 250 feet long and 120 feet wide. It will stand on ground that slopes down gradually some twelve feet to the platform.

A small cottage near Mrs. Emerson's villa will be used by Mr. Koussevitzky as dressing quarters during the festival, and the spacious stables will be placed at the disposal of the musicians for similar purposes. Still on display in the stables are many of Alfred Vanderbilt's carriages, which years ago were frequently seen on Berkshire roads. When Mrs. George Westinghouse owned the estate she frequently gave musicales in the adjoining gymnasium.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, will give three lectures on the symphonies, Aug. 12 and 14, at 11 A. M., and Aug. 16, at 12:15 P. M. The complete programs for the three concerts will be as follows:

Aug. 13, at 8:30 P. M.

Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist" .... Bach
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 2 .... Sibelius

AUG. 15, AT 4:30 P. M.

Larghetto .... Handel
Prelude to "Khovantchina" ..... Mussorgsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," Debussy
Symphony No. 2 .... Brahms

Aug. 16, at 8:30 P. M.

"Italian" symphony .... Mendelssohn
Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Symphony No. 5 .... Tchaikovsky

THIS CLIPPING
GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

JUL 13 1936

New England Musical Center Plan Helped By Boston Symphony

Berkshire Festival Held August 13, 15, 16 Near Stockbridge, Mass.

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month was hailed by trustees today as most propitious for the plan to create in New England a summer music center that will rival any of the Festival centers in Europe. The Festival will be held Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Said Albert Spalding, eminent American violinist and trustee of the Festival, "To have something that is 100 per cent quality, it must be met with 100 per cent response."

The trustees met with Mrs. Carlos de Heredia of Lenox and New York, acting president of the Festival. Among those present were John C. Lynch, treasurer, of Stockbridge, former vice president of the American Tel. and Tel. Company, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of New York and Lenox, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor, Mr. Edward S. Rogers, president of the Lee Savings Bank, Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, Mrs. Charles Griswold of Stockbridge, Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye and Great Barrington, and Attorney Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield.

Mrs. de Heredia who is acting president of the absence of Miss Bertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale declared, "This Festival has already attracted nation-wide response as a major musical attraction. We have received subscriptions from Canada, the far south and the middle west and of course a great many from points nearer home like New York the Hudson Valley, Boston and the rest of New England. We feel greatly encouraged. Almost every available box has been taken. Our subscriptions and memberships we count by the hundreds. But we want people to feel that there will be room in these beautiful Berkshires if they wish to come to listen to our own New England Orchestra, the Boston Symphony to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky."

George W. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee reported that construction has started on the shell to be erected at Holmwood. The shell will be a very important feature of the huge canopy to be erected over the concert field. The canopy will assure protection regardless of weather.

On Aug. 12, 14 and 16, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will lecture at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge on the symphonies. Mrs. Bruce Crane will assist at the piano.

THIS CL
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

150 Music Enthusiasts Turn Out To Hear Prof. Safford on Festival

Albert Spalding, Eminent Violinist Citing Quality of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Asks for "100 Per Cent Response" —Mrs. Taylor Presides

GREAT BARRINGTON, July 9.—"It is the intellectual duty of every member of the audience to know something about how and why the composer used what he did and what the result is," declared Professor Charles L. ("Tommy") Safford of the Williams College music department for the benefit of the 150 music enthusiasts gathered last night to hear him lecture in the ballroom of the Berkshire Inn.

Professor Safford's audience included members of the Great Barrington Committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, of which Mrs. George L. Taylor is chairman, and others interested in the concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Albert Spalding, eminent violinist, opened the meeting by stressing the high rank occupied by the Boston Symphony among the orchestras of the world and the fact that its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is for the first time cutting short his annual European vacation in order to conduct in person at the Festival. "To have something that is 100 per cent quality it must be met with 100 per cent response," said Spalding.

Professor Safford, after a brief biographical review of the composers whose works are to be played at the Festival, discussed Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, which occupies a place on the opening program, to illustrate how an audience should listen to symphonic music. Playing passages on the piano as he talked, he showed the simplicity with which the theme is gradually developed from an open phrase of four notes.

Emphasizing the importance of knowing what to expect next while hearing a symphony, Professor Safford explained the sonata form, which is the basis of classical symphonies, and the general pattern on which the four movements are built—the first allegro, the second a slow movement, the third scherza, and the thrilling and dramatic final movement.

Professor Safford concluded by discussing and playing Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

In the audience were Phonsi Carlo, popular New York boy violinist, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, the Rev. J. L. Sullivan of North Haven, John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, treasurer of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation, and Robert K. Wheeler, manager of the Berkshire Inn and a member of the Festival's board of directors.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 11 1936

MUSIC FESTIVAL OUTLOOK BRIGHT

According to Trustees Who Hold Meeting

MOST BOXES SOLD

Event Hailed as Propitious for Plan to Create Unrivaled Music Center.

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month was hailed by trustees today as most propitious for the plan to create in New England a summer music center that will rival any of the festival centers in Europe. The festival will be held Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Said Albert Spalding, eminent American violinist and trustee of the festival: "To have something that is 100 per cent quality, it must be met with 100 per cent response."

The trustees met with Mrs. Carlos de Heredia of Lenox and New York, acting president of the festival. Among those present were John C. Lynch, treasurer, of Stockbridge, former vice-president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of New York and Lenox, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor, Edward S. Rogers, president of the Lee Savings Bank, Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, Mrs. Charles Griswold of Stockbridge, Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye and Great Barrington, and Attorney Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield.

Mrs. de Heredia, who is acting president in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale declared, "This festival has already attracted nation-wide response as a major musical attraction. We have received subscriptions from Canada, the far south and the middle west and of course a great many points nearer home like New York, the Hudson valley, Boston and the rest of New England. We feel greatly encouraged. Almost every available box has been taken. Our subscriptions and memberships we count by the hundreds. But we want people to feel that there will be room in these beautiful Berkshires if they wish to come to listen to our own New England orchestra, the Boston Symphony to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky."

George W. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee, reported that construction has started on the shell to be erected at Holmwood. The shell will be a very important feature of the huge canopy to be erected over the concert field. The canopy will assure protection regardless of weather.

On Aug. 12, 14 and 16, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will lecture at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge on the symphonies. Mrs. Bruce Crane will assist at the piano.

32

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD TELEGRAM

JUL 14 1936

Plan Berkshire Festival

Organizers of Musical Event Near Lenox Announce Opening Date as August 13.

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month has been hailed by the trustees as helpful to the plan to create in New England a summer music center that will rival any of the festival centers in Europe.

The festival will be held August 13, 15 and 16 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Strawbridge Albert Spalding, well-known violinist and trustee of the festival, says of it:—"To have something that is 100 per cent quality it must be met with 100 per cent response."

Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, who is acting president in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York, declares:—"This festival has already attracted nationwide response as a major musical attraction. We have received subscriptions from Canada, the far South and the Middle West, and, of course, a great many from points nearer home, like New York, the Hudson valley, Boston and the rest of New England.

"We feel greatly encouraged. Almost every available box has been taken. Our subscriptions and memberships we count by the hundreds. But we want people to feel there will be room in these beautiful Berkshires if they wish to come to listen to our own New England orchestra, the Boston Symphony, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky."

PORTLAND, ME.
NEWS

Summer Music Center Planned In New England

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month was hailed by trustees today as most propitious for the plan to create in New England a summer music center that will rival any of the Festival centers in Europe. The Festival will be held Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Said Albert Spalding, eminent American violinist and trustee of the Festival, "To have something that is 100 per cent quality, it must be met with 100 per cent response."

The trustees met with Mrs. Carlos de Heredia of Lenox and New York, acting president of the Festival. Among those present were John C. Lynch, treasurer, of Stockbridge, former Vice President of the American Tel. and Tel. Company, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of New York and Lenox, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor, Mr. Edward S. Rogers, President of the Lee Savings Bank, Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, Mrs. Charles Griswold of Stockbridge, Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye and Great Barrington, and Attorney Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield.

Mrs. de Heredia who is acting president in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Glendale deolared, "This Festival has already attracted nation-wide response as a major musical attraction. We have received subscriptions from Canada, the far south and the middle west and of course a great many from points nearer home like New York, the Hudson valley, Boston and the rest of New England

---

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

JUL 13 1936

A cable from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now, in France, states that the opening number of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Aug. 13, will be Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott," Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Dr. Koussevitzky will return from abroad the latter part of this month to enter rehearsals with his Boston Symphony orchestra in preparation for the three-day festival in the Berkshires, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, music critic, who will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16, will also return from Europe in a few days, as will the president of the festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New Yrok and Glendale.

The Chorale Prelude derives from Martin Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn" and the German words are a translation from the Latin, "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Bach transcribed 18 chorales into the form of the "Choralvorspiel," for organ, intended to be played as a prelude to the singing of the verses in the church service, avoiding the too obvious presentation of melodies, so that they might come more freshly from the congregation.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM 20/36

STOCKBRIDGE SETS DATE OF FESTIVAL

Berkshire Symphonic Fete Due August 13, 15, 16

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP) Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set Aug. 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheater at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox, for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheater is in a horseshoe of Cathedral pines. The 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his Summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the Summer.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga River, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 20 1936

Berkshires Ambitious For Festival

Summer Folk Seek Music Center Equal to Europe's Best Through Symphonic Fete

Stockbridge, Mass., July 19.—(AP) —Summer residents of the Berkshire hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set August 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheater at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-years-old Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

Praises Berkshire Festival.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheater is in a horseshoe of cathedral pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed over a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

Opening Concert Program.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius's Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga River, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire Festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former President; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 20 1936

MUSIC CENTER IN BERKSHIRES GOAL

Festival Expected to Rival Best in Europe

STOCKBRIDGE, July 20 (AP)—Berkshire Summer residents are looking forward to the third annual symphonic festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16, as another step toward their announced goal of creating a music center rivalling the greatest in Europe.

Critics and music lovers will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheater at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, to hear the first outdoor concerts ever conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will direct the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 22 1936

FESTIVAL TICKETS ON SALE IN LEE AT OWENS' STORE

LEE, July 22.—Subscription tickets for the three concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchetsra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at the Emerson place Aug. 13, 15 and 16 and single tickets for any one concert may be procured at Owens' Store, Main Street.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
July JOURNAL 20/36

Berkshire Hills Folk Prepare For Third Symphonic Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to Lead Boston Symphony Orchestra in Outdoor Concerts in Country Amphitheatre on Three Days Next Month

Stockbridge, Mass., July 19.—(AP) —Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music centre rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set Aug. 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheatre at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox, for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of cathedral pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius's Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga river, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former President; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, JULY 20, 1936

Berkshires Plan Music Festival; Koussevitzky to Conduct Outdoors

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set Aug. 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheater at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox, for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Symphony orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheater is in a horseshoe of cathedral pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga river in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former President; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL

KOUSSEVITZKY WILL CONDUCT BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP) — Summer residents of the Berkshire hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival — another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set August, 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheatre at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Symphony orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Kussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of cathedral pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a fastival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga river, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the BerkshireBerkshire festival are Mrs Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former president; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
JUL 20 1936

Berkshire Summer Folk Prepare Music Festival

Koussevitzky to Direct Boston Symphony in Feature of Ambitious Program, Aug. 13, 15 and 16

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music centre rivaling the greatest in Europe.

Symphony to Play.

The festival committee has set Aug. 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheatre at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed, 55-year-old Boston Symphony orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of cathedral pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga river, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former president; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
JUL 2 1936

Berkshire Summer Residents Hope to Create Music Center

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to Conduct Boston Symphony Outdoors

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set August 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheater at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzy said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

Beautiful Setting

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of Cathedral Pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

To Return For Concerts

Koussevitzky annually spends his Summers abroad, but he will return here to build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the Summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga River, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former President; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

The Boston Symphony orchestr is engaged upon one of the longest seasons ever played by an American orchestra. It has played every months since September, 1935, and will continue the record until August, 1937.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY VISITS STOCKBRIDGE SHELL

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8 (AP) — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived here today from Europe, inspected the amphitheater where his Boston Symphony Orchestra will play during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next week, and then left or after several months' vacation for Boston to begin rehearsals.

The maestro, brimming with vig-abroad, promised "good music" in the three concerts the Hub orchestra will play Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Festival officials said more than 30 critics from all over the nation would augment an audience of several thousand at the concerts, which they hope will rival European festivals in importance in future years.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
JUL 22 1936

Berkshire Festival Held at Holmwood Mass., Aug. 13-16

Marks First Performance Of Boston Group Under Canvas

For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony will perform beneath a canvas canopy when it gives its three programs at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 13, 15 and 16, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. These concerts will also be the first ever conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky out of doors in America.

The festival will be held at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate of 500 acres of lawn, gardens and woodland, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., where the amphitheater is located within a horseshoe of cathedral pines. The tent to be used will be 250 feet long and 120 feet wide. It will stand on ground that slopes down gradually some twelve feet to the platform.

A small cottage near Mrs. Emerson's villa will be used by Mr. Koussevizky as dressing quarters during the festival, and the spacious stables will be placed at the disposal of the musicians for similar purposes. Still on display in the stables are many of Alfred Vanderbilt's carriages, which years ago were frequently seen on Berkshire roads. When Mrs. George Westinghouse owned the estate she frequently gave musicales in the adjoining gymnasium.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies, Aug. 12 and 14, at 11 a. m., and Aug. 16, at 12:15 p. m. The complete programs for the three concerts will be as follows:

August 13, at 8:30 p. m.—
Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist", Bach
Overture to "Egmont," Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 2 .... Sibelius

Aug. 15, at 4:30 p. m.
Larghetto .... Handel
Prelude to "Khovantchina" .. Mussorgsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" .... Debussy
Symphony No. 2......... Brahms

Aug. 16, at 8:30 p. m.
"Italian" symphony .. Mendelssohn
Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Wagner
Symphony No. 5 .... Tchaikovsky

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE
AUG 2 - 1936

Portraits by Gerome Brush of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be ~~given first~~ public showing at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the orchestra will give at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Aug 13, 15 and 16. These portraits will be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary observance in the Autumn. Mr Brush, a native of New York city, is the son of George DeForest Brush, the American painter. He lived for some time in France and Italy. He is both painter and sculptor.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

MUSIC FESTIVAL HEAD TO ARRIVE HOME TODAY

Pittsfield, Aug., 1—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire music festival, will arrive in New York tomorrow from Havre aboard the Normandie, which is due at Quarantine at 8 tomorrow morning. Miss Smith is returning to open the third annual festival at Stockbridge where the Boston symphony orchestra, directed by Dr Serge Koussevitsky, will play under canvas for the first time in 55 years.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
JUL 20 1936

Music Festival Will Be Held In Berkshires

Serge Koussevitzky to Direct Boston Symphony at Outdoor Event.

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS. July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe. August 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheatre at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Spmphony orchestra. The Boston symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement", Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting".

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of Cathedral Pines. 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake in Lee, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

A program comprising a bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont overture and his seventh symphony and Sibelius' second symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga River, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled and orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former president Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.
AUG 1 - 1936

Summer Symphony

● If you simply must go to Europe this summer, you'll have to have an excuse other than your love of the German outdoor music festivals. For near Stockbridge, Massachusetts, the Hanna Farm, set among the famous Berkshire Hills, is playing host to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of that thriving institution, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The concerts will be held the thirteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth of August under an immense canopy covering the orchestra and five thousand seats for the audience- or, if you're the kind of audience who prefers to sit under an expanse of sky, you'll not be considered eccentric, and you still may hear every strain because of the marvellous acoustical advantages of the setting. The orchestra will be under the direction of Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, and the programs, arranged by that esteemed conductor, will tempt even the least Orphean of you.

You won't want to leave the district between concerts, because every minute of the week will feature attractions worthy themselves of much publicity. Friday, August fourteenth, Ted Shawn and his dancers will present a recital at Jacob's Pillow, Becket; Sunday you may choose between the South Mountain Quartet and the Gordon String Quartet; and Mr. William Miles has an outstanding play up his sleeve that will be announced later.

For all information regarding subscription prices, hotel accommodations, transportation, or your personal whims, write directly to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., in Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1936

Serge Koussevitzky is returning from abroad to begin rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the three-day Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be held at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Mr. Koussevitzky has decided to open the first concert with Bach's choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist," the second of two choral preludes which Arnold Schoenberg transcribed for orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

Festival Receiving Urgent Inquiries for Reservations

Tremendous Interest Seen Outside Berkshire—If Support Comes in Proportionate Measure From County There Will Be No Question of Financial Success—Miss Robinson Smith Returns Monday, Dr. Koussevitsky, Aug. 7

A tremendous interest in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in widespread sections of the country is reflected by the telegrams and letters coming into the office at Stockbridge it was noted today. One telegram came from Cleveland asking for "the best you've got left." From Canada and Hunter, N. Y., came other urgent inquiries. The orders for tickets have averaged more than $100 a day for the past few days, most of these orders coming from outside Berkshire County.

Conference Held

At a conference held with the acting president, Mrs. Carlos deHeredia at Lenox yesterday by the treasurer, John C. Lynch of Stockbridge; the chairman of the coordinating committee, George W. Edman of Pittsfield and the executive secretary, Miss Elizabeth Downing of Stockbridge it was concluded that if support from Berkshire is forthcoming in proportion to that from the outside, there will be no question of financial success.

An accurate picture of the Festival will be obtained Tuesday when sub-chairmen from Western Massachusetts, Connecticut and Eastern New York meet with Mrs. C. C. Griswold in Stockbridge.

Miss Smith Returning

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival will return from France Monday on the Normandie. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will arrive August 7 on the Europa and will come directly to Stockbridge with George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

Hotels are feeling the effects of the Festival. One hotel has more than 20 reservations, another more than 15 and even another a half dozen or more. Inquiries are being received daily by the hotels for rates and information of the Festival and other attractions Festival Week.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
JUL 20 1936

Berkshire Summer Folk Prepare Music Festival

Koussevitzky to Direct Boston Symphony in Feature of Ambitious Program, Aug. 13, 15 and 16

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music centre rivaling the greatest in Europe.

Symphony to Play.

The festival committee has set Aug. 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheatre at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed, 55-year-old Boston Symphony orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of cathedral pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, in Lee, and the distant Hoosac mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga river, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former president; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
JUL 20 1936

Berkshire Summer Residents Hope to Create Music Center

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to Conduct Boston Symphony Outdoors

STOCKBRIDGE, July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe.

The festival committee has set August 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheater at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony will play under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement," Dr. Koussevitzy said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

Beautiful Setting

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting."

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of Cathedral Pines. A 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

To Return For Concerts

Koussevitzky annually spends his Summers abroad, but he will return here to build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the Summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga River, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled an orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former President; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
JUL 23 1936

The Boston Symphony orchestr is engaged upon one of the longest seasons ever played by an American orchestra. It has played every months since September, 1935, and will continue the record until August, 1937.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
JUL 22 1936

Berkshire Festival Held at Holmwood Mass., Aug. 13-16

Marks First Performance Of Boston Group Under Canvas

For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony will perform beneath a canvas canopy when it gives its three programs at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 13, 15 and 16, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. These concerts will also be the first ever conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky out of doors in America.

The festival will be held at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate of 500 acres of lawn, gardens and woodland, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., where the amphitheater is located within a horseshoe of cathedral pines. The tent to be used will be 250 feet long and 120 feet wide. It will stand on ground that slopes down gradually some twelve feet to the platform.

A small cottage near Mrs. Emerson's villa will be used by Mr. Kousseviszky as dressing quarters during the festival, and the spacious stables will be placed at the disposal of the musicians for similar purposes. Still on display in the stables are many of Alfred Vanderbilt's carriages, which years ago were frequently seen on Berkshire roads. When Mrs. George Westinghouse owned the estate she frequently gave musicales in the adjoining gymnasium.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies, Aug. 12 and 14, at 11 a. m., and Aug. 16, at 12:15 p. m. The complete programs for the three concerts will be as follows:

August 13, at 8:30 p. m.—
Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist", Bach
Overture to "Egmont," Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 ...... Beethoven
Symphony No. 2 .... Sibelius

Aug. 15, at 4:30 p. m.—
Larghetto .... Handel
Prelude to "Khovantchina" .. Mussorgsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" .... Debussy
Symphony No. 2......... Brahms

Aug. 16, at 8:30 p. m.—
"Italian" symphony .. Mendelssohn
Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Wagner
Symphony No. 5 ..... Tchaikovsky

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE
AUG 2 - 1936

Portraits by Gerome Brush of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given first public showing at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the orchestra will give at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Aug 13, 15 and 16. These portraits will be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary observance in the Autumn. Mr Brush, a native of New York city, is the son of George DeForest Brush, the American painter. He lived for some time in France and Italy. He is both painter and sculptor.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY VISITS STOCKBRIDGE SHELL

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8 (AP) — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived here today from Europe, inspected the amphitheater where his Boston Symphony Orchestra will play during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next week, and then left or after several months' vacation for Boston to begin rehearsals.

The maestro, brimming with vigabroad, promised "good music" in the three concerts the Hub orchestra will play Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Festival officials said more than 30 critics from all over the nation would augment an audience of several thousand at the concerts, which they hope will rival European festivals in importance in future years.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION
Aug. 2/36

MUSIC FESTIVAL HEAD TO ARRIVE HOME TODAY

Pittsfield, Aug., 1—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire music festival, will arrive in New York tomorrow from Havre aboard the Normandie, which is due at Quarantine at 8 tomorrow morning. Miss Smith is returning to open the third annual festival at Stockbridge where the Boston symphony orchestra, directed by Dr Serge Koussevitsky, will play under canvas for the first time in 55 years.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
JUL 20 1936

Music Festival Will Be Held In Berkshires

Serge Koussevitzky to Direct Boston Symphony at Outdoor Event.

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS. July 19 (AP)—Summer residents of the Berkshire Hills looked forward tonight to their third annual symphonic festival—another step in their announced ambition to create a music center rivaling the greatest in Europe. August 13, 15 and 16 as the three days for the program. Critics and music lovers from all parts of the country will gather under a canopy in a beautiful amphitheatre at Holmwood, estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between here and Lenox for the first outdoor concerts to be conducted in this country by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the world-famed 55-year-old Boston Spmphony orchestra. The Boston symphony will play here under his direction.

"I have declined former invitations to conduct outdoors because of the compromises that have stood in the way of artistic achievement", Dr. Koussevitzky said before sailing for a brief holiday in France.

"But the Berkshire festival appeals because of the high quality it exacts for its program, and because of the natural beauty of its setting".

The amphitheatre is in a horseshoe of Cathedral Pines. 250-foot canopy will be placed on a sloping lawn, from which can be seen Laurel Lake in Lee, and the distant Hoosac Mountain range.

A program comprising a bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont overture and his seventh symphony and Sibelius' second symphony, will be played at the opening concert.

Koussevitzky annually spends his summers abroad, but he will return here to help build what he hopes will be a festival sufficiently important in the future to draw the patronage of many Americans who travel abroad every year to enjoy great music in the summer time.

His new venture outdoors comes 18 years after he inaugurated concerts on the Volga River, in Russia, in which he chartered a boat, assembled and orchestra, and cruised up and down the river to bring music inland.

Among the supporters of the Berkshire festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the former president Albert Spalding, violinist, and Norman H. Davis, diplomat.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 1 - 1936

Festival Receiving Urgent Inquiries for Reservations

Tremendous Interest Seen Outside Berkshire—If Support Comes in Proportionate Measure From County There Will Be No Question of Financial Success—Miss Robinson Smith Returns Monday, Dr. Koussevitsky, Aug. 7

A tremendous interest in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in widespread sections of the country is reflected by the telegrams and letters coming into the office at Stockbridge it was noted today. One telegram came from Cleveland asking for "the best you've got left." From Canada and Hunter, N. Y., came other urgent inquiries. The orders for tickets have averaged more than $100 a day for the past few days, most of these orders coming from outside Berkshire County.

Conference Held

At a conference held with the acting president, Mrs. Carlos deHeredia at Lenox yesterday by the treasurer, John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, the chairman of the coordinating committee, George W. Edman of Pittsfield and the executive secretary, Miss Elizabeth Downing of Stockbridge it was concluded that if support from Berkshire is forthcoming in proportion to that from the outside, there will be no question of financial success.

An accurate picture of the Festival will be obtained Tuesday when sub-chairmen from Western Massachusetts, Connecticut and Eastern New York meet with Mrs. C. C. Griswold in Stockbridge.

Miss Smith Returning

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival will return from France Monday on the Normandie. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will arrive August 7 on the Europa and will come directly to Stockbridge with George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

Hotels are feeling the effects of the Festival. One hotel has more than 20 reservations, another more than 15 and even another a half dozen or more. Inquiries are being received daily by the hotels for rates and information of the Festival and other attractions Festival Week.

VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.
AUG 1 - 1936

53

Summer Symphony

• If you simply must go to Europe this summer, you'll have to have an excuse other than your love of the German outdoor music festivals. For near Stockbridge, Massachusetts, the Hanna Farm, set among the famous Berkshire Hills, is playing host to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of that thriving institution, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The concerts will be held the thirteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth of August under an immense canopy covering the orchestra and five thousand seats for the audience—or, if you're the kind of audience who prefers to sit under an expanse of sky, you'll not be considered eccentric, and you still may hear every strain because of the marvellous acoustical advantages of the setting. The orchestra will be under the direction of Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, and the programs, arranged by that esteemed conductor, will tempt even the least Orphean of you.

You won't want to leave the district between concerts, because every minute of the week will feature attractions worthy themselves of much publicity. Friday, August fourteenth, Ted Shawn and his dancers will present a recital at Jacob's Pillow, Becket; Sunday you may choose between the South Mountain Quartet and the Gordon String Quartet; and Mr. William Miles has an outstanding play up his sleeve that will be announced later.

For all information regarding subscription prices, hotel accommodations, transportation, or your personal whims, write directly to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., in Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1936

Serge Koussevitzky is returning from abroad to begin rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the three-day Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be held at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Mr. Koussevitzky has decided to open the first concert with Bach's choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist," the second of two choral preludes which Arnold Schoenberg transcribed for orchestra in 1922 for Josef Stransky, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

54

AUG 5 - 1936

List of Festival Patrons Reads Like Cross Section of Who's Who

Statesmen and Officials, Artists and Patrons of the Arts, Professional Men and Women, Scholars, Tycoons, Social Leaders and Just Ordinary Folk Who Love Music Will Hear the Boston Symphony at Holmwood Next Week

Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and just ordinary folk will be among the thousands coming for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's Ambassador-at-Large, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Efrem Zimbalist, the violinist and his wife, Alma Gluck, the opera singer Adolfe A. Berle Jr., Chamberlain of the City of New York; Albert Spalding, well-known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was Ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's Administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox on Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Festive Appearance

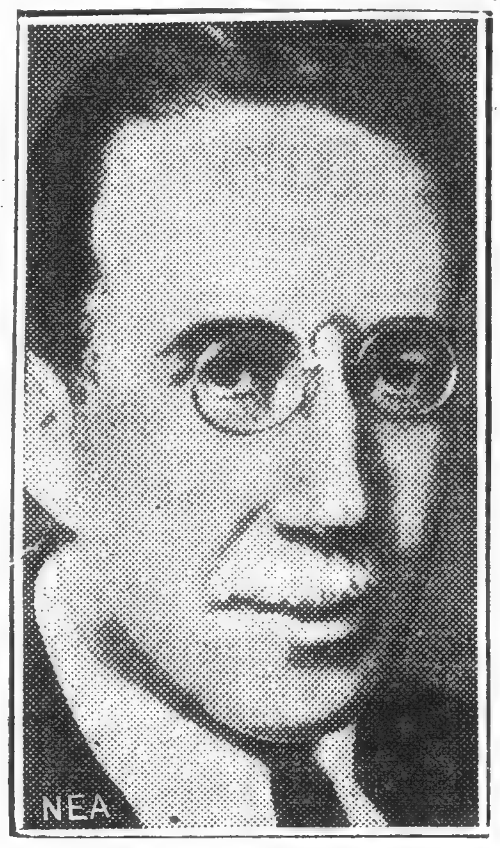
Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvas will be seats for 4000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be:

Others Atending

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bently Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edawrd A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox; first vice-president of the Festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice-president of the Bell Telephone System; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil Company; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former Mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of International Law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry Jr., of Detroit; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; George Sokolsky, well known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs. Samuel Frothingham, Lenox and New York; Dr. William Mather Lewis, President of Lafayette College and Mrs. Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist.

Also Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner, Albany, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig, Torrington, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y. and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors, and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress; Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick, Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'cellist, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Spragu Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn.; Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington; Mrs. Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude Watson, Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler, Plainfield, N. J. and Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield; Mrs. George William Douglas, Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Philadelphia and Lee; Dr. and Mrs. Herschel Walker, Philadelphia and Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham; Mrs. Charles Scott, Lakeville, Conn.; Mrs. Otis H. Bradley, Hudson, N. Y.; Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham, N. Y.; Miss Clara Easterbrooks, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. James A. Seaman, Springfield; Dr. nd Mrs. Lawrence Doolittle, pringfield; Shepard Knapp, /orcester; Mrs. Edward Davis, Iorth Adams; Professor and Mrs. :harles L. Safford, Williamstown; Ars. John H. Denison, Williamsown; Mrs. James C. Colgate, Benington, Vt.; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y. and Great Barrington; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington; Harold Stanley of New York; Mrs. Herbert Darlington of New York; Mrs. George Jong Jr., of Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. Thomas Hooker, New Haven, Conn.; Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of New Haven, Conn.; A. Hamilton Bolton, Montreal, Canada; Hayes Sturgis of New York; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York.



NEA

GOV. THEODORE GREEN
:hief Executive of Rhode Island, Who Will Be Among the Notables Attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Festival Group Reports Sales Exceeding $1500

Sub-chairmen for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival were filled with surprises at the report meeting held yesterday afternoon with Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, a trustee, at her home in Lee. Subscription sales of more than $1500 were reported. It was the most enthusiastic meeting of sub-chairmen on record. The workers were asked to continue their enthusiasm so that there will be no question of financial success of the concerts next week.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

-1936

RUSH IS MADE FOR FESTIVAL RESERVATIONS

Reserved Seats for Music Event in Berkshires Become Scarce; All but One Box Sold

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 4—A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra, telegraphed the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge Monday for two reservations for the concerts. An official of another orchestra, Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and several trustees of that organization will attend the Festival which is to be given Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, who returned Sunday night from France on the Normandie arrived at her home, the Residence in Glendale tonight.

Subscription sales have shown tremendous acceleration since last week and today the Festival office was forced to rearrange its seating plans for the front section to provide additional seats. There are still plenty of unreserved seats in both front and rear sections. Reserved seats are becoming scarce.

Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge will entertain the Stockbridge committee at her home, Ingleside, next Sunday when Prof. Charles L. Safford of Williams College will give a talk on the symphonies to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

For newspaper critics, two dinners are planned during Festival week, one at Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge and another at the Curtis Hotel. Ten acceptances have already been received from New York, Boston, New Haven, Torrington, Albany, Worcester, Pittsburgh, Pa.

All boxes but one have been sold, it was reported by the Festival today, and it is likely that this box will be taken before the week is out. There are 80 of them. Last year only 27 boxes were sold.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

AUG 4 - 1936

RUSH IS MADE FOR FESTIVAL RESERVATIONS

Reserved Seats for Music Event in Berkshires Become Scarce; All but One Box Sold

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 3—A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra, telegraphed the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge today for two reservations for the concerts. An official of another orchestra, Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and several trustees of that organization will attend the Festival which is to be given Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, who returned Sunday night from France on the Normandie arrived at her home, the Residence in Glendale tonight.

Subscription sales have shown tremendous acceleration since last week and today the Festival office was forced to rearrange its seating plans for the front section to provide additional seats. There are still plenty of unreserved seats in both front and rear sections. Reserved seats are becoming scarce.

Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge will entertain the Stockbridge committee at her home, Ingleside, next Sunday when Prof. Charles L. Safford of Williams College will give a talk on the symphonies to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

For newspaper critics, two dinners are planned during Festival week, one at Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge and another at the Curtis Hotel. Ten acceptances have already been received from New York, Boston, New Haven, Torrington, Albany, Worcester, Pittsburgh, Pa.

All boxes but one have been sold, it was reported by the Festival today, and it is likely that this box will be taken before the week is out. There are 80 of them. Last year only 27 boxes were sold.

AUG 6 - 1936

Symphonic Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler of Plainfield and Pittsfield and Philip Marshall Brown, former law professor at Princeton, will be among those from New Jersey attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival August 13, 14 and 15 at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, near here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, will give three concerts and Olin Downes, New York music critic, will give three lectures on the symphonies in the Berkshire Playhouse, here, August 12, 13 and 14.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 5 - 1936

Symphonic Festival To Open Next Week

Men and women famous in the music and cultural life of the country will be present at the opening concert at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Stockbridge and Lenor Thursday of next week. Three concerts are to be given on August 13, 15 and 16.

For the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will appear at the Festival. Dr. Koussevitzky has just returned from Europe as has Olin Downes, music critic of the N. Y. Times who will give a series of lectures on the programs to be given.

Among the distinguished guests who have signified intention of attending the Festival are: Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H Davis, America's Ambassador at large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the City of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 6 - 1936

Berkshire Symphony

The Berkshire Symphonic Festical at Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 14 and 15, will attract thousands of music lovers from over the East. The Boston Smphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Prof. Walter Pritchard Eaton of Yale University is among the notables expected to attend; and others from this city will be Prof. Hugo Kortschak of the Yale school of Music and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Commington, Mass.; Mrs. Thomas Hooker and Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; and Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of the late Pres. Coolidge, are also expected to attend.

* * *

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

AUG 3 - 1936

Shell Prepared For Symphony

Canopy Expected Wednesday at "Holmwood;" Festival to Begin Aug. 13

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 2—Construction of the shell for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Holmwood," Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, is virtually completed and on Wednesday the huge canopy to shelter the thousands of persons expected for the Festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16, will arrive.

An administration building, loaned by Rep. Clarence N. Durant of Lee, has been located on the grounds and a telephone has been installed.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival who has spent several weeks in France with her mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, arrived in New York tonight aboard the Normandie and is expected in Stockbridge Tuesday for the meeting of subchairman with one of the trustees, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of Yale Hill.

For the convenience of music lovers in Pittsfield, tickets for the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Festival are available at the Berkshire Hills Conference office in South St. and at the Open Book. The cochairman for Pittsfield, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell, will also be glad to answer inquiries.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

1936

Local Residents Among Patrons of Symphonic Event

Several residents of the Troy Area are among the patrons of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which will open next Thursday evening and continue August 15 and 16, at Holmwood, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky will give three concerts.

Local area patrons are Miss Olive Shreiner and Mrs. William Bayard VanRensselaer, both of Albany and Mrs. Otis H. Bradley of Hudson. Among the many notables who are patrons of the Festival are Mrs James Roosevelt, mother of the President; Alma Gluck, opera singer; and Albert Spalding, violinist.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

1936

Boston Symphony Presents Concert To Open Festival

The third Berkshire festival opened last night at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, betwen Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., with a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The program included the Bach choral prelude, "Komm' Gott Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist"; Beethoven's "Egmont" overture; the Seventh symphony of Beethoven, and the Second symphony, by Sibelius.

Tomorrow afternoon's program will consist of Handel's "Largo"; the prelude to "Khovantchina," by Mussorgsky; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the Brahms Second Symphony.

At the final concert, Sunday night, the offerings will be: Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; the prelude to "Lohengrin," and the prelude to "Die Meistersomger," by Wagner and Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat & Leader

AUG 9 - 1936

By INA WICKHAM

THE Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky will play under a canvas canopy for the first time in its history when it presents the third annual Berkshire Symphonic festival on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., this week. The concerts are the first that Mr. Koussevitsky has ever conducted out of doors in America.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 6 - 1936

NOTED PEOPLE TO ATTEND CONCERTS

By Boston Symphony Orchestra This Month

AT STOCKBRIDGE

"Just Ordinary Folk" Will be Among Thousands of Assembled Music Lovers.

Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and "just ordinary folk" will be among the thousands headed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration, and who himself is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress in this district; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice of Williamstown; Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra; Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, on president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice president of the Festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice president of the Bell Telephone System; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil Co.; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; George Sokolsky, well known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs. Samuel Frothingham of Lenox and New York; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college and Mrs. Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner, Albany, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig, Torrington, Ct.; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y., and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress; Mrs. William Bayard VanRensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick, Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'cellis, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Ct.; Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington, Mass.; Mrs. Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude Watson, Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler, Plainfield, N. J., and Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. George William Douglas, Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Philadelphia and Lee; Dr. and Mrs. Herschel Walker, Philadelphia and Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham; Mrs. Charles Scott, Lakeville, Ct.; Mrs. Otis H. Bradley, Hudson, N. Y.; Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham, N. Y.; Miss Clara Easterbrooks, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. James A. Seaman, Springfield; Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Doolittle, Springfield; Shepard Knapp, Worcester; Mrs. Edward Davis, North Adams, R. F. D.; Prof. and Mrs. Charles L. Safford, Williamstown; Mrs. John H. Denison, Williamstown; Mrs. James C. Colgate, Bennington, Vt.; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Great Barrington; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington; Harold Stanley of New York; Mrs. Herbert Darlington of New York; Mrs. George Long, Jr., of Hartford, Ct.; Mrs. Thomas Hooker, New Haven, Ct.; Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of New Haven, Ct.; A. Hamilton Bolton, Montreal, Canada; Hayes Sturgis of New York; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Aug. 9/36

BERKSHIRES SYMPHONY

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—This week's outstanding musical event in the Berkshires will be the third annual symphonic festival on Thursday, Saturday and next Sunday at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, at Lenox. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will play on Thursday and Sunday evenings and on Saturday afternoon.

A shell for eighty musicians has been built on the lawn with a background of tall pines. There will be seats for 4,000 persons in a tent so that the programs may be carried out rain or shine. Other seats will be provided in the open.

Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. Tonight Professor Charles L. Safford, head of the Williams College Department of Music, will discuss the symphonies—Beethoven in particular—before a group of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson at Ingleside, Stockbridge.

The festival week's dramatic attraction at the Berkshire Playhouse will be Josephine Hutchinson in Keith Winter's comedy, "The Shining Hour." Others in the cast will be Richard Hale, Helen Brooks, Lewis Martin, Ellen Hall and Whitner Bissell.

The leading sports event of the week will be the Western New England men's tennis championships in singles and doubles at Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, starting on Tuesday.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
Aug.

Koussevitzky Inspects Music Amphitheatre

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived here today from Europe, hastily inspected the amphitheater where his Boston Symphony Orchestra will play during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next week, and then dashed off to Boston to begin rehearsals.

The maestro, brimming with vigor after several months' vacation abroad, promised "goood music" in the three concerts the Hub orchestra will play Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Festival officials said more than 30 critics from all over the nation would augment an audience of several thousand at the concerts, which they hope will rival European festivals in importance in future years.

The Berkshire event marks the first time in 13 years in America that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted during the summer, and the first time in the orchestra's 56-year history that it has played outdoors away from home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sibelius, said he would play the Finnish master's Symphony No. 2 at the opening concert Thursday evening. Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and Overture to "Egmont," and a Bach Chorale Prelude will round out the opening program.

Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvass will be seats for 4000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist", will be:

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith,

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
Aug. 6/36

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DRAW NOTABLES

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge Among Those Expected at Stockbridge Event

Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and just ordinary folk will be among the thousands headed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well-known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was ambassador to the court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice - president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra; Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvas will be seats for 4,000 and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Kom Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be:

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice - president of the Bell Telephone System; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil company; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; George Sokolsky, well-known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs. Samuel Frothington, Lenox and New York; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college, and Mrs. Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner, Albany, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig, Torrington, Ct.; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y., and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors, and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress; Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick, Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'celfist, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., and Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington.

HERALD
Boston, Mass
AUG 6 - 1936

Preparing for Berkshire Festival

Holmwood, the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, located mid-way between Stockbridge and Lenox, is already taking on much of the festive appearance it will have when the Berkshire Symphony festival is staged there Aug. 13, 14 and 15. A huge shell has been erected beneath the stately pine trees of the estate, and by the end of this week the canopy, beneath which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be in place. A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius will be played at the opening concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who have been in Europe, are returning to America this week. Mr. Downes will give three lectures on the symphonies played at the festival, at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, Aug. 14 and Aug. 16.

Among the thousands expecting to attend the three-day festival are Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Mr. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Mr. Albert Spalding, violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was ambassador to the Court of St. James'; and Mr. Owen Johnson, novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration. Also Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; Mr. A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra, and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author.

Others who are to attend are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, who recently returned from Europe; Mr. Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Mr. Edward A. Taft and Mr. Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York, Mr. John C. Lynch, Mr. Sidney Howard, and Mr. Carl A. de Gersdorff. Also: Mr. Robert G. Stewart, Mr. John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Mr. Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of internationl law at Princeton and Harvard; Mr. A. A. Knopf, Mr. John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mr. George Sokolsky, Mr. Lowell Thomas, Mr. Lyman Beecher Stowe, grandson of the late Harriet Beecher Stowe of Stockbridge and New York, and Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.

Others are Mrs. Samuel Frothingham of Lenox and New York, Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Mr. Robert Francis of New York, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Olive Shreiner of Albany, Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig of Torrington, Ct., and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y. Also: Mrs. Daniel Chester French and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. William Bayard VanRensselaer of Albany, Mr. R. J. Flick of Lenox and New York, Mr. William Willeke, 'cellist, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield, and Mr. Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Ct.

Still others are Mr. Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y., Miss Gertrude Watson of Pittsfield, Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler of Plainfield, N. J., and Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C., Mrs. George William Douglas of Tuxedo Park, N. Y., Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Dr. and Mrs. Herschel Walker of Philadelphia and Stockbridge. Also: Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham, Mrs. Charles Scott of Lakeville, Ct., Mrs. Otis H. Bradley of Hudson, N. Y., Miss Annabelle Terrell of Chatham, N. Y., Miss Clara Easterbrooks of Providence. Mrs. James A. Seaman of Springfield and Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Doolittle of Springfield.

Also: Mrs. Edward Davis of North Adams, Prof. and Mrs. Charles L. Safford of Williamstown, Mrs. John H. Denison of Williamstown, Mrs. James C. Colgate of Bennington, Vt., Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Great Barrington, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington. Also: Mr. Harold Stanley of New York, Mrs. Herbert Darlington of New York, Mrs. George Long, Jr., of Hartford, Ct.,

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 6 - 1936

55

MANY FAMED MEN TO ATTEND COMING MUSIC FESTIVAL

Dr Koussevitzky, Director and Olin Downes, Lecturer, Due From Europe — Distinguished Guests Expected

Many prominent men and women will be among the thousands attending the Berkshire Symphonic festival which will be held Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, the 13th, 15th and 16th, at Stockbridge. The orchestra, under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge the 12th, 14th and 16th. Dr Koussevitzky and Mr Downes will arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr Koussevitzky will go immediately to Stockbridge.

Gov Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's embassador at large; Mrs James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was embassador to the court of St James's; Owen Johnson, the novelist whose father was embassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs Elizabeth Suragus Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra, and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author are among the thousands expected.

Holmwood Festive

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvas will be seats for 4000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach jestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be: Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire symphonic festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston Lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the Festival; Mrs Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice-president of the Bell Telephone system; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil company; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit; Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton.

George Sokolsky, well known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs Samuel Frothingham, Lenox and New York; Dr William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college, and Mrs Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Mr and Mrs John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner of Albany, N. Y.; Dr and Mrs Allan Craig of Torrington, Ct.; Mr and Mrs Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale N. Y., and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors, and her daughter, Mrs William Penn Cresson, sculptress.

Mrs William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick of Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'cellist, director of Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music at Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Ct., Hugo Kortschak of the Yale music school and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington; Mrs Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude Watson of Pittsfield; Mr and Mrs C. Boardman Tyler of Plainfield, N. J., and Pittsfield; Mr and Mrs Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C.; Mrs George William Douglas of Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mrs John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee; Dr and Mrs Herschel Walker of Philadelphia and Stockbridge.

Mr and Mrs C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham; Mrs Charles Scott of Lakeville, Ct., Mrs Otis H. Bradley of Hudson, N. Y.; Miss Annabelle Terrell of Chatham N. Y.; Miss Clara Easterbrooks, Providence, R. I.; Mrs James A. Seaman of Springfield; Dr and Mrs Lawrence Doolittle of Springfield; Shepard Knapp of Worcester; Mrs Edward Davis of North Adams; Prof and Mrs Charles L. Safford of Williamstown; Mrs John H. Denison of Williamstown; Mrs James C. Colgate of Bennington, Vt.; Mrs William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y.; and Great Barrington; Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington; Harold Stanley of New York; Mrs Herbert Darlington of New York; Mrs George Long Jr., of Hartford, Ct., Mrs Thomas Hooker of New Haven, Ct., Mrs Arnold Whitridge of New Haven Ct.; A. Hamilton Bolton of Montreal, Canada; Hayes Sturgis of New York and Mrs Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 6 - 1936

NOTED PEOPLE TO ATTEND CONCERTS

By Boston Symphony Orchestra This Month

AT STOCKBRIDGE

"Just Ordinary Folk" Will be Among Thousands of Assembled Music Lovers.

Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and "just ordinary folk" will be among the thousands headed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration, and who himself is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress in this district; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice of Williamstown; Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra; Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, on Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvass will be seats for 4000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist", will be:

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice president of the Festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice president of the Bell Telephone System; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil Co.; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; George Sokolsky, well known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs. Samuel Frothingham of Lenox and New York; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college and Mrs. Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner, Albany, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig, Torrington, Ct.; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y., and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress; Mrs. William Bayard VanRensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick, Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'cellis, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Ct.; Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington, Mass.; Mrs. Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude Watson, Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler, Plainfield, N. J., and Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. George William Douglas, Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Philadelphia and Lee; Dr. and Mrs. Herschel Walker, Philadelphia and Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham; Mrs. Charles Scott, Lakeville, Ct.; Mrs. Otis H. Bradley, Hudson, N. Y.; Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham, N. Y.; Miss Clara Easterbrooks, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. James A. Seaman, Springfield; Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Doolittle, Springfield; Shepard Knapp, Worcester; Mrs. Edward Davis, North Adams, R. F. D.; Prof. and Mrs. Charles L. Safford, Williamstown; Mrs. John H. Denison, Williamstown; Mrs. James C. Colgate, Bennington, Vt.; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Great Barrington; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington; Harold Stanley of New York; Mrs. Herbert Darlington of New York; Mrs. George Long, Jr., of Hartford, Ct.; Mrs. Thomas Hooker, New Haven, Ct.; Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of New Haven, Ct.; A. Hamilton Bolton, Montreal, Canada; Hayes Sturgis of New York; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Aug. 9/36

BERKSHIRES SYMPHONY

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—This week's outstanding musical event in the Berkshires will be the third annual symphonic festival on Thursday, Saturday and next Sunday at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, at Lenox. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will play on Thursday and Sunday evenings and on Saturday afternoon.

A shell for eighty musicians has been built on the lawn with a background of tall pines. There will be seats for 4,000 persons in a tent so that the programs may be carried out rain or shine. Other seats will be provided in the open.

Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. Tonight Professor Charles L. Safford, head of the Williams College Department of Music, will discuss the symphonies—Beethoven in particular—before a group of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson at Ingleside, Stockbridge.

The festival week's dramatic attraction at the Berkshire Playhouse will be Josephine Hutchinson in Keith Winter's comedy, "The Shining Hour." Others in the cast will be Richard Hale, Helen Brooks, Lewis Martin, Ellen Hall and Whitner Bissell.

The leading sports event of the week will be the Western New England men's tennis championships in singles and doubles at Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, starting on Tuesday.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
Aug. 36

Koussevitzky Inspects Music Amphitheatre

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived here today from Europe, hastily inspected the amphitheater where his Boston Symphony Orchestra will play during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next week, and then dashed off to Boston to begin rehearsals.

The maestro, brimming with vigor after several months' vacation abroad, promised "goood music" in the three concerts the Hub orchestra will play Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Festival officials said more than 30 critics from all over the nation would augment an audience of several thousand at the concerts, which they hope will rival European festivals in importance in future years.

The Berkshire event marks the first time in 13 years in America that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted during the summer, and the first time in the orchestra's 56-year history that it has played outdoors away from home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sibelius, said he would play the Finnish master's Symphony No. 2 at the opening concert Thursday evening. Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and Overture to "Egmont," and a Bach Chorale Prelude will round out the opening program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
Aug. 6/36

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DRAW NOTABLES

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge Among Those Expected at Stockbridge Event

Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and just ordinary folk will be among the thousands headed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well-known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was ambassador to the court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice - president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra; Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvas will be seats for 4,000 and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Kom Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be:

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice - president of the Bell Telephone System; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil company; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; George Sokolsky, well-known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs. Samuel Frothington, Lenox and New York; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college, and Mrs. Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner, Albany, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig, Torrington, Ct.; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y., and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors, and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress; Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick, Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'cellist, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., and Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington.

HERALD
Boston Mass
AUG 6 - 1936

Preparing for Berkshire Festival

Holmwood, the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, located mid-way between Stockbridge and Lenox, is already taking on much of the festive appearance it will have when the Berkshire Symphony festival is staged there Aug. 13, 14 and 15. A huge shell has been erected beneath the stately pine trees of the estate, and by the end of this week the canopy, beneath which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be in place. A program comprising a Bach chorale prelude, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and his Seventh Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius will be played at the opening concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who have been in Europe, are returning to America this week. Mr. Downes will give three lectures on the symphonies played at the festival, at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, Aug. 14 and Aug. 16.

Among the thousands expecting to attend the three-day festival are Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Mr. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Mr. Albert Spalding, violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was ambassador to the Court of St. James'; and Mr. Owen Johnson, novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration. Also Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; Mr. A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra, and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author.

Others who are to attend are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, who recently returned from Europe; Mr. Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Mr. Edward A. Taft and Mr. Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York, Mr. John C. Lynch, Mr. Sidney Howard, and Mr. Carl A. de Gersdorff. Also: Mr. Robert G. Stewart, Mr. John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Mr. Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of internationl law at Princeton and Harvard; Mr. A. A. Knopf, Mr. John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mr. George Sokolsky, Mr. Lowell Thomas, Mr. Lyman Beecher Stowe, grandson of the late Harriet Beecher Stowe of Stockbridge and New York, and Mrs. Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.

Others are Mrs. Samuel Frothingham of Lenox and New York, Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Mr. Robert Francis of New York, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Olive Shreiner of Albany, Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig of Torrington, Ct., and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y. Also: Mrs. Daniel Chester French and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. William Bayard VanRensselaer of Albany, Mr. R. J. Flick of Lenox and New York, Mr. William Willeke, 'cellist, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield, and Mr. Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Ct.

Still others are Mr. Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y., Miss Gertrude Watson of Pittsfield, Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler of Plainfield, N. J., and Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C., Mrs. George William Douglas of Tuxedo Park, N. Y., Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Dr. and Mrs. Herschel Walker of Philadelphia and Stockbridge. Also: Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham, Mrs. Charles Scott of Lakeville, Ct., Mrs. Otis H. Bradley of Hudson, N. Y., Miss Annabelle Terrell of Chatham, N. Y., Miss Clara Easterbrooks of Providence, Mrs. James A. Seaman of Springfield and Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Doolittle of Springfield.

Also: Mrs. Edward Davis of North Adams, Prof. and Mrs. Charles L. Safford of Williamstown, Mrs. John H. Denison of Williamstown, Mrs. James C. Colgate of Bennington, Vt., Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Great Barrington, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington. Also: Mr. Harold Stanley of New York, Mrs. Herbert Darlington of New York, Mrs. George Long, Jr., of Hartford, Ct., Mrs. Thomas Hooker of New Haven, Ct., Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of New Haven, Mr. A. Hamilton Bolton of Montreal, Mr. Hayes Sturgis of New York and Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
55

AUG 6 - 1936

MANY FAMED MEN TO ATTEND COMING MUSIC FESTIVAL

Dr Koussevitzky, Director and Olin Downes, Lecturer, Due From Europe — Distinguished Guests Expected

Many prominent men and women will be among the thousands attending the Berkshire Symphonic festival which will be held Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, the 13th, 15th and 16th, at Stockbridge. The orchestra, under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge the 12th, 14th and 16th. Dr Koussevitzsky and Mr Downes will arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr Koussevitzky will go immediately to Stockbridge.

Gov Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's embassador at large; Mrs James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was embassador to the court of St James's; Owen Johnson, the novelist whose father was embassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs Elizabeth Suragua Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college and pianist and conductor of note; A A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra, and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author are among the thousands expected.

Holmwood Festive

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvas will be seats for 4000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach majestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be: Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire symphonic festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston Lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the Festival; Mrs Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vice-president of the Bell Telephone system; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil company; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry, Jr., of Detroit; Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton.

George Sokolsky, well known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs Festus Morgan of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mrs Samuel Frothingham, Lenox and New York; Dr William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college, and Mrs Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Mr and Mrs John C. Johansen, artists of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Olive Shreiner of Albany, N. Y.; Dr and Mrs Allan Craig of Torrington, Ct.; Mr and Mrs Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale N. Y., and Sarasota, Fla.; Mrs Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American sculptors, and her daughter, Mrs William Penn Cresson, sculptress.

Mrs William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick of Lenox and New York; Willem Willeke, 'cellist, director of Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music at Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Ct., Hugo Kortschak of the Yale music school and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington; Mrs Harold G. Henderson of Hunter, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude Watson of Pittsfield; Mr and Mrs C. Boardman Tyler of Plainfield, N. J., and Pittsfield; Mr and Mrs Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C.; Mrs George William Douglas of Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mrs John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee; Dr and Mrs Herschel Walker of Philadelphia and Stockbridge.

Mr and Mrs C. H. Holloway of Chicago and Tyringham; Mrs Charles Scott of Lakeville, Ct., Mrs Otis H. Bradley of Hudson, N. Y.; Miss Annabelle Terrell of Chatham N. Y.; Miss Clara Easterbrooks, Providence, R. I.; Mrs James A. Seaman of Springfield; Dr and Mrs Lawrence Doolittle of Springfield; Shepard Knapp of Worcester; Mrs Edward Davis of North Adams; Prof and Mrs Charles L. Safford of Williamstown; Mrs John H. Denison of Williamstown; Mrs James C. Colgate of Bennington, Vt.; Mrs William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y.; and Great Barrington; Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington; Harold Stanley of New York; Mrs Herbert Darlington of New York; Mrs George Long Jr., of Hartford, Ct., Mrs Thomas Hooker of New Haven, Ct., Mrs Arnold Whitridge of New Haven Ct.; A. Hamilton Bolton of Montreal, Canada; Hayes Sturgis of New York and Mrs Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1936

Roberts Studio.

Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival.

Frank Sheridan, American pianist, will appear as soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra on Saturday evening, Dec. 5, and on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 6. Besides his concert appearance last season, Mr. Sheridan appeared as guest artist with the Boston Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, the Detroit Symphony and the National Orchestral Association.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 6 - 1936

4,000 EXPECTED FOR BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

Boston Symphony to Play At Emerson Estate Aug. 13, 15, 16

Stockbridge, Mass.—Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and just ordinary folk will be among the thousands headed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Among the thousands expected are: Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the Prestdent's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle Jr., chamberlain of the City of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was ambassador to the Court of St. James.

Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Gans, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra, and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author.

Boston Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Federal Route 7.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week, and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived today, and by the end of the week will be in place. Under this canvass will be seats for 4,000, and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others to Attend

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be:

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc.; Sidney Howard, the playwright; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry Jr., of Detroit; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; George Sokolsky, well known writer; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler.

Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Samuel Frothingham, Lenox and New York; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Robert Francis, New York artist; Dr. and Mrs. Allan Craig, Torrington, Conn.

Also to Attend

Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the dean of American scupltors, and her daughter; Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress; Willem Willeke, cellist, director of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn.; Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield and Charleston, S. C.

Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Philadelphia and Lee; Dr. and Mrs. Herschel Walker, Philadelphia and Stockbridge; Mrs. Charles Scott, Lakeville, Conn.; Mrs. Otis H. Bradley, Hudson, N. Y.; Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham, N. Y.; Miss Clara Easterbrooks, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. George Long Jr. of Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. Thomas Hooker, New Haven, Conn.; Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of New Haven, Conn.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 7 - 1936

Musical Festival At Stockbridge

The huge shell which next week will shelter the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in the three concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, has been erected beneath stately pine trees at Holmwood the Stockbridge estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Today workmen are erecting a huge canopy which will seat 4,000 persons who will attend the concerts from all parts of New England and many from distant ponts. Outside the canvass there will be additional seats for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Among the thousands who have made reservations for the concerts are:

Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the president's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was ambassador to the court of St. James; Owen Johnson the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author.

A number of people from Torrington, Litchfield, Winsted and Colebrook will be in attendance at the Festival. Mrs. Allan Craig is a member of the advisary board of the festival, acting as local chairman for this vicinity.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 7 1936

Berkshire Festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival which is to be held Aug. 13, 15 and 16 is attracting a large number of music lovers, this year.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the three concerts beneath a canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate on Federal Route 7, between Stockbridge and Lenox. Olin Downs, music critic for the New York Times, who, like Dr. Koussevitzky arrives from Europe this week, will give three lectures at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Many noted and well-known persons of the various Massachusetts Summer resorts are among those who have sent in subscriptions to the festival.

* * *

HERALD

Boston [illegible]

AUG 9 - 1936

The Berkshire Festival; A Book on Appreciation

By ALEXANDER W. WILLIAMS

The concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in the Berkshires this week should be watched with uncommon interest by every music lover within hailing distance of that part of America. We say "watched" in this case because the success of the festival may mean a great deal for the future. We have always had to look to Europe for a festival of music that was really worth a long trip to hear. Now it is the ambition of the enthusiasts in Stockbridge to make the Berkshires an object for musical pilgrimage in the course of the summer. Of course it is a long way from the achievement of such centers as Salzburg, but a beginning has been made. This year the presence of the Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitzky, assures us of a high standard of performance. Although three concerts are not a great deal to warrant the descriptive term of "festival," the importance of the performing body is perhaps justification enough.

It may be suggested that the Berkshire festival is nothing so remarkable after all, since there are similar events in Ann Arbor in May or Worcester in October, for example. But there is an important difference in that other such occasions exist to serve a local need. The week of music at Worcester, for instance, is in the nature of a brief and concentrated musical season for that city. A festival in Rochester, again, is for the celebration of a particular school. The Berkshire festival, one gathers, is simply an occasion in mid-summer for the enjoyment of music, a chance to hear good music expertly performed amid attractive surroundings and nothing more than that. In the end it may be wise to give the festival some particular aim, say the production of some important but rarely heard work. But for the present Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen familiar symphonic works, and for the present one need not ask more. This is a crucial year for the festival's existence, so that one may hope for an overwhelming, not just an ordinary, success.

DEFENDING "APPRECIATION"

During the prolonged absence of a regular music article in these pages a book has reached our desk called "Music Appreciation, Its History and Technics" by Dr. Percy Scholes, edited for American readers by Dr. Will Earhart and published by M. Witmark and Sons at $4.00. The reader may possibly shy away from such a topic with a "Don't for heaven's sake let us hear anything about that, at any rate not in the summer." Dr. Scholes, indeed, is painfully conscious of the bad repute into which his subject has fallen. But he and Dr. Earhart between them have no hesitation in devoting some 380 pages to the defense and illustration of the problems of teaching people how to listen to music and how—not to make any bones about it—to appreciate music.

Dr. Scholes devotes quite a little space towards building up a case for "appreciation" courses. He has it in for the English critics whom he accuses of lordly cynicism and convicts out of their own writings of inconsistency. He is also annoyed by the contemptuous attitude of composers and musicians. His own problem is one of educating the public to love music. He does not want to make performers or composers of the public, but he does want them to be listeners. He realizes the truth that a tone deaf person is a great rarity and that most people who appear to have no ear for music can easily be taught and trained. He points as a comparison to his own case where he was allowed to sit in the back of the class during the singing lesson on the plea that he had no ear for music, and he brings in the amusing comparison of Beethoven, who could not dance in time.

AN INFERIORITY COMPLEX?

At the same time the inquiring reader will wonder why such intelligent men as the critics Messrs. Colles, Newman and Fox-Strangways, and the composers like Vaughn-Williams and Holst, whom Dr. Scholes quotes, should have sneered at music appreciation so persistently. The same reader will detect that Dr. Scholes, himself, is pretty hot under the collar and that he does not calm down until half the book is finished. It is not a difficult guess that Dr. Scholes is struggling manfully against an inferiority complex about appreciation. In 1928 he was so uncomfortable about it that he wrote an article asking for a new title to his profession. His correspondents replied with such plums as "musical cognition or intimation or initiation."

Why is Dr. Scholes in 1936 still bothered about music appreciation and still wincing slightly whenever it is mentioned in some cutting allusion by a witty critic in the press? Presumably it is because so many silly things were committed in its name and very probably still are being committed. There are, to be sure, some intelligent persons who object to any form of program notes (which Dr. Scholes includes under music appreciation), and there are also persons who do not want any talk about music at all. The truth is that the issue is not of great interest. Let music be taught—that is all. Whether you teach a child to play the flute or merely tell him what a flute is, if you do your job well, you are in reality teaching him to appreciate music. Dr. Scholes would have done better in what is a sincere and possibly a useful book not to bore us so long with his squeamishness in the face of what he considered hostile criticism but what was largely criticism of the foolish side of music appreciation.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

Another College Head To Attend Festival

Dr. Hugh P. Baker of Mass. State Coming—Scores of Campers To Attend

College presidents will be much in evidence at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next week when the Boston Symphony Orchestra appears under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. A note was received at the Festival office today from Dr. Hugh Potter Baker, president of Massachusetts State College at Amherst, that he and Mrs. Baker would attend the opening night.

Another letter arrived from Dr. Tyler Dennett, president of Williams College, stating that he hoped to attend. Other presidents attending will include Dr. William Mather Lewis of Lafayette, Dr. William Allan Neilson of Smith and Dr. H. N. MacCracken of Vassar.

An order arrived at the office today for 40 seats from Po-ne-mah Camp at South Kent for the Saturday concert and another order for 17 from Housatonic Camp at Canaan, Conn. Several inquiries have come in from CCC camps. Special rates are offered to camps for groups of 10 or more.

Another inquiry for all available information on the concerts and other activities in the Berkshires with hotel rates was received from Altus, Okla.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1936

Stockbridge Has A Festival

FOR the past 18 years Europe's music festivals—those especially held in Bayreuth and in Salzburg—have annually lured a large contingent of American music lovers across four thousand miles of water and land in pursuit of satisfactions available at home during the Winter season. It has been the frequently expressed view of these pilgrims that America, too, should have its festivals; and while one might reply that America has in fact it festivals, that retort would be too obviously sophistical. America has nothing remotely corresponding to the great European festivals. Ann Arbor is not to be compared to Salzburg, nor St. Louis to Bayreuth. When Spring and then Summer come the Metropolitan closes, the company scatters, the Philharmonic-Symphony, Boston Symphony and Philadelphia orchestras disband, to reassemble, it is true, for Summer concerts, but not on a festival scale and not under the leadership of their regular conductors.

There are of course no reasons why America should not have its Summer festivals, rivaling in scope and splendor those of Germany and Austria and, more recently, Italy. We have here the finest orchestras, we have many of the finest singers; we attract the services of the greatest conductors and instrumentalists of the day. And all of this because we have one of the largest, best educated musical audiences in the world. Still, no one has thought to organize a festival on a large scale in New England, in the South or the West, and Americans who would hear the Ring or "Figaro" or the Matthew Passion or "Der Rosenkavalier" given by the best talent available under the best conditions of performance that can be created must make their pilgrimage to Bayreuth or Salzburg or Florence.

The first move in the direction of the creation of an important Summer music festival in this country is being made this season in Stockbridge, Mass. There on Thursday evening of this week, on Saturday afternoon and on Sunday evening, Aug. 16, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, will give three festival concerts in a tent erected for the purpose on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. The difference between these three concerts by the Boston Orchestra and the regular Summer season concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony at the Lewisohn Stadium and the Philadelphia Orchestra concerts in Robin Hood Dell lies in the presence of Mr. Koussevitsky at the head of his orchestra and in the setting of the Stockbridge concerts and the atmosphere which will surround them. This is a first step and a good one. Perhaps future Summers will see the expansion of this project until it embraces concerts, operatic productions, chamber music, ballet in a setting specially designed and constructed, and available to the city-bound populations of the Eastern States.

The programs for the three Berkshire Festival concerts will be:

Aug. 13, 8:30 p.m.—Bach-Schoenberg: Choral Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist." Beethoven: "Egmont" Overture and Symphony No. 7 in A. Sibelius: Symphony No. 2 in D.

Aug. 15, 4:30 p.m.—Handel: Larghetto. Moussorgsky: Prelude to "Khowantschina." Debussy: Prelude a l'apres-midi d'un faune. Brahms: Symphony No. 2 in D.

Aug. 16, 8:30 p.m.—Mendelssohn: "Italian" Symphony. Wagner: Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger." Tschaikowsky: Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

Three lectures on the music of these programs will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, by Olin Downes. The dates of these lectures will be Aug. 12 and 14 at 11 a.m. and Aug. 16 at 12:15 p.m.

Serge Koussevitsky

Who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three concerts at Stockbridge, Mass., on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD TELEGRAM

AUG 8 - 1936

Symphonic Festival at Berkshire Hills

Special to the World-Telegram.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 8.—Outstanding among musical events of the Berkshire season will be the third annual Symphonic Festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, Lenox. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts, on next Thursday evening, Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening, from a shell built on the lawn. The audience of 4,000 will be seated in a tent, with outdoor seats for those who prefer them. The evening concerts will start at 8:30 and the afternoon at 4:30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky, who have been abroad for several weeks, arrived yesterday in New York on the Europa and they will be the guests during the festival of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at her log cabin in Stockbridge. She also is having Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, of Boston, in her party.

Mrs. Coolidge to Attend.

Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge is arriving early in the week from San Francisco, Cal., and will be with Miss Gertrude Watson at Onota Farm, Pittsfield. Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, has bought tickets for the festival. All of the eighty boxes have been sold.

Governor Theodore R. Green, of Rhode Island, is to be the guest of Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, has been invited by Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis to be with them for the Saturday matinee.

Among others who will be present are Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra; Colonel and Mrs. [illegible] Prentice.

Built by Westinghouse.

Holmwood, on Motor Route 7, which was created by the late Mr. and Mrs. George Westinghouse, was bought by Mrs. Emerson after the death of her second husband, Alfred G. Vanderbilt. Tall pines border the winding highways and arched and rustic bridges span estuaries and streams connecting tiny lakes.

The program for the first concert Thursday evening consists of the Bach chorale, Beethoven's overture to "Egmont," Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and the Sibelius Symphony No. 2.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson are entertaining a group of friends tomorrow afternoon at Ingleside, Stockbridge, to hear a lecture by Professor Charles L. Safford, of the Department of Music, Williams College, on the symphonies.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 8 - 1936

* * *

The Berkshire Symphonic Festical at Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 14 and 15, will attract thousands of music lovers from over the East. The Boston Smphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Prof. Walter Pritchard Eaton of Yale University is among the notables expected to attend; and others from this city will be Prof. Hugo Kortschak of the Yale school of Music and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Commington, Mass.; Mrs. Thomas Hooker and Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; and Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of the late Pres. Coolidge, are also expected to attend.

* * *

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

[illegible] 1936

Boston Symphony in Berkshire Festival

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be the attraction for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. For several days preceding and during the festival oil portraits of approximately 100 members of the organization will be displayed in the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1936

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY STOCKBRIDGE-BOUND

New York, Aug. 7 —(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned from an European tour today with an air of mystery over his forthcoming season. Accompanied by Mrs Koussevitsky, he left immediately for Stockbridge, Mass., by automobile, to conduct the Berkshire Music festival which opens August 13.

He conducted at the Salzburg festival in Europe.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 8 - 1936

Symphonic Fete Attracts Interest In Berkshire Hills

Next Week's Event to Be Held at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's Estate.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 8.—Entertainments for Berkshire visitors the coming week will center around the Symphonic Festival, the musical event of the year, which will be held at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, in Lenox.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, is to give concerts Thursday the 13th and Sunday the 16th, at 8:30 P. M., and a matinee Saturday the 15th, at 4:30 P. M. A shell for eighty musicians has been built on the lawn, with tall pines for a background. In a tent will be seats for 4,000 persons and room for others in the open. All of the eighty boxes have been sold.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is expected to be in the box with Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis for the Saturday matinee. In the first night audience will be Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, who is arriving at the Wendell Hotel, Pittsfield, early in the week from San Francisco; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge of Northampton, widow of President Coolidge; Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, who is to be with Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia; Efrem Zimbalist and his wife, Alma Gluck; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis, who are at their place at Colebrook, Conn.; Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, Mrs. George William Douglas of Tuxedo Park, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, Harold Stanley, Dr. and Mrs. Herschel C. Walker of Philadelphia, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn.

Wedding Next Saturday.

The wedding of Miss Elizabeth Lanier Fenno, daughter of Mrs. George K. Livermore of New York, to Samuel Adams Clark, son of Mrs. Samuel Adams Clark of New York, is taking place next Saturday in the garden at Three Acres, the Lenox estate of Mr. and Mrs. Livermore.

The Williamstown Garden Club, of which Mrs. William Warren Tracy is president, is to hold its third annual flower show at Mitchell Hall on Tuesday.

Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff is to address the Richmond Garden Club at the Garden Center, Stockbridge, on Wednesday and she will show pictures of Paris gardens which she visited recently while abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson have invited a group of friends for an evening lecture tomorrow at Ingleside, Stockbridge, by Prof. Charles L. Safford, head of the department of music at Williams College, on the symphonies, with special reference to Beethoven.

Guests at Hotels.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert W. Bianchi of New York are at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge. Mrs. Bianchi is a sister of Mrs. Robert G. Stewart.

Mr. and Mrs. Lockett G. Coleman of New York are at Egremont Inn, South Egremont.

Mrs. Emily W. Bailey of New York and Miss Jane B. Buist of Philadelphia are at the Curtis until October.

At the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, for August are the Misses May and Eva Thayer Webb of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lee of Hempstead, L. I., and Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Holmes of Bronxville are at Hotel Oakwood, Great Barrington.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mrs. Robert Ellis Jones and Miss Mary K. Gill of New York.

Mrs. John H. Boswell of Morristown, N. J., and the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. John F. Nichols of Providence, R. I., are at Williams Inn, Williamstown, for two months.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

56

AUG 8 - 1936

Koussevitzky Arrives To Look Over Symphonic Festival Site

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stockbridge—Tickets Sale Continues at Accelerated Pace—More Must Be Sold To Meet Budget—Festival Activities Loom Large on Next Week's Calendar

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will arrive in Stockbridge this afternoon from New York accompanied by George E. Judd, manager and they will go immediately to Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate in Lenox to view the site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, scheduled next week.

The sale of tickets has continued at an accelerated pace all week reflecting tremendous interest in the concerts next week. There are still a number of good seats available, however.

Miss Elizabeth Gamwell, cochairman for Pittsfield announced today that for convenience of Pittsfield persons, she has placed a supply of single admissions as well as subscription tickets with Mrs. Harry Jones at the Berkshire Hills Conference information booth on South Street and at the Open Book on North Street. Miss Estelle Hutchinson of Lenox announces that tickets are on sale in Lenox at the Curtis Hotel and at the information booth in front of the Brotherhood Club. Mrs. George L. Taylor has made similar arrangements with the Chamber of Commerce information booth in Great Barrington. Miss Margery Whiting of Lanesboro has placed tickets at the Dutch Kitchen on the Pittsfield Road.

"We must not take too much for granted," said Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival today. "We still have a good ways to go before we meet our budget and for the good of the cause, for the sake of the future and what it means to the Berkshires, I hope everyone who can, will come forward the next few days and lend their support."

Festival Week activities are already looming large on calendar. This afternoon, Professor Charles L. Safford of Williams College speaks at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y. He will speak on the festival again at the home of Professor and Mrs. Phillip Marshall Brown in Williamstown, Monday afternoon. George W. Edman of the Festival wil speak before the Torrington Rotary Club Tuesday. Tomorrow night, Professor Safford wil speak to the Stockbridge committee at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson in Stockbridge.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 8 - 1936

Koussevitzky Delighted With Symphonic Setting

Festival at Stockbridge Next Week Will Mark First Time He Has Conducted During Summer and First Time Boston Orchestra Has Appeared Away From Home Out of Doors—Opening Concert Comes Thursday Night at 8.30 O'clock—Olin Downes Will Give Lectures—Notables Will be in Attendance—Complete Programs for Concerts Announced.

Dr. Koussevitzky, just returned from Europe, inspected the amphitheater for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in its new setting today and was delighted with the location. The festival will mark the first time in his 13 years in America that he has conducted during the summer, and the first time in the orchestra's 55 years of existence that it has appeared away from home out of doors.

Starting with a lecture by Olin Downes of the New York Times Wednesday at 11 a. m., in the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, there will be activities to fill the schedule of every music lover in the county next week. The opening concert comes Thursday at 8.30 p. m. Mr. Downes will give two more lectures on the symphonies—Friday at 11 a. m., and Sunday at 12.15 p. m.

When Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening program, there will be in attendance persons of prominence from more than 20 states and Canada. Among them will be America's ambassador-at-large, Norman H. Davis, Edna St. Vincent Millay, the poet; Dr. William Allan Neilson, president of Smith college; Dr. H. N. MacCracken, president of Vassar college; James Findlay Williamson, director of the Westminster Vassar college; James Findlay Williamson, director of the Westminster choir; Congressman Allen T. Treadway; Owen Johnson the novelist, son of Robert Underwood Johnson, former ambassador to Italy; Walter Prichard Eaton, dramatic critic and member of the Yale faculty; Kathleen Parlow, world famous woman violinist; Efrem Zimbalist and his wife, Alma Gluck; Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island; Miss Mabel Choate, whose father was ambassador to the Court of St. James; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra; Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, "patron saint" of chamber music.

The second concert at 4.30 p. m., Saturday, will find Mrs. James Roosevelt, the president's mother, Albert Spalding, the violinist and Rudolph Ganz, pianist and orchestra conductor among those present. The third concert is scheduled Sunday evening, the 16th at 8.30 o'clock.

State police will be at the gate to the estate to handle traffic while Major J. Bruce McIntyre, high sheriff of Berkshire county will be marshal of the grounds and in charge of parking. Persons driving to the concerts from the east may come by way of Lee and Lenox or Stockbridge or the Mohawk Trail to North Adams and then south. From the south persons may come by way of Great Barrington and Stockbridge. From the west the route will be by way of Stockbridge, Lenox or Pittsfield and from the north by way of Pittsfield.

The complete programs for the concerts are as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 13 at 8.30 p. m.,

Bach Choral Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist".

Beethoven Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84.

Beethoven Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92.

Sibelius, Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 43.

Saturday, Aug. 15 at 4.30 p. m.

Handel, Larghetto e Affetuoso, from Concerto Grosso, for String orchestra, Op. 6, No. 6 in G minor.

Moussorgsky, Prelude to "Khovanstchina."

Debussy, Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."

Rimsky-Korsakov, Capriccio Espagnol.

Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D. major, Op. 73.

Sunday, Aug. 16 at 8.30 p. m.

Mendelssohn, Symphony in A major, "Italian" Op. 90.

Wagner, Prelude to "Lohengrin."

Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg".

Tchaikovsky, Symphony No: 5, in E minor, Op. 64.

Special programs have been arranged for Festival week by neighboring music centers. The South Mountain quartet composed of Willem Willeke, 'cellist; Kathleen Parlow, first violin; Edwin Ideler, second violin; Conrad Held, viola and Gunnar Johansen, pianist, will hold forth at the Music Temple in Pittsfield, built and maintained by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. On Sunday afternoon, the 16th at 4 o'clock the quartet will present the following program:

Schuman, Quartet in E flat major, Op. 47.

Zoltan Kodaly, Quartet in D major, Op. 10.

Joseph Jongen, Quartet in A major, Op. 50.

At Falls Village, Ct., the Gordon Quartet under the direction of Jacques Gordon will present the Brahms piano quintet in F minor, opus 34 with Frank Sheridan, pianist, and the Brahms quartet in C minor, opus 51. No. 1.

At the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, where Hugo Kortschak of Yale is director, students will apper in recital.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers have arranged two programs at Jacob's Pillow, their West Becket studio. There will be tea at 4 o'clock Friday, Aug. 14, followed by the lecture-demonstration. On Saturday there will be a buffet luncheon at 1 o'clock and the lecture demonstration starting at 2 o'clock will be completed by 3 o'clock in sufficient time for those attending to be at the afternoon concert by the orchestra. Mr. Shawn's lecture both days will be "Kinetic Molpai," and the dance feature will be a suite of 11 dances called "Molpai".

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Gerome Brush has hung his 110 portraits of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. This exhibition lasting all week is free. It will be the first public display of this work by Mr. Brush. The exhibition will be open from 10 to 12 noon and 2 to 5 p. m., daily, and will also be available to patrons of the theater in the evening.

Josephine Hutchinson, cinema actress, will appear in "The Shining Hour" at the Berkshire Playhouse all of Festival week, with matinees Wednesday and Thursday.

PORTLAND, ME.
NEWS

FIRST OUTDOOR CONCERT GIVEN IN BERKSHIRES

5,000 Hear Boston Symphony Open Series

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. (UP) · The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps came to the Berkshires last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts new in the annals of American music festivals.

More than 5,000 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 50-year history has the Boston Sympony performed in a tent.

Music lovers from such distant points as Hawaii, California, Colorado, Florida, the Carolinas and West Virginia moved in a steady stream up a corkscrew road to a flat, velvety eight-acre plot on the magnificent Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

It is to the Emerson Bromo Seltzer fortune that the Berkshire symphonic festival is indebted — just as Europe has enjoyed similar fetes financed by the Beecham pill fortune. The Berkshire festival boasts among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, American ambassador-at-large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

So congested was traffic up the winding road to the concert tent that the opening program was delayed a half hour. Earlier in the evening, it appeared the festival would be marred by a thunder storm, but soon a brilliant sunset broke through the clouds and tent flaps were thrown back as stars dotted the sky.

As the orchestra played the sprawling tent was darkened except for the stage which was illuminated by drop-lights. The performance, which attracted noted music critics from throughout New England and New York and Pennsylvania, will be repeated Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

AUG 8 - 1936

Music Lovers Gather at Stockbridge Next Week

Music will fill the air in the Berkshires next week-end when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give a series of concerts.

These musicales will be given at the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, and will be in the open under a huge canopy of canvas.

The opening concert will be Thursday and there will be a program Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 16.

It isexpected that music lovers from Worcester will attend.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers have arranged two programs at Jacob's Pillow, their West Becket studio, according to the program received today in Worcester. There will be a tea at 4, Friday afternoon followed by a lecture and demonstration. There will be a buffet luncheon Saturday at 1, followed by a lecture.

At the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, Gerome Brush has hung his 110 portraits of members of the Boston Symphony members.

Josephine Hutchinson, cinema actress, will appear in "The Shining Hour," in The Berkshire each day of the concerts.

Special programs have been arranged for festival week by neighboring music centers in the Berkshire district.

Many persons of prominence are expected to attend. Among them will be America's Ambassador-at-Large Norman H. Davis, Edna St. Vincent Millay, the poet; Dr. William Allan Neilson, president of Smith College; Dr. H. N. MacCracken, president of Vassar College; James Findlay Williamson, director of the Westminster Choir; Congressman Allen T. Treadway; Owen Johnson, the novelist, son of Robert Underwood Johnson, former ambassador to Italy; Walter Prichard Eaton, dramatic critic and member of the Yale faculty; Kathleen Parlow, world famous woman violinist; Efrem Zimbalist and his wife, Alma Gluck; Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island; Miss Mabel Choate, whose father was ambassador to the Court of St. James; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra; Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, "patron saint" of chamber music.

TRIBUNE

Colony Having Third Annual Music Festival

TTSFIELD, MASS.

Next week's musical events of im-rtance in the Berkshires will be the third annual symphonic festival at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, nox. The Boston Symphony orestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conducr, is to give concerts Thursday,
g. 13, and Sunday, Aug. 16, at 8:30
m., and a Saturday matinée at 4:30
m. A shell for eighty musicians
s been built on the lawn against a ckground of tall pines. There will seats for 4,000 persons in a tent
d also open air accommodations.
ghty boxes have been sold.
Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of e President, is to be the guest of
r. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis for e Saturday matinée. In the first ght audience will be Mrs. Frederick Coolidge, who is arriving early in the week from San Francisco; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the President; Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mr. and Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Efrem Zimbalist, the violinist, and his wife, Alma Gluck; Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Stewart, and Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college.

Mrs. Philip Le Fevre Elting of 1120 Lake Shore drive, Chicago, is visiting Mrs. Frederick T. West at Court Hill, Pittsfield. Mrs. Hermon B. Butler of Hillrise, Winnetka, who has been with Mrs. West, has joined her daughter, Mrs. Claude Jewell Peck, of Euclid Heights, Cleveland, O.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz have issued invitations for a dinner to be given at Fernbrook, Lenox, in honor of Miss Edith Meyer of Cleveland.

Mr. and Mrs. Kimball Salisbury of 1415 Astor street and their guests, Mr. and Mrs. Darrow Bruce Fulton, of 1318 Ritchie court, Chicago, are spending the week-end at Manchester, Vt., and the men are golf tournament entrants there.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Herndon of New York have joined Mrs. Herndon's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway, of Glencoe, Ill., at Tamarack, Tyringham.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

Founder of Boston Symphony Uncle of George Higginson

LENOX, Aug. 10.— Major Henry Lee Higginson, who in 1881 founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be here for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, was an uncle of the late George Higginson, Jr., of this town, who died in New York, April 28, in his 72nd year.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 11 1936

HUGE CANOPY FOR FESTIVAL

Berkshire Event Will be Protected in Case of Rain This Week

Stockbridge, Aug. 11.—"Fair and warm" is the weather prediction for the days of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, starting Thursday, at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the attraction.

But whether the weather is fair or cloudy, the festival officials aren't worried. They have a huge canopy erected as protection against the elements. If it's fair, the sides will be up. If it rains, they'll be down. As an aid to motorists, Holmwood will be ablaze with electric lights, highway flares and acetylene torches. Parking is free.

A box office will be opened at Holmwood, telephone Lee 262, on Thursday. Branch offices now open are located in Stockbridge and Lenox, and at the Berkshire Hills conference information booth in Pittsfield and the Southern Chamber of Commerce booth in Great Barrington.

Tickets for the three lectures by Olin Downes of the New York Times, Aug. 12 and 14, at 11 o'clock, and Aug. 16 at 12.15 p. m., may be secured at the Stockbridge office of the festival or at the box office of the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, where the lectures will be given.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

AUG 9 - 1936

Third Symphonic Festival Will Be Major Attraction In Berkshires This Week

Chief Musical Event of Year Will Attract Thousands to Mrs Margaret Emerson's Attractive Estate at Lenox — Boston Symphony, With Serge Koussevitzky as Conductor, Will Be Heard in Three Concerts—Tent Seats Provided for Audience of 4000—Mrs Calvin Coolidge to Attend and Mother of President Roosevelt Has Been Invited — Other Musical Events On Calendar for Coming Week and Playhouse Will Present Keith Winter Comedy—Wyantenuck Country Club Holds Anniversary Dinner—Other Items of Berkshire Society Interest

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 8—Entertainments for Berkshire visitors the coming week will center around the third Symphonic festival, the great musical event of the year, which will be held at Mrs Margaret Emerson's attractive and spacious estate, Holmwood, at Lenox. The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is to give evening concerts Thursday, the 13th, and Sunday, the 16th, at 8.30, with a matinee Saturday at 4.30. The festival represents an expenditure of about $17,000 and its financial success already has been prac-ally assured.

Tent Seats for 4000

All the 80 boxes have been sold at $75 each and on account of the prominence of many of those who already have bought tickets and whose names have been published it is expected there will be a very large last-minute demand for seats. The concerts will be given rain or shine as the audience will occupy seats in a tent with a capacity for 4000 persons. The overflow will be cared for out in the open.

Mrs Emerson, who is giving the use of her estate for the festival, is abroad. She acquired the property soon after the death of her second husband, Alfred G. Vanderbilt, from the estate of George Westinghouse, the inventor, who named it Erskine park. Mrs Westinghouse was her own landscape architect and personally laid out the extensive gardens and drives. George Westinghouse, Jr., son of the inventor, is living at Los Angeles, Cal. Mrs Emerson enlarged and improved the gardens and house overlooking beautiful Laurel lake. Although Mrs Emerson has not occupied for several years the white-painted, rambling villa, the grounds and gardens have been maintained as though she were in residence. The gymnasium, where Mrs Westinghouse entertained lavishly at her hunt balls and breakfasts a generation ago, is a short distance from the house. During the years of occupancy by Mrs Emerson the gymnasium was the playhouse for her sons, George W. and Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Jr.

President's Mother Invited

The shell with its background of tall pines will seat 90 musicians, who are to have rooms at the Maplewood hotel, Pittsfield. During the festival Mr and Mrs Koussevitzky are to be the guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, president of the Festival corporation. In 1934 and 1935 Mrs James Roosevelt, mother of the President, motored over from Hyde Park, N. Y., and was the guest of Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis for the Saturday matinee. They have invited her again for next week. Mrs Frederick S. Coolidge is arriving early in the week from San Francisco, Cal., and will be at the Wendell hotel. Mrs Calvin Coolidge of Northampton is to attend the festival. Holmwood is on national automobile route 7, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, is to lecture on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. He is to be the guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag, Stockbridge. On exhibition at the Playhouse during the festival will be a collection of 110 crayon portraits of individual members of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Gerome Brush.

Tomorrow night Prof Charles L. Safford of the department of music at Williams college is to address a group of friends of Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson at Ingleside, their Stockbridge home, on the symphonies with special reference to Beethoven.

At Berkshire Playhouse

For festival week at the Berkshire Playhouse William Miles, manager, is to produce Keith Winter's comedy, "The Shining Hour," with Miss Josephine Hutchinson in the leading role. Associated with her will be Richard Hale, Helen Brooks, Lewis Martin, Ellen Hall and Whitner Bissell.

More than 200 members of the Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, attended tonight the 40th anniversary dinner and entertainment. Mr and Mrs John H. C. Church and John L. E. Pell, charter members, were present and Mrs Church was in charge of a humorous skit entitled

---

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG [illegible] 936

Trustees Of Festival Meet

Miss Smith and Miss Oliver To Give Garden Party for Dr. Koussevitsky

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, meeting yesterday afternoon with the president, Miss Gerrtude Robinson Smith at Glendale, gave a lusty cheer when they were told enough tickets have been sold for the concerts this week to fill the huge tent that has been erected on Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. As a part of its policy, however, the Festival officers have arranged for many benches to be placed outside the tent for the hundreds who will prefer to enjoy their music under the stars.

If the last minute demand for tickets to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky approximate the estimate, the financial success of the Festival is assured, according to the report given the trustees by John C. Lynch, the treasurer, and George W. Edman, chairman of the coordinating committee.

Miss Robinson Smith and Miss Miriam Oliver will entertain at a garden party for members of the board and sub-chairmen Friday afternoon in honor of Dr. Koussevitzky. There is no concert Friday but Dr. Koussevitzky and many of the Festival guests will attend the performance of "The Shining Hour" at the Berkshire Playhouse. Miss Josephine Hutchinson will be in the leading role.

Yesterday afternoon Sergeant Edward J. Majesky, Corporal Timothy L. Flynn of the State police who are to be in charge of traffic; Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, marshal; Willard Sistare, in charge of ushers; Grenville L. Willis, State engineer, and others met with Festival officials at Holmwood to go over the many problems involved in handling the crowd.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1936

Berkshires Colony Marks 40th Year of Wyantenuck Club

First Tea Reviewed in Skit; Tennis Tourney and Music Festival This Week

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 8.—The fortieth anniversary of the Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, was celebrated tonight with a dinner and entertainment. On the committee were Mr. John L. E. Pell, chairman; Mr. and Mrs. John H. C Church, Mrs. Benjamin D. Ticknor, Dr. John Dodge Peters and Mr. Charles M. Gibbs. Mr. and Mrs. Church, Mr. Pell and Mr. Gibbs are charter members. Mrs. Church was in charge of a skit which reviewed the first tea held at the club in August, 1896.

Mrs. Frederick A. Pearson was in charge of a tea at the club this afternoon, assisted by Mrs. Ray Palmer, Mrs. John B. Hull jr., Mrs. I. C. Bates Dana, Mrs George L. Taylor and Mrs. George E. Stewart.

Next week's chief sporting event will be the Western New England men's tennis championships at the Wyantenuck Club. The tournament will start Tuesday in singles and doubles and run six days. There will be a tea dance at the club on Thursday from 4 to 8 p. m. and a dinner dance on Saturday. On the tournament committee are Mr. Ray Palmer, chairman; Miss Mary de Windt, Miss Jean Van Vranken, Mr. Sheldon C. Collins, Mr. Everett Pell, Mr. Frederick A. Pearson, Mr. Albert Spalding and Mr. Dudley Turner.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for next week at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood. Concerts are to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, on Thursday ~~night,~~ Saturday afternoon and Sunday night.

The Williamstown Garden Club, of which Mrs. William Warren Tracy is president, will have its third annual flower show in Mitchell Hall on Tuesday.

On Wednesday the Richmond Garden Club, of which Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs is president, is to meet at the Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff is to show pictures of gardens she visited recently while in Paris. Mrs. Gibbs is a director of the International Horticultural Exposition to be held at Chicago September 12 to 20.

Miss Elizabeth Lanier Fenno, daughter of Mrs. George K. Livermore, is to be married on Saturday in the garden at Three Acres, Lenox, to Mr. Samuel Adams Clark, son of Mrs. Samuel Clark, of 655 Park Avenue, New York.

At the Hotel Oakwood, Great Barrington, are Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lee, of Hempstead, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. John Acerne, of Woodlawn, L. I.; the Misses Jennie and Lydia Stewart, of Daytona Beach, Fla.; Miss Adeline Davidson, of East Orange, N. J.; and Mr. and Mrs. Albin Holmes, of Bronxville, N. Y.

Olde Egremont Tavern arrivals at South Egremont include Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ford, of Castleton, N. Y.; Mrs. Walter A. Gordon, of Garden City, L. I., and Mrs. John Hopkins and Mrs. E. H. Johnston, of Waterbury, Conn.

The Misses May and Eva Thayer Webb, of New York, are at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, for August. Also there are Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Laird and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Behrman, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. John Lorimer Graham, and Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Brinckerhoff, of New York.

At the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, are Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Preston, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Tuttle, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Thoms, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Miller, of South Orange, N. J.

At Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, are Miss Elizabeth O. Simms, who is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. May Brown Simms; Mr. George O. Simms, of Garden City, L. I., and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Harding, of New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

UG 9 - 1936

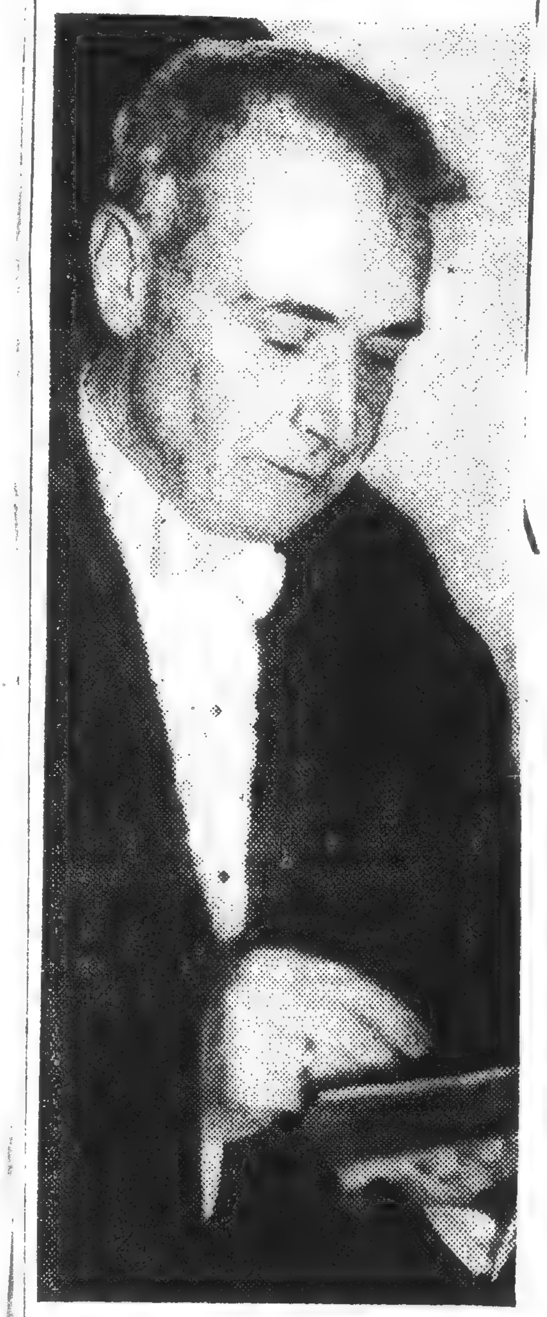
MUSIC

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Berkshire Festival to Attract Many Men and Women of Prominence

EVERY method of tranportation will be utilized next Thursday evening, converging at the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Men and women of affairs, music lovers, prominent citizens, and just ordinary folk will be among the thousands headed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival August 13, 15 and 16.

Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr. chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was ambassador to the Court of St. James;



DR. KOUSSEVITZKY

Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical college and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland orchestra, Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, August 12, 14, and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrived in America from Europe last week and Dr. Koussevitzky went immediately to Stockbridge for rehearsals.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy arrived last Tuesday and is now in place. Under this canvass will be seats for 4,000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Many of the racing colony of Saratoga are planning to attend, immediately following the last race of the afternoon.

Among the Albany Area music lovers who have made reservations are Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Smouse, Mr. and Mrs. Otto F. Janda, Mr. and Mrs. Max J. Pollett, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar S. Van Olinda, Mrs. MacNaughton Miller, Miss Mary Masson of Altamont, Miss Olive Schreiner, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence McKinney, Mrs. C. Sutherland Ransom, John A. Carabella, Mrs. William Festus Morgan of Cooperstown; Mrs. Newton B. Vanderzee, Miss Elizabeth Stoneman, Major and Mrs. Barr of the Watervliet arsenal; Charles S. Stedman, Mrs. Charles S. Harpham.

A refreshment booth under the auspices of the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington, will dispense light lunches before the concert and during the intermission at very reasonable prices.

Reserved seats may be procured at the Albany headquarters of the Festival, the Van Curler Music Company, 120 State street.

The program for the opening night, Thursday August 13, is as follows:

Bach, Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

Beethoven, Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84.

Bethoven, Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92.

Intermission of 25 minutes

Sibelius, Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 43.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

3 SYMPHONIC CONCERTS SET

Scores from Vicinity to Hear Boston Orchestra at Festival

Scores of music lovers in Albany and its vicinity have obtained reservations for the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival near Stockbridge, Mass., which opens tomorrow night.

The orchestra of 80 skilled men and its internationally famed conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is expected to arrive in Pittsfield at noon and, after lunch at the Maplewood Hotel, will go to the Festival tent on the farm home of Mrs. Margaret Emerson on Route 7 between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Rehearsal of the initial program will occupy the afternoon. The concert will begin at 8:30 p. m. There will be no postponement in the event of rain. Free parking space for 2,000 automobiles has been provided.

Festival visitors arriving during the day will be afforded an opportunity to attend a special matinee at the Berkshire Playhouse where Josephine Hutchinson is appearing in "The Shining Hour."

A squad of Massachusetts State Police under Sergt. Edward J. Majesky and Corp. Timonthy L. Flynn will handle the expected crush at the Festival grounds. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre is marshal.

The first Olin Downes lecture series will be Friday at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. It will begin at 11 a. m.

The Boston Symphony's opening program in the Festival series will open with the Bach Chorale Prelude on "Komm Gott, Schopfer Heiliger Geist" arranged by Arnold Schonberg. It will be followed by Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont" and the same composer's Seventh Symphony, one of the "immortal nine."

After a 25-minute intermission, the concert will end with Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

The second orchestral concert will be at 4:30 p. m. Saturday and the third at 8:30 p. m. Sunday.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 12 1936

Many Waiting First Day of Berkshire Fete

THE opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will take place tomorrow at Holmwood and will continue through Sunday.

Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle Jr., chamberlain of the city of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Josepn Choate who was ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the violinist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vicepresident and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra; Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Federal Route 7. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will come immediately to Stockbridge.

Already Holmwood is taking on a festive appearance. The huge shell has been erected beneath stately pine trees and the huge canopy has arrived today and will soon be in place. Under this canvass will be seats for 4,000 persons and there will be additional seats outside for those who prefer their music under the stars.

Others who will be in attendance when Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for the opening strains of Bach's majestic choral prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," will be:

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, recently returned from Europe; Bentley Wirt Warren, prominent Boston lawyer and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox; first vicepresident of the festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John C. Lynch, former vicepresident of the Bell Telephone System; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Carl A. de Gersdorff, New York lawyer; Robert G. Stewart, official of the Standard Oil Company; John Shepard of Boston and Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of International Law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knopf, New York publisher; John S. Newberry Jr. of Detroit.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

AUG 1 1936

TO ATTEND FESTIVAL

Unusual Musical Event To Be Given By Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mrs. Harold G. Henderson of Hunter is among those who will attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on August 13, 15 and 16. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts beneath a huge canopy at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give three lectures on the symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Aug. 12, 14 and 16.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Downes arrive in America from Europe this week and Dr. Koussevitzky will go immediately to Stockbridge.

The majestic choral prelude, Bach's "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" will open the Berkshire Festival.

NEWBURRYPORT, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 12 1936

CABBAGES AND KINGS

> "The time has come," the Walrus said,
> "To talk of many things;
> Of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—
> Of cabbages and Kings—"
> —Alice in Wonderland.

By NED BROWN

A musically inclined friend of ours has been having a wonderful time with a parlor organ, figuring out what combinations of tones would provide desirable patterns for automobile horns. He believes that every car should be equipped with several types of horns, possessing varied capacities for engendering a soul-shuddering reaction. For example, one gorgeous dissonance would be reserved for the mother, with the baby carriage, who crosses the street, irrelevantly, in his path. Another would be reserved for a green-eyed nocturnal prowling cat, and still another for a beery, bleary-eyed lout, who lumbers in the offing. This writer would save the haughtiest of all for the wabbling cyclist.

A famous symphony leader—we believe it's Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston orchestra, has a specially-made automobile horn, which sounds the first six notes of the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, the one which is supposed to represent Fate, knocking at the door. A jazz-band participant however, has announced his intentions of having a horn made, which would sound a theme from the Rhapsody in Blue.

---

at 11. The final lecture will be Sunday at 12:15 p.m.

Friday afternoon at 4, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their studio in West Becket. They will give an extra program Saturday afternoon immediately following a buffet luncheon at 1 o'clock. Friday evening there will be chamber music at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

Josephine Hutchinson, cinema and stage star, appearing in "The Shining Hour" at the Berkshire Playhouse is drawing capacity audiences this week. To meet the demand, Director William Miles has arranged for an extra matinee Thursday afternoon.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY FESTIVAL FEATURE

Plays Thursday at Emerson Estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrive in Pittsfield Thursday by special train and after luncheon at the Maplewood Hotel, will be taken to Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox to rehearse for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at 8:30.

Everything is in readiness at Holmwood. Final touches have been made to the grounds, the shell and the huge canopy. The concerts will be held rain or shine under the canvas with more seating space out of doors.

Free Parking Space

The free parking space sufficient for 2,000 cars has been marked off by Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, the marshal and his assistants, Sergt. Edward J. Majesky and Corp. Timothy L. Flynn and state police are prepared to handle tremendous crowds at the gate.

The opening program will be as follows:

Bach — Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer Heiliger Geist."

Beethoven — Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Op. 92.

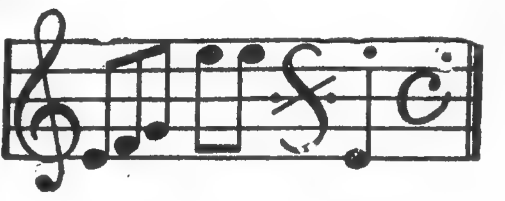
Sibelius — Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 43.

The second lecture by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will take place at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge Friday morning

---

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 1 1936



Tomorrow morning, promptly at 11, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open its annual music program. The concerts will not begin until Thursday evening but Olin Downes, noted New York music critic, will give a lecture tomorrow morning in the Berkshire Playhouse, the first of a series on the symphony which will continue Friday and Sunday mornings.

The Festival will mark the first time in his 13 years in America that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which is to play at the Festival, has conducted during the summer and the first time in the orchestra's 55 years of existence that it has appeared away from home out of doors.

When Dr. Koussevitzky lifts his baton for Thursday's concert there will be in attendance persons of prominence from more than 20 states and Canada. Other notables will be present at the second concert Saturday afternoon and at the final one Sunday evening.

State police will be at the gate to Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, where the concerts will be given, to handle traffic. Holmwood is on Federal Route 7, between Lenox and Stockbridge. All the concerts will be under canvas with the orchestra occupying a huge shell at the east end.

The complete programs are as follows: Thursday, Bach, Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist"; Beethoven, Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 48.

Saturday, Handel, Larghetto e affetuoso from Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 6 in G. minor; Moussorgsky, prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy, prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Rimsky-Korsakov, "Capriccio Espagnol"; Brahma, Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

Sunday, Mendelsshon, Symphony in A major, "Italian," Op. 90; Wagner, prelude to "Lohengrin"; Wagner, prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64.

Special programs have been arranged for Festival week by neighboring music centers. The South Mountain quartet will play at the Music Temple in Pittsfield, built and maintained by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. They will give the following program Sunday afternoon: Schumann, Quartet in E flat major, Op. 47; Zoltan Kodaly, Quartet in D major, Op. 10; Joseph Jongen, Quartet in A major, Op. 50.

At Falls Village, Conn., the Gordon Quartet under the direction of Jacques Gordon, will present the Brahms piano quintet in F minor, opus 34, with Frank Sheridan, painist, and the Brahms quartet in C minor, opus 51, No. 1.

Students of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, where Hugo Kortschak of Yale is director, will appear in recital. Ted Shawn and his men dancers have arranged two programs at Jacob's Pillow, their West Becket studio. Lecture-demonstrations will be given Friday afternoon after tea and Saturday afternoon following lunch.

Gerome Brush has hung his 110 portraits of members of the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. This public display, Mr. Brush's first, is free. Josephine Hutchinson, cinema actress, is appearing in "The Shining Hour" at the Berkshire Playhouse all week, with matinees Wednesday and Thursday.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 12 1936

2 FROM CITY GOING TO SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Clifford H. Green and Rev. Dr. Shepherd Knapp will leave tomorrow to attend the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. They will hear the remainder of the program, which opened last night, and will continue through the week at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, will play.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1936

Festival Activities Begin Today With Lecture by Music Critic

Olin Downes Delivers First of Three Lectures at Berkshire Playhouse—Mr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky Staying With Miss Robinson Smith—Orchestra Arrives Tomorrow and Will Rehearse at Holmwood in the Afternoon

Activities connected with the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival started this morning with the first lecture of three by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, delivered at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. Tomorrow the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrives at the Maplewood Hotel in Pittsfield and after luncheon will be taken by busses to the Emerson place between Lenox and Stockbridge for a rehearsal for the opening concert tomorrow night at 8:30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and Mrs. Koussevitzky, with Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, wil be the guests during the Festival of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president, at Glendale. Mr. Dane is a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Friday afternoon, Miss Robinson Smith and Miss Miriam Oliver will entertain at a garden party in Glendale for Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. About 125 have been invited including sub-chairman and trustees of the Festival.

Notables to Come

Attorney Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and United States Senator Frederick C. Walcott of Hartford, Conn., are to be the guests next door to Miss Robinson Smith at Chesterwood, the summer home of Mrs. Daniel Chester French, leased this summer to Dr. and Mrs. Herschel C. Walker.

Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island is arriving tomorrow to be the guest at Wheatleigh in Lenox of Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, first vice-president of the Festival.

Mr. and Mrs. Downes are the guests of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag on Prospect Hill, Stockbridge.

Henry Sawyer, vice-president of the Boston Symphony, and Mrs. Sawyer are to be the guests of Mrs. E. P. Buell at the South Street Inn.

These are but a few of the notables who will come to the Berkshires for the great musical event of the season. Festival officials announced today that every one of the 3600 seats under the canopy will be occupied and they hope that the 1200 seats outside the tent will be occupied too.

Add Finishing Touches

Today at Holmwood, the ground crew was busy adding the finishing touches to a place that Dr. Koussevitzky has already referred to as "ideal" for the concerts. Pine trees, signs, hurdle fence, electric lights, acetylene torches, flares were being put in place today.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, marshal, gave final instructions to his crew on parking last night while tonight Willard Sistare, in charge of ushers and seating arrangements, will meet his assistants at Holmwood.

Under the direction of Joseph Franz and Frank Ruesch of Stockbridge, the huge tent and the shell, the shelter for the orchestra, and for Dr. Koussevitzky, have been constructed.

The food concession tent has been erected under the direction of Mrs. Charles E. Patterson of the Thursday Morning Club in Great Barrington. Refreshments will be on sale before and after the concerts and at intermissions.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

TICKETS FOR SINGLE CONCERTS AVAILABLE

"To correct an impression that is prevalent in some communities, tickets for single concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival are available and are priced at $1.50, $1.75, $2.50 and $3.00," said officials of the Festival today. "We have tried to stress the subscription feature of the Festival because with subscriptions, the price is more reasonable. Subscriptions are transferable.'

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

1936

Good Weather Is Expected For Music Festival

Berkshire Symphonic Programs to Be Given This Week

"Fair and warm" is the weather prediction for the days of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, "Holmwood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., with three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the attraction.

The concerts will be given on Thursday and Sunday evenings, and on Saturday afternoon.

But whether the weather is fair or cloudy, the Festival committee is not worried. They have a huge canopy erected as protection against the elements. If it is fair, the sides will be up. If it storms, they will be down. As an aid to motorists, Holmwood will be ablaze with electric lights, highway flares and torches. Parking is free.

While the canopy will shelter 4000 people, those who prefer to listen to their music out under the stars will find seats in place for them. The concert shell is already in place.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will lecture on the concert programs.

Mr. Downes will lecture at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, on August 12, 14 and 16, the first two days at 11 o'clock and on the third date at 12:15.

Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman K. Davis, America's Ambassador at large; Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Chamberlain of the City of New York; Albert Spalding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate who was Ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson the novelist, whose father was ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the "patron saint" of chamber music; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra and Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author, are among the thousands expected.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 1 2 1936

Berkshire Festival Week's Outstanding Musical Event

Important Because of Engagement of Koussevitsky and Orchestra --- WPA Opera Program Launched in Boston

The third annual Berkshire music festival this week takes on a new importance because of the engagement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitky's direction in three symphonic programs beginning on Thursday afternoon.

The concerts will be given on the beautiful Emerson estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, an ideal natural setting for the festival. Dr. Koussevitzky cut short his summer stay in Europe in order to direct the programs. It is the hope of the promoters that ultimately it will be possible to establish in the Berkshires a summer festival similar to that which is now in progress at Salzburg in Austria. With that idea in mind it will be interesting to notice the reaction to the more ambitious festival which has been arranged for the next few days.

The programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be as follows:

Thursday evening: Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist;" Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and Seventh Symphony; Sibelius's Second Symphony.

Saturday afternoon: Handel's Larghetto from the Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 6, Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstehina," Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun;" Rimsky-Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice; and Brahm's Second Symphony.

Sunday evening: Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; Wagner's Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger;" Tschaikowsky's 5th Symphony.

Boston WPA Opera.

The much discussed WPA opera project in Boston comes out of the preparatory stage into actual performance this week. As a matter of fact, it opened in the Boston Opera House last evening with a performance of "Hansel and Gretel" which will be repeated tonight and on Saturday afternoon. "Madame Butterfly" will be presented Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Both operas have been prepared and will be directed by young Mr. Ernst Hoffmann, whose father, Jacques Hoffman, was for many years one of the leading violinists in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The son has had training and operatic experience abroad. And since his return to Boston his talents have been used in several of the federal music projects to good advantage. The charge for admission to the operatic performance will be nominal.

The Late Arthur Whiting.

The death in New York last month of Arthur Whiting, pianist and composer, moved both Richard Aldrich of the New York Times and Daniel Gregory Mason to appreciate tributes to a sincere and accomplished musician, about whose talents, largely because of his own modesty there has been no ballyhoo. He was a good pianist, although not a great one, and a composer of originality but no great pretentions. But in the opinion of both the commentators mentioned, he exerted a singular influence for good music and good taste during the 41 years he lived in New York.

He was born in Cambridge, Mass., in 1861 and was a piano pupil of W. H. Sherwood. He studied under Rheinberger in Munich at the conservatory at the same time that Lowell's most famous musician, George W. Chadwick was a student there along with Horatio Parker and other well known Americans. He was a lover of the compositions of Bach and Brahms and in later years of those of Debussy.

His own compositions he wrote slowly, and published sparingly. They include a Fantasy for piano and orchestra, church music and organ pieces, choral arrangements of folk music and a setting of verses by Omar Khayyam. He wrote, among other works, two concertos for piano and orchestra which he played with the Boston, Chicago and Pittsburgh orchestras, besides several string quartets and incidental music to "The Golden Cage," sung at South Moutain, Pittsfield and elsewhere. Mr. Mason thinks that his most widely known and most helpful achievement was the contribution he made to the lifelong enjoyment of music of thousands of young men by his explanatory recitals in Yale, Harvard, Princeton and other universities. "To the cheap and tawdry he was pitiless," writes Mr. Mason. "His influence, tonic, prophylactic, preservative of the true spirit of art in a sentimental age, will long survive him. Music has been more romantic in other hands. In none has it been purer, cleaner and finer than in his."

Another Kirsten.

Following Kirsten Flagstad the Metropolitan is to have another of the same Christian name. Kirsten Thorberg, Swedish contralto, has been engaged for next season. She is at present singing in the operatic productions at the Salzburg festival. She is said to be familiar with all the leading contralto roles in the Wagnerian operas. In Covent Garden in London last May she scored a marked success. Her reputation has been gained in Vienna, in Prague at the German theatre and elsewhere on the continent. By report she will make her American debut early in the season. S. R. F.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

AUG 1 1936

Dr. Koussevitzky Inspects Shell

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 9 — Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by the manager, George E. Judd, and officials of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inspected the site of the Festival at "Holmwood," Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, over the week end.

"Wonderful; no place could be more beautiful," declared the conductor as he stood in the shell and gazed out over the wide expanse of the canvas auditorium to the stately pine trees beyond. "We must make good music—music that will be as beautiful as this spot," he said.

After visiting briefly with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, Dr. Koussevitsky and Mr. Judd motored to Springfield where they caught a train for Boston.

The orchestra will rehearse Tuesday and Wednesday at Symphony Hall in Boston and arrive in Pittsfield at 11.40 Thursday. After luncheon at the Maplewood Hotel, the orchestra will go directly to "Holmwood" for another rehearsal in preparation for the opening of the first concert Thursday evening at 8.30.

Hotel reservations in Lenox and Stockbridge are at a premium now with the Curtis Hotel in Lenox reporting that with its regular guests and festival patrons it is filled for the duration of the Festival.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 1 1936

ATTENDED CONCERT

Among those from Hudson and vicinity who attended tne first of th Berkshire Festival concerts which ar being given this year by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky were the following:

Mrs. O. H. Bradley, sub-chairman for this section of Columbia county: her house guest, Mrs. Joseph Conover, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Mrs. Lucy Bowles and her house guest, Mrs. John Shearn, of Middleton, Ohio, Miss Eva Sciutto, Miss Vera Clapper, Miss Anna Clapper, Miss Augusta Eigo, Miss Ruth Jessup, of this city, Miss Mabel Esselstyn, Miss Mary Bristol, Mrs. Charles Relyea, Carl Relyea, Mrs. Robert Perkins, Miss Katherine Sagendorph, Mrs. Arthur Buchholz, Mrs. Eugene Sciutto, Miss Maytie D. Crane, Miss Alice Shaw, of Claverack, and Miss Katherine Coon, of Poughkeepsie, granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Esselstyn, of Claverack.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 1 2 1936

Koussevitzky Ready to Open Berkshire Fete

Boston Symphony First on Festival Program Tomorrow at Holmwood

Quartet Concert Sunday

Ted Shawn Dancers Among OtherGroups onProgram

The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate adjoining U. S. Route 7 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its regular conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will play a program including Schonberg's orchestral version of Bach's organ chorale prelude, "Komm' Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and the seventh symphony and the second symphony of Sibelius.

The second concert, with Brahms's second symphony as its principal number, will be held Saturday afternoon, and the third and last concert next Sunday night, August 16, with a program including Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphonies. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the three programs this morning and next Friday morning at 11 o'clock and Sunday at 12:15 p.m. in the Berkshire Playhouse. The concerts themselves will be held under a huge canopy, and will not have to depend on the weather.

Box offices are open in Stockbridge, Lenox, Pittsfield, at the Berkshire Hills Conference information booth, and Great Barrington, at the Southern Chamber of Commerce booth. A box office wil be opened tomorrow at Holmwood, where electric lights and highway flares will be lit on the two concert evenings as an aid to motorists. Parking will be free.

Among thos expected to attend tomorrow nght's concert are Norman H. Davis, United States Ambassador-at-Large; Edna St. Vincent Millay, William Allan Neilson, president of Smith College; H. N. MacCracken, president of Vassar College; John Finley Williamson, director of the Westminster Choir School; Representative Allen T. Treadway, Owen Johnson, Walter Pritchard Eaton, Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, and his wife, Alma Gluck; Governor Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island, Miss Mabel Choare, A. A. Brewster, vice-president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra; Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice and Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is planning to attend Saturday afternoon's concert.

"The Shining Hour," with Josephine Hutchinson in the principal role, is being presented this week at the Berkshire Playhouse, in Stockbridge, with matinees today and tomorrow. An exhibition of Gerome Brush's portraits of the 110 members of the Boston Symphony will be held daily at the Playhouse this week from 10 to 12 and 2 to 5 o'clock, with no admission charge. It will also be open for the theater's patrons in the evening.

Several other musical events will be held during the festival period in the Berkshire region. The South Mountain Quartet, composed of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conard Held and Willem Willeke, will give a concert next Sunday afternoon at 4 at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, playing works of Schumann, Kodaly and Jongen. Jacques Gordon's quartet and Frank Sheridan, pianist, will play a Brahms program at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., next Sunday at the same hour. There will also be a concert Sunday afternoon at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington, Mass.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will give two lecture-demonstrations on Friday afternoon at 4 and Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock at their studio in West Becket, Mass.

This will be the Boston Symphony's first appearance in these festivals.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

6

AUG 1 0 1936

Berkshire Music Fete Scheduled

Many R. I. Residents Will Attend Concerts to Be Held Aug. 13, 15 and 16

Music lovers hereabouts will join others from all sections of the country who will be among those attending one or more of the concerts in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, scheduled for Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the three concerts beneath a canopy at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, which is between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. In connection with the affair Olin Downs, New York music critic, will give three lectures on the program at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, on next Wednesday, Friday and Sunday.

Immediately upon his arrival from Europe this week, Dr. Koussevitzky, with Mr. Downs, who is also arriving from Europe, will leave for Stockbridge. The open-air auditorium at Holmwood will seat 4000 persons, with other vantage points available outside the canvas.

Gov. Green will be among those attending from Rhode Island. Other distinguished guests at the festival will include Norman H. Davis, United States Ambassador-at-large, Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the late President; Albert Spaulding, well known violinist; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph Choate, who was ambassador to the Court of St. James; Owen Johnson, the novelist, whose father was Ambassador to Italy in Woodrow Wilson's administration; Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge (Elizabeth Sprague) of Washington; Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, president of the Chicago Musical College and pianist and conductor of note; A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra; Walter Pritchard Eaton, critic and author.

OTHERS TO ATTEND

Others who will be in attendance will be Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival; Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; Edward A. Taft and Ernest B. Dane, trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, of New York and Lenox, first vice-president of the Festival; Mrs. Henry White of Lenox and New York; John Shepard, of Providence and Boston, former Mayor of Palm Beach; Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of international law at Princeton and Harvard; A. A. Knoph, New York publisher; Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton; Lowell Thomas, lecturer and world traveler; Lyman Beecher Stowe, writer, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. Samuel Frothingham of New York and Lenox; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Mrs. Daniel Chester French, widow of the Dean of American sculpture and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, sculptress, and Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer of Albany, N. Y.; R. J. Flick of Lenox and New York.

Willem Willeke, 'cellist and director of Mrs. Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield, Mass.; Jacques Gordon, director of Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn.; Hugo Kortschak of the Yale Music School and director of the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, at Cummington; Mrs. Harold G. Henderson, of Hunter, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Pittsfield, Mass., and Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. George William Douglas of Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, of Philadelphia; Prof. Charles L. Safford, head of the music department at Williams College, and Mrs. Safford; Mrs. James C. Colgate of Bennington, Vt.

Mrs. William Felton Barrett, of Rye, N. Y., and Great Barrington; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington; Mrs. George Long, Jr., of Hartford; Mrs. Thomas Hooker and Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, both of New Haven.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

61

AUG 1 3 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY TO CONDUCT THE CONCERT

Series of Boston Symphony Orchestra Programs to Be Held.

Tent to Accommodate 5500, Double Capacity of Symphony Hall.

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (U.P.)—Stockbridge in the Berkshires becomes the American counterpart of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps tonight when the Boston Symphony orchestra, for the first time under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, begins a series of outdoor concerts.

This will constitute the symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg.

Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent as it will when it inaugurates the Berkshire symphonic festival. Boasting among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. Grace Coolidge and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president, the festival is expected by its sponsors to capture some of the American interest heretofore centred in Europe's summer music festivals.

Just as Europe has enjoyed symphonic and operatic festivals financed by the Beecham Pill fortune, so the Berkshire symphonic festival that opens tonight is indebted to the Emerson Bromo Seltzer fortune. Site of the local event is Holmwood, magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

The orchestra will play within a rectangular acoustic shell of plywood resembliny a hugely magnified interior of a cabinet phonograph. The audience will be sheltered under a tent accomodating 5500—

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 3 1936

Ask Your Library

By RUTH N. WITTAN
Reference Librarian

A readers may receive the answer to any question of fact by phoning or writing The Berkshire Athenaeum Reference Department. Selected answers are published daily. All books cited are available at the library unless otherwise noted.

Q. Can you give me some information about Serge Koussevitzky? A. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 13-16, was born in the province of Tver, Russia, on July 26, 1874. He is a graduate of the Moscow Conservatory, holds honorary degrees from Brown and Harvard, was twice decorated by the Czar, and is an officer of the Legion of Honor. Conductor of the Boston Symphony since 1924, Dr. Koussevitzky was previously a professor at the Moscow Conservatory, soloist with the Imperial Theatre Orchestra, director of the Koussevitzky Symphony Orchestra, and conductor of orchestras in England, Germany, Italy, and Spain. He is the composer of the Concerto for Double Bass and Orchestra, many pieces for double bass and piano, and transcriptions from classical works. (Howe, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra.")

Q. Can you tell me when the town of Cheshire was incorporated. A. Cheshire, Mass., was incorporated on March 14, 1793. Its territory was made up of parts of the towns of Lanesborough, Windsor, Adams, and of the District of New Ashford. (*Barker, "Early Settlements in Cheshire," in Berkshire Historical Society collections)

Q. When was the act to revise Pittsfield's charter approved? A. The act revise the charter of the city of Pittsfield was approved on June 3, 1932. (*"Acts and Resolves of Massachusetts, 1932," Chap. 280)

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 12 1936

Music and The Drama

"OUTDOOR MELODY-MAKING"

Again al fresco music is sweeping the country in the warm months. The outdoor symphonic series have grown and prospered in the last few years, and it is encouraging to note that new ones have sprung up.

In addition to the Lewisohn Stadium Concerts of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Hollywood Bowl series of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, this season sees the Cleveland Orchestra carrying on nightly [illegible] at the Great Lakes Exposition, the Philadelphia Orchestra as usual active at Robin Hood Dell and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in a new series at Ravinia. The Portland (Ore.) Symphony Orchestra has inaugurated an open-air concert schedule for the first time. As usual, the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have their "Pop" Concerts and outdoor Esplanade events. At Hillsborough, Cal., the Woodland Theatre is again the scene of several concerts by the San Francisco Orchestra under guest leaders. In Newark, N. J., a new series of Stadium Concerts has been launched. The Centennial Exposition at Dallas, Tex., is also a music centre.

Open-air opera is making gains. Fortune Gallo has begun a series in a unique setting over the water at Jones Beach on Long Island. The Cincinnati Opera Company has opened an ambitious schedule of performances in English, including several American works. The Municipal Opera of St. Louis continues its popular series. The several symphonic series also include operatic and ballet performances on their programs. This is notably the case in New York, Los Angeles and Philadelphia.

Altogether it seems as if the popularity of Summer musical offerings were here to stay. With the new diversity that has been introduced into these programs, the public ought to find increased attractions for their patronage.

It is necessary to stress the fact that such series cannot exist on benevolent approval and kind words alone. What they need is loyal support both by patrons who are able to endow them and by the regular run of ticket buyers. There is hardly a field in which inspiration and elevation of public morale can be bought at a smaller price. Such series add to the gaiety and color of Summer life in the various cities, are wholesome social centres and, not least, benefit the business men in attracting visitors from other communities. Guarantors of Summer symphonic concerts and opera may be congratulated for helping to provide worthwhile pursuits at a time of year when the cultural index might otherwise recede to a disheartening degree.—Musical Courier.

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS-LEADER

AUG 13 1936

Lovers of Music Assemble For Festival in Berkshires

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its fifty-six years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his thirteen years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy Summer residents who were desirous of establishing a Summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire Hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Society Orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent Summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 13 1936

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO HEAR SEBELIUS

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Boston Symphony at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—The music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded ampitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Approves Aims

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who received [illegible] personal praise [illegible] interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous to establish in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Falzburg festival in Austria.

The concerts attracted the socialite summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

Music Festivals In Berkshires Open Thursday

Boston Symphony to Give Three Concerts Under Huge Canopy

The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate adjoining U. S. Route 7 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its regular conductor, Serge Koussevitzky will play a program including Schonberg's orchestral version of Bach's organ chorale prelude, "Komm' Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and the seventh symphony and the second symphony of Sibelius

The second concert, with Brahm's second symphony as its principal number, will be held Saturday afternoon, and the third and last concert Sunday night, August 16, with a program including Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphonies. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs Friday morning at 11 o'clock and Suday at 12:15 p. m. in the Berkshire Playhouse. The concerts themselves will be held under a huge canopy, and will not have to depend on the weather.

Box offices are open at Stockbridge, Lenox, Pittsfield, at the Berkshire Hills Conference Information Booth, and Great Barrington, at the Southern Chamber of Commece booth. A box office will be opened tomorrow at Holmwood, where electric lights and highway flares will be used on the two concert evenings as an aid to mortorists. Parking will be free.

Several other musical events will be held during the festival period in the Berkshire region. The South Mountain Quartet, composed of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conard Held and Willem Willeke, will give a concert Sunday afternoon at 4 at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, playing works of Schumann, Kodaly and Jongen. Jacques Gordon's Quartet and Frank Sheridan, pianist, will play a Brahms program at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., next Sunday at the same hour. There will also be a concert Sunday afternoon at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington, Mass.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will give two lecture-demonstrations on Friday afternoon at 4 and Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock at their studio in West Becket, Mass.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL TONIGHT

Dr. Koussevitzky to Lead Boston Symphony in 1st of 3 Concerts

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP) — Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music festival, which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence, the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lhargetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccion Espagnol," and Brahm's Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony"; Wagner's Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

MUSICAL FEST ON TONIGHT

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony society orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

— VOTE AMERICAN —

To Buy or Sell Real Estate Depend on Times-Union Want Ads.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

First Lecture by Olin Downes At Playhouse Wednesday Morning

Dr. Koussevitzky Inspects Holmwood Where He Will Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra for Festival This Week and Is Delighted—Volunteers To Help With Parking

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, will be the guest while in Berkshire of Miss Mabel Choate in Stockbridge. Mr. Downes returned from France on the Europa with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Festival.

The first lecture by Mr. Downes will be Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock. The public is invited. Tickets may be secured at the playhouse office or at the Festival office in Stockbridge. The second lecture will be Friday morning at 11 o'clock and the final one Sunday at 12:15 o'clock.

Dr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, inspected Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, where the Festival will be held, last Saturday, and were delighted.

Make "Beautiful Music"

"It is marvelous—no place could be more beautiful nor could a place be more ideally located for the concerts," was Dr. Koussevitzky's comment as he stood in the shell and gazed out at the wide expanse of canvas and benches. "With such a location, we will make beautiful music. No one will be disappointed."

From Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Judd motored to Springfield where they caught a train for Boston. Rehearsals are scheduled at Symphony Hall in Boston tomorrow morning and afternoon and Wednesday morning and afternoon. The orchestra, arriving at 11.40 Thursday morning will be whisked to the Maplewood Hotel and after a luncheon will be taken to Holmwood for another rehearsal before the opening concert Thursday.

This afternoon, Major J. Bruce McIntyre, marshal of the grounds; Sergeant Edward J. Majesky and Corporal Timothy L. Flynn of the State police; Willard Sistare, in charge of the ushers, Grenville L. Willis, State highway engineer; John Johnson, superintendent of the estate; Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, and other Festival officials, met at Holmwood to discuss the problems of traffic and grounds.

Volunteers to Help

Volunteers from Great Barrington, Housatonic, West Stockbridge, Lenox, Lee and Pittsfield will assist Major McIntyre in handling the parking on the estate. These volunteers are:

Malcolm Shove, William DuFresne, Erling Dollar, David Evans, Albert Hammer, all of Great Barrington; Warren Race and Frederick Chamberlin of Housatonic; Fred N. Cummings, Thomas H. Sullivan, Donald MacDonald, Donald MacDonald Jr., Chester Gray, Benjamin Carpino, Frank Crippen, J. B. Rabiner, Carlo Scagliarini and A. H. Kiligas, all of Pittsfield; Bruce Ingram, John Consolati, John Waddock, William O'Brien of Lee; Edward C. Gilligan, William Merrick, Robert Davidson, Thomas Kelly, Earl Sharpe of Lenox; George Jastrum and Dana Baldwin of West Stockbridge.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 13 1936

Emerson Fortune Brings Concerts To The Berkshires

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—Stockbridge in the Berkshires becomes the American counterpart of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps tonight when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, begins a series of outdoor concerts.

This will constitute the symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg.

Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent, as it will tonight when it inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic festival. Boasting among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. Grace Coolidge and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president, the festival is expected by its sponsors to capture some of the American interest heretofore centered in Europe's summer festivals.

Just as Europe has enjoyed symphonic and operatic festivals financed by the Beecham pill fortune, so the Berkshire symphonic destival that opens tonight is indebted to the Emerson Bromo Seltzer fortune. Site of the local event is Holmwood, magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

The orchestra will play within a rectangular acoustic shell of Plywood resembling a hugely magnified interior of a cabinet phonograph. The audience will be sheltered under a tent accommodating 5,500—double the capacity of Boston's Symphony Hall.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 12 1936

Music and The Drama

"OUTDOOR MELODY-MAKING"

Again al fresco music is sweeping the country in the warm months. The outdoor symphonic series have grown and prospered in the last few years, and it is encouraging to note that new ones have sprung up.

In addition to the Lewisohn Stadium Concerts of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Hollywood Bowl series by the Los Angeles Philharmonic forces this season sees the Cleveland Orchestra carrying on nightly programs at the Great Lakes Exposition, the Philadelphia Orchestra as usual active at Robin Hood Dell and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in a new series at Ravinia. The Portland (Ore.) Symphony Orchestra has inaugurated an open-air concert schedule for the first time. As usual, the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have their "Pop" Concerts and outdoor Esplanade events. At Hillsborough, Cal., the Woodland Theatre is again the scene of several concerts by the San Francisco Orchestra under guest leaders. In Newark, N. J., a new series of Stadium Concerts has been launched. The Centennial Exposition at Dallas, Tex., is also a music centre.

Open-air opera is making gains. Fortune Gallo has begun a series in a unique setting over the water at Jones Beach on Long Island. The Cincinnati Opera Company has opened an ambitious schedule of performances in English, including several American works. The Municipal Opera of St. Louis continues its popular series. The several symphonic series also include operatic and ballet performances on their programs. This is notably the case in New York, Los Angeles and Philadelphia.

Altogether it seems as if the popularity of Summer musical offerings were here to stay. With the new diversity that has been introduced into these programs, the public ought to find increased attractions for their patronage.

It is necessary to stress the fact that such series cannot exist on benevolent approval and kind words alone. What they need is loyal support both by patrons who are able to endow them and by the regular run of ticket buyers. There is hardly a field in which inspiration and elevation of public morale can be bought at a smaller price. Such series add to the gaiety and color of Summer life in the various cities, are wholesome social centres and, not least, benefit the business men in attracting visitors from other communities. Guarantors of Summer symphonic concerts and opera may be congratulated for helping to provide worthwhile pursuits at a time of year when the cultural index might otherwise recede to a disheartening degree.—Musical Courier.

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS-LEADER

AUG 13 1936

Lovers of Music Assemble For Festival in Berkshires

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its fifty-six years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his thirteen years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy Summer residents who were desirous of establishing a Summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire Hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Society Orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent Summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 13 1936

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO HEAR SEBELIUS

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Boston Symphony at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP) — The music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded ampitheater on the beautiful estate of Mr Margaret Emerson.

Approves Aims

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous to establish in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Falzburg festival in Austria.

The concerts attracted the socialite summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

MUSICAL FEST ON TONIGHT

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony society orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

—— VOTE AMERICAN ——

To Buy or Sell Real Estate Depend on Times-Union Want Ads.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

12 1936

Music Festivals In Berkshires Open Thursday

Boston Symphony to Give Three Concerts Under Huge Canopy

The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate adjoining U. S. Route 7 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its regular conductor, Serge Koussevitzky will play a program including Schonberg's orchestral version of Bach's organ chorale prelude, "Komm' Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and the seventh symphony and the second symphony of Sibelius

The second concert, with Brahm's second symphony as its principal number, will be held Saturday afternoon, and the third and last concert Sunday night, August 16, with a program including Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphonies. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs Friday morning at 11 o'clock and Suday at 12:15 p. m. in the Berkshire Playhouse. The concerts themselves will be held under a huge canopy, and will not have to depend on the weather.

Box offices are open at Stockbridge, Lenox, Pittsfield, at the Berkshire Hills Conference Information Booth, and Great Barrington, at the Southern Chamber of Commece booth. A box office will be opened tomorrow at Holmwood, where electric lights and highway flares will be used on the two concert evenings as an aid to mortorists. Parking will be free.

Several other musical events will be held during the festival period in the Berkshire region. The South Mountain Quartet, composed of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conard Held and Willem Willeke, will give a concert Sunday afternoon at 4 at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, playing works of Schumann, Kodaly and Jongen. Jacques Gordon's Quartet and Frank Sheridan, pianist, will play a Brahms program at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., next Sunday at the same hour. There will also be a concert Sunday afternoon at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington, Mass.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will give two lecture-demonstrations on Friday afternoon at 4 and Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock at their studio in West Becket, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 1

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL TONIGHT

Dr. Koussevitzky to Lead Boston Symphony in 1st of 3 Concerts

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP) — Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music festival, which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence, the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lharghetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccion Espagnol," and Brahm's Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony"; Wagner's Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

First Lecture by Olin Downes At Playhouse Wednesday Morning

Dr. Koussevitzky Inspects Holmwood Where He Will Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra for Festival This Week and Is Delighted—Volunteers To Help With Parking

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will give three lectures on the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, will be the guest while in Berkshire of Miss Mabel Choate in Stockbridge. Mr. Downes returned from France on the Europa with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Festival.

The first lecture by Mr. Downes will be Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock. The public is invited. Tickets may be secured at the playhouse office or at the Festival office in Stockbridge. The second lecture will be Friday morning at 11 o'clock and the final one Sunday at 12:15 o'clock.

Dr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, inspected Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, where the Festival will be held, last Saturday, and were delighted.

Make "Beautiful Music"

"It is marvelous—no place could be more beautiful nor could a place be more ideally located for the concerts," was Dr. Koussevitzky's comment as he stood in the shell and gazed out at the wide expanse of canvas and benches. "With such a location, we will make beautiful music. No one will be disappointed."

From Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Judd motored to Springfield where they caught a train for Boston. Rehearsals are scheduled at Symphony Hall in Boston tomorrow morning and afternoon and Wednesday morning and afternoon. The orchestra, arriving at 11.40 Thursday morning will be whisked to the Maplewood Hotel and after a luncheon will be taken to Holmwood for another rehearsal before the opening concert Thursday.

This afternoon, Major J. Bruce McIntyre, marshal of the grounds; Sergeant Edward J. Majesky and Corporal Timothy L. Flynn of the State police; Willard Sistare, in charge of the ushers, Grenville L. Willis, State highway engineer; John Johnson, superintendent of the estate; Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, and other Festival officials, met at Holmwood to discuss the problems of traffic and grounds.

Volunteers to Help

Volunteers from Great Barrington, Housatonic, West Stockbridge, Lenox, Lee and Pittsfield will assist Major McIntyre in handling the parking on the estate. These volunteers are:

Malcolm Shove, William DuFresne, Erling Dollar, David Evans, Albert Hammer, all of Great Barrington; Warren Race and Frederick Chamberlin of Housatonic; Fred N. Cummings, Thomas H. Sullivan, Donald MacDonald, Donald MacDonald Jr., Chester Gray, Benjamin Carpino, Frank Crippen, J. B. Rabiner, Carlo Scagliarini and A. H. Kiligas, all of Pittsfield; Bruce Ingram, John Consolati, John Waddock, William O'Brien of Lee; Edward C. Gilligan, William Merrick, Robert Davidson, Thomas Kelly, Earl Sharpe of Lenox; George Jastrum and Dana Baldwin of West Stockbridge.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 13 1936

Emerson Fortune Brings Concerts To The Berkshires

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—Stockbridge in the Berkshires becomes the American counterpart of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps tonight when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, begins a series of outdoor concerts.

This will constitute the symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg.

Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent, as it will tonight when it inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic festival. Boasting among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. Grace Coolidge and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president, the festival is expected by its sponsors to capture some of the American interest heretofore centered in Europe's summer festivals.

Just as Europe has enjoyed symphonic and operatic festivals financed by the Beecham pill fortune, so the Berkshire symphonic destival that opens tonight is indebted to the Emerson Bromo Seltzer fortune. Site of the local event is Holmwood, magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

The orchestra will play within a rectangular acoustic shell of Plywood resembling a hugely magnified interior of a cabinet phonograph. The audience will be sheltered under a tent accommodating 5,500—double the capacity of Boston's Symphony Hall.

MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS

AUG 13 1936

NOTED CONDUCTOR TO LEAD CONCERT

Serge Koussevitzky To Wield Baton At Stockbridge Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13, (AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Establishes Precedent

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston symphony through the Finish composer's symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston symphony will play Handel's Lhargetto from concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faum"; Rimsky—Korsakov's "Capriccion Espagno!" and Brahms' symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony"; Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's symphony No. 5.

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL 13/36

Music Festival pens Tonight At Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire festival, which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, wth the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded ampitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitsky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
Reg. TIMES 13/36

Boston Symphony to Give Concert in Berkshires Tent

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (UP) — Stockbridge in the Berkshires becomes the American counterpart of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps tonight when the Boston Symphony orchestra, for the first time under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, begins a series of outdoor concerts.

This will constitute the symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg.

Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent, as it will tonight when it inaugurates the Berkshire symphonic festival. Boasting among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. Grace Coolidge and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, the festival is expected by its sponsors to capture some of the American interest heretofore centred in Europe's summer music festivals.

Just as Europe has enjoyed symphonic and operatic festivals financed by the Beecham pill fortune, so the Berkshire symphonic festival that opens tonight is indebted to the Emerson bromo seltzer fortune. Site of the local event is Holmwood, magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

The orchestra will play within a rectangular acoustic shell of plywood resembling a hugely magnified interior of a cabinet phonograph. The audience will be sheltered under a tent accommodating 5500—double the capacity of Boston's Symphony Hall.

Arriving here today by special train with his orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed delight with the setting.

"I think the place the most extraordinary for a music festival," said the small, svelte conductor, with typical animation of facial expresson and gesture. "It is as beautiful as a dream. The European festivals have no more beautiful setting. The American public is ready for such summer festivals."

Performances will be given tonight, tomorrow night and Saturday night. Adroitly Dr. Koussevitzky has adapted the programs to the summer spirit of relaxation. They avoid the over-heavy, the ultra-modern and the controversial. The opening program, for example, runs chronologically from a Bach chorale prelude, through the Egmont overture and the seventh symphony of Beethoven, to the second symphony of the contemporary Sibelius.

Besides Mrs. Coolidge and the elder Mrs. Roosevelt, patrons include Governor Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island; Norman H. Davis, American ambassador-at-large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

ses to Attend rkshire Festival

ffair Will Be Held on Emerson Estate.

The United States Ambassador at Large, Mr. Norman Davis, and Mrs. Davis will attend the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

The program will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky.

Others who are expected to attend are Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who is well known in Washington as the sponsor of the Chamber Music Concert at the Library of Congress; Edna St. Vincent Millay, Dr. H. N. MackCracken, president of Vassar College; Representative Allen T. Treadway, Dr. Efrem Zimbalist and his wife, Mme. Alma Gluck.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, intends to attend each the series of concerts.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 1936

Music Lovers Gather For Berkshire Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Will Lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music Festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach Chorale Prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lhargetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra: Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina;" Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun;" Rimskykorsokov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony;" Wagner's preludes to "Lhengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Falzburg festival in Austria.

CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-EXAMINER

AUG 13 1936

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY.

EVERY CHICAGOAN within motoring distance of Stockbridge, Mass., or Lenox, will be gathering at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emmerson's estate midway between the two towns, for the first of the Berkshire Symphony Festivals today.

The John Alden Carpenters, who regretted so much missing all but one of the Ravinia concerts here, will be completely in their element, for most of their friends of the world of music will be on hand when Dr. Serg Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducts, in a shell which has been put up under the stately pine trees at one end of the estate.

* * *

NOTABLES TO ATTEND.

MRS. DONALD WEGG, who is visiting her daughter and son-in-law, the Samuel Frothinghams, at their Summer place near by, will be in the large audience; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the patron saint of chamber music, and Mrs. A. Parmelee Prentice (Alta Rockefeller), who gives many Summer musicales at her own Berkshire estate; Miss Kate Buckingham over from her country place; the C. H. Halloways of Glencoe, who are summering at their place near Tyringham, are all there for the concerts.

And such other celebrities as Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Calvin Coolidge: Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of President Roosevelt; Albert Spalding, the violinist . . . to mention only a few of the hundreds who flock to these outdoor music events.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS 3-DAY MUSIC FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13. (AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 13 1936

3 MAJOR EVENTS SLATED TONIGHT

Berkshire Festival, Mohawk Drama, Spa Pageant Scheduled

Three major attractions beckon motorists from Albany tonight.

One is the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of three at the Holmwood Farm near Stockbridge, Mass., the new home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Another is the revival of "The Yellow Jacket," now holding the stage of the outdoor theater on Union College campus, where the Mohawk Drama Festival is under way.

The third is the water pageant to be staged in the Saratoga Spa swimming pool with the director, Edwin J. LaDue of Albany, as master of ceremonies and both Governor Lehman of New York and Governor Earle of Pennsylvania as honor guests.

Driving Distances

To reach the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, a drive of 54 miles is required. Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, is on U. S. Route 7 five miles south of Stockbridge on the way to Lenox, Mass. The Mohawk Drama Festival is but 16 miles from Albany and the Saratoga Spa 32 miles.

Acres of parking space are provided at all three points and those unfamiliar with the Stockbridge-Lenox locale will find the stopping point marked with lighted flares and guarded by Massachusetts State Police.

Under Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Orchestra is to feature Beethoven's Seventh and Sibelius' Second symphonies along with the "Egmont" overture by Beethoven and an orchestral scoring of a Bach Chorale. A canvas cover has been provided both orchestra and audience in the event of rain. The orchestra is to play before a scientifically constructed acoustic shell.

Special Lighting

At the spa water paegant, many state officials are expected in addition to the two governors. Special lighting effects in pastel shades will be played upon the pool, the 50 participating swimmers or divers, and on King Neptune's court beside the pool. Dances will be featured in the program before the king. The artists appearing in them will be Miss Constance Wanhope of Albany and Miss Ethel May Weeks of Saratoga Springs.

Comedy will be injected into the program by the clowning of "Hatho," "Geyzo" and "Ceeso," all professional divers. Two mystic numbers are programmed, including the mysterious and laughable performance entitled "Uncle Oscar and the Life Guard." Celia LaDue will present the evolution of swimming from the days of Johnnie Stonehatchet to the present time.

Three men and three women will take part in simultaneous synchronized diving from each of the spring boards. All participants will be in white swim suits best suited to absorb the varied shades of light to be played upon the scene. Music is to be supplied through the pool's new amplifying system.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 13 1936

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Open Berkshire Festival Tonight

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP) Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music Festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded ampitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

63

VISITORS ARRIVING IN BERKSHIRE FOR CONCERT TONIGHT

13/36

More Than 4000 Expected for Opening of Festival at Lenox—Much Entertaining Features Affair

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 12—Visitors were arriving in Berkshire today for the first festival concert tomorrow night at 8.30 at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, Lenox, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The musicians are to be at the Maplewood hotel, Pittsfield. An attendance exceeding 4000 is expected for the first concert. It was announced today that all of the 3600 seats in the marque tent have been sold and about 1200 are available just outside. This morning Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, gave at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, the first of a series of three lectures on the symphonies. He and Mrs Downes are with Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag. Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky and Mr and Mrs Ernest B. Dane of Boston are the guests over the festival of Miss Gertrude Robinson, president of the festival association at her log cabin in Stockbridge.

Marked by Much Entertaining

There was considerable entertaining today. Mr and Mrs Edwin Martinet who are at the Lenox club, were the honored guests at a dinner given tonight by Giraud Foster at Bellefontaine, Lenox.

Mrs William Felton Barrett gave a luncheon at Sky farm, North Egremont, in compliment to Countess Giovanni Cardelli and Mrs John Hamline of Lake Forest, Ill. There were 20 guests.

Mrs Robert Metz was a luncheon hostess with music today at Fernbrook, Lenox. Prof William Lindsay of the University of Minnesota, pianist, played.

In a luncheon party yesterday given by Mrs Van Vleck Brothers at the Years Ago shop, Great Barrington, in compliment to Mrs Robert Eckert of Chicago were Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mrs Theodore P. Lyman, Mrs Albert H. Spahr, Mrs Gustave Dannreuther, Mrs Maurice Saunders and Mrs Ward A. Batchelor.

Noticed at Miss Mable Choate's Mission house, Stockbridge, were Mr and Mrs G. Allen Robinson of New York, Mr and Mrs R. T. Cornell of Scarsdale, Mr and Mrs Thomas Wistar and Miss Eleanor A. Wistar of Philadelphia.

In the Tyringham colony Miss Martha L. Draper is at Port Apple; Mrs Trowbridge Hall has opened South house; Miss Winifred Rogers is visiting Dr and Mrs Walter W. Palmer at Four Brooks farm and Miss Bertha Terry of New York is with Mr and Mrs Edward N. Perkins at [illegible].

Garden Trophy Awarded

The silver trophy given by Miss Laura E. Dwight for the most points won at the Williamstown Garden club flower show last night was awarded to Mrs George Alfred Cluett for permanent possession, she having won it two years previously. Mrs Cluett had 5[illegible] points and Mrs Alvah K. Lawrie was second with 12 points. Mrs Cornelia Stratton Parker, the author, of Swiss Meadows, South Williamstown, won the popular vote prize with her early American table set with pewter. Mrs Cluett was second with a wild flower display. In the calendula class Mrs E. Parmalee Prentice was first.

With Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre for the wedding Saturday of Miss Elizabeth Lanier Fenno and Samuel Adams Clark will be his mother,, Mrs Samuel Adams Clark, his brother, Francis Adams Clark and N. Edward C. Rutter, Jr.

Mr and Mrs Peter Stuyvesant Fish departed for Garrison, N. Y., following a visit with Mrs Fish's mother, Mrs Clark Greenwood Vorhees at Merrywood, Lenox.

Ulysse Buhler, former conductor of the Pittsfield Symphony orchestra of which he was the founder, was the honored guest today at a 75th birthday tea given at the Pittsfield Country club by a group of friends, who presented him with a purse of $150. Mrs Edwin T. Rice of New York, made the presentation. On the committee in charge were Mrs Samuel G. Colt, Mrs Henry A. Francis and Mrs Allan B. Hendricks. Prof Charles L. Safford of Williams college was pianist.

101

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Aug. 4/36

Appearing This Week With Two Prominent Orchestras

M. I. Boris

Markham, Portland, Ore.

Left: Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge. Center, Hulda Lashanska, soprano soloist, and right, Willem van Hoogstraten, conductor, with the Philharmonic-Symphony tomorrow night at the Lewisohn Stadium

Dr. Koussevitzky Directs Festival In the Berkshires

Boston Symphony to Give Concerts on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday

The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held this week at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., adjoining Route 7, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky will give three concerts next Thursday and Sunday nights, August 13 and 16, at 8:30, and Saturday afternoon, August 15, at 4:30

The three programs will be:

Thursday Night

Chorale Prelude, Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist (tr. Schoenberg) .... Bach
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 in A .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 2, in D .... Sibelius

Saturday Afternoon

Larghetto from Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 6, No. 6 .... Handel
Prelude to "Khovanchina" .... Moussorgsky
Afternoon of a Faun .... Debussy
Spanish Caprice ...... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony No. 2, in D .... Brahms

Sunday Night

Symphony No. 4, in A (Italian) .... Mendelssohn
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Symphony No. 5 .... Tchaikovsky

The concerts will be held under a vast tent, marking the first time that the Boston Symphony has played under canvas. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give three lectures on the festival programs on the mornings of Wednesday and Friday, August 12 and 14, at 11 o'clock, and next Sunday noon, August 16, at 12:15 in the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. An exhibition of Gerome Brush's portraits of members of the Boston Symphony will also be held at the Berkshire Playhouse during the festival period, and several notable estates in Stockbridge and Lenox will be open for visitors. Admission to the exhibition and the estates will be free. The dramatic attraction at the Berkshire Playhouse this week will be "The Shining Hour," with Josephine Hutchinson in the leading role.

Ted Shawn and his dancers will give a lecture demonstration at their studio in West Beckett, Mass., next Friday afternoon at 3. Chamber-music concerts will be held next Sunday afternoon at Mrs. Coolidge's Temple of Music at South Mountain, Pittsfield, at Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain auditorium at Falls Village, Conn., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Among prominent persons who are expected to attend the festival concerts are Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, Mrs. James Roosevelt, New York City Chamberlain Adolf A. Berle jr., Miss Mabel Choate, Albert Spalding, Owen Johnson, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Rudolph Ganz, A. A. Brewster and Walter Pritchard Eaton.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which is directed by a committee headed by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith as president and Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia and N. H. Busey jr. as vice-presidents, was inaugurated in August, 1934, when the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, under Henry Hadley, played on the Hanna Farm between Lenox and Stockbridge. Dr. Hadley also conducted an orchestra of New York musicians on the Hanna Farm last August. This festival, the third of the series, probably marks the first appearance of the Boston Symphony under its regular leader in a summer event of this kind.

Inquiries about seats and for further information should be directed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PEORIA, ILL.
JOURNAL
[illegible]

Berkshire Music Festival To Hear Boston Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13. (AP) — Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

First Time Outdoors

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted outdoors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugrated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

Hills Cast Shadow

An ampitheater on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony society orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley, opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

CHICAGO, ILL.
AMERICAN

AUG 13 1936

Music Under the Trees

Chicago Fashionables in Berkshires for Opening of Symphony Festivals

Daniel Peterkins Open Summer Home for Sale Today

By The Chaperon

WITH RAVINIA GIVEN OVER AGAIN TO THE music of the birds, we must, for the moment, hear our symphony in spirit and content ourselves with letters from fortunate friends in the Berkshires, whose Summer symphony season begins today.

Miss Kate Buckingham is one music lover who has an honored seat in the grove of Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emmerson's estate near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony opens the season today under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

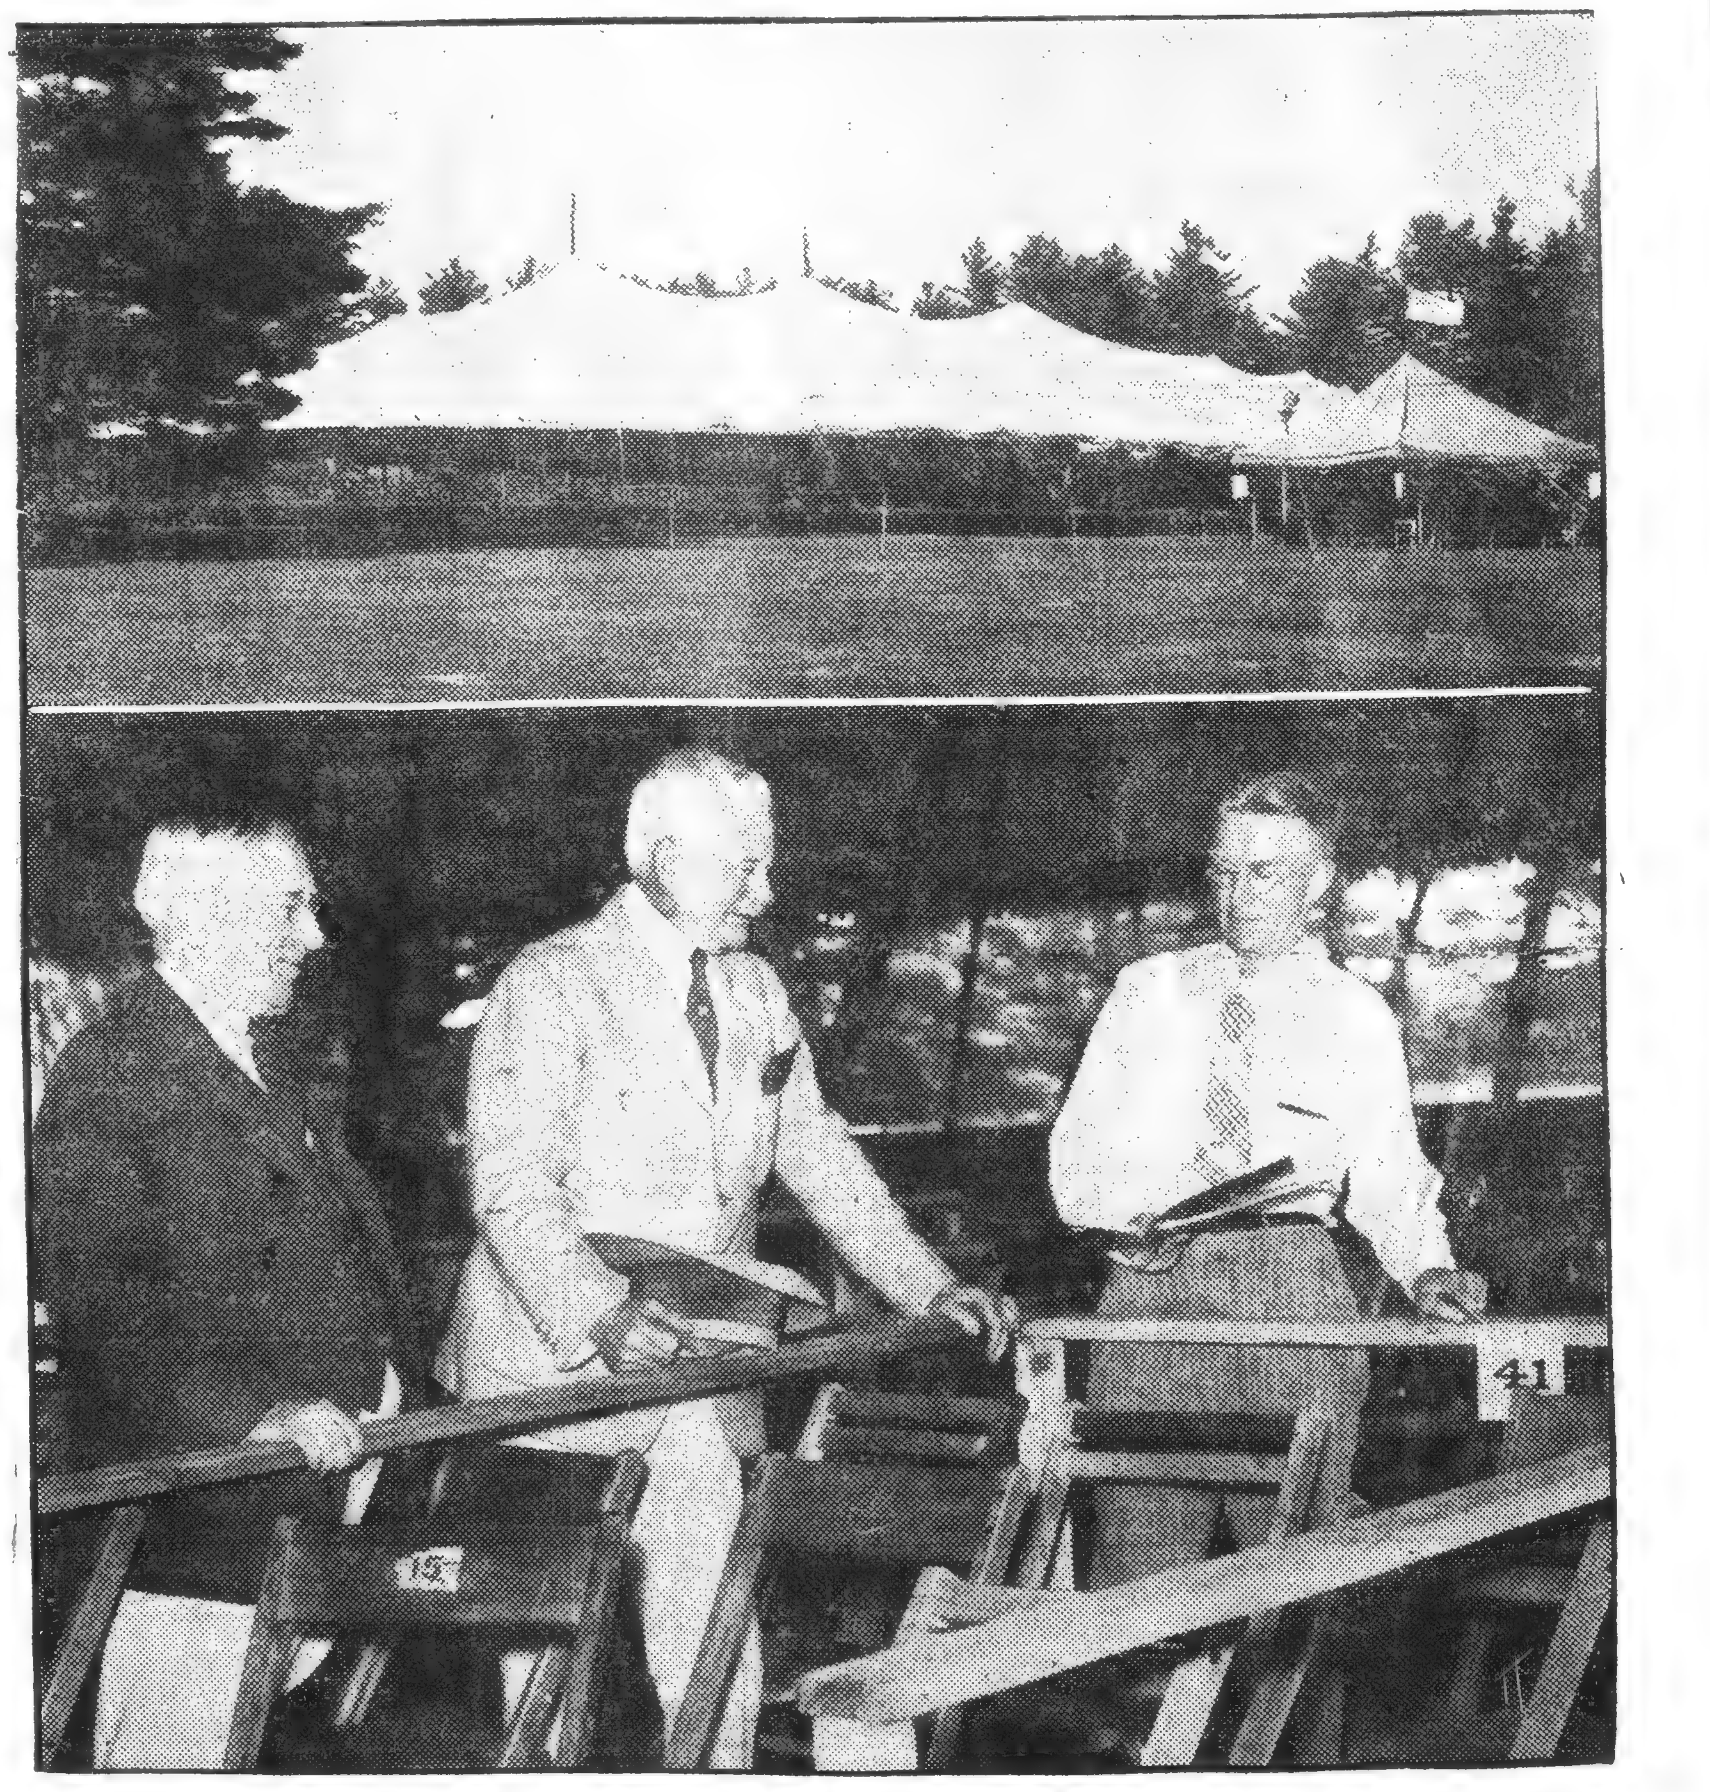
Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, patron saint of all things musical, is another whose seat has long been reserved under the pine trees.

The John Alden Carpenters, summering in the East as usual, are within sound of the music, and going to concerts whenever Mr. Carpenter feels like resting from his own work of composing music which the Boston Symphony will eventually play. That may not sound like a rest, but music is everything to the Carpenters.

When they come back to Chicago it will be to give a helping hand to a series of Winter concerts at Orchestra Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

And Koussevitzky Will Conduct



Lenox, Aug. 12—"Holmwood," scene of the third annual Berkshire Symphonic festival is ready for the opening tomorrow night. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has inspected the huge shell in which his 90 musicians will play and declared it perfect. Accompanying photographs show, upper, the massive tent beneath which music lovers will be seated for the concerts. The tent, which will seat more than 4000, is located on the estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, on Route 7, between Lenox and Stockbridge. Lower, final seating arrangements are made. Reading from left to right are John C. Lynch, treasurer of the festival association and chairman of the board of directors of the Housatonic National bank, R. J. Flick and Willard M. Sistare, who has charge of the seating arrangements.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 1[illegible] 1936

BOSTON'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO PLAY IN BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

To Give Three Outdoor Concerts in the Next Four Days

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, (AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston symphony will play Handel's Larghetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony"; Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Falzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony orchestra under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted the socialite summer rsidents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought an even larger crowd.

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot
13/2[illegible]

Music Festival Opens Tonight At Stockbridge

Koussevitzky Will Lead Boston Symphony in First Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
'36

Music Lovers Converge For Festival's Opening

Famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Conducting, Will Play Out-of-Doors for First Time at First of Three Concerts at Holmwood, Between Lenox and Stockbridge, Tonight Before Expected Audience of 4,000—Summer Homes Are Thrown Open to Patrons of Festival—Olin Downes Gives First of Three Lectures—Full Round of Social Activity Until Festival Ends Sunday Night.

The famed Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play out-of-doors for the first time in its long history tonight when it offers the first of the three concerts that are to be presented at Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, as the third annual Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Festival week in the Berkshires which is rapidly receivng a distinction comparable to that of its older rivals in Europe will formally open at 8.30 o'clock this evening. Then Dr. Koussevitzky will raise his baton before a throng of music lovers in the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater at Holmwood for the introductory strains of Bach's Choral Prelude.

Like his orchestra which has been in existence for nearly 60 years, Dr. Koussevitzky had never before appeared in a formal out-of-doors concert. A prominent interpreter of the Finnish composer, Sibelius, the Russian maestro, who has been in this country 13 years, will devote the second half of his first program to Sibelius's Symphony No. 2 in D Major. In addition to the Bach prelude the first half will include Beethoven's Overture to Goethe's "Egmont" and Symphony No. 7 in A Major.

The other concerts will be given on Saturday afternoon at 4.30 o'clock and on Sunday evening at 8.30. At the daylight concert the orchestra will play Handel's Larghetto from the Cocerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

Summer homes throughout the county have been thrown open to patrons of the festival who have gathered from all parts of the East. It is expected that at least 4,000 will be on hand tonight as all of the 3,600 seats in the marquee tent have been sold. Some 1,200 seats outside of the tent are still available.

Olin Downes, distinguished music critic of the New York Times who lectured in Williamstown last winter this morning opened a series of three lectures on the symphonies which are to be heard during festival week. He is presenting the lectures in the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge.

During the festival Dr. Koussevitzky and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be the guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival association, at her log cabin in Stockbridge. Mr. Downes, with Mrs. Downes, are being entertained by Miss Mabel Choate.

Luncheons, teas and dinner yesterday opened a full round of social festivity that will continue through the last concert.

BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL

RKSHIRES TO RESOUND WITH BRILLIANT MUSIC OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshires hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston symphony through the Finnish composer's symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lhargetto from Concerto too Grosso for string orchestra; Mousscrogsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faum;" "Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and 'Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Falzburg Festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna Farm where in the early evening the Berkshire Hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted the Socialite summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought an even larger crowd.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 13 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN OUTDOOR CONCERT

By Associated Press

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13. Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Bershire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors.

FREEPORT, N. Y.
NASSAU REVIEW
AUG 13 1936

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—Music lovers gathered for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe. As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days. For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Music Festival Opens In Berkshires Tonight

Aug 13/36

Serge Koussevitzky, World Famous Conductor, Will Lead Boston Symphony Orchestra in First of Three Outdoor Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP) — Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well-known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the

(Continued from First Page)

United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sibelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sibelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Larghetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina;" Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun;" Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahm's Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony;" Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheater on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire Hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted the socialite summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
AUG 13 1936

U.S. Concert To Rival Old World Musical

Boston Orchestra Starts Series in Outdoor Setting

(By The Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire Music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hacna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Society orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

LYNN, MASS.
TELEGRAM-NEWS
AUG 13 1936

OUTDOOR MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra Featured.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (A.P.)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphi-theatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 1[illegible] 1936

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, DR. KOUSSEVITZKY IN BERKSHIRE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrive in Pittsfield this noon by special train and after luncheon at the Maplewood Hotel, will be whisked to Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, to rehearse for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

Everything is in readiness at Holmwood. Final touches have been made to the grounds, the shell and the huge canopy. The concerts will be held, rain or shine, under the canvass with more seating space out of doors. The free parking space, sufficient for 2,000 cars, has been marked off by Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, the marshal and his assistants. Sergt. Edward J. Majesky and Corp. Timothy L. Flynn and State Police are prepared to handle tremendous crowds at the gate.

The opening program will be as follows:

Bach—Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer Heiliger Geist."

Beethoven — Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Op. 92.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 43.

The second lecture by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will take place at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. The final lecture will be Sunday at 12:15 p. m.

Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their studio in West Becket. They will give an extra program Saturday morning immediately following a buffet luncheon at 1 o'clock. Friday evening there will be chamber music at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale.

Josephine Hutchinson, cinema and stage star, appearing in "The Shining Hour" at the Berkshire Playhouse, is drawing capacity audiences this week. To meet the demand, Director William Miles has arranged for an extra matinee this afternoon.

NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

66

AUG 13 1936

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL TONIGHT

Dr. Koussevitzky to Lead Boston Symphony Concert Out of Doors

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music Festival, which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe. As night falls over the surrounding Berskhire Hills tonight, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of- doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight. On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lhargetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's prelude to Khovanstchina;" Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun; "Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symhony;" Wagner's preludes to Lohengrin," "Die Meisterringers" and Tchaikowsky's symphony No. 5.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

AUG 13 1936

Musical Series Opens At Stockbridge, Mass.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (A. P.)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will ~~lead~~ the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

AUBURN, N. Y.
CITIZEN ADVERTISEI

AUG 13 1936

Music Festival Opens

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire Music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

AUG 13 1936

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Play

Berkshire Music Festival Opens Tonight

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP) — Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire Music Festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded ampitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out of doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interprectr of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lhargeto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina." Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony." Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

OUTDOOR MUSIC IN BERKSHIRES BEGINS TONIGHT

Boston Symphony Concerts Will Resemble Salzburg in Bavarian Alps

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (UP)—Stockbridge in the Berkshires becomes the American counterpart of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps tonight when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, begins a series of outdoor concerts.

This will constitute the symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg.

Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent, as it will tonight when it inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Boasting among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. Grace Coolidge and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, the festival is expected by its sponsors to capture some of the American interest heretofore centered in Europe's Summer music festivals.

The orchestra will play within a rectangular acoustic shell of plywood resembling a hugely magnified interior of a cabinet phonograph. The audience will be sheltered under a tent accommodating 5,500—double the capacity of Boston's Symphony Hall.

Performances will be given tonight, tomorrow night and Saturday night. Dr. Koussevitzky has adapted the programs to the Summer spirit of relaxation. They avoid the over-heavy, the ultramodern and the controversial.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 13 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY AT FESTIVAL

Will Lead Boston Symphony Orchestra Tonight in Opening Concert of Berkshire Event

UNDER PATRONAGE OF SOCIETY FOLK

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Barkshire Music Festival which it sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Doctor Koussevitzky conduted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Doctor Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian Maestro, who has received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the Finnish composer's "Symphony No. 2" tonight.

On the opening night's program, to, will be Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7," the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the orchestra will play Handel's largetto from "Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra"; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Rimsky-Korsakov's prelude to "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahm's Symphony No. 2."

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony"; Wagner's preludes to "Lhengrin" and "Die Meistersingers" and Tchaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5."

The festival was inaugurated in August 1934 under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy Summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a musical event similar to the famous Falzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheater on the Hanna Farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire Hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Orchestra under the paton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted the Summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 13 1936

Boston Symphony Opens Salzburg Festival of U. S.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the third Berkshire Music Festival, which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar events in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence, the Boston symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg Festival in Austria.

An amphitheater on the Hanna farm was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Society Orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley, opened the series.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 13 1936

Stockbridge Counterpart of Salzsberg in Bavarian Alps

Equivalent of Mozart Opera Festivals Starts Tonight With Audience Sheltered Under Tent

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—Stockbridge in the Berkshires becomes the American counterpart of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps tonight when the Boston symphony orchestra, for the first time under leadership of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, begins a series of outdoor concerts.

This will constitute the symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg.

Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston symphony performed in a tent, as it will tonight when it inaugurates the Berkshire symphonic festival. Boasting among its subscribers such notables as Mrs Grace Coolidge and Mrs James Roosevelt, mother of the President, the festival is expected by its sponsors to capture some of the American interest heretofore centered in Europe's summer music festivals.

Just as Europe has enjoyed symphonic and operatic festivals financed by the Beecham Pill fortune, so the Berkshire symphonic festival that opens tonight is indebted to the Emerston fortune. Site of the local event is Holmwood, magnificent estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, daughter of a Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

The orchestra will play within a rectangular acoustic shell of plywood resembling a hugely magnified interior of a cabinet phonograph. The audience will be sheltered under a tent accommodating 5500—double the capacity of Boston's symphony hall.

NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

AUG 13 1936

Boston Symphony Will Play in Open Air

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphithaeter on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1936

FESTIVAL OF MUSIC WILL OPEN TONIGHT

Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Give First in Its Three Concerts in Berkshires.

KOUSSEVITZKY CONDUCTOR

Many Notables Expected to Hear Program at Estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

The third Berkshire festival opens tonight at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Further programs by the same forces will be offered Saturday afternoon and Sunday night.

Tonight's schedule will comprise the Bach chorale prelude, "Komm' Gott Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist"; Beethoven's "Egmont" overture; the Seventh symphony of Beethoven, and the Second symphony, by Sibelius.

Saturday afternoon's list will consist of Handel's "Largo"; the prelude to "Khovantchina," by Mussorgsky; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the Brahms Second symphony.

At the final concert, the offerings will include Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; the prelude to "Lohengrin" and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," by Wagner, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony.

This is the first time that Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have appeared at the festival. For the first time, also, the concerts will be held under a canvas canopy. The huge tent employed is 250 feet long and 120 in width.

A box office will be opened today at Holmwood, which is on U. S. Route 7. There also are box offices at the Berkshire Hills Conference information booths in Lenox, Stockbridge and Pittsfield, and at the Southern Chamber of Commerce booth in Great Barrington. As an aid to motorists, for whom parking will be free, there will be highway flares at Holmwood during the festival.

Among the other musical events which will occur in the Berkshire locale during the time of the festival are three concerts which will be given this Sunday afternoon, when the South Mountain Quartet will appear at South Mountain, near Pittsfield; the Jacques Gordon Quartet will offer an all-Brahms program at Music Mountain, Falls River, Conn., and a concert will be given at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington, Mass.

The audience at tonight's concert is expected to include Norman B. Davis, United States Ambassador at Large; Representative Allen T. Treadway; Governor Green of Rhode Island; William Allen Neilson, president of Smith College; John Finley Williams, president of Vassar College; Edna St. Vincent Millay; Owen Johnson; Walter Prichard Eaton; Katherine Parlow; Efrem Zimbalist; Alma Gluck; A. A. Brewster, vice president of the Cleveland Orchestra; Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mabel Choare, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother, plans to be present at the concert to be given Saturday afternoon.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 13 1936

INVITATIONS TO KOUSSEVITZKY TEA

Invitations were received in this cit recently to a tea which will be give tomorrow afternoon by Miss Robinso Smith and Miss Miriam K. Oliver a their home, "The Residence," Stockbridge, Mass., in honor of Dr. an Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky. Dr. Koussevitsky is the conductor of the Bosto Symphony Orchestra, the concerts o which will compose this year's Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

67

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 13 1936

Music Festival Will Open Tonight in Berkshire Hills

Koussevitzky To Lead Boston Symphony in Three Out-of-Doors Concerts at Mrs. Emerson's Estate

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP) Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sibelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who has received Sibelius' personal praise for his interpretations, will lead the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 tonight.

On the opening night's program, too, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, the Boston Symphony will play Handel's Lhargetto from Concerto Grosso for string orchestra; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina;" DeBussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun;" Rimsky-korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Brahms's Symphony No. 2.

Sunday evening's concert will include Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony;" Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheatre on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire Hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted the socialite summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

AUG 13 1936

Music Lovers Gather For Annual Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony Orchestra Under Leadership Of Serge Koussevitzky Will Present Three Concerts In Pine-Surrounded Amphitheater.

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., AUG. 13.—(AP).—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirious of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

An amphitheater on the Hanna farm, where in the early evening the Berkshire hills cast soft shadows, was chosen and the Philharmonic Symphony orchestra of New York, under the baton of Henry Hadley opened the series.

The concerts attracted socially prominent summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

AUG 13 1936

On Eve of Berkshire Festival Opening

Photos by Don Jose Browning

At left, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival association discussing the opening night events with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times while seated in front row of the large tent at Lenox. Right, so that no one shall become lost and that all might be directed to the scene of the festival, an information booth has been set up at the junction of Routes 7 and 20. Mrs. M. Carroll, of New York and Sheffield, is making inquiry. The Misses June Crosby, Elizabeth Moxon and Lucy Brown, in the order named, are attendants at the booth.

LENOX, Aug. 12—Final preparations for the opening of the Third Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival are just about completed, and as workmen place extra seats for the expected overflow crowd Thursday night when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky opens the series of concerts which heralds the biggest event of the season in the Berkshires, everything will be symphonic.

The festival, which this year is being held at "Holmwood" on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, was officially opened today, when Olin Owens, music critic of the New York Times, gave a lecture at the playhouse, in Stockbridge. He lectured on the symphonies.

Seats for more than 4000 have been placed in the huge tent beneath which is the massive shell in which, more than 90 musicians are to play under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. This will be the first time in the 12 years of Dr. Koussevitzky's directing the Boston Symphony orchestra, that he has played out-of-doors away from Boston and it will be also be the first time in its 55 years that the orchestra has played out-of-doors away from Boston.

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

AUG 13 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN BERKSHIRE CONCERTS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. Aug. 13, 1936.—(AP)—Music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS

AUG 13 1936

Berkshire Music Festival to Open

Stockbridge, Mass. — (AP) — Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. Finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, he agreed to participate in the festival.

NEW LONDON, CONN.
DAY

13 1936

Berkshire Festival Draws Music Lovers

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—The music lovers gathered here today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, will lead the equally well known Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES

AUG 13 1936

Berkshires Opens Its Music Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP).—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston symphony will play outdoors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

LYNBROOK, N. Y.
NASSAU STAR

AUG 13 1936

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—Music lovers gathered for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe. As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days. For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony will play outdoors.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

[illegible]

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS

Will Continue Four Days; Hope To Rival Programs Current In Europe

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — The music lovers gathered here last night for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope in years to come will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night fell over the surrounding Berkshire hills, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the equally well known Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence the Boston Symphony played outdoors with the scene of its debut the natural ampitheatre on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Never before in his 13 years in the United States had Dr. Koussevitzky conducted out-of-doors. However, finding the aims of the festival's sponsors to his liking, Dr. Koussevitzky, outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, readily agreed to participate in the festival.

The Russian maestro, who received Sebelius' personal praise for his interpretations, led the Boston Symphony through the Finnish composer's Symphony No. 2 last night.

On the opening night's program, too, was Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the overture to "Egmont" and a Bach chorale prelude.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing in a modest way a summer musical event similar to the famous Falzburg festival in Austria.

The concerts attracted the socialite summer residents and music lovers from near and far. The second festival last year brought even a larger crowd.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

And among the novelties of the season are the performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra under a big top in the Berkshires

---

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

[illegible]

MANY ATTEND BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival.

Approximately 4,000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

NEW LONDON, CONN.
DAY

AUG 14 1936

4,000 at Music Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival. Approximately 4,000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 13 1936

Boston Orchestra Arrives In Berkshire for Opening Festival Concert Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Famous Conductor and Group Rehearse This Afternoon at Holmwood

CROWD IS ASSURED FOR FIRST CONCERT

Overflow From Huge Tent To Be Cared for on Benches Out-of-Doors —26 Critics Are Coming

From Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, came strains of symphonic music this afternoon, an indication of what is in store for the 4000 music lovers who will assemble tonight to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the opening of the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The orchestra arrived at 12:40 at Union Depot, was transported to the Maplewood Hotel for lunch and then taken by busses to Holmwood for rehearsal. The concert will start at 8:30 oclock tonight rain or shine.

Festival Spirit.

That the Berkshires have caught the Festival spirit is apparent from the activity at the office and information booth in Stockbridge, the information booths in Great Barrington, Lenox and Pittsfield. Subscriptions have been sold in 25 States and Canada. The telephone orders were pouring in last night until midnight in Stockbridge. The Curtis Hotel in Lenox is booked to capacity. The Maplewood Hotel is filled as is the Irving House in Dalton and the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington. Heaton Hall and Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge have reservations for almost every room.

Arrive in Stockbridge

Dr. Koussevitzky and members of his family arrived last night to be guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the Festival president, at Stockbridge. George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Judd are at Heaton Hall. Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are arriving in various parts of the county today. David Stanley Smith, dean of the Yale School of Music, is motoring up from West Cornwall. Dr. William Allen Neilson, president of Smith College, is motoring over from Northampton; Dr. H. N. MacCracken, president of Vassar, from Poughkeepsie.

Lloyd Harkema and Wellington French worked two days placing arrows within a radius of 50 miles of Holmwood. Signs were erected at the Festival grounds this morning by Willard Sistare and Frank Ruesch. Final touches were applied to the grounds by Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his 28 men will be on the job to handle the parking at 7 o'clock tonight. Hundreds of persons are expected early from great distances.

Brookline Woman Sends $5 Check For 1937 Festival

The first 1937 sustaining membership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was received today with a check for $5. The woman who apparenatly has no doubts about the future of the Festival, is Miss Margaret A. Fish of Brookline. Trustees of the Festival will meet Monday to discuss the future.

Critics Coming

Critics who have made reservations for the opening tonight are as follows: Moses Smith of the Boston Transcript, Olin Downes of the New York Times, Alexander Williams of the Boston Herald, William Chase of the Boston Traveler, Warren S. Smith of the Boston Post, L. A. Sloper of the Christian Science Monitor, Edward Cushing of the Brooklyn Eagle, Francis Perkins of the New York Herald Tribune, Miss Ruth Marsters of the Boston American, Ray Mowers of the Knickerbocker Press in Albany, Edgar S. Van Olinda of the Albany Times Union, William Seely of the Poughkeepsie Eagle, Richard Coon of the Poughkeepsie Star, Ralph Lewando of the Pittsburg Press, Margaret Wilson of the New Haven Journal-Courier, J. A. Hardman of the North Adams Transcript, Jay Rosenfeld of the Berkshire Eagle, John Thompson of the Torrington Register, Carl Lindstrom of the Hartford Times, C. B. Parker of the Hartford Courant, Paul Wasmansdorf of the Schenectady Gazette, Irving Kolodin of the New York Sun, Benjamin Buxton, Springfield Republican, Willard M. Clark of the Springfield Union, Bernard Freeman of the Associated Press in Boston, M. Carhart of the Hudson Register, Richard Gaffney of the Boston Advertiser, W. A. H. Birnie of the New York World-Telegram, and Mr. Humphrey of the United Press in Boston.

Leave Early For Festival; Busses Ready

Persons planning to attend the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight are requested to start early enough to allow for parking and reaching the canopy-covered amphitheater in time for the opening number. The concert will start promptly. Boxholders who are late will be asked to stop at the fork in the roads instead of proceeding to their parking spaces. No motors will be permitted near the shell after the concert has started.

The Berkshire Street Railway bus will leave City Hall Park at 7:30 and will leave the Curtis Hotel in Lenox about 7:45. Another bus will leave the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge at 7:45.

Escort Through City

Police Chief John L. Sullivan arranged for a motorcycle escort for the orchestra busses this afternoon through the center of the city to facilitate getting to Lenox.

Tomorrow the Pittsfield Chamber of Commerce will take members of the orchestra on drives through scenic Berkshire.

At the information booth in Stockbridge, the Hampshire Book Shop has arranged a display of books on music and scores of the music to be played at the concerts. There will also be a book stall at Holmwood.

Sergeant Edward J. Majeskie of Northampton and Corporal Timothy F. Flynn of the Lee barracks, State Police, head a detail of 14 State Police officers who will be on duty at the entrance to Holmwood tonight. Sergeant Majeskie issued an appeal today that people entering and leaving the estate be patient, stay in line and obey instructions of the men, both inside and outside the estate.

Program for Opening Concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival

The program for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight will be as follows:—

Bach	Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott Schopfer Heiliger Geist"
Beethoven	Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84
Beethovan	Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Op. 92
Sibelius	Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 43

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.
Twin City Sentinel

AUG

M[illegible] Hazel Horton Reid Plans Study In Massachusetts; Attends Symphony Festival

Miss Hazel Horton Read, head of the violin department of Salem College, is today in the Berkshire Hills in Massachusetts, where she will attend the third annual Symphonic Festival to be held there.

Of this musical event, for which the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, former wife of the late Alfred G. Vanderbilt, will be the setting, the Boston Herald writes: "The concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in the Berkshires this week should be watched with uncommon interest by every music lover in America. We have always had to look to Europe for a festival of music that was really worth a long trip to hear. Now it is the ambition of the enthusiasts in Stockbridge to make the Berkshires an object for musical pilgrimage in the course of a summer. This year the presence of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, assures us of a high standard of performance."

Many outstanding guests will be present for the Berkshire Festival among them Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President.

While in Massachusetts this summer Miss Read will study violin with Miss Kathleen Parlow, with whom she studied in Europe. Miss Parlow is the first violinist of the South Mountain String Quartet in Pittsfield, Mass., which is sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1936

Boston Symphony Will Open Berkshire Festival Tonight

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) - Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence, the Boston Symphony will play outdors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out doors.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 14 1936

Berkshire Festival Draws Great Throng

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP).—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival.

Approximately 4,000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sebelius' symphony no. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert - goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural on a vast expanse of closely crop- plateau. There in a fork in the road ped grass was the concert tent with a seating capacity of 3600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 13 1936

Boston Orchestra Arrives In Berkshire for Opening Festival Concert Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Famous Conductor and Group Rehearse This Afternoon at Holmwood

CROWD IS ASSURED FOR FIRST CONCERT

Overflow From Huge Tent To Be Cared for on Benches Out-of-Doors —26 Critics Are Coming

From Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, came strains of symphonic music this afternoon, an indication of what is in store for the 4000 music lovers who will assemble tonight to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the opening of the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The orchestra arrived at 12:40 at Union Depot, was transported to the Maplewood Hotel for lunch and then taken by busses to Holmwood for rehearsal. The concert will start at 8:30 oclock tonight rain or shine.

Festival Spirit.

That the Berkshires have caught the Festival spirit is apparent from the activity at the office and information booth in Stockbridge, the information booths in Great Barrington, Lenox and Pittsfield. Subscriptions have been sold in 25 States and Canada. The telephone orders were pouring in last night until midnight in Stockbridge. The Curtis Hotel in Lenox is booked to capacity. The Maplewood Hotel is filled as is the Irving House in Dalton and the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington. Heaton Hall and Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge have reservations for almost every room.

Arrive in Stockbridge

Dr. Koussevitzky and members of his family arrived last night to be guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the Festival president, at Stockbridge. George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Judd are at Heaton Hall. Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are arriving in various parts of the county today. David Stanley Smith, dean of the Yale School of Music, is motoring up from West Cornwall. Dr. William Allen Neilson, president of Smith College, is motoring over from Northampton; Dr. H. N. MacCracken, president of Vassar, from Poughkeepsie.

Lloyd Harkema and Wellington French worked two days placing arrows within a radius of 50 miles of Holmwood. Signs were erected at the Festival grounds this morning by Willard Sistare and Frank Ruesch. Final touches were applied to the grounds by Selectman Joseph Franz of Stockbridge.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his 28 men will be on the job to handle the parking at 7 o'clock tonight. Hundreds of persons are expected early from great distances.

Brookline Woman Sends $5 Check For 1937 Festival

The first 1937 sustaining membership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was received today with a check for $5. The woman who apparenatly has no doubts about the future of the Festival, is Miss Margaret A. Fish of Brookline. Trustees of the Festival will meet Monday to discuss the future.

Critics Coming

Critics who have made reservations for the opening tonight are as follows: Moses Smith of the Boston Transcript, Olin Downes of the New York Times, Alexander Williams of the Boston Herald, William Chase of the Boston Traveler, Warren S. Smith of the Boston Post, L. A. Sloper of the Christian Science Monitor, Edward Cushing of the Brooklyn Eagle, Francis Perkins of the New York Herald Tribune, Miss Ruth Marsters of the Boston American, Ray Mowers of the Knickerbocker Press in Albany, Edgar S. Van Olinda of the Albany Times Union, William Seely of the Poughkeepsie Eagle, Richard Coon of the Poughkeepsie Star, Ralph Lewando of the Pittsburg Press, Margaret Wilson of the New Haven Journal-Courier, J. A. Hardman of the North Adams Transcript, Jay Rosenfeld of the Berkshire Eagle, John Thompson of the Torrington Register, Carl Lindstrom of the Hartford Times, C. B. Parker of the Hartford Courant, Paul Wasmansdorf of the Schenectady Gazette, Irving Kolodin of the New York Sun, Benjamin Buxton, Springfield Republican, Willard M. Clark of the Springfield Union, Bernard Freeman of the Associated Press in Boston, M. Carhart of the Hudson Register, Richard Gaffney of the Boston Advertiser, W. A. H. Birnie of the New York World-Telegram, and Mr. Humphrey of the United Press in Boston.

Leave Early For Festival; Busses Ready

Persons planning to attend the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight are requested to start early enough to allow for parking and reaching the canopy-covered amphitheater in time for the opening number. The concert will start promptly. Boxholders who are late will be asked to stop at the fork in the roads instead of proceeding to their parking spaces. No motors will be permitted near the shell after the concert has started.

The Berkshire Street Railway bus will leave City Hall Park at 7:30 and will leave the Curtis Hotel in Lenox about 7:45. Another bus will leave the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge at 7:45.

Escort Through City

Police Chief John L. Sullivan arranged for a motorcycle escort for the orchestra busses this afternoon through the center of the city to facilitate getting to Lenox.

Tomorrow the Pittsfield Chamber of Commerce will take members of the orchestra on drives through scenic Berkshire.

At the information booth in Stockbridge, the Hampshire Book Shop has arranged a display of books on music and scores of the music to be played at the concerts. There will also be a book stall at Holmwood.

Sergeant Edward J. Majeskie of Northampton and Corporal Timothy F. Flynn of the Lee barracks, State Police, head a detail of 14 State Police officers who will be on duty at the entrance to Holmwood tonight. Sergeant Majeskie issued an appeal today that people entering and leaving the estate be patient, stay in line and obey instructions of the men, both inside and outside the estate.

Program for Opening Concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival

The program for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight will be as follows:—

Bach	Chorale Prelude. "Komm Gott Schopfer Heiliger Geist"
Beethoven	Overture to Goethe's "Egmont." Op. 84
Beethovan	Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Op. 92
Sibelius	Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 43

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.
Twin City Sentinel

AUG 1 [illegible] 1936

Mrs. Hazel Horton Reid Plans Study In Massachusetts; Attends Symphony Festival

Miss Hazel Horton Read, head of the violin department of Salem College, is today in the Berkshire Hills in Massachusetts, where she will attend the third annual Symphonic Festival to be held there.

Of this musical event, for which the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, former wife of the late Alfred G. Vanderbilt, will be the setting, the Boston Herald writes: "The concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in the Berkshires this week should be watched with uncommon interest by every music lover in America. We have always had to look to Europe for a festival of music that was really worth a long trip to hear. Now it is the ambition of the enthusiasts in Stockbridge to make the Berkshires an object for musical pilgrimage in the course of a summer. This year the presence of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, assures us of a high standard of performance."

Many outstanding guests will be present for the Berkshire Festival, among them Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, and Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President.

While in Massachusetts this summer Miss Read will study violin with Miss Kathleen Parlow, with whom she studied in Europe. Miss Parlow is the first violinist of the South Mountain String Quartet in Pittsfield, Mass., which is sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1936

Boston Symphony Will Open Berkshire Festival Tonight

Stockbridge, Mass.—(AP)—Music lovers gathered today for the Berkshire music festival which its sponsors hope eventually will rival similar musical series now held in Europe.

As night falls over the surrounding Berkshire Hills tonight, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts within the next four days.

For the first time in its 56 years of existence, the Boston Symphony will play outdors, with the scene of the debut the natural pine-surrounded amphitheater on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Never before in his 13 years in the United States has Koussevitzky conducted out doors.

The festival was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of some of this section's wealthy summer residents who were desirous of establishing a summer musical event similar to the famous Salzburg festival in Austria.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 14 1936

Berkshire Festival Draws Great Throng

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP).—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival.

Approximately 4,000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sebelius' symphony no. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert - goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent with plateau. There in a fork in the road a seating capacity of 3600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 14 1936

Koussevitzky and Bostonians Draw Thousands to Berkshires

Festival at Stockbridge Starts Third Season Brilliantly

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

In the third season of its career the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., found its stride Thursday evening with the aid of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

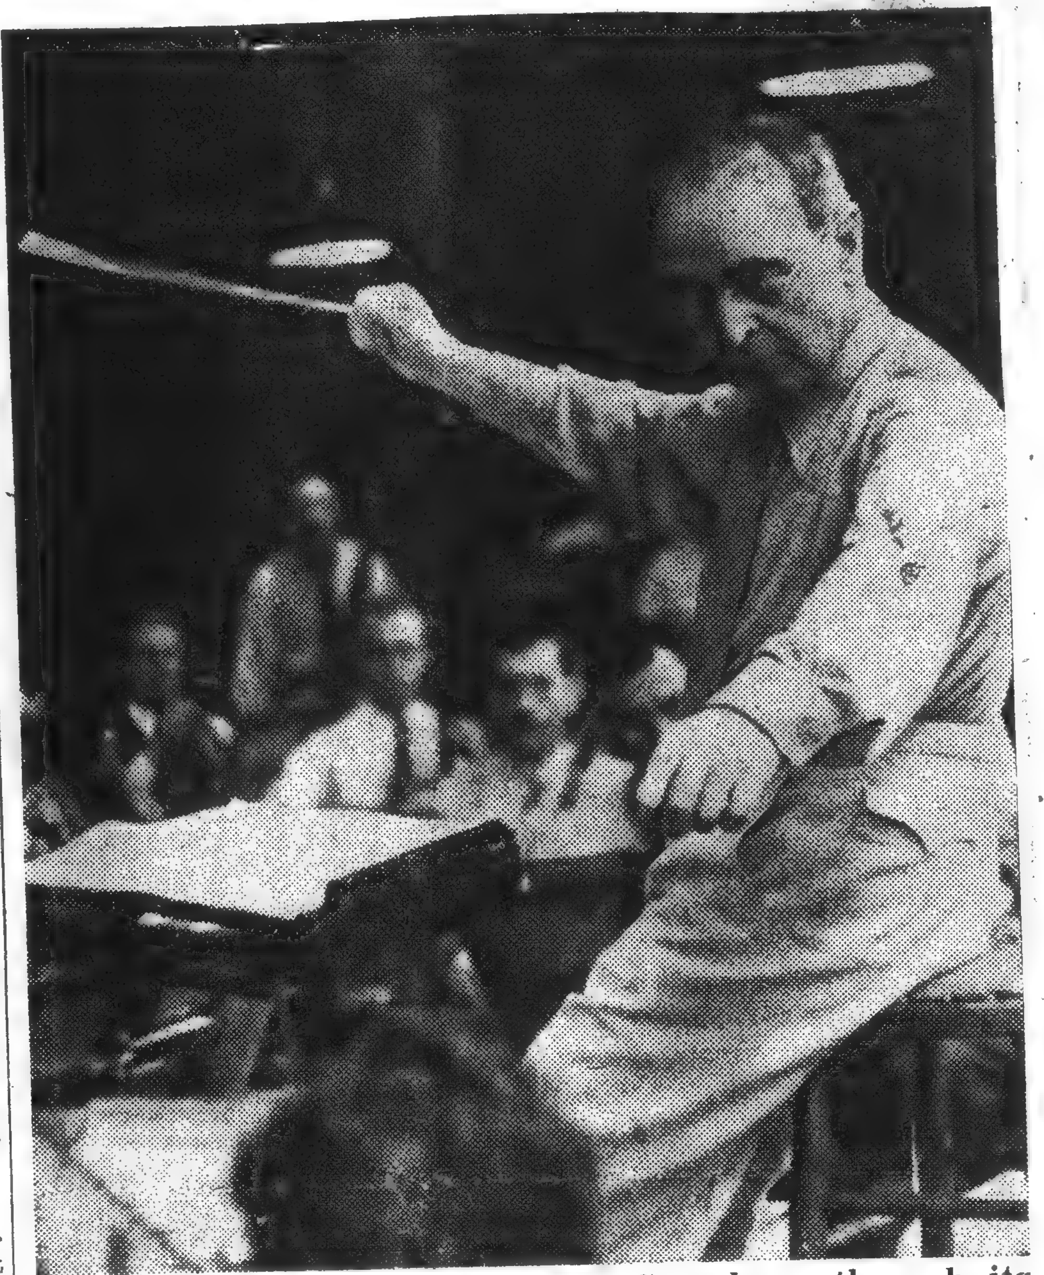
The lustre of the occasion was jointly contributed by an outdoor setting of singular beauty, the congregation of some 5,000 people of whom many represented a wide world of art, fashion and affairs, and lastly, though actually first, great music revealed in a great manner.

Among the ticket holders were names known the world over: Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist and Alma Gluck, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Sidney Howard and Owen Johnson. Henry Morgenthau Jr., was there. The president's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, had been expected but was unable to make the trip from Canada. Among the boxholders were: Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Edward A. Taft, Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Henry White, Mrs. Newbold Morris. Others attending the Festival are Dr. William Allen Neilson, Dr. H. N. MacCracken, Congressman and Mrs. Allen T. Treadway and Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island.

The Setting

Outdoor music has become practically a vogue; like many a habit it has run into unwarrantable excesses. The procedure has sometimes indicated that about the only requirement for an open-air concert was any kind of open air, with noises, and any other distractions that happened to be wandering through the night, thrown in gratis. The attitude of the Berkshire Festival sponsors, on the other hand, was exemplary. It was as though scene and circumstance had been chosen with the care and fastidiousness of a musician selecting his instrument.

Concert in the Making



Serge Koussevitzky puts Boston Symphony through its paces at Stockbridge.

Against the rows of cathedral pines at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, had been erected an acoustic shell of plywood to face upon a wide area which was put under the shelter of a huge tent. Outside the shelter additional seats had been provided and persons even at some distance were able to hear perfectly the faintest whisper of the violins so resonant was the sounding board.

Silence Maintained

Although a couple of thousand cars were parked a stone's throw away, not a single motor nor horn intruded upon the music. Perfect silence was maintained even on the outer fringe of the audience and at the nearby refreshment booth, gaily hung with Japanese lanterns, there were no lingerers for another bottle of ginger ale after the fanfare was sounded. There were no mosquitoes, if a single testimonial is to be trusted.

This was the first time Dr. Koussevitzky had ever conducted a summer concert in America, but he took no account of the season as to either manner or attire. When he appeared among the evergreens which flanked the stage and mounted to the podium he was in full evening dress. So were the players. One might have thought they had never heard of summer concert fashions, except that last night the Boston Symphony definitely set a summer concert fashion. That is: If music is worth playing at all, it is worth playing with the whole artistic conscience, whether the month be August or January.

It was a sultry night, but Koussevitzky, who is not exactly a reposeful conductor, did not spare himself. To speak at all of the physical effort involved is merely to emphasize that the performance musically was in just that spirit—one of vitality, fire and conviction.

Exciting Symphony

It was the finest performance of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony the reviewer can bring to mind. It was not orthodox in all respects, certain passages being heavily underlined and other points over-accented, if accepted interpretations are to be considered. But the whole symphony was exciting from start to finish. The opening magnificently moulded, and the of the first movement, while, delica at times, had all the buoyancy and happy naivete with which it is implicit.

Koussevitzky conjured up the very essence of Beethoven in this symphony, the exquisite logic of ordered sound—a feeling that if musical phrases were reducible to words (as they never will be) they might say "These tones are but the fruit of what has gone before and they are planted here as seeds for beauty yet before us." Is it the orchestra which works the miracle or Koussevitzky? Certainly Beethoven, but with each hearing our Beethoven must be recreated for us, an elementary fact which is not always remembered.

Sibelius and Bach

In spite of the fact that Koussevitzky is a sort of champion of Sibelius, and although the D major Symphony is one of the Finnish composer's most ingratiating works, it was Beethoven's night, for the Egmont Overture, in outline and stature, was easily on a par with the Seventh Symphony. It was then for the first time that one really felt the presence of the Boston Symphony. The opening Chorale Prelude of Bach, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist," had all the brazen angularity that Arnold Schoenberg chose to put into it. The reviewer is not partial to this chorale prelude anyway even if Bach did write it, but sound and fury do not appear to help it much.

If there is such a thing as outdoor music, it is as likely to be Sibelius as anything. Its affinity with nature is pervasive and understandable. It is difficult to reduce it to human, social terms. The sweep and power of Sibelian music, even in its more amiable aspects such as the Second Symphony, are nowhere better to be appreciated than in the fragrance of pine trees under a night sky.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 14 1936

FESTIVAL DRAWS MANY FROM HERE

Bentley Warren, President of Orchestra Association, Hears Boston Symphony at Stockbridge.

Williamstown was represented in the audience of 4,000 which gathered on Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate in Stockbridge last evening for the first concert in the third annual Berkshire Musical festival by several of its leading patrons of music in addition to others who see in the concerts a symphonic shrine where devotees are assured of distinguished music.

In the box were Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra corporation and his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Danforth Geer, Jr., of Short Hills, N. J., who are staying at the Warren summer home on Stone hill.

Elsewhere were Charles Louis Safford, director of music at Williams college who recently gave a series of lectures in the interests of the festival, and Mrs. Safford, and Professor Marshall Brown, a trustee of the festival, and Mrs. Brown.

Everyone in the huge audience agreed that the Boston Symphony orchestra, with its permanent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave a masterful performance of Bach, Beethoven and Sibelius. The second concert will be given at 4.30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

4000 ENJOY CONCERT AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Ang. 14, 1936.—(AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire Music Festival.

Approximately 4000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts. Never before had the well-known orchestra played out of doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducter an cpen air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

Stockbridge Music Festival Success

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14.—(UP)—The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festival of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps came to the Berkshires Thursday night when the Boston Symphony orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts new in the annals of American music festivals.

More than 5000 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 14 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OPENS AT STOCKBRIDGE

Thousands Enjoy First Concert of Series by Boston Symphony

A number of music-lovers from Northampton and vicinity were among the 4,000 who attended the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, given by the Boston Symphony orchestra on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in Stockbridge last evening. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, was given an enthusiastic reception when he appeared on the platform, and the orchestra received a real ovation at the conclusion of the performance.

The famous conductor was at his best, and the orchestra played with the vitality and understanding which have helped to make this organization almost unique among symphony groups. Opening with Bach's chorale prelude, "Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit," the program included the overture to Goethe's "Egmont," by Beethoven, and the familiar Seventh Symphony, which was given a superb reading. The second part of the program was a remarkable performance of Sibelius' Symphony No. 2, which was marked by a skillful interpretation and gaiety that left the audience wildly enthusiastic.

The remainder of the festival program includes a concert Saturday afternoon at 4.30 and an evening concert Sunday night at 8.

Plays Outdoors for First Time

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival.

Approximately 4,000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sibelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert-goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural plateau. There in a form in the road on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent, with a seating capacity of 3600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell, which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August, 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

9 AUG 14 1936

4000 HEAR MUSIC OF SYMPHONY IN STOCKBRIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Leads Boston Group in First of Three Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE (AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival.

Approximately 4000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sebelius' Symphony No. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert-goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural plateau. There in a form in the road on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent with a seating capacity of 3600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August, 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

AUG 14 1936

Berkshire Concert Tomorrow Attracts Many From Capital

MRS. CALVIN COOLIDGE, widow of the former President, who recently returned from Europe, will be in the audience at the concert tomorrow afternoon which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, will give at Holmwood, the Lenox, Mass., estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. The concert tomorrow is one of the symphonic festival, which is a feature of the Midsummer season in the Berkshire Hills. A shell has been built for the members of the orchestra, and a giant tent will protect 4,000 seats from inclement weather or merely from the evening dampness. Eighty boxes have been arranged and each has been sold for all the performances.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, will be a guest of former United States Ambassador and Mrs. Norman H. Davis tomorrow afternoon, and last evening, which was the opening program of the festival, Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge was in the audience. Mrs. F. S. Coolidge is the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge who was the inspiration and founder of the foundation which bears her name and which effected the building of the auditorium in the music division of the Library of Congress. Others at the concert last evening were the Governor of Rhode Island, Mr. Theodore Green, who was a guest of Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia; Mr. and Mrs. Efrem Zimbalist, the latter famous as Alma Gluck, who have a Summer home in the Berkshire Hills; the president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. William Mather Lewis, who formerly lived in Washington when Dr. Lewis was president of George Washington University, and Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 14 1936

At the Berkshire Festival

(Republican Staff Photos)

Snapped at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox last night. Left to right: Congressman Allen T. Treadway of Stockbridge, and Mrs Treadway, Miss Shores, Mrs Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, and Miss Beatrice Proctor, a Stockbridge debutante.

Berkshire Wealth, Fashion Attend Symphonic Festival

Boston Symphony Is at Its Best

Acoustics Weak but Not Unexpected in an Out-of-Doors Concert

By BENJAMIN BUXTON

Stockbridge, Aug. 13 — The Berkshire Symphonic festival, opening its third annual series of concerts here tonight, gave definite proof that this still young enterprise is enjoying a healthy growth and if well nourished will take its place in the future with the already well-established musical background of this vicinity. In a new locale, the magnificent estate of Mrs Mrs Margaret Emerson, with perfect weather, and with the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the festival shows further indication that the sponsors intend to offer consistently to visitors in the Berkshires music that matches in quality and beauty the well-organized efforts of the Sunday chamber music entrepreneurs and pays tribute to the unique quality of scenery and atmosphere that typifies Western Massachusetts.

Skillful Arrangement

Forthcoming programs, those of Saturday afternoon and Sunday night, have been selected by Dr Koussevitzky with rare insight, both as to historical interest and as to artistic arrangement. Yet tonight's program was peculiarly fitting. It is true that the Berkshire Symphonic festival is decidedly American in tone, and that there might be those who would complain that no American composer was represented. It might be argued that in an American musical project, still in the experimental stage, American music should have a prominent part.

On the other hand, creative effort has a tendency to lag behind the times, and those efforts which at-

(Continued on Fifteenth Page)

More Than 4000 Visit Holmwood

Lenox Setting Perfect, Weather Ideal—Orchestra, 3600 Seats Under Cover

Lenox, Aug. 13—The third annual Berkshire Symphonic festival opened tonight at Mrs Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, Holmwood, with the first of three concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The audience of 4500 persons was representative of the wealth, fashion, musical and educational talent of Western Massachusetts. All of the 80 boxes had been sold for weeks at $75 each.

Three thousand six hundred seats were in a marquee tent, with the overflow out in the open. Dr Koussevitzky and his 90 musicians were seated upon the platform of a shell whose curving background carried the sound perfectly to the farthest corner of the canopy.

Setting and Weather Perfect

The setting for the concert was perfect, likewise the weather was ideal, warm and pleasant. Holmwood is about midway between Lenox and Stockbridge on national automobile route 7. Passing through the gate of a six-foot iron fence, which incloses the estate on two sides, one passes through an avenue of pines and up a slight grade to a plateau.

The tent was placed on a large stretch of closely cropped lawn in the fork of the roads, one of which leads to the large rambling, white painted, unoccupied summer home of Mrs Emerson.

The other road leads past the gardens, which are maintained with a wealth of floral richness as though the owner were in residence, through more acres of lawn and over arched and rustic bridges that span lagoons down to the gymnasium where Mrs Emerson's sons, Alfred G. and George W. Vanderbilt, played as boys. In this gymnasium the late Mr and Mrs George Westinghouse, who created the estate, which they called Erskine park, entertained extensively at Berkshire hunt breakfasts and dances. When Mrs Emerson learned that the Berkshire festival trustees were seeking a new location for the August concerts she offered the use of Holmwood. The site of the tent is in Lenox. Her house, which overlooks Laurel lake and a wide stretch of Berkshire terrain, is in Lee.

On account of sharp turns on the miles of highway on the estate, all traffic was directed through the one-car gateway and up the avenue of pines. More than 3000 cars were parked in a field a short distance from the tent. Fourteen state police aided the local officers in handling traffic.

The second concert will be a mati-

(Continued [illegible] Page)

(Continued from First Page)

tempt to give a bird's-eye view of the present state of the human soul often slip into shallow thumb-nail sketches, contemporary, to be sure, but of the ephemeral quality of a newspaper clipping.

With these things in mind, and not forgetting the necessity for beguiling the ear, Dr Koussevitzky evidently selected, with his customary skill, a program of three great composers—all of them fearless, like those who dare to give good concerts, and all of them modern in the sense that all fresh and vital things are modern.

The Program

Bach, Beethoven and Sibelius were the composers whose works served to introduce the festival to its throng of spectators. First came the Bach chorale, interesting not only for the composer himself, but for the arranger, Arnold Schoenberg, present-day modernist, whose investigations into the world of counterpoint have produced strange fantasy, but whose mastery of this difficult medium gives him distinguished equipment for collaboration with the composer of "The Art of the Fugue."

Then Beethoven, two familiar works—the "Egmont" overture, and the Seventh symphony, both with their great vigor and characteristic economy of means. Of the nine symphonies of Beethoven, perhaps none was more appropriately chosen than the Seventh — "the Apotheosis of the Dance."

The concluding selection was the Sibelius Second symphony. Sibelius, Finnish composer, who without question has taken his place among the immortals. The symphony, a product of the early 1900s, is in the direct line of future development of this composer—the First symphony the violin concerto, the Fourth symphony, and other later works. Though of considerable length, its structure is lean and muscular.

At the opening of the concert there were fears on the part of some hearers that Schoenberg had permitted the brass section to run away with him. In the Beethoven overture the violins sang, but a little too weakly. This is no scathing criticism of the tent in which the spectators sit. The music after all, is heard out of doors, and if the shell in which the orchestra sits has not the acoustical properties of Symphony hall in Boston there is no cause for worry. Further experiment will perfect that which one day should, and surely will be perfection.

Nor is it a critical comment on Dr Koussevitzky and his magnificent band of men. As the concert progressed there was increasing point and coordination. The orchestra is not accustomed to alfresco performance, the conductor's command of his resources is always firm and his mastery of tonight's program never showed greater enthusiasm.

All in all, attendance at the Berkshire festival is unique and one that should not be missed by visitors and residents in this vicinity. The remainder of the festival should be a delight.

Tomorrow morning at 11, at the Berkshire playhouse, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will continue his informal talks about the festival programs. The second concert will take place Saturday afternoon at 4.30, when Dr Koussevitzky will conduct the following program: Largnetto e affetuoso from the Concerto Grosso for string orchestra, Op 6, No 6 in G-minor; Prelude to "Khovanstchina," Moussorgsky; "Prelude a l'Apres Midi d'un Faune," Debussy, and the Second symphony of Brahms.

Sunday's program, scheduled for 8.30 p. m., will include works by Mendelssohn, Wagner and Tchaikowsky, and attendants at the festival will have a rich opportunity to hear chamber music in the afternoon at the following places: The South mountain quartet just outside of Pittsfield; Falls Village, Ct., where the Gordon string quartet will play, and the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington. At 12.15 Sunday noon Mr Downes will analyze the final symphonic pro-

---

30 NEW MEMBERS

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1936

Mrs. E. P. Buel of the South street apartments has with her for the Festival Henry B. Sawyer, vice-president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Sawyer.

In the Festival box of Dr. and Mrs. Herschel C. Walker of Stockbridge at last night's concert were: Bentley Wirt Warren of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra corporation; Mr. Warren's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Danforth Geer, Jr., of Short Hills, N. J., Frederick Walcott, Mrs. Theron Rockwell and Mrs. Leslie Frost Francis. Dr. and Mrs. Walker gave a dinner before the concert.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

AUG 14 1936

5000 Attend Symphony Concert Given in Tent

American Equivalent of Salzburg Mozart Festivals Opens Successfully at Stockbridge as 105-Piece Orchestra Plays.

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (U.P.)—The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps came to the Berkshires, last night, when the Boston Symphony orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts, new in the annals of American music festivals.

More than 5000 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston symphony performed in a tent.

Music lovers from such distant points as Hawaii, California, Colorado, Florida, the Carolinas and West Virginia moved in a steady stream up a cockscrew road to a flat, velvety eight-acre plot on the magnificent Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

It is to the Emerson Bromo Seltzer fortune that the Berkshire symphonic festival is indebted—just as Europe has enjoyed similar fetes financed by the Beecham Pill fortune. The Berkshire festival boasts among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the president; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Governor Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Iseland, Norman H. Davis, American ambassador-at-large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

The orchestra, which was acclaimed with "Bravos;" at the end of the concert, played from an acoustic shell of plywood built at one end of the 250-foot by 125-foot tent. The tent itself is pitched on a gentle slope—effecting the graduated seating plan of theatres—and is situated some 150 feet above the Lenox-Stockbridge highway which itself is more than 1000 feet above sea-level.

In opening the series, Dr. Koussevitzky adroitly avoided the over-heavy, the ultra-modern and the controversial, adapting the programs to the summer spirit of relaxation. The program, for example, opened with a Bach Chorale Prelude and ran chronologically through with the Egmont overture and the Seventh symphony of Beethoven, to the Second Symphony of the contempary Sibelius.

So congested was traffic up the winding road to the concert tent that the opening program was delayed a half hour. Earlier in the evening, it appeared the festival would be marred by a thunder storm, but soon a brilliant sunset broke through the clouds and tent flaps were thrown back as stars dotted the sky.

As the orchestra played the sprawling tent was darkened except for the stage which was illuminated by droplights.

The performance, which attracted noted music critics from throughout New England and New York and Pennsylvania, will be repeated Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening.

SYMPHONY FOR BERKSHIRES

Koussevitzky Conducts for Festival

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 13—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, although something under full strength, with Dr. Koussevitsky conducting, made its first out-of-door appearance this evening, playing in a pine-encircled amphitheatre on a hill between Lenox and Stockbridge.

The occasion was the beginning of the third Berkshire Symphonic festival; the precise location, Holmwood, the 500-acre estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

The story goes hereabouts that when the sponsors of the festival sought the Boston Symphony as successor to the New York orchestra, which played here last summer, they had small hope of capturing Dr. Koussevitzky along with it. As it is, his presence here has given the festival a degree of prestige it could scarcely have had otherwise.

It would be poetic but not strictly accurate to say that the orchestra played this evening under the stars. Actually it was seated in a shell, somewhat similar to that which encloses 50 of its members on the Charles River Esplanade, while the audience, numbering some 5000 people, was for the most part sheltered by a canvas canopy. In this audience were many persons of note and of fashion, and the so-called boxes, as in an opera-house, bore the names of their holders.

The programmes of these concerts are made up of standard orchestral numbers. That of this evening listed Bach's Chorale-Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer Heilige Geist," as transcribed for orchestra by Schoenberg, Beethoven's "Edmont" Overture and Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

MORE THAN 4000 VISIT HOLMWOOD

(Continued from First Page)

nee Saturday at 4.30 p. m.

The concert was 25 minutes late in starting because of the traffic jam at the entrance to the estate. There was a line of cars one mile north and south of the gate on route 7 and Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre, in charge of transportation, said that the last car was parked at 9.18. It was officially estimated that 4500 persons attended the concert. Every seat was taken and several hundred stood in the rear and sat outside the tent on the lawn.

It was a most enthusiastic audience and at the conclusion Dr Koussevitzy was recalled to the dais four times. There were no encores. The Sibelius symphony No 2, which comprised the second part of the program, aroused the greatest enthusiasm.

The traffic arrangements were excellent and there was little delay after the concert in getting away.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 14 1936

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENED

4000 Hear Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony at Emerson Estate.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire Music Festival.

Approximately 4000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sibelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sibelius's Symphony No. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert-goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural plateau. There in a fork in the road on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent with a seating capacity of 3600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August, 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1936

THE NOTE BOOK

By J. H.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival

A GAILY auspicious opening—on the 13th—a lucky day in any language . . . A gorgeous night . . . Congressman Treadway and Owen Johnson within speaking distance of each other. The Congressman in a playful mood at intermission. "Let me have that," to a friend with a green beret which seems to be anybody's for the moment . . . Refreshment booth well patronized during the 25 minute intermission. Everything goes like hot cakes . . . "Sorry the soda is not cold." There has been scant time to put it on ice, the rush, crush and all. . . Win Crane near by . . . George W. Edman, whose genius was in every nook and corner of the great success, receives congratulations . . . It has been a year of magnificent work . . . Ex-Mayor and Mrs. England, Dan, Jr., and party . . . Father Wickham who took to New York the high spirit of Berkshire's Christian manhood, one of a fine family . . . People are arriving as late as 9.40, with 8.30 the scheduled hour of opening . . . Alert Willard M. Sistare and his corps of 40 crack ushers . . . Flashlights from every quarter . . . Winsome Marjorie Edwards in Sir Henry Hudson Kitson's party . . . Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Held and others of the South Mountain music colony . . . Jim Owens amused at the newspaper chatter over the precise location of the festival—three towns—Stockbridge, Lee, Lenox, claiming the honor much as seven cities claimed Homer dead. . . . He knows the vast parking space is in Lee anyhow. Lee is a grand old name . . . Legion men directing traffic . . . Sheriff McIntyre a tower of strength. . .Mrs. John H. C. Church, full of charm herself, sees charm in everything. . . A flock of brilliant critics from everywhere. Music still has potency to thrill the savage chest—or breast or what have you . . .A photographer is told when Mr. and Mrs. Walter Prichard Eaton arrive and they are duly flashed . . . A proud and goodly company, 4500 or more, happy, well dressed, a radiant picture. People are catching the old hopeful, cheerful spirit that is America. The shadows are past . . . A perfect organization . . . How much of himself Serge Koussevitzky puts into it and what material is under his magical baton . . . Second concert at 4.30 Saturday—the grand finale Sunday night at 8.30. Holmwood is the place—between Lenox and Stockbridge (Route 7). How soft to the tread the green carpet of the lawn . . . John C. Lynch at the roadside as the 1500 cars move out to their several destinations, many of them far flung . . . Cars from 40 States . . . Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith a center of attraction. She has done much for Berkshire . . . My sympathy is with the reviewers, trying to do such an incomparable performance justice . . . Bright new brown tent. The plan is approved . . .Playhouse visistors there. The Boston Symphony Orchestra still is a name to conjure with . . . A marvelous printed program, generously distributed . . . Berkshire at its best. What an undertaking, what superb execution in every one of the million or more details!

A variety of incidents provided comedy relief. . . Come the wrecker to take a car out of the parking line. . . In the excitement to get on the spot, a woman left the engine of her auto running . . . Another man ran out of water for his car. . . "Where do I stop?" asked a woman patron. "You don't stop—you keep right on going." said the courteous guard, indicating the parking line. . .A woman, on the way to Connecticut, arrived at 8:30, thought the festival setup was a detour, got into a jam, and it was 9:30 before finally she was on her way. She was advised to stay for the proceedings, nice night for it and everything.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 14 1936

Boston Symphony Opens Festival in Berkshires

By EDGAR VAN OLINDA

New York has its Stadium concerts, Philadelphia its Robin Hood Dell series and Chicago its Ravinia park outdoor concerts, but the Berkshire festival, which brings to New England and Eastern New York a symphonic feast as great as those enjoyed by any of the major cities of the country, must be qualified as a tremendous success.

Last night, under ideal conditions, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra gave the first of a series of three orchestral concerts on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge. An audience of 5,000 crowded the enclosure consecrated to this unique festival and overflowed the adjoining lawns.

From the moment Dr. Koussevitzky mounted the conductor's stand, Koussevitzky of the eloquent hands and articulate mouth, to the final magnificent orgy of color and sound of the Sibelius' Second symphony, the occasion was one of unalloyed pleasure to the devotees of Symphonia, many of the audience breaking the unwritten law of no applause between symphonic movements in their enthusiasm.

An organization that is the gauge by which all orchestras are measured, opened the program with the short Bach Choral Prelude orchestrated by Arnold Schonberg, "Komm, Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" and the majesty of Luther's "Whitsuntide Hymn" was magnificently played.

Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, which has kept the name of its hero alive long after the opera itself has been discarded, brought out all the beauty of the strings for which the Boston orchestra is famous and was followed by the Beethoven Seventh Symphony, called by Wagner "The Apotheosis of the Dance" despite the fact its rythms do not by any means represent actual dance forms.

CELTIC FLAVOR TO FINALE.

The finale, with its strongly Celtic flavor, shows Beethoven's interest in Irish folk music at this period of his life.

An intermission was shortened by the insistent applause of the musically elite and Dr. Koussevitzky showed unmistakably his great joy at the enthusiasm of his delighted audience.

In contrasting mood to the more familiar numbers of the first half of the program and awaited eagerly by an audience whose appetite had been whetted by his tone poem "Finlandia," the contemporary composer Sibelius' great Second Symphony was the final offering. Sometimes called his "pastoral" symphony, Sibelius injects into this magnificent work all the stark racial qualities of his native fjords and unfriendly seas and the result is a tense, sharply etched dry-point of an austere Fnnish landscape.

For any reviewer to attempt to convey in cold print the dynamic effect of this great epic in music last night would be as futile as dissecting a rose in effort to find the source of its fragrance.

When Dr. Koussevitzky conducts all music becomes "programmed." Every tone color, every effect, is mirrored in his face and is telegraphed to his men and to those in the audience able to see his face, making detailed program annotations superfluous.

His European vacation was reflected in the fine glow of health that carried him through a difficult program with great honor to his men and to himself. "The Boston Symphony played." What more can be said?

The second concert is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 at which time the Brahms Symphony Number Two, in D Major, and a program of miscellaneous orchestral numbers will be played.

It is advisable to allow two hours from Albany, to obviate the possibility of a traffic line that prevented many from hearing the first half of the program last night.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1936

TRIUMPH

Clearly the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has reached its majority. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented an opening program of Bach. Beethoven and Sibelius which recalled to many the glorious nights when Toscanini was conducting in New York. None of the 4500 persons, who drove home with the triumphal chords of the Sibeilus Second ringing in their ears, will easily forget either the majesty of the music or the beauty of the setting. Music under the stars is a peculiarly fitting combination, highly appropriate to the cultural atmosphere that is being nourished in the Berkshires.

To Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and her corps of trustees and co-workers, goes the gratitude of Pittsfield, Lenox, Stockbridge and the other towns and villages of the county. They not only conceived the enterprise, but this year had the courage to bring us one of the greatest symphony orchestras in the world. Courage, yes—because few realize the endless hours of campaigning that were needed to make the occasion a success.

Yet the most auspicious sign of the evening was the unmistakable proof that Berkshire residents want the Festival year after year. Regardless of its inherent value, the Festival would be worthless if it were sustained only by the labors of a handful of committeemen and public minded citizens. The response was spontaneous and general, the applause enthusiastic the ticket sale gratifying. And that probably means that the Festival

bhe n-he

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 14 1936

Dinner and Concert Parties Formed As Berkshire Music Festival Opens

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 13.—Today's entertainments in this region centered largely around the Berkshire Music Festival that opend tonight at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, with the first of three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Bentley Wirt Warren, of Boston, president of the orchestra corporation, and Mrs. Frederick Walcott, of Hartford, Conn., are with Dr. and Mrs. Herschel C. Walker at Ingleside, Stockbridge, for the festival. Among others at a dinner Dr. and Mrs. Walker gave tonight were Mr. and Mrs. Danforth Geer jr., of Short Hills, N. J.; Mrs. Leslie Frost Francis and Mrs. Theron Rockwell.

Dinners were given in the Pittsfield colony by Mr. and Mrs. Cummings C. Chesney and Mr. Robert Talcott Francis.

Mr. Henry Morgenthau, former Ambassador to Turkey, and Mrs. Morgenthau, who are at the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, attended tonight's concert. There were four college presidents in the audience, Dr. William Allan Neilson, of Smith; Dr. Henry Noble MacCracken, of Vassar; Dr. William Mather Lewis, of LaFayette, and Dr. Hugh Potter Baker, of Massachusetts State. Among others there were Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer, Mrs. George William Douglas and Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn.

In a box with Mr. and Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs were Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge and the Rev. Dr. James E. Gregg and Mrs. Gregg. With Mrs. James Graham Parsons were Mrs. William Festus Morgan and Miss Marie M. LeMoyne. Mrs. Nina L. Durvea had Mrs. Coudert Nast and Mrs. Donald L. Brown as guests.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 14 1936

THRONG HEARS KOUSSEVITZKY IN BERKSHIRES

Noted Conductor Directs First Open Air Concert in His 13 Years in U. S.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire music festival.

Approximately 4,000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts.

First Open Air Concert

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Doctor Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sebelius' Symphony No. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, Holmwood, midway between here and Lenox

Concert-goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural plateau. There a fork in the road on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent with a seating capacity of 3,600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Second Concert Tomorrow

Doctor Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August, 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

4000 HEAR CONCERT BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens Berkshire Music Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14. (AP) Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire Music Festival.

Approximately four thousand sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Doctor Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sebelius' "Symphony No. 2' 'as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate. "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert-goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural plateau. There in a fork in the road on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent with a seating capacity of thirty-six hundred. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Doctor Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar Summer music events in Europe.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 14 1936

5000 Persons Hear Boston Symphony In The Berkshires

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14—The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzsburg in the Bavarian Alps came to the Berkshires last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts new in the annals of American music festivals.

More than 5000 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent.

Music lovers from such distant points as Hawaii, California, Colorado, Florida, the Carolinas and West Virginia moved in a steady stream up a cockscrew road to a flat, velvety eight-acre plot on the magnificent Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

It is to the Emerson Bromo Seltzer fortune that the Berkshire symphonic festival is indebted—just as Europe has enjoyed similar fetes financed by the Beecham pill fortune. The Berkshire festival boasts among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. Jame Roosevelt, mother of the President; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Governor Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island; Norman H. Davis, American Ambassador-at-large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

The orchestra, which was acclaimed with "bravos!" at the end of the concert, played from an acoustic shell of plywood built at one end of the 250-foot by 125-foot tent. The tent itself is pitched on a gentle slope—effecting the graduated seating plan of theatres—and is situated some 150 feet above the Lenox-Stockbridge highway which itself is more than 1000 feet above sea-level.

In opening the series, Dr. Koussevitsky adroitly avoided the overheavy, the ultra-modern and the controversial, adapting the program to the summer spirit of relaxation. The program, for example, opened with a Bach chorale prelude and ran chronologically thru with the Egmont overture and the seventh symphony of Beethoven, to the second symphony of the contemporary Sibelius.

So congested was traffic up the winding road to the concert tent that the opening program was delayed a half hour. Earlier in the evening, it appeared the festival would be marred by a thunder storm, but soon a brilliant sunset broke thru the clouds and tent flaps were thrown back as stars dotted the sky.

As the orchestra played the sprawling tent was darkened except for the stage which was illuminated by drop-lights.

The performance, which attracted noted music critics from thruout New England and New York and Pennsylvania, will be repeated Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

Berkshire Symphony Concerts Start

Lenox, Aug. 14—The third annual Berkshire Symphonic festival opened last night at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, Holmwood, with the first of three concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The audience of 4500 persons was representative of the wealth, fashion, musical and educational talent of Western Massachusetts. All of the 80 boxes had been sold for weeks at $75 each.

Three thousand six hundred seats were in a marquee tent, with the overflow out in the open. Dr. Koussevitzky and his 90 musicians were seated upon the platform of a shell whose curving background carried the sound perfectly to the farthest corner of the canopy.

The setting for the concert was perfect, likewise the weather was ideal, warm and pleasant. Holmwood is about midway between Lenov and Stockbridge on national automobile route 7. Passing througn the gate of a six-foot iron fence, which incloses the estate on two sides, one passes through an avenue of pines and up a slight grade to a plateau.

The tent was placed on a large stretch of closely cropped lawn in the fork of the roads, one of which leads to the large rambling, white ainted, unoccupied summer home Mrs. Emerson.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1936

THE MEN WHO MAKE THE MUSIC

The oboe player sounds his A and the rest of the orchestra tunes up for its first rehearsal.

Bottom Center: This is how the bassoon player looked when the cricket sang.

The Woodwinds find the going hot in rehearsal, and Mr. Koussevitzky always kind, tells them to peel down.

Top center: This gentleman plays his harp before his time.

CRITIC ENTHRALLS AUDIENCE IN ANALYZING FESTIVAL MUSIC

Olin Downes, Music Writer of New York Times, Draws Larger Audience for Second of Series of Talks at Berkshire Playhouse—His Exposition of "Afternoon of a Faun" Is Highlight of Morning

By JAY ROSENFELD

Olin Downes, the music critic of the New York Times, gave the second of three lectures this morning at the Berkshie Playhouse in Stockbridge on the programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He was greeted by a much larger audience than attended the first lecture and he held them enthralled.

He first showed the distinction between the parallel lines of Bach and Handel, the former of whose Chorale was chosen to open the festival, and the latter of whose Concerto Grosso will open Saturday afternoon's program.

His analysis of Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff was replete with pithy material, and his illustrations at the piano were chosen with exceptional understanding.

He seemed bursting with subject matter and his natural fluency was scarcely able to keep ahead of his abundance of thoughts.

Debussy and Brahms were analyzed with the skill of a master who loves the music of which he speaks. His comprehension of the French School is unsurpassed and his exposition of the "Afternoon of a Faun" was quite the highlight of the morning.

The final lecture will be given Sunday noon at 12:15.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

Aug 15

Stockbridge Is Thronged For Berkshire Festival

About 4000, Representatives of Wealth, Fashion and The Arts, Gather at Holmwood, Estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, for Concerts Within Mammoth Tent

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14 (AP)—Representatives of the music world, wealth, fashion and the arts thronged this section today for the Berkshire Music Festival.

Approximately 4000 sat under a marquee tent last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor, led the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three concerts.

Never before had the well-known orchestra played out-of-doors and it was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted an open air concert in his 13 years in the United States.

Outstanding interpreter of Sebelius, the Finnish composer, the Russian conductor chose Sebelius' Symphony No. 2 as one of last night's selections.

Scene of the concert series is Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate, "Holmwood," midway between here and Lenox.

Concert-goers passed through an ornamental iron gate and up a pine-lined driveway to a natural plateau. There in a fork in the road on a vast expanse of closely cropped grass was the concert tent with a seating capacity of 3600. Outside the tent were overflow seats for hundreds of others.

The orchestra played from the platform of a shell which carried the music to the farthest corner of the assembled crowd.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a second concert Saturday afternoon, the only daylight concert, and the third and last Sunday evening. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, is expected here Saturday.

The festival was inaugurated on the Hanna farm here in August, 1934. Its wealthy sponsors hoped to establish a music series which some day would rival similar summer musical events in Europe.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 14 1936

Boston Symphony Plays In Tent to Launch Berkshire Festival

5500 Music Lovers Converge on Stockbridge Estate as Dr. Koussevitzky Leads Orchestra, Under Canvas for First Time in 56-Year History

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(UP)—The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festival of Salzburg in the Bavarian Alps came to the starlit Berkshires tonight when the Boston symphony orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts new in the annals of American music festivals.

The "S. R. O." sign was dusted off as 5500 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston symphony performed in a tent.

Music lovers from such distant points as Hawaii, California, Colorado, Florida, the Carolinas and West Virginia moved in a steady stream up a corkscrew road to a flat, velvety eight-acre plot on the magnificent Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

The Berkshire festival boasts among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Governor Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, American Ambassador-at-Large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

The orchestra, which was acclaimed with "Bravos!" at the end of the concert, played from an acoustic shell of plywood built at one end of the 250-foot by 125-foot tent. The tent itself is pitched on a gentle slope—effecting the graduated seating plan of theatres—and is situated some 150 feet above the Lenox-Stockbridge highway, which itself is more than 1000 feet above sea-level.

In opening the series, Dr. Kousevitzy adroitly avoided the ultra-modern and the controversial, adapting the programs to the summer spirit of relaxation. Tonight's program, for example, opened with a Bach chorale prelude and ran chronologically through with the Emmont Overture and the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, to the Second Symphony of the contemporary Sibelius.

So congested was traffic up the winding road to the concert tent that the opening program was delayed a half-hour. Earlier in the evening, it appeared the festival would be marred by a thunder storm, but soon a brilliant sunset broke through the clouds, and tent flaps were thrown back as stars dotted the sky.

As the orchestra played, the sprawling tent was darkened except for the stage, which was illuminated by drop-lights.

Tonight's performance, which attracted noted music critics from throughout New England and New York and Pennsylvania, will be repeated Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 15 1936

* * *

Burton S. Cornwall of Girard Avenue is spending the week-end in Stockbridge, Mass. He will attend the Boston Symphony Music festival on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 15 1936

The second of three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, takes place at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon. The third and final concert is scheduled for tomorrow evening at 8:30 o'clock. The festival is being held at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate on Route 7, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 15 1936

Music Features Week-End Events In Berkshires

Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice Gives Festival at Her Estate.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 15.—Oustanding in a week end crowded with music are the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts, the second of which is an event of this afternoon and the final one tomorrow evening at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice had arranged several months ago for one of her series of Saturday musicals for this afternoon, and she decided to go ahead with her plans, although it would be in conflict with the festival at Lenox. One of the performers is Archer Gibson, the organist.

Prof. and Mrs. Albert Sprague Coolidge of Cambridge, Mass., are arriving today from Greensboro, Vt., and will be the guests for a week of Mr. and Mrs. Willem Willeke at Mountain House, Pittsfield. They are to attend the music festival and on the 23d Prof. Coolidge is to play the viola with the South Mountain String Quartet in a program of chamber music.

Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff and Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, of the Stockbridge colony are among those having dinner parties. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton are giving a dinner tonight at Highwood in Windsor in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs of Boston.

To Give Dinner Tonight.

Another dinner tonight is being given by Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia at Wheatleigh, Lenox, in compliment to her week-end guests, Mrs. Nicholas Brown of Newport, Miss Ellen Bullard of Boston and Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island.

Another dinner hostess at the Mill, Stockbridge, is Mrs. Nina L. Duryea, who has Mrs. Elihu Root Jr., Mrs. Drexel Dahlgren and Mrs. Donald W. Brown as guests.

The Wyantenuck Country Club at Great Barrington is having a ball tonight as the climax of its western New England tennis tournament.

At Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Baker, Miss Helen Smith, Mrs. James A. Smith of New York; Dr. and Mrs. Christopher D. Kevin, Miss Alison Kevin and Mr. and Mrs. John D. Nash of Brooklyn, N. Y.

New York Guests Arrive.

Newcomers at Williams Inn, Williamstown, are Mr. and Mrs. F. Ballard Williams of Glen Ridge, N. J.; Mrs. Henry Sabin Leake, Henry S. Leake, Dr. and Mrs. Cary Eggleston, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Freer and Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Baillie of New York.

Arrivals at Hotel Oakwood, Great Barrington, include Mrs. H. C. Lexow, Mrs. E. H. Hoppenstedt, Misses Elizabeth O'Neil, Cecilia K. Byrne and Mary W. Joyce of New York.

Among Berkshire Inn arrivals at Great Barrington are Mrs. David P. Vail of Salem, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Hanson, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Devine and Mrs. C. C. Ferguson of Pelham.

Curtis Hotel arrivals at Lenox include Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Waterman, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Fish Jr. of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Cunningham of New Rochelle, and Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Rood of Jackson Heights, N.Y.

At the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox, are Mr. and Mrs. Harold Jackson of New York, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. MacNeill, Dr. and Mrs. F. J. Cullen, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Healy of New York.

Newcomers at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, include Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Williams of Scarsdale; Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Thompson of Glen Ridge, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Johnston of Phillipse Manor, New York.

At Olde Egremont Inn, South Egremont, are Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Pomeroy of Old Greenwich, Conn., and Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Swan of Stamford, Conn.

73

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES 14/36

THOUSANDS PRAISE BERKSHIRES' FETE

Boston Orchestra, Under the Baton of Koussevitzky, Opens Symphonic Festival.

VARIED PROGRAM OFFERED

Concert Includes Works of Bach, Schoenberg, Beethoven and Sibelius.

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—An audience of 5,000, including in its ranks not only persons musically and socially influential but individuals from every walk of life, attended the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphony Festival given this evening at Holmwood by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This was the first time that the celebrated Boston Orchestra had appeared as a unit outside its regular subscription season and the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky had appeared as conductor under like circumstances before an American audience.

This audience heard, therefore, interpretations by an orchestra which has no equal today in Europe and very few rivals in the world, interpretations of the quality usually reserved for the impressive concerts of the Winter season. The orchestra had been arduously rehearsed for these performances.

Setting Is Great Sweep of Land

One of the greatest conductors in the world was present, dominating the event and in a frame of mind to give all that he had to the occasion.

The setting was a great sweep of land on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson which has generously been made available for these events. Holmwood stands between Stockbridge and Lenox. The concerts were given under a great tent which covered 3,600 seats with a platform and a shell for the orchestra at the lower end. The shell served excellently to project the orchestral tone and strengthen its sonorous power. The ground on which the tent stands slopes in a perfectly gradual incline just enough to give those who sat in each successive tier of seats a complete view of the stage which stands twelve feet below the seats furthest back. The only flaw where lines of sight are concerned is the inevitable one of a few tent poles small enough to present no actual obstruction.

The audience filled all the seats under the tent and spread out to the surrounding spaces so that many sat on the benches that flanked the great tent and others sat on the grass under a providentially starry and cool night sky. They perhaps felt rather than saw the presence of the clusters of pines, willows and elms which stand at some distance on all sides of the tent and make in the daytime an extremely beautiful frame of the picture.

Fortunately Chosen Program

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was fortunately chosen from the most popular but also representative masterpieces of the orchestral repertory. It began with the Bach choral-prelude "Komm Gott Schoofer Heiliger Geist" as transcribed for orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg. It continued with Beethoven of the "Egmont" overture and the Seventh symphony and ended with the magnificently bardic and dramatic Second symphony of Sibelius. The noble sonorites and great line of Bach's music, made the more salient by a rather surprisingly fine orchestration, made the most appropriate inauguration of the occasion. The proud and tragic music of Beethoven's overture prefaced the incomparable symphony which may easily cause the listener to think of the beauty and glory of the natural world and of life which mounts and exults to the skies—not that there is any need to read a specific meaning into the Seventh symphony, which never seemed more truly a surpassing creation of art.

The enthusiasm of the audience which had shown itself in the greeting to Dr. Koussevitzky and his men and had grown as the performance progressed came to its climax with the Sibelius symphony. It was separated from the work of Beethoven by an intermission of twenty-five minutes, and it proved in actual effect to be one of the very few symphonies which could have been played after Beethoven's without the feeling of inappropriateness or anti-climax. This remark is not designed to join the ranks of those who, having once ignored and derided Sibelius, now rank him with Beethoven. One star differs from another in glory and there is not the slightest need to institute comparisons between the two composers. The Sibelius symphony is utterly a different thing from Beethoven's, a thing of northern nature and the spirit of saga and it is extremely exciting to hear, especially as regards the finale.

Dr. Koussevitzky, with the composer, built up the tremendous climax very gradually and with a power wholly irresistible. Not only was the effectiveness of the music in itself tremendous, but the orchestration of Sibelius was the most effective of any heard during the evening. It recalled the excellent remark made by Paul Rosenfeld, who once wrote that whereas the music of most composers would sound artificial and inadequate in the midst of nature, the music of Sibelius would be fully adequate to such a test. The truth of this remark was demonstrated in memorable fashion this evening, for the audience was swept from its feet and the last chord was followed by shouts and cheers.

Two more concerts will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony on Saturday afternoon and on Sunday night, the closing event of this symphonic festival. The attendance this evening and the response of the public, which have been beyond the most optimistic predictions, point to the possibility of a music festival which can be extended in the scope and the quality of its offering to rival any of the celebrated festivals now given in Europe. Plans are now under discussion to work to that end.

The question of the outdoor symphony concert is above all the question of the quality and resonance of the orchestral tone. Curiously enough Schoenberg's brilliant scoring of the Bach choral prelude had the roughest sound of all the performances of the evening, while the tone of the strings carried well and gave a surprising degree of fullness and brilliancy to the effect. It was shown that an orchestra with the tone qualities of the Boston Symphony can give a highly effective performance in the open air, although further experiments with the stage, the shell and the seating of the musicians can bring improvement in this direction.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1936

Koussevitzky Honored at Garden Party

Some 200 newspaper critics and other guests gathered in the garden of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith and Miss Miriam Oliver at The Residence, Stockbridge, yesterday afternoon to meet Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the pictures above at the left is George Judd, manager of the orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky chatting as they partake of refreshments.

The center photo shows Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, Dr. Koussevitzky, Jay Rosenfeld, music editor of The Berkshire Eagle, and Miss Robinson Smith. At the right is Mrs. A. A. Berle Jr., wife of the Chamberlain of the City of New York, and below Harris Fahnestock of Lenox is snapped in conversation.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

Aug.

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS

Five thousand persons assembled yesterday on a beautifully-turfed and tree-shaded spot at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in the Berkshires to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra—an organization with few rivals in the world—play a concert in the open air. Never before had Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor, remained in the United States in Summer to direcct such a performance. The orchestra will play its second concert this afternoon at 4:30 and the Festival will end with the concert Sunady night at 8:30.

Sale of Unreserved Red Tickets For Festival Stopped Until 3 P. M.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival management stopped the sale of unreserved red tickets temporarily this noon pending developments in weather conditions. If the weather is fair at 3 o'clock, the sale of these lower priced tickets will be resumed. This move was made because the capacity of the unreserved section at the rear of the tent is sold. There are still a few reserved seats left in both the rear and the front. Weather predictions this noon indicated favorable conditions this afternoon and for the closing concert tomorrow night. The telephone of the box office at Holmwood is Lee, 262.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1936

Berkshire Festival The opening concert near Lenox of the Berkshire Symphony Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, probably surpassed in all respects the most sanguine hopes of its sponsors. More than four thousand persons were present to hear interpretations by one of the few superlatively great orchestras in the world, led by one of the greatest of conductors. It is especially significant that the audience was not, as might have been expected, made up exclusively of rich and fashionable patrons of music. The tiers of seats on the grassy amphitheater protected by a great marquee under a starry sky were occupied by people from all walks of life.

American cities and Summer resorts from coast to coast have made great strides in recent years in providing good music for residents and transients. But perhaps the Berkshire Festival represents the first attempt to present great masterworks as they are given in concert halls during the Winter season. The audience the other night heard major works of Bach, Beethoven, and Sibelius played with all the splendor, inspiration, and technical finish that characterize the performances in Symphony Hall.

And there was the added charm of an outdoor setting. But this charm was not marred by the usual disturbing noise and confusion of motor horns, late-arriving patrons, and the restless moving about that is usually indulged in by an outdoor audience. Conditions are said to have been ideal. Which gives ground for the hope that this auspicious occasion may culminate in a movement to inaugurate a regular Summer Music Festival in New England, which will become the Mecca of music-lovers from all parts of the country.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
Aug. 36

The People's Forum

Symphonic Applause

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I write this in reference to the concert which was given Thursday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is an honor to Berkshire County to have this orchestra come here. We should be proud enough to show Dr. Koussevitzky that we realize his honor. I feel that the people of Thursday's audience failed utterly to do so. True, they were quiet, attentive while the music was playing. But either they had no true appreciation of music, or little culture because it is rude, disrespectful, to Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, or to any conductor, to applaud between movements of a symphony, as was done in every case.

Dr. Koussevitzky does not stand up there waving a baton around just to keep the tempo. He is interpreting a great piece of music, consisting of four parts which together are a complete unit, and applause disturbs the train of emotion.

Music is an emotional thing, and it is made or broken to a great extent by the carrying over of the audience's emotion to the conductor, and the conductor's to the audience.

In Cleveland, such a thing as applause between movements is unheard of Dr. Rodzinsky is too much revered by the people of Cleveland, for them to commit such an act of disrespect. I am sure the people of Boston feel the same about Dr. Koussevitzky.

Certainly, when you are welcoming an artist as a guest, you should treat him as a guest, as well as an artist—with respect.

RUTH GAGE CROFUT.
Cleveland, Ohio.

CHICAGO, ILL.
AMERICAN

AUG 15 1936

* * *

IN THE BERKSHIRES, WHERE the Summer colonists of Lenox and Stockbridge are spending their days and evenings under the soothing influence of Koussevitzky's baton, and going mornings to the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge to hear Olin Downes talk on the symphonies, Mrs. John H. Hamline of Lake Forest is having what is to her taste the most heavenly kind of a Summer. She and Countess Giovanni Cardelli were guests of honor at a luncheon Mrs. William Felton Barrett gave this week at her Sky Farm in North Egremont.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES 14/36

THOUSANDS PRAISE BERKSHIRES' FETE

Boston Orchestra, Under the Baton of Koussevitzky, Opens Symphonic Festival.

VARIED PROGRAM OFFERED

Concert Includes Works of Bach, Schoenberg, Beethoven and Sibelius.

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—An audience of 5,000, including in its ranks not only persons musically and socially influential but individuals from every walk of life, attended the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphony Festival given this evening at Holmwood by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This was the first time that the celebrated Boston Orchestra had appeared as a unit outside its regular subscription season and the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky had appeared as conductor under like circumstances before an American audience.

This audience heard, therefore, interpretations by an orchestra which has no equal today in Europe and very few rivals in the world, interpretations of the quality usually reserved for the impressive concerts of the Winter season. The orchestra had been arduously rehearsed for these performances.

Setting Is Great Sweep of Land

One of the greatest conductors in the world was present, dominating the event and in a frame of mind to give all that he had to the occasion.

The setting was a great sweep of land on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson which has generously been made available for these events. Holmwood stands between Stockbridge and Lenox. The concerts were given under a great tent which covered 3,600 seats with a platform and a shell for the orchestra at the lower end. The shell served excellently to project the orchestral tone and strengthen its sonorous power. The ground on which the tent stands slopes in a perfectly gradual incline just enough to give those who sat in each successive tier of seats a complete view of the stage which stands twelve feet below the seats furthest back. The only flaw where lines of sight are concerned is the inevitable one of a few tent poles small enough to present no actual obstruction.

The audience filled all the seats under the tent and spread out to the surrounding spaces so that many sat on the benches that flanked the great tent and others sat on the grass under a providentially starry and cool night sky. They perhaps felt rather than saw the presence of the clusters of pines, willows and elms which stand at some distance on all sides of the tent and make in the daytime an extremely beautiful frame of the picture.

Fortunately Chosen Program

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was fortunately chosen from the most popular but also representative masterpieces of the orchestral repertory. It began with the Bach choral-prelude "Komm Gott Schoofer Heiliger Geist" as transcribed for orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg. It continued with Beethoven of the "Egmont" overture and the Seventh symphony and ended with the magnificently bardic and dramatic Second symphony of Sibelius. The noble sonorites and great line of Bach's music, made the more salient by a rather surprisingly fine orchestration, made the most appropriate inauguration of the occasion. The proud and tragic music of Beethoven's overture prefaced the incomparable symphony which may easily cause the listener to think of the beauty and glory of the natural world and of life which mounts and exults to the skies—not that there is any need to read a specific meaning into the Seventh symphony, which never seemed more truly a surpassing creation of art.

The enthusiasm of the audience which had shown itself in the greeting to Dr. Koussevitzky and his men and had grown as the performance progressed came to its climax with the Sibelius symphony. It was separated from the work of Beethoven by an intermission of twenty-five minutes, and it proved in actual effect to be one of the very few symphonies which could have been played after Beethoven's without the feeling of inappropriateness or anti-climax. This remark is not designed to join the ranks of those who, having once ignored and derided Sibelius, now rank him with Beethoven. One star differs from another in glory and there is not the slightest need to institute comparisons between the two composers. The Sibelius symphony is utterly a different thing from Beethoven's, a thing of northern nature and the spirit of saga and it is extremely exciting to hear, especially as regards the finale.

Dr. Koussevitzky, with the composer, built up the tremendous climax very gradually and with a power wholly irresistible. Not only was the effectiveness of the music in itself tremendous, but the orchestration of Sibelius was the most effective of any heard during the evening. It recalled the excellent remark made by Paul Rosenfeld, who once wrote that whereas the music of most composers would sound artificial and inadequate in the midst of nature, the music of Sibelius would be fully adequate to such a test. The truth of this remark was demonstrated in memorable fashion this evening, for the audience was swept from its feet and the last chord was followed by shouts and cheers.

Two more concerts will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony on Saturday afternoon and on Sunday night, the closing event of this symphonic festival. The attendance this evening and the response of the public, which have been beyond the most optimistic predictions, point to the possibility of a music festival which can be extended in the scope and the quality of its offering to rival any of the celebrated festivals now given in Europe. Plans are now under discussion to work to that end.

The question of the outdoor symphony concert is above all the question of the quality and resonance of the orchestral tone. Curiously enough Schoenberg's brilliant scoring of the Bach choral prelude had the roughest sound of all the performances of the evening, while the tone of the strings carried well and gave a surprising degree of fullness and brilliancy to the effect. It was shown that an orchestra with the tone qualities of the Boston Symphony can give a highly effective performance in the open air, although further experiments with the stage, the shell and the seating of the musicians can bring improvement in this direction.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1936

Koussevitzky Honored at Garden Party

Some 200 newspaper critics and other guests gathered in the garden of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith and Miss Miriam Oliver at The Residence, Stockbridge, yesterday afternoon to meet Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the pictures above at the left is George Judd, manager of the orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky chatting as they partake of refreshments.

The center photo shows Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, Dr. Koussevitzky, Jay Rosenfeld, music editor of The Berkshire Eagle, and Miss Robinson Smith. At the right is Mrs. A. A. Berle Jr., wife of the Chamberlain of the City of New York, and below Harris Fahnestock of Lenox is snapped in conversation.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS

Five thousand persons assembled yesterday on a beautifully-turfed and tree-shaded spot at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in the Berkshires to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra—an organization with few rivals in the world—play a concert in the open air. Never before had Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor, remained in the United States in Summer to direcct such a performance. The orchestra will play its second concert this afternoon at 4:30 and the Festival will end with the concert Sunady night at 8:30.

Sale of Unreserved Red Tickets For Festival Stopped Until 3 P. M.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival management stopped the sale of unreserved red tickets temporarily this noon pending developments in weather conditions. If the weather is fair at 3 o'clock, the sale of these lower priced tickets will be resumed. This move was made because the capacity of the unreserved section at the rear of the tent is sold. There are still a few reserved seats left in both the rear and the front. Weather predictions this noon indicated favorable conditions this afternoon and for the closing concert tomorrow night. The telephone of the box office at Holmwood is Lee, 262.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1936

Berkshire Festival The opening concert near Lenox of the Berkshire Symphony Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, probably surpassed in all respects the most sanguine hopes of its sponsors. More than four thousand persons were present to hear interpretations by one of the few superlatively great orchestras in the world, led by one of the greatest of conductors. It is especially significant that the audience was not, as might have been expected, made up exclusively of rich and fashionable patrons of music. The tiers of seats on the grassy amphitheater protected by a great marquee under a starry sky were occupied by people from all walks of life.

American cities and Summer resorts from coast to coast have made great strides in recent years in providing good music for residents and transients. But perhaps the Berkshire Festival represents the first attempt to present great masterworks as they are given in concert halls during the Winter season. The audience the other night heard major works of Bach, Beethoven, and Sibelius played with all the splendor, inspiration, and technical finish that characterize the performances in Symphony Hall.

And there was the added charm of an outdoor setting. But this charm was not marred by the usual disturbing noise and confusion of motor horns, late-arriving patrons, and the restless moving about that is usually indulged in by an outdoor audience. Conditions are said to have been ideal. Which gives ground for the hope that this auspicious occasion may culminate in a movement to inaugurate a regular Summer Music Festival in New England, which will become the Mecca of music-lovers from all parts of the country.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
Aug. 5/36

The People's Forum

Symphonic Applause

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I write this in reference to the concert which was given Thursday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is an honor to Berkshire County to have this orchestra come here. We should be proud enough to show Dr. Koussevitzky that we realize his honor. I feel that the people of Thursday's audience failed utterly to do so. True, they were quiet, attentive while the music was playing. But either they had no true appreciation of music, or little culture because it is rude, disrespectful, to Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, or to any conductor, to applaud between movements of a symphony, as was done in every case.

Dr. Koussevitzky does not stand up there waving a baton around just to keep the tempo. He is interpreting a great piece of music, consisting of four parts which together are a complete unit, and applause disturbs the train of emotion.

Music is an emotional thing, and it is made or broken to a great extent by the carrying over of the audience's emotion to the conductor, and the conductor's to the audience.

In Cleveland, such a thing as applause between movements is unheard of. Dr. Rodzinsky is too much revered by the people of Cleveland, for them to commit such an act of disrespect. I am sure the people of Boston feel the same about Dr. Koussevitzky.

Certainly, when you are welcoming an artist as a guest, you should treat him as a guest, as well as an artist—with respect.

RUTH GAGE CROFUT.
Cleveland, Ohio.

CHICAGO, ILL.
AMERICAN

AUG 15 1936

* * *

IN THE BERKSHIRES, WHERE the Summer colonists of Lenox and Stockbridge are spending their days and evenings under the soothing influence of Koussevitzky's baton, and going mornings to the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge to hear Olin Downes talk on the symphonies, Mrs. John H. Hamline of Lake Forest is having what is to her taste the most heavenly kind of a Summer. She and Countess Giovanni Cardelli were guests of honor at a luncheon Mrs. William Felton Barrett gave this week at her Sky Farm in North Egremont.

74

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

Aug. 14/36

Boston Symphony Is Heard By 4,500 As Festival Opens

Unique Berkshire Project May be Said to Have Passed Definitely Experimental Stage and be Comparable to Great European Music Festivals—Great Orchestra, Under Brilliant Leadership of Koussevitzky, Gives Almost Flawless Presentations of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Second Symphony of Sibelius — Better Access Desirable While Insects Prove Bothersome—Audience That Includes Many Notables, Gives Ovation That Calls Koussevitzky Back to Platform Four Times After Thrilling Climax of Program.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival idea achieved its own apotheosis last evening as the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky opened this season's series of three concerts before an audience of more than 4,500 people in an outdoor setting in Lenox.

This unique project may be said to have passed definitely from the experimental stage and to have been lifted to a plane on which comparison with the great European music festivals is genuinely possible as a symphonic organization that has few peers anywhere in the world gave almost flawless presentation of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and the Second Symphony of Jean Sibelius.

Musically Near Perfection

Musically, the festival can advance little beyond the point of near perfection that it attained with last evening's concert. It is only in the incidental arrangements that improvement may be hoped for in future seasons.

In particular, it is desirable that better means be afforded for the guests to reach and leave the out-of-door auditorium. A single narrow road, winding up a gentle slope through an avenue of evergreens from the main highway to the plateau on which the immense tent had been pitched to shelter the audience, afforded a charming but a wholly inadequate approach. A half hour before the concert was scheduled to begin cars were backed up for a mile in each direction on the main road between Lenox and Stockbridge awaiting their opportunity to pass through the gates onto the grounds. Although the opening of the program was delayed for 25 minutes out of consideration for those who were still trying to get in, it had been under way for a good 20 minutes before the last of the 3,000 cars that had brought patrons to the scene, had been parked, at 9.18 o'clock. And the concert had been over for a full hour and a quarter before the last car had been able to move out of the parking place—where some of the patrons had had the experience of fighting off the attacks of enraged swarms of wasps disturbed in their summer comfort—and had rolled down the narrow, winding road to the main highway.

Insects, Skunk Bother

It may not be possible to guard entirely against the presence of the wild life—not only the wasps but the smaller insects that filled the air above the heads of the orchestramen, a strident cricket that at one point added a sustained bizarre note to a pianissimo passage in the Sibelius work and a skunk that politely nodded to a few who wandered to the fringes of the lawn during the intermission. But better parking and "unparking" facilities are not beyond arrangement and are obviously desirable.

In all other respects the transfer of the Festival to Holmwood, the former George Westinghouse estate now owned by Mrs. Margaret Emerson, from the Dan R. Hanna farm where it had its inception in 1934 and where the 1935 concerts were also given, was clearly advantageous.

Charming Setting

The disturbing echo that had appeared as an unforeseen, and of course unpredictable, product of an otherwise attractive arrangement of the orchestra shell and the audience chairs and benches at the Hanna place had been left behind. The new setting in a fragrant pine grove on an elevated plateau overlooking the valley in three directions was altogether charming. While it screened the twinkling stars and the soft moonlight that put patrons at the first concert in 1934 under a magical spell, the great tent under which the audience was seated last evening had very definite practical advantages, not alone in protecting the patrons from the evening dews and chills that follow the descent of night, but in confining the pianissimo passages of the music within the range of the hearing of the entire gathering.

Achieve Finest Hopes

But by far the most important and significant fact is that in abandoning the attempt to "popularize" the project, represented by the introduction last year of solo selections and chorus singing as incidentals to the symphonic program and in bringing one of the world's finest orchestral organizations intact from its concert hall where a mid-summer performance of its great works would be impractical to a sylvan auditorium in the heart of one of this country's foremost summer colonies where it could be heard in comparative comfort and with real delight, the Festival sponsors have this year given full realization to their own finest hopes and plans and have achieved a notable contribution to the musical life of the country.

This the audience, a gathering as distinguished as it was large, seemed to sense fully through and beyond its own immediate enjoyment of the incomparable music that Dr. Koussevitzky and his associates created. As the applause that followed the magnificent climax of the concluding symphonic movement crescendoed into spontaneous and enthusiastic cheers it was evident that the audience was expressing not alone its appreciation of an extraordinary concert but that it was celebrating an event of very real importance—the event that the final emergence of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival from its experimental stage into the full realization of a splendid ideal had constituted.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians have not often looked down from the platform upon such exuberant enthuisasm. It swept the entire gathering from the fringe of unreserved benches extending out into the close-cropped lawn beyond the fringes of the tent to the boxes in the center of the canvas-topped auditorium where the socially distinguished members of the audience were gathered.

Notables in Audience

Norman H. Davis, American Ambassador-at-large, and Mrs. Davis, Henry Morgenthau, Sr., ambassador to Turkey during the Wilson administration and father of the secretary of the treasury; the presidents of four colleges, Dr. William Allen Neilson of Smith, Dr. Henry N. McCracken of Vassar, Dr. William Mather Lewis of Lafayette and Dr. Hugh Potter Baker of Massachusetts State, David Stanley Smith, dean of the Yale school of music, Mrs. Efrem Zimbalist, wife of the violinist; Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Bentley Wirt Warren of Boston and Williamstown, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra corporation; Owen Johnson, the novelist, these were a few among the distinguished figures in the gathering that arose to turn an ovation into a real demonstration as the affair ended.

Dramatic Climax

Musically the concert attained its own dramatic climax in the concluding offering, the D major symphony of Sibelius in which the composer has distilled the stark beauty of his native Finland into music of magnificent grandeur. But to this climax it progressed through a program strikingly diverse in character but felicitously uniform in its enjoyability.

A solid performance of the Bach Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist" (Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit) in an orchestral transcription by Arnold Schonberg, gave a stately and dignified introduction to the program. But not in a Bach Chorale does a symphony orchestra find the opportunity to exhibit the voluptuous beauty of tone and the prodigal range of expression that Dr. Koussevitzky is capable of securing from his players.

But then he offered Beethoven's richly colored overture to Goethe's "Egmont," and here, in a delicate and sensitive interpretation of a musical masterpiece, gave the audience its first tatalizig experience of the loveliness that was in store for it.

Beethoven Symphony in A Major

The program had not attained its full stature, however, until the performance of the Beethoven symphony in A Major had begun. This is a work of classical beauty, contrasting sharply with the dramatic and more spectacular Sibelius symphony that completed the evening's offerings. It rises to no such dazzling climaxes as those that periodically mark the more modern composition. It has no such fiercely intrepid rhythms, no such audacious harmonic effects. It is a thing of sheer loveliness, romantic in its conception, perhaps, but definitely restrained in its expression. The theme's initial assertion is delicate and lyric, its development even in the agitated passages, is still temperate and, except where a Slavic rhythm breaks for a moment into the second movement, conventional.

But there is no artificiality about it, and it was a living, although mature, a fresh although a sedate thing of beauty in Dr. Koussevitzky's hands.

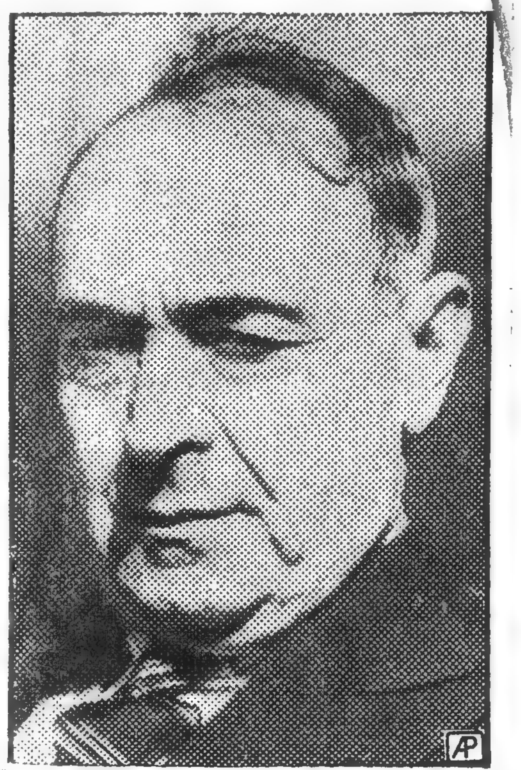
Nevertheless, the impression was definite that the conductor found for himself greater enjoyment in the passion of the Sibelius work. To the Beethoven symphony it is as chromium and polished black glass are to rich, deeply colored mahogany. It is brilliant and dazzling, breath taking in climax, and it is haunting, nostalgic, brooding and melancholy in its contrasting moods. Its reading last evening was superb from the murmuring passages where the strings and the reeds utter the muted motif, through the rugged phrases where it is reasserted in the basses, to the magnificent, and immense climaxes where the brasses and the percussion instruments in a fury of music announce it again and again.

Koussevitzky Conducts Brilliantly

Dr. Koussevitzky lifted his orchestra up to ecstatic heights in this work by the sheer force of his own brilliant enthusiasm for its immensity, its breadth, its passionate grandeur. Nothing could have been more thrilling, more exciting, more moving, than its progression to its mighty climax.

A moment of silence followed that crashing conclusion and then the ovation began that called Dr. Koussevitzky back four times to the podium to acknowledge the tribute of a transported group to a splendid piece of musicianship which had not only created an incomparable musical evening but had fulfilled an ideal.

Conducts



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who led the Boston Symphony orchestra last night in the first of its three concerts in the Berkshire Music Festival at "Holmwood," Mrs. Margaret Emerson's beautiful estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

TRAFFIC JAMS AVOIDED FOR SYMPHONY TONIGHT

Additional Entrance Opened for Second Concert of Festival Series

Pittsfield, Aug. 14 — The second Berkshire festival concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be held tomorrow at 4.30 p. m. at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, Lenox. New traffic arrangements were announced by the management to avoid the jam which delayed the opening last night half an hour. For tomorrow's matinee northbound traffic will enter the grounds through the first gate on the south side while southbound cars will enter through the main gate as last night. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith urges concert goers to arrive early and thereby not only avoid the last-minute rush but enjoy an inspection of some of the attractive features of the park.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Aug. 14/36

Great Concert Under Baton Of Dr. Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Symphonic Fete

Thousands Hear Boston Orchestra in Masterful Performance at Estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in Stockbridge; Two More Concerts on Program

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14—The third annual Berkshire symphonic festival opened last night on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Long before the concert began, automobiles bearing license plates from many States poured into the immense parking place. The huge tent accommodating nearly 4000 was well filled when the concert began, and before intermission it was filled to capacity as were the seats outside.

A fanfare of trumpets announced the start of the concert. As the last note died away, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared on the stage, the recipient of thunderous applause. For the past two seasons the programs have been provided by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Henry Hadley. However, the interest and support had reached such a height last year that the managers of the festival felt justified in engaging this country's premiere orchestra and its permanent conductor who cut short his annual trip to Europe to appear here.

There are those who choose for some reason or other to call this festival the Salzburg of America. It would be far better to make this festival a symphonic shrine where devotees might come assured that they will hear this country's greatest orchestra interpret the great orchestral works Europe today has no orchestra the equal of the Boston Symphony and few conductors of the caliber of Dr. Koussevitzky. Also the Boston Symphony is 'as integral a part of New England as Bunker Hill Monument, and while national in scope, this festival is truly a part of New England

Dr. Koussevitzky was in his most brilliant form. In spite of intense heat and numerous bugs flying about the brilliantly lighted shell, he led his men with dynamic force, urging them ever onward in one of the most brilliant programs we have ever heard this orchestra play.

The concert opened, with the sonorous phrases of Bach's chorale prelude, "Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit," an eminently fitting opening, for there was a certain grandeur borne upon one as one listened to this music amid such surroundings.

Following the chorale prelude the orchestra played the overture to Goethe's "Egmont." Beethoven's admiration for Goethe was well known and it is not difficult to visualize in this incidental music to Goethe's play, the heroic Count of the Netherlands, champion of liberty and independence.

The first part of the program closed with a superb reading of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. Never have we heard its gay turbulence so forcefully expressed. It was an inspired interpretation that left the players almost exhausted at the finish. They were playing under tremendously difficult conditions. The huge audience was enthralled and recalled Dr. Koussevitzky to the stage many times. This applause he shared with his men.

Then followed an intermission of 25 minutes, an intermission which made the hearing of the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius impossible. One needs only to remember Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent interpretation of this work in Springfield last season to realize that it provided a fitting finale for this, the opening concert.

The audience might well be said to be a cross-section of the cultural life of this country. Men and women prominent in music and cultural activities were present as well as those whose names may be found in the society columns. Aside from these there were hundreds of just ordinary music lovers who come long before the concert began and stayed until the last note had been played.

The second concert will be given Saturday at 4.30 p. m. with the final concert at 8.30 p. m. Sunday.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

5,000 Cram Opening Concert Of Berkshire Music Festival

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Superbly Conducted by Dr. Serge Koussivitzky, Offers Brilliant and Inspired Performance

By RAY A. MOWERS

Five thousand persons assembled on a beautifully-turfed and tree-shaded spot about 50 miles east of Albany last night to help make musical history.

Never before had the Boston Symphony Orchestra—an organization with few rivals in the world—played a concert in the open air. Never before had Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor, remained in the United States in summer to direct such a performance.

Canvas covered 3,500 filled seats aligned before the huge stage and its acoustic shell. Fifteen hundred persons also occupied the benches flanking the huge al fiesco theater under the stars and found places on the performance of the program.

Music Critics on Hand

In the huge audience, which far exceeded the fondest dreams of the promoters of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival were the music papers in almost every city of importance in New England and New York.

In and around the orchestra and its audience flitted a score of cameramen whose flashlights laced the semi-darkness intermitteuntly like distant lightning. Literally hundreds of automobiles crowded the assigned parking space and overflowed along the edges of U. S. Route 1 in front of the fine estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, Holmwood.

Because of the crush of traffic many failed to reach the Festival until the program was well under way. The writer missed both the opening Bach Chorale and the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven to his deep disappointment. The masterful presentation of the two great symphonies which followed, however, caused the tardy to forget to regret their loss.

As most folk are aware, the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven and the the Second of Sibelius are each naturally in four movements. There their similarity ends. The warmth and dramatic color of Beethoven contrast sharply with the chill dramatic brilliance of Sibelius. Into both o fthem, the orchestra and its conductor read with supreme intelligence and feeling their collective translation into sound of two widely different works of surpassing genius.

Koussevitzky returned to the podium again and again at the end of the Beethoven work to call on his men to rise and acknowledge with him the prolonged demonstration. This was repeated when the concert closed.

The orchestra will play its second concert Saturday afternoon at 4:30. The eFstival will end with the concert Sunday night at 8:30 o'clock.

25

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 14 1936

4,000 Enjoy Musical Fete In Berkshires

Boston Symphony in Excellent Concert Under Huge Tent

NOISE ELIMINATED

Walking About Barred and Late Autos Shunted Off Road

Under canvas, on an estate near Lenox, Mass., the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night gave the first concert in its history other than those on its regular subscription season. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, writes of the unusual event as follows:

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—An audience of 4,000, including in its ranks not only persons musically and socially influential but individuals from every walk of life, attended the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphony Festival given this evening at Holmwood by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Razor-Edge Excellence

This was the first time that the celebrated Boston Orchestra had appeared as a ~~unit~~ outside its regular subscription season and the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky had appeared as conductor under the circumstances before an American audience.

This audience heard, therefore, interpretations by an orchestra which has no equal today in Europe and very few rivals in the world, interpretations of the quality usually reserved for the impressive concerts of the Winter season. The orchestra had been arduously rehearsed for these performances and was at a razor-edge of excellence.

Circumstances Almost Ideal

One of the greatest conductors in the world was present, dominating the event and in a frame of mind to give all that he had to the occasion. And the whole quality of the festival as now constituted was borne out by the excellent precautions which had been taken to eliminate all noise and disturbance and to give a public which had come from all parts of the country an opportunity to listen to music under circumstances almost ideal.

The setting was a great sweep of land on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson which has generously been made available for these events. Holmwood stands between Stockbridge and Lenox. The concerts were given under a great tent which covered 3,600 seats with a platform and a shell for the orchestra at the lower end. The shell served excellently to project the orchestral tone and strengthen its sonorous power. The ground on which the tent stands slopes in a perfectly gradual incline just enough to give those who sat in each successive tier of seats a complete view of the stage which stands twelve feet below the seats farthest back. The only flaw where lines of sight are concerned is the inevitable one of a few tent poles small enough to present no actual obstruction.

An Overflow Audience

The audience filled all the seats under the tent and spread out to the surrounding spaces so that many sat on the benches that flanked the great tent and others sat on the grass under a providentially starry and cool night sky. They perhaps felt rather than saw the presence of the clusters of pines, willows and elms which stand at some distance on all sides of the tent and make in the daytime an extremely beautiful frame of the picture.

It is worth while to emphasize these things because they were so in consonance with the nature of the occasion and they conducted so much to its atmosphere. It was furthermore to be noted a feature which our Metropolitan Opera House might well emulate that every possible measure was taken to banish noise in the vicinity and that no one through social prestige or for any other cause was permitted to step among the seats while the music was being played. So far as the outdoor arrangements made it possible the performances were enclosed as carefully if not hermetically as those at the festivals of Munich or Bayreuth. Automobiles that came late were routed off at an angle of road far from the plate of the concept. It is determined that no commotion or movement during the performances will be permitted and it is anticipated that through experience and experiment means will be found to eliminate every noise or distraction. In fact the impression of tonight's opening performance is one of a musical festival developing in America where only the highest standards of artistic productions will prevail.

Two More Concerts.

The orchestra gives another concert tomorrow and a third and final one Sunday.

The Festival Idea; An Experiment in The Berkshires

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Let us at once admit that there can be no question about the energy and sincerity of the interested parties (as Dickens might have put it) in the current Berkshire festival of symphonic music. Their aim, let us also admit, is to make in the beautiful setting of the countryside around Stockbridge and Lenox a definite place of pilgrimage for lovers of music. The summer is the time, and the project has no strings attached to it as would be connected with a festival in a conservatory or to answer the needs of a particular group.

Now let us proceed to admit the sucess of the concerts this past week by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky, on Mrs. Emerson's estate. The first night indicated an extraordinary success, and evidently the idea of such a serious symphonic festival appealed to large masses of the people. If this had not been so, no one would have had to linger for half an hour in a stream of caterpillar-like traffic, and the festival would not have had the impetus even to consider the plans for another year. But obviously the popular interest was there, and hence we are entitled to discuss improvements and prospects for another year.

First it must be said that festivals must have an idea behind them. Bayreuth need hardly be cited as an example, though of course it established the precedent. Salzburg began because it was the birthplace of Mozart and it flourishes today on that initial idea. The last time that the present writer was in Salzburg (in 1934) another idea was broached in doing honor to Richard Strauss. But "The Egyptian Helen" was not much of a success and another of Strauss' operas was withdrawn. What took its place? Why, none other than the popular hit of that season and any other—Mozart's "Don Giovanni!"

The lesson is easy to comprehend. If, as in Salzburg, you work hard and intelligently to establish such a composer as Mozart in the popular consciousness, it is foolish to disestablish him when the festival in his name has become famous. In that same year we met as celebrated French novelist (Francois Mauriac, as a matter of fact) who said that the only fault he found with Salzburg was that he did not have the opportunity to hear enough Mozart, which was one of the reasons why he came. Naturally there is no sense in being hidebound and confining oneself exclusively to one composer, but there is also no point in deserting the composer (or the idea) which has made one's fame.

"Caesar had his Brutus and Charles I his Cromwell; let George III profit by their example.' ' Salzburg is by no means dead, but do not let Lenox make the same mistakes! Later on we shall have something to say on the English Mozart festival at Glyndebourne who people

Again, the Berkshires must follow their own course. They have begun as a symphonic festival, then they must not stray too far from this ideal. Opera is enticing, but not—let us agree—in the open air. There are countless choral works which should be given a hearing. But we are all too well aware of the public apathy for choral works.

The Berkshire Festival can become a real summer shrine of music, if present records of attendance are of any value, for the future. New and neglected works should be performed, for there is no point in merely imitating the winter repertoire. But there should be no rash ventures into other fields, if only because the festival aims to be broadly popular. The annual festival at Hartford has erred on the side of being too esoteric and too precious. From the practical side it may be said that the traffic situation on the first night at Lenox must have alienated a good many music lovers who hoped for the quiet of the country and not the congestion of Fifty-seventh street. Musically there is no question but that a great opportunity exists for the summer season in this part of the world. Only, for the most part, let achievement precede publicity!

WALTER HAMPDEN APPEARING ON TOUR

On the second week of his first summer tour, Walter Hampden will appear at Fryeburg, Me., on Sunday evening, Jackson, N. H., on Monday, Keene, on Tuesday, Skowhegan, Me., on Wednesday, Kennebunk town hall on Friday and a special "gala night" performance or Sunday evening the 23d at the Oceanside Theater at Magnolia.

Mr. Hampden is presenting a serie of characterizations from his tw most famous plays, "Caponsacchi and "Cyrano de Bergerac." Th former is the work of Arthur Good rick, now summering at Lakewoo and is adapted from Robert Brow ing's poem "The Ring and the Book "Cyrano" of course is the Edmor Rostand heroic comedy which M Hampden has played over 1000 tim

MARY YOUNG THEATR
Centerville, Mass. Aug. 18 to 22

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 16 1936

The Boston Symphony Orchestra led by ~~Dr. Serger Koussevitsky~~ will figure prominently in the tercentenary observance of Harvard University in September. The orchestra will be heard by many delegates and guests of the occasion who will be in Cambridge for the festivities. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliff Choral Society will participate with the orchestra at the concert in Sanders Theater on Sept. 17. Two other tercentenary concerts are listed at Symphony Hall, Boston, Sept. 16 and 18. The orchestra opens its regular season, the 56th, on Oct. 9.

INGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

Springfield

AUG 14 1936

Great Concert Under Baton Of Dr. Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Symphonic Fete

Thousands Hear Boston Orchestra in Masterful Performance at Estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in Stockbridge; Two Concerts on Tomorrow's Program

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13—The third annual Berkshire symphonic festival opened tonight on the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Long before the concert began, automobiles bearing license plates from many States poured into the immense parking place. The huge tent accommodating nearly 4000 was well filled when the concert began, and before intermission it was filled to capacity as were the seats outside.

A fanfare of trumpets announced the start of the concert. As the last note died away, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared on the stage, the recipient of thunderous applause. For the past two seasons the programs have been provided by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Henry Hadley. However, the interest and support had reached such a height last year that the managers of the festival felt justified in engaging this country's premiere orchestra and its permanent conductor who cut short his annual trip to Europe to appear here.

There are those who choose for some reason or other to call this festival the Salzburg of America. It would be far better to make this festival a symphonic shrine where devotees might come assured that they wil hear this country's greatest orchestra interpret the great orchestral works. Europe today has no orchestra the equal of the Boston Symphony and few conductors of the caliber of Dr. Koussevitzky. Also the Boston Symphony is as integral a part of New England as Bunker Hill Monument, and while national in scope, this festival is truly a part of New England.

(Continued from First Page)

Dr. Koussevitzky was in his most brilliant form. In spite of intense heat and numerous bugs flying about the brilliantly lighted shell, he led his men with dynamic force, urging them ever onward in one of the most brilliant programs we have ever heard this orchestra play.

The concert opened with the sonorous phrases of Bach's chorale prelude, "Come God, Creator, Holy Spirit," an eminently fitting opening, for there was a certain grandeur borne upon one as one listened to this music amid such surroundings.

Following the chorale prelude the orchestra played the overture to Goethe's "Egmont." Beethoven's admiration for Goethe was well known and it is not difficult to visualize in this incidental music to Goethe's play, the heroic Count of the Netherlands, champion of liberty and independence.

The first part of the program closed with a superb reading of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. Never have we heard its gay turbulence so forcefully expressed. It was an inspired interpretation that left the players almost exhausted at the finish. They were playing under tremendously difficult conditions. The huge audience was enthralled and recalled Dr. Koussevitzky to the stage many times. This applause he shared with his men.

Then followed an intermission of 25 minutes, an intermission which made the hearing of the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius impossible. One needs only to remember Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent interpretation of this work in Springfield last season to realize that it provided a fitting finale for this, the opening concert.

The audience might well be said to be a cross-section of the cultural life of this country. Men and women prominent in music and cultural activities were present as well as those whose names may be found in the society columns. Aside from these there were hundreds of just ordinary music lovers who come long before the concert began and stayed until the last note had been played.

The second concert will be given Saturday at 4.30 p. m. with the final concert at 8.30 p. m.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

GOVERNOR GREEN ATTENDS FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES

Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt Fails to Visit Lenox Concert.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt, mother of the President, expected at the Berkshire music festival here today, was not present, but more than 5000 persons gathered on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Ellison to give an ovation to Dr. Serge Koussivitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra as they concluded the program with a Brahma composition.

Distinguished guests at the festival included Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, Gov. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, Mrs. Nicholas Brown of Newport, R. I., Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Albert Eugene Gallatin, Prof. William Lindsay of the University of Minnesota, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Olin Downes and Gardner S. Mose. The audience was highly enthusiastic and recalled Dr. Kousevitsky four times after the final number. No encores were given.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 15 1936

TRAFFIC CHANGE FOR FESTIVAL

New Arrangement Made in Effort to Prevent Jam Caused Opening Night.

The second Berkshire festival concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be held this afternoon at 4:30 p. m. at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, Lenox. New traffic arrangements were announced by the management to avoid the jam which delayed the opening Thursday night half an hour. For today's matinee northbound traffic will enter the grounds through the first gate on the south side while southbound cars will enter through the main gate as Thursday night. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith urges concert goers to arrive early and thereby not only avoid the last-minute rush but enjoy an inspection of some of the attractive features of the park.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 14 1936

SYMPHONY PRESENTS OUTDOOR PROGRAM AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky Conducts Orchestra in Opening of Fete at Amphitheater on Emerson Estate; President's Mother to Attend Tomorrow

FOR the first time in the 56 years of its existence, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played outdoors, as the Berkshire Music Festival opened last night.

The Festival, which was inaugurated in August, 1934, under the patronage of the section's summer residents has as its aim the permanent establishment of a summer musical event similar to the Salzburg Festival in Austria.

The pine surrounded amphitheater on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson provides the setting for the festival, and Serge Koussevitzky for the first time in his 13 years of conducting in this country conducted out of doors.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, will attend the next concert tomorrow afternoon.

Many Albany society folks as well as a large number from the Capitol District have already made reservations for the remaining concerts.

76

2ND BERKSHIRE CONCERT TODAY

By LEO GAFFNEY

Lenox, Aug. 15—After a day of rest and rehearsal Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra prepared to give the second of their three-concert series in th third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon at 4:30 on the magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson midway between Lenox and Stockbridge.

It is customary—in fact legendary—for the great Berkshire Festival to suspend formal music-making on Fridays. First, because, as one sage of the Hill country puts it, it might rain. It did rain late at night; second, to afford the musicians and the thousands of visitors here an opportunity to look about them and examine into the wonders, natural and cultivated, of this enchanting territory so high, wide and handsome.

BAD FOR EARS

There are other considerations, too, apparently not overlooked by a wise managing committee. The odd pressure in one's ears occasioned by the sudden emergence into these high altitudes needs time to get adjusted.

And one is grateful for the day's interlude before subjecting the already strained auricular process to further effort. Better able today to rely on their own ears, Dr. Koussevitzky and the members of the orchestra spent the morning rehearsing and experimenting with the acoustical properties of the huge shell.

The too-great strength of the brasses, so noticeable in the concert of Thursday night, was the chiefest problem to study out, and the Boston conductor once more changed the playing positions of the men in an effort to subdue those insistent instruments.

Turning over the baton to Concert-Master Richard Burgin, Dr. Koussevitzky listened from various points of the tent and finally expressed his satisfaction with the result.

And so it is likely that this afternoon's music will come out to the listeners as nearly as possible to the finely fused sounds one hears in Boston's perfect auditorium, Symphony Hall. After the morning's labors an afternoon reception was tendered Dr. Koussevitzky by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, whose house guest the conductor is on the beautifully landscaped grounds of Miss Smith's Berkshire home, in Glendale.

In a shady glade overlooking a flower-fringed lagoon, the distinguished Boston conductor and Miss Smith greeted the guests and received warmest congratulations on the good success of Berkshire County's happiest week in all the year.

"You bring us a great deal of pleasure", murmured one noble lady, imposing in a white lace frock.

"All I can do is applaud," echoed another, as she took the noted musician's hand. Delectable tea things were spread, and the distinguished assemblage artists, musicians, diplomatists and the socially elect of many states—fell to the discussion of music in the shadows of the drooping elms and the large-fronded pines.

PROMINENT GUESTS

Among those present were: Mr. Albert Sterner, eminent artist and sculptor, and Mrs. Sterner; Mrs. Tee Van, daughter of Frank Damrosch; Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Beecher Stowe; Professor Thomas Safford, head of the music department at Williams College; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus; Miss Gertrude Watson, noted patroness of music; Mrs. May Mukle, famous 'cellist from London; Mr. and Mrs. Norman Davis, Miss Mabel Choate, and a group of well known music critics from Boston, New York and Pittsburgh, including Olin Downs, Moses Smith, Ruth Marsters and John Lewandos.

* * *

The bill

from the Warner Brothers studio in Hollywood for the occasion. Formerly of Eva LeGallienne's New York Civic Repertory, Miss Hutchinson did such a good Alice in Miss LeGallienne's production of "Alice in Wonderland" that Hollywood just had to have her.

But Miss Hutchinson is more than glad to play a part once more on the speaking stage and wishes her film contracts might permit more of it. Her obvious enjoyment of her role was soon communicated to the capacity audience who were privileged to witness one of the finest performances ever given by an actress at the Playhouse. "The Shining Hour" was seen two seasons ago in Boston at the Plymouth with Violet Heming in the leading role, and playgoers will remember it as the tragic story of the lady who all too generously removed herself by suicide from a gentleman whose affections had strayed elsewhere.

ALL SOLD OUT

Friday evening's performance at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge was "Koussevitzky night." And in extra honor of the conductor and his men an exhibition of charcoal portraits, showing every member of the Boston Symphony in action, was on display in the coffee room and on the mezzanine walls of the playhouse.

The portraits are lively likenesses of the men, from the conductor to the cymbals player, the work of the gifted Boston artist, Gerome Brush. Before the performance and during the entr'acte a capacity crowd surged through the room, surprised and delighted to recognize the gifted musicians in characteristic attitudes; some hugging fiddles tightly under the chin, others bent intently over 'cello and basses, others with puffed cheeks and popping eyeballs forcing good breath at high pressure into slim reeds and belled brasses.

The program for this afternoon's concert—which is completely sold out—is Handel's Larghetto from the Concerto Grosso; Moussorgsky's prelude to the opera "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnole," and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D Major.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 1 1936

5000 Cheer at Berkshires Concert of Boston Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (UP)—The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg in Bavarian Alps came to the Berkshires Thursday night when the Boston Symphony orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts new in the annals of American music festivals.

More than 5000 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent.

COME FROM AFAR.

Music lovers from such distant points as Hawaii, California, Colorado, Florida, the Carolinas and West Virginia moved in a steady stream up a corkscrew road to a flat-velvety 8-acre plot on the magnificent Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

It is to the Emerson fortune that the Berkshire symphonic festival is indebted—just as Europe has enjoyed similar fetes financed by the Beecham pill fortune. The Berkshire festival boasts among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Governor Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, American ambassador - at - large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

The orchestra, which was acclaimed with "Bravos!" At the end of the concert, played from an acoustic shell of plywood built at one end of the 250-foot by 125-foot tent. The tent itself is pitched on a gentle slope—effecting the graduated seating plan of theatres—and is situated some 150 feet above the Lenox-Stockbridge highway which itself is more than 1000 feet above sea-level.

In opening the series, Dr. Koussevitzky adroitly avoided the overheavy, the ultramodern and the controversial, adapting the programs to the summer spirit of relaxation. The program, for example, opened with a Bach chorale prelude and ran chronologically through with the Egmont Overture and the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, to the Second Symphony of the contemporary Sibelius.

TRAFFIC DELAYS PROGRAM.

So congested was traffic up the winding road to the concert tent that the opening program was delayed a half-hour. Earlier in the evening, it appeared the festival would be marred by a thunderstorm, but soon a brilliant sunset broke through the clouds and tent flaps were thrown back as stars dotted the sky.

As the orchestra played the sprawling tent was darkened except for the stage, which was illuminated by droplights.

The performance, which attracted noted music critics from throughout New England and New York and Pennsylvania, will be repeated Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1936

SECOND FESTIVAL CONCERT GOES ON THIS AFTERNOON AT LENOX, RAIN OR SHINE

Huge Tent Prepared To Seat 3600 Persons Comfortably Festival Management Makes New Traffic Arrangements and Urges Caution—Bus Service Available—Final Concert Will Be Tomorrow Night at 8:30.

Rain or shine, the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held this afternoon as scheduled at 4.30 o'clock. The tent will seat 3600 persons comfortably. It stood up well under the lashing of the storm last night.

The Festival management is convinced that the new traffic arrangements will be satisfactory. Only traffic from the north will use the main gate. Traffic from the south will turn right off Federal Route 7 on the road separating the Holmwood and H. G. Wilde property (former W. B. O. Field place). Traffic coming from Lee by way of Summer Street will use the same gate as traffic from the south. Caution is urged when inside the estate because of one extreme curve over a small bridge.

Berkshire Street Rialway busses will leave the Park in Pittsfield at 3:30 o'clock and Stockbridge at 7:45 o'clock.

Downes To Give Final Festival Talk Tomorrow

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give the final lecture in a series of three for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at 12.15 P. M., tomorrow at the Berkshire Playhouse. Mr. Downes will talk on the program to be given tomorrow evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The public is invited.

This afternoon's program is as follows: Handel's "Larghetto e affetuoso," from the Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 6 in G minor. Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina." Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnoi, Op. 34. Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

At the final concert, to be held tomorfow evening at 8:30, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will play Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Wagner's Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger," and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD TELEGRAM

G 1 5 1936

Berkshire Hills Gayety Is at Peak

Two Weddings, Net Tourney, Recital and Symphony Concert Highlights.

Special to the World-Telegram.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 15.—The peak of midsummer entertainments in Berkshire is being reached today with the Boston Symphony concert at Lenox; Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice's recital at Mount Hope Farm, Williamstown; two weddings; the western New England men's tennis championships at Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, and a tournament ball tonight.

The usual Sunday concerts will be offered tomorrow afternoon at South Mountain, Pittsfield; Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., and the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

So many dinners and luncheons are being given in connection with the festival that hostesses have found difficulty in getting acceptances of invitations. Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, vice president of the festival, is to give a large dinner tonight at Wheatleigh, in Lenox, for her guests, Mrs. Nicholas Brown, of Newport; Miss Ellen Bullard, of Boston, and Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island.

Mrs. Nina L. Duryea is giving a dinner tonight at the Mill, Stockbridge, in honor of her house guests, Mrs. Elihu Root, Jr., Mrs. Drexel Dahlgren and Mrs. Donald W. Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton are having a large dinner party at Highwood, in Windsor, tonight in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, of Boston.

In the Stockbridge colony Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt and Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis are among those who are entertaining in honor of festival visitors.

Mrs. George C. Stanley, who is the former Miss Josephine Darlington, is the hostess at the Wyantenuck tea this afternoon. Assisting her are Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. George Church, Mrs. William A. W. Stewart, Miss Gertrude Walker, Mrs. James A. Renwick, Mrs. Ethel Quinn Curtiss, Mrs. William B. Nisbet, Mrs. Clarence R. Sabin, Mrs. William L. Brenn and Mrs. Frederick J. Dole.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 1 5 1936

White Mountain Guests Offered Music Features

Three Resort Orchestras Have Noted Artists as Members.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H., Aug. 15.—Vacationists have been offered unusual music this season, with three resort orchestras made up from members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Cincinnati Symphony and the Philadelphia Symphony and Philharmonic represented in another group. Tomorrow at the Chase Barn Theater at Whitefield, the White Mountain Music Festival series and the Yale Forty-Niners will present Paul Althouse in a program of songs with Theodore Haig at the piano. The artists heard on Sundays at these festivals are giving their services free as the proceeds go to the Morrison Hospital.

This week brought premieres of three plays at White Mountain summer theaters, the Forty-Niners presenting "The Royal Family" on Tuesday at Chase Barn Theater, the New England Repertory Company playing at Maplewood Casino in "The Guardsman" and the Barnstormers presenting "Squaring the Circle," a Russian play of modern setting. At Notchland the Notchland Players will change their bill on three one-act plays, which on Monday evening they are to present at the Mount Washington Hotel at Bretton Woods. The White Mountain Players at Littleton will also present a new play.

Will Start Tennis Play.

The first invitation tennis tournament for a Bretton Woods cup will start on Monday at the Mount Washington.

At Crawford Notch on Monday the annual golf tournament for women will start. On August 22 the annual horse show will be held there.

Bethlehem and Maplewood colonies are enjoying daily baseball games. Golf events at these resorts also have been numerous. At Whitefield Polo Ranch, the best match of the season is expected tomorrow, between Myopia, North Shore, as the selected team made up from students of the Polo Ranch.

On the east side of the mountains, a drive for the benefit of the North Conway Memorial Hospital will be given next week and co-operating are the summer colonists of the Conways, Intervale, Jackson ad Chocorua. Chocorua always holds a tennis tournament for the benefit of the hospital and the various hotels all give card parties or entertainments. Similar drives for the hospitals at Littleton and Whitefield will also be given.

Amateurs Play Late in Month.

The annual amateur golf championship of the White Mountains will be played at the Maplewood Club late in August.

The Mount Washington will have an invitation golf tournament on August 24.

The Russell Cottages Golf Association holds its monthly putting tournament today at Kearsarge Village, and a dance to follow. Wentworth Hall stages a Nautical Show at Jackson, with ping-pong tournament, dancing at the Solarium on Wildcat River and a buffet luncheon in the Casino today.

Mrs. Thomas Jex Preston and her daughter, Mrs. John Amen, were guests of honor at a theater party on Thursday evening at the Old Mill Theater at Conway.

Sugar Hill and Franconia cottagers are holding a swimming party, golf tournament and tennis matches today at the Profile Golf Club. A dance at the Sunset Hill House, also one at Hotel Lookoff and another in Franconia at Forest Hills, are features of the week end. Bethlehem's large hotels will present musical comedies, plays and night club entertainment at the Sinclair, Park View, Maplehurst and Howard.

2ND BERKSHIRE CONCERT TODAY

76

By LEO GAFFNEY

Lenox, Aug. 15—After a day of rest and rehearsal Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra prepared to give the second of their three-concert series in th third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon at 4:30 on the magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson midway between Lenox and Stockbridge.

It is customary—in fact legendary—for the great Berkshire Festival to suspend formal music-making on Fridays. First, because, as one sage of the Hill country puts it, it might rain. It did rain late at night; second, to afford the musicians and the thousands of visitors here an opportunity to look about them and examine into the wonders, natural and cultivated, of this enchanting territory so high, wide and handsome.

BAD FOR EARS

There are other considerations, too, apparently not overlooked by a wise managing committee. The odd pressure in one's ears occasioned by the sudden emergence into these high altitudes needs time to get adjusted.

And one is grateful for the day's interlude before subjecting the already strained auricular process to further effort. Better able today to rely on their own ears, Dr. Koussevitzky and the members of the orchestra spent the morning rehearsing and experimenting with the acoustical properties of the huge shell.

The too-great strength of the brasses, so noticeable in the concert of Thursday night, was the chiefest problem to study out, and the Boston conductor once more changed the playing positions of the men in an effort to subdue those insistent instruments.

Turning over the baton to Concert-Master Richard Burgin, Dr. Koussevitzky listened from various points of the tent and finally expressed his satisfaction with the result.

And so it is likely that this afternoon's music will come out to the listeners as nearly as possible to the finely fused sounds one hears in Boston's perfect auditorium, Symphony Hall. After the morning's labors an afternoon reception was tendered Dr. Koussevitzky by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, whose house guest the conductor is on the beautifully landscaped grounds of Miss Smith's Berkshire home, in Glendale.

In a shady glade overlooking a flower-fringed lagoon, the distinguished Boston conductor and Miss Smith greeted the guests and received warmest congratulations on the good success of Berkshire County's happiest week in all the year.

"You bring us a great deal of pleasure", murmured one noble lady, imposing in a white lace frock.

"All I can do is applaud," echoed another, as she took the noted musician's hand. Delectable tea things were spread, and the distinguished assemblage artists, musicians, diplomatists and the socially elect of many states—fell to the discussion of music in the shadows of the drooping elms and the large-fronded pines.

PROMINENT GUESTS

Among those present were: Mr. Albert Sterner, eminent artist and sculptor, and Mrs. Sterner; Mrs. Tee Van, daughter of Frank Damrosch; Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Beecher Stowe; Professor Thomas Safford, head of the music department at Williams College; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus; Miss Gertrude Watson, noted patroness of music; Mrs. May Mukle, famous 'cellist from London; Mr. and Mrs. Norman Davis, Miss Mabel Choate, and a group of well known music critics from Boston, New York and Pittsburgh, including Olin Downs, Moses Smith, Ruth Marsters and John Lewandos.

* * *

The bill

from the Warner Brothers studio in Hollywood for the occasion. Formerly of Eva LeGallienne's New York Civic Repertory, Miss Hutchinson did such a good Alice in Miss LeGallienne's production of "Alice in Wonderland" that Hollywood just had to have her.

But Miss Hutchinson is more than glad to play a part once more on the speaking stage and wishes her film contracts might permit more of it. Her obvious enjoyment of her role was soon communicated to the capacity audience who were privileged to witness one of the finest performances ever given by an actress at the Playhouse. "The Shining Hour" was seen two seasons ago in Boston at the Plymouth with Violet Heming in the leading role, and playgoers will remember it as the tragic story of the lady who all too generously removed herself by suicide from a gentleman whose affections had strayed elsewhere.

ALL SOLD OUT

Friday evening's performance at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge was "Koussevitzky night." And in extra honor of the conductor and his men an exhibition of charcoal portraits, showing every member of the Boston Symphony in action, was on display in the coffee room and on the mezzanine walls of the playhouse.

The portraits are lively likenesses of the men, from the conductor to the cymbals player, the work of the gifted Boston artist, Gerome Brush. Before the performance and during the entr'acte a capacity crowd surged through the room, surprised and delighted to recognize the gifted musicians in characteristic attitudes; some hugging fiddles tightly under the chin, others bent intently over 'cello and basses, others with puffed cheeks and popping eyeballs forcing good breath at high pressure into slim reeds and belled brasses.

The program for this afternoon's concert—which is completely sold out—is Handel's Larghetto from the Concerto Grosso; Moussorgsky's prelude to the opera "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnole," and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D Major.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 15 1936

5000 Cheer at Berkshires Concert of Boston Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (UP)—The symphonic equivalent of the Mozart opera festivals of Salzburg in Bavarian Alps came to the Berkshires Thursday night when the Boston Symphony orchestra, under leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened a series of outdoor concerts new in the annals of American music festivals.

More than 5000 persons jammed a huge, rectangular tent pitched on a lofty hilltop to hear the famed 105-piece orchestra. Never before in its 56-year history has the Boston Symphony performed in a tent.

COME FROM AFAR.

Music lovers from such distant points as Hawaii, California, Colorado, Florida, the Carolinas and West Virginia moved in a steady stream up a corkscrew road to a flat-velvety 8-acre plot on the magnificent Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, daughter of the Baltimore patent medicine manufacturer.

It is to the Emerson fortune that the Berkshire symphonic festival is indebted—just as Europe has enjoyed similar fetes financed by the Beecham pill fortune. The Berkshire festival boasts among its subscribers such notables as Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Governor Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island, Norman H. Davis, American ambassador - at - large; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author, and Owen Johnson, novelist.

The orchestra, which was acclaimed with "Bravos!" At the end of the concert, played from an acoustic shell of plywood built at one end of the 250-foot by 125-foot tent. The tent itself is pitched on a gentle slope—effecting the graduated seating plan of theatres—and is situated some 150 feet above the Lenox-Stockbridge highway which itself is more than 1000 feet above sea-level.

In opening the series, Dr. Koussevitzky adroitly avoided the overheavy, the ultramodern and the controversial, adapting the programs to the summer spirit of relaxation. The program, for example, opened with a Bach chorale prelude and ran chronologically through with the Egmont Overture and the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, to the Second Symphony of the contemporary Sibelius.

TRAFFIC DELAYS PROGRAM.

So congested was traffic up the winding road to the concert tent that the opening program was delayed a half-hour. Earlier in the evening, it appeared the festival would be marred by a thunderstorm, but soon a brilliant sunset broke through the clouds and tent flaps were thrown back as stars dotted the sky.

As the orchestra played the sprawling tent was darkened except for the stage, which was illuminated by droplights.

The performance, which attracted noted music critics from throughout New England and New York and Pennsylvania, will be repeated Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1936

SECOND FESTIVAL CONCERT GOES ON THIS AFTERNOON AT LENOX, RAIN OR SHINE

Huge Tent Prepared To Seat 3600 Persons Comfortably Festival Management Makes New Traffic Arrangements and Urges Caution—Bus Service Available —Final Concert Will Be Tomorrow Night at 8:30.

Rain or shine, the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held this afternoon as scheduled at 4.30 o'clock. The tent will seat 3600 persons comfortably. It stood up well under the lashing of the storm last night.

The Festival management is convinced that the new traffic arrangements will be satisfactory. Only traffic from the north will use the main gate. Traffic from the south will turn right off Federal Route 7 on the road separating the Holmwood and H. G. Wilde property (former W. B. O. Field place). Traffic coming from Lee by way of Summer Street will use the same gate as traffic from the south. Caution is urged when inside the estate because of one extreme curve over a small bridge.

Berkshire Street Rialway busses will leave the Park in Pittsfield at 3:30 o'clock, and Stockbridge at 7:45 o'clock.

Downes To Give Final Festival Talk Tomorrow

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give the final lecture in a series of three for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at 12.15 P. M., tomorrow at the Berkshire Playhouse. Mr. Downes will talk on the program to be given tomorrow evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The public is invited.

This afternoon's program is as follows: Handel's "Larghetto e affetuoso," from the Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 6 in G minor. Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina." Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol, Op. 34. Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

At the final concert, to be held tomorrow evening at 8:30, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will play Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Wagner's Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger," and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD TELEGRAM

UG 15 1936

Berkshire Hills Gayety Is at Peak

Two Weddings, Net Tourney, Recital and Symphony Concert Highlights.

Special to the World-Telegram.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 15.—The peak of midsummer entertainments in Berkshire is being reached today with the Boston Symphony concert at Lenox; Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice's recital at Mount Hope Farm, Williamstown; two weddings; the western New England men's tennis championships at Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, and a tournament ball tonight.

The usual Sunday concerts will be offered tomorrow afternoon at South Mountain, Pittsfield; Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., and the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

So many dinners and luncheons are being given in connection with the festival that hostesses have found difficulty in getting acceptances of invitations. Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, vice president of the festival, is to give a large dinner tonight at Wheatleigh, in Lenox, for her guests, Mrs. Nicholas Brown, of Newport; Miss Ellen Bullard, of Boston, and Governor Theodore Green of Rhode Island.

Mrs. Nina L. Duryea is giving a dinner tonight at the Mill, Stockbridge, in honor of her house guests, Mrs. Elihu Root, Jr., Mrs. Drexel Dahlgren and Mrs. Donald W. Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton are having a large dinner party at Highwood, in Windsor, tonight in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, of Boston.

In the Stockbridge colony Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt and Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis are among those who are entertaining in honor of festival visitors.

Mrs. George C. Stanley, who is the former Miss Josephine Darlington, is the hostess at the Wyantenuck tea this afternoon. Assisting her are Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. George Church, Mrs. William A. W. Stewart, Miss Gertrude Walker, Mrs. James A. Renwick, Mrs. Ethel Quinn Curtiss, Mrs. William B. Nisbet, Mrs. Clarence R. Sabin, Mrs. William L. Brenn and Mrs. Frederick J. Dole.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 15 1936

White Mountain Guests Offered Music Features

Three Resort Orchestras Have Noted Artists as Members.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H., Aug. 15.—Vacationists have been offered unusual music this season, with three resort orchestras made up from members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Cincinnati Symphony and the Philadelphia Symphony and Philharmonic represented in another group. Tomorrow at the Chase Barn Theater at Whitefield, the White Mountain Music Festival series and the Yale Forty-Niners will present Paul Althouse in a program of songs with Theodore Haig at the piano. The artists heard on Sundays at these festivals are giving their services free as the proceeds go to the Morrison Hospital.

This week brought premieres of three plays at White Mountain summer theaters, the Forty-Niners presenting "The Royal Family" on Tuesday at Chase Barn Theater, the New England Repertory Company playing at Maplewood Casino in "The Guardsman" and the Barnstormers presenting "Squaring the Circle," a Russian play of modern setting. At Notchland the Notchland Players will change their bill on three one-act plays, which on Monday evening they are to present at the Mount Washington Hotel at Bretton Woods. The White Mountain Players at Littleton will also present a new play.

Will Start Tennis Play.

The first invitation tennis tournament for a Bretton Woods cup will start on Monday at the Mount Washington.

At Crawford Notch on Monday the annual golf tournament for women will start. On August 22 the annual horse show will be held there.

Bethlehem and Maplewood colonies are enjoying daily baseball games. Golf events at these resorts also have been numerous. At Whitefield Polo Ranch, the best match of the season is expected tomorrow, between Myopia, North Shore, as the selected team made up from students of the Polo Ranch.

On the east side of the mountains, a drive for the benefit of the North Conway Memorial Hospital will be given next week and co-operating are the summer colonists of the Conways, Intervale, Jackson ad Chocorua. Chocorua always holds a tennis tournament for the benefit of the hospital and the various hotels all give card parties or entertainments. Similar drives for the hospitals at Littleton and Whitefield will also be given.

Amateurs Play Late in Month.

The annual amateur golf championship of the White Mountains will be played at the Maplewood Club late in August.

The Mount Washington will have an invitation golf tournament on August 24.

The Russell Cottages Golf Association holds its monthly putting tournament today at Kearsarge Village, and a dance to follow. Wentworth Hall stages a Nautical Show at Jackson, with ping-pong tournament, dancing at the Solarium on Wildcat River and a buffet luncheon in the Casino today.

Mrs. Thomas Jex Preston and her daughter, Mrs. John Amen, were guests of honor at a theater party on Thursday evening at the Old Mill Theater at Conway.

Sugar Hill and Franconia cottagers are holding a swimming party, golf tournament and tennis matches today at the Profile Golf Club. A dance at the Sunset Hill House, also one at Hotel Lookoff and another in Franconia at Forest Hills, are features of the week end. Bethlehem's large hotels will present musical comedies, plays and night club entertainment at the Sinclair, Park View, Maplehurst and Howard.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

AUG 15 1936

Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Festival With His Orchestra

Conductor Wields Baton Before 5,000 In Summer Debut

The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival began last night at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate at Stockbridge, Mass,. where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its regular conductor, Serge Koussevizky, made its debut in this series before an audience of 5,000, including many persons of civic, musical and social prominence.

The classic first half of the program began with Arnold Schoenberg's transcription of Bach's Chorale Komm Gott Schoepfer followed by Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Seventh Symphony and closed with the second symphony of Jean Sibelius which has recently replaced his first symphony as the most popular of the Finnish masters seven works in this form.

While the 1934 and 1935 festivals marked a very promising start for this movement for adding symphony concerts to the attractions of a region already noted as one of the most important American centers of summer musical activity, the third annual event has attracted even more widespread interest and with a continuation of weather such as last night's, capacity audiences are expected for the Boston Symphony's other two concerts on Saturday afternoon and Sunday night.

May Pay Its Own Way

Since, however, the audience and musicians are housed under a huge canopy the concerts can be held when scheduled in spite of climatic vagaries. Officials of the festival committee whose president is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, think that the festival this year for the first time has an excellent chance of paying its own way.

This is not only the first time that the Boston Symphony has taken part in these festivals but the first time in its fifty-five years history that it has appeared as a unit under its regular conductor. It was also Dr. Koussevitzky's first American appearance in the summer. He said that he was delighted with the beauty of the estate where the concerts were held and with the Berkshire region in general.

Crowd on Hand Early

The scene of the concerts in an open space surrounded by tall pines on the crest of a hill overlooking Laurel Lake is highly attractive. The estate is on the border between Lenox, Stockbridge and Lee, but the tent harboring the orchestra and audience is actually in Lenox. The tent is of the same general type as the one used for last year's festival at the Hanna farm, but is somewhat loftier and there seemed to be fewer poles and ropes to interfere with the spectators' vision. The orchestra platform, framed by a curving shell, is at the east end.

The number of cars parked by the beginning of the concert was not estimated, but must have been over 2,000. Several hundred cars had arrived by one hour before the starting time, including some with licenses from states as distant as Florida and California. They were arriving at intervals of one every six seconds during the half hour after 6 o'clock.

Brahms's symphony will be the principal work on Saturday afternoon's program and both Mendelssohn's Italian and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphonies will be played Saturday night.

Spalding a Boxholder

Among the boxholders for the festival are Albert Spalding, Miss Mabel Choate, Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos De Heredia, Owen Johnson, Adolf Berle, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Miss Gertrude Watson, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Edward A. Taft Mrs. Henry White, Norman H Davis, Mrs. Newbold Morris, Harold Stanley Grenville L. Winthrop, Giraud Foster, Sidney Howard, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Harris Fahnstock, Miss Mary Parsons, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mrs. John Brosslloyd, Mrs. Carl A. Degersdorff, Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, Mrs. Louis Steims, Mrs. R. H. Flick, Mrs. Evelyn Adams, Mrs. Herbert Darlington, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. Walter Atherton and Heaton I. Treadway.

It was 8:45 o'clock when a trumpet fanfare prefaced the arrival of the orchestra on the stage and ten minutes later when Dr. Koussevitzky made his much-applauded appearance. The music itself, familiar to New York audiences, needs no analysis and the high quality of the noted orchestra performance in unity, individual and collective finish and expressive nuance was that which marks its performances in the regular season in symphony at Carnegie Hall. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the two Beethoven works, following generally accepted lines in regard to tempo, were spirited and eloquent.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 15 1936

The Lively Arts

BY T. H. PARKER.

Impressions of the Berkshire Festival: The magnificent panorama from the Westinghouse estate in late afternoon, out over the valley to the hills beyond . . . and the serene surrounding meadows . . . compared to the jam of traffic at 8 o'clock, the thousands of parked cars on every side and the animated throngs . . . the score of motor police in sky-blue uniforms . . . urging on the snail-paced cars up the long drive . . . the shell the color and grain of a new quart measure for oats, and the flanking pines on the stage . . . people coming in after the first number . . . people coming in after the third number, still coming after intermission, still coming up to the endn of the first movement of the last Symphony . . . and loudly inquiring for their seats from ushers . . . the brass fanfare theme from "Egmont", announcing the opening of the program, and from Sibelius's Second after the intermission . . . which lasted 25 minutes . . . the cigarette girls a la Tzigane, and the trundle carts of supposedly cold drinks . . . the chauffeurs idly sitting on the running boards of the cars, while the orchestra could be heard by walking 100 feet from the parking area.

Also:—Dr. Koussevitzky wreathed in purple flame ~~as the~~ camera men "shot" him on the podium . . . Dr. Koussevitzky standing with his arms at his side, conducting his men with the flash of his eye and an imperious nod, during "Egmont" . . . and directing the Sibelius without baton, but seeming to pluck the notes out of the instruments with both hands . . . and walking disconsolately up and down the platform among the players between numbers, because there was no green room . . . thinking how hot it must be up there under the lights for men in full evening dress . . . Josephine Hutchinson the actress, with a shock of red hair and a beige colored police dog . . . Alexander Kirkland the actor, and the sound of stage accented English trailing after him . . . Francis Perkins of the Herald-Tribune, toting his typewriter case everywhere . . . the usher who gave people the wrong end of their tickets, so that nobody could tell where they sat . . . looking at the big tent from the outside and half expecting to see a circus acrobat at the top of the poles . . . the people who sat on the ground in the dark under the stars . . . trying to find one's car, dodge the ropes, the people, the flares and the low branches of pine trees.

In case you have ever wondered, George C. Hazleton, who with J. Harry Benrimo, wrote "The Yellow Jacket", knew nothing about China or the Chinese or the language, except what he picked up by visiting a Chinese theater in San Francisco. Oh yes, he did have a Chinese dictionary, too, from which he culled a few phrases. Yet he put together in "Yellow Jacket", one of the best extant imitations of the Chinese popular play, and one of the pleasantest little plays in the history of the lighter American drama. He told his daughter that his knowledge of Greek drama was a great help, but failed to explain why. All this comes up through the visit of his widow and daughter to the recent performance of the play at the Mohawk festival.

With all the children there are in the country, you would think that it would not be a great task to cast the film version of "Tom Sawyer", yet to date—out of 5500 applicants—only six have been deemed "right" by the casting director. And they are not insisting on previous film experience, either.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 15 1936

MORNING GOSSIP

EPILOGUE.

Let there be no faltering condescension,
No groping for the final fitting word,
Or sentimental tears to ease the tension
Of parting; rather let us be unstirred
By futile self-reproach and accusation.
Let love be swift to go as once she came.
The heart bereft is deaf to explanation,
Bewildered by the fretful voice of blame.

Enough that we have shared the noon's white splendor,
The night's enchanted loveliness, the dawn;
Enough that we have beauty to remember
When youth and dreams and ecstasy are gone.
So let us leave as though the final curtain
Had fallen on an act superbly played.
Of this my heart and mind are truly certain:
The epilogue to love is best unsaid!

—Carolyn Sloat.

Nicholas Yellenti of New Bedford will design the settings for "Arrest That Woman," due at the National Theater, New York, about the middle of September.

An audience of 4,000, including in its ranks not only persons musically and socially influential but individuals from every walk of life, attended the opening concert o fthe Berkshire Symphony Festival at Holmwood, Lenox, Mass., by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, writes Olin Downes in the New York Times. This was the first time that the celebrated Boston Orchestra had appeared as a unit outside its regular subscription season and the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky had appeared as conductor under like circumstances before an American audience.

This audience heard, therefore, interpretations by an orchestra which has no equal today in Europe and very few rivals in the world, interpretations of the quality usually reserved for the impressive concerts of the Winter season. The orchestra had been arduously rehearsed for these performances.

One of the greatest conductors in the world was present, dominating the event and in a frame of mind to give all that he had to the occasion.

The setting was a great sweep of land on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson which has generously been made available for these events. Holmwood stands between Stockbridge and Lenox. The concerts were given under a great tent which covered 3,600 seats with a platform and a shell for the orchestra at the lower end. The shell served excellently to project the orchestral tone and strengthen its sonorous power. The ground on which the tent stands slopes in a gradual incline just enough to give those who sat in each successive tier of seats a complete view of the stage which stands 12 feet below the seats furthest back. The only flaw where lines of sight are concerned is the inevitable one of a few tent poles small enough to present no actual obstruction.

The audience filled all the seats under the tent and spread out to the surrounding spaces so that many sat on the benches that flanked the great tent and others sat on the grass under a providentially starry and cool night sky. They perhaps felt rather than saw the presence of the clusters of pines, willows and elms which stand at some distance on all sides of the tent and make in the daytime an extremely beautiful frame of the picture.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was fortunately chosen from the most popular but also representative masterpieces of the orchestral repertory. It began with the Bach choral-prelude "Komm Gott Schoofer Heiliger Geist," as transcribed for orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg. It continued with Beethoven of the "Egmont" overture and the Seventh symphony and ended with the magnificently bardic and dramatic Second symphony of Sibelius. The noble sonorites and great line of Bach's music, made the more salient by a rather surprising fine orchestration, made the most appropriate inauguration of the occasion. The proud and tragic music of Beethoven's overture prefaced the incomparable symphony which may easily cause the listener to think of the beauty and glory of the natural world and of life which mounts and exults to the skies—not that there is any need to read a specific meaning into the Seventh symphony, which never seemed more truly a surpassing creation of art.

The enthusiasm of the audience which had shown itself in the greeting to Dr. Koussevitzky and his men and had grown as the performance progressed came to its climax with the Sibelius symphony. It was separated from the work of Beethoven by an intermission of 25 minutes, and it proved in actual effect to be one of the very few symphonies which could have been played after Beethoven's without the feeling of inappropriateness or anti-climax. This remark is not designed to join the ranks of those who, having once ignored and derided Sibelius, now rank him with Beethoven. One star differs from another in glory and there is not the slightest need to institute comparisons between the two composers. The Sibelius symphony is utterly a different thing from Beethoven's, a thing of northern nature and the spirit of saga and is extremely exciting to hear, especially as regards the finale.

Dr. Koussevitzky, with the composer, built up the tremendous climax very gradually and with a power wholly irresistible. When at last the chant of defiance, flung forth with lordly magnificence hymned with the full pomp and panoply of the modern orchestra, was heard, the audience was swept from its feet and the demonstration that followed was wildly enthusiastic.

Two more concerts will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony on Saturday afternoon and on Sunday night, the closing event of this symphonic festival. The attendance this evening and the response of the public, which have been beyond the most optimistic predictions, point to the possibility of a music festival which can be extended in the scope and the quality of its offering to rival any of the celebrated festivals now given in Europe. Plans are now under discussion to work to that end.

Aug. 16/36
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

Symphony Fete Lures Notables To Berkshires

Festival Is Being Held on Estate of Mrs. Emerson in Massachusetts.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—A stellar event of the season here in the Massachusetts hills is the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which is taking place at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who is conducting his Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, of Washington and Californa, is arriving here this week for the festival, and will be at the Wendell Hotel, in Pittsfield.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, has been invited to attend, and is expected to be the guest at the Saturday matinee of Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, who have taken a box.

Among others expected to be present at the festival are Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, Mass., widow of the former President; Gov. Theodore Green, of Rhode Island, who will be the guest of Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia while here; Mr. and Mrs. Efrem Zimbalist (the latter Alma Gluck); Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Mrs. William Bayard Van Rensselaer, of Albany, N. Y.; Mrs. George William Douglas, of Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane, of the Berkshire region; Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Col. and Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, of Mount Hope Farm, Williamstown, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, of New York; Dr. and Mrs. Herschel C. Walker, of Philadelphia; Mr. Rudolph Gans, president of the Chicago Musical College; Mr. A. A. Brewster, vice president and treasurer of the Cleveland Orchestra, and Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn.

Arrivals at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, include: Mr. David E. Hudson, of Washington.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

77

AUG 16 1936

SYMPHONIES GIVEN AT BERKSHIRE FETE

Second Concert of Festival Under Koussevitzky Draws Audience of 3,500.

HANDEL CONCERTO PLAYED

Program Includes Compositions by Debussy, Brahms and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15.—The second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took place this afternoon at Holmwood in Lenox with an audience which, while it did not total the approximate 5,000 of last Thursday night, numbered about 3,500.

The results of this second concert were a significant gain over the first in matters of acoustics and an extremely effective orchestral ensemble. The effect of the performances might in some respects be of special value to composers of orchestral music in the tests they afford of the practical results in the open air of various methods of instrumentation.

Again, it was above all the string choir which glowed and sang, whether it was playing loudly or softly. The sound carried apparently any distance without loss of quality or texture. The opening composition was the slow movement from Handel's Twelfth Concerto Grosso for string orchestra. The strings sang the great air with a richness of tone and nobility of spirit that stirred the audience profoundly.

Other scores were of greater variety of tone coloring and represented a particularly happy choice of the music. Rimsky-Korsakoff was heard as a master of orchestral coloring in his scoring of the prelude to Mussorgsky's "Khovantchina," and in his own lively and vivid "Spanish Caprice." The writing of Mussorgsky is so very simple that simplicity obtains in the instrumental dress that his colleague gave his musical inspiration.

The simple thread of folksong with which the prelude opened broadened and deepened in color and waxed in sonority with the scene it was supposed to convey—the sun rising on the Moscow of the Strelskis. The end, as the music receded and vanished into silence, was one of the most beautiful moments of the concert.

An occasional thinness of tone characterized solo passages of the "Spanish Caprice," but as a whole the music under Koussevitzky's superb direction flashed and flared in the most exciting fashion.

Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun" was, of course, one of the most delicate effects of the program. The composer's exquisite instinct for total balances and combinations served him and his listeners well. Dr. Koussevitzky, interpreting this music, made not the smallest concession to the dimensions of the audience and the extent of the open-air auditorium. The prelude was played as sensitively as if in the most intimate concert hall, and in consequence the subtlest effect, if one or two very slight miscalculations of balance be excepted, was fulfilled.

These compositions precede the music of fullest texture and substance on the program—Brahms's Second Symphony, music singularly in consonance with the place and scene and of a character to bring the concert to an impressive conclusion.

The first concert had proved a very auspicious beginning. The second was a gain over the first in tonal adjustment and equilibrium. Despite the air, that was moist and dense from a recent thunderstorm, the strings had vibrancy and the performance in general a degree of intonation astonishing under the circumstances. The concert more than confirmed earlier estimates of the future possibilities of these festivals.

PITTSBURG, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

17

AUG 1 6 1936

Bigger Scope Advised for Orchestras

By J. FRED LISSFELT

It is now time for the music lover to be thinking of his wish-bag for programs during the coming season. There will be many newcomers—Enid Szantho, Hungarian contralto; Casadesus, French pianist; Rudolf Serkin, Austrian pianist, Ginette Neveu, French violinist — all sufficiently in touch with new thought in music to bring us novelties without the asking. They serve the Art Society and the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association, and the programs in these series invariably prove to be among the most satisfactory of the season.

Mr. Lissfelt

Orchestral Dreams

I was thinking, in wishing, particularly of the orchestra programs which will be dealt us. With visiting orchestras there is a custom of offering the management two programs from which committees may choose. These programs are in the orchestra's repertory—shall I say "daily" repertory—and need little or no rehearsal while on tour. But I believe that if suggestions were made to Serge Koussevitsky, Frederick Stock and Eugene Ormandy in due time, we could have what we liked.

Of Koussevitsky we should ask for some of the so-called new Russians — Miaskowski, Prokofieff and Shostokovitsch. He knows their idiom like no other leader. Of Stock we should ask Wagner and the classics. Of Ormandy some flashy modernism until he is maturer.

Live Wire Programs

Of Antonio Modarelli and our Pittsburgh Symphony we should expect enormous things, for a glance at the list of soloists shows the germ of each program to be a live wire.

Think of the number of Strauss operas unheard in America. And we have Lotte Lehmann his best interpreter. Then why not an excerpt from "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" or "Arabella" or "Intermezzo" or "Rosenkavalier." Why not make an entire Strauss program with the famous dance from "Salome," the "Rosenkavalier" Waltzes, and one of the tone poems?

Wider Scope

How much of the French operatic repertory remains in closed scores, and now we shall have Helen Jepson, whose French songs are so chic. Why not, instead of trite Italian Puccinian airs, the grand "Mirror Scene" from "Thais?"

When Sergei Rachmaninoff plays we shall doubtless hear one of his piano concerti. Can we induce him also to play the tone-poem "Toteninsel," or his latest work which had its premiere in New York a year ago?

Likewise, with Georges Enesco—pray! more of his own Rumanian music—and since he is supreme in the classic violin repertory—the Brahms concerto!

Around Artur Schanbel why not a complete Beethoven program? "King Stephen Overture," "Ruins of Athens," or the lighter First or Second Symphony?

Neo-Italian School

We have heard much of Respighi but little of the others of the neo-Italian school. Casella will be our guest in January, why not honor him with the presentation of some of his later works which we have never heard before?

Our orchestra made a fair stand for the American and local composer last season. Let the policy continue. Let us be fair to our own and give them at least a hearing.

And our brothers in the British Isles have been too long shelved. There is Delius and Elgar.

'Silent' Classics

Schoenberg is becoming classic while we are waiting to hear things of his. Once in our recollection has anything of the first atonalist been played—his five pieces for orchestra.

There are the Hungarians—Bartok and Kodaly—their names never appear on our programs. There are Mahler and Bruckner—when shall we hear them? Must we depend completely upon the phonograph for our knowledge of these giants or delight in their masterpieces?

—VOTE AMERICAN—

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 6 1936

Koussevitzky Wields Baton At Berkshire Music Festival

By CLIFFORD F. GREEN

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15.—An enthusiastic audience of forty-five hundred persons greeted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the third annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Holmwood on the border line of Lenox-Stockbridge and Lee, the spacious estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

The concerts were given under a huge tent open at sides and rear surrounded at a comfortable distance by towering pines and elms and on a sloping clearing which afforded visibility of the orchestra to the entire audience. The orchestra was on a platform with the usual sound reflecting shell. This latter served admirably to project the sonorous orchestral tone so that each section was clear and well balanced. This was the debut of these festivals of the Boston orchestra and the first time as a complete body it has ever given concerts outside the regular Winter subscription series and Koussevitzky's premier in this capacity in an American audience.

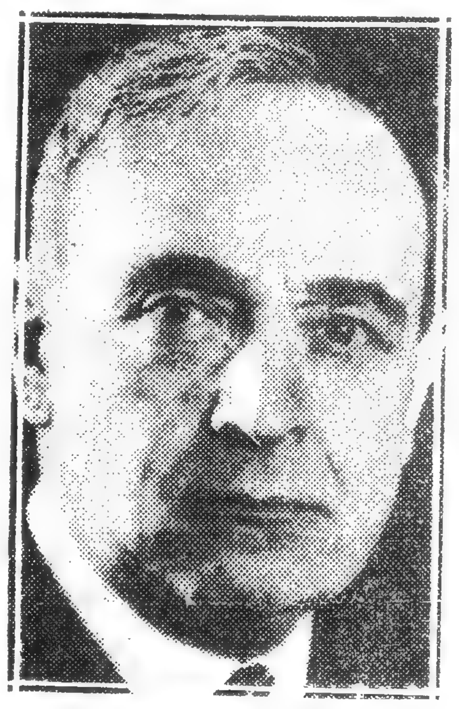
The choice of the Boston orchestra for this year's festival was fortunate in that it proved to this audience composed of musically and socially prominent people from Florida to California, that here was an orchestra and conductor second to none anywhere. A glance at a few of the sixteen hundred cars showed every state in the East was represented and many from the South and extreme West.

Master Works

The programs were made up exclusively of recognized master works from Bach to present Sibelius. The opening concert Thursday night begaan appropriately with an organ prelude by Bach on the choral "Komm Gott Shoefer" arranged for orchestra by Schoenberg.

However Bach and Schoenberg, as might be expected, will not mix readily and the strange sounds emitted by the orchestra were more reminiscent of Schoenberg's tonal system than the straight forward polyphony of Bach. If this number did not meet our expectations we should be inclined to find fault with the arranger rather than Bach or Koussevitzky. Next came Beethoven's "Egmont Overture" and his exuberant "Seventh Symphony."

Here conductor and orchestra quickly established themselves in the hearts and minds of the audience. It seemed eminently fitting to listen to these two Beethoven works in such a unique and appropriate setting, surrounded by nature, as it was under similar conditions during his many sojourns into the woods and countryside that this great master of symphonic form received inspiration for his greatest works.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Koussevitzky chose the second symphony of Sibelius as the closing work on this program and wisely so, as almost any other symphony would have been an anti-climax to the excellent playing of the Beethoven works. The conductor seemed entirely refreshed after his European sojourn and gave everything he had, working up to a tremendous climax in the final section. Needles to say the vast audience was wildly demonstrative, recalling the conductor many times. He generously shared his plaudits with the orchestra.

The second concert this afternoon was even more enthusiastically received and left the audience thoroughly pleased with the work of the Boston Symphony and its beloved conductor.

Among those present from Worcester were Rev. Dr. Shepherd Knapp, Miss Eunice Wheeler, Miss Francis Jennings, Mrs. Eric Smith, Mrs. Dorothy Heywood and Dr. Theodore Nicol.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

THRID ANNUAL BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ENDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ~~AND CON~~DUCTOR KOUSSEVITZKY CHEERED

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra and its famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, received an ovation tonight as they brought to a close thte third annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

More than 3,000 persons, many of them Summer visitors from all parts of the country, gathered on the spacious estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson to hear the third concert prepared by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Nearly 12,000 persons attended the festival, which marked the first time the Boston symphony orchestra ever played outdoors. The first concert was given Thursday evening and the second Saturday afternoon.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 1 7 1936

Koussevitzky Conducts Final Berkshire Festival

5,000 Give Boston Symphony an Ovation at Close

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—Before an audience of 5,000, equal to that of yesterday's matinee when ticket selling was stopped for lack of seats, the final Boston Symphony Concert, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, was held tonight under the marquee tent at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood. Mr. Koussevitsky was given an ovation, for the program was the best known and most popular of the three presented at the third annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

The compositions in the first half were Mendelssohn's symphony in A major "Italian" opus 90 in four movements; Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," and also the prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." The second half was occupied entirely with Tchaikovsky's symphony No. 5 in E minor opus 64.

The festival was an overwhelming success from an artistic and financial standpoint, exceeding expectations of its promoters, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Association.

The trustees of the association are to meet tomorrow at the summer home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at Stockbridge, and talk over next year's plans with Mr. Koussevitzky and several trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who have been attending the festival. Enthusiasm prevails over the possibilities of the festival's further development. Gratitude was expressed by the festival trustees to Mrs. Emerson for the use of her estate for the concerts.

Aug. 36

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

BOSTON SYMPHONY ENDS STOCKBRIDGE FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 17, 1936.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky ended its Berkshire music festival concert series last night. Approximately 12,000 persons attended the festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 1 6 1936

Third Festival Concert Today In the Berkshires

Koussevitzky Conducts Closing Program This Afternoon Near Lenox

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will give the third and last concert of the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at 8:30 at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., adjoining U. S. Route 7. The program, to be held under a vast canopy, consists of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the program today at 12:15 in the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge.

The festival, sponsored by a committee of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is president, began in August, 1934, with Henry Hadley conducting the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra. The second festival, also under Dr. Hadley's direction, was held last August. The 1936 events probably mark the first summer appearances of the complete Boston Symphony under its regular conductor.

At the first concert last Thursday night acoustic conditions were generally satisfactory, except that the brass choirs sometimes came into undue prominence, standing out from the general tonal picture. It was expected that some slight modifications which Dr. Koussevitzky was considering in the seating of the musicians and the tonal proportions on the basis of the experience of Thursday's rehearsal and concert would offset this impression in the two later concerts. Members of the festival committee, who have regarded this festival as particularly important in connection with the future prospects of the institution, regarded the first concert with its attendance of nearly 5,000, as extremely auspicious.

Several chamber music concerts will also be held this afternoon in the Berkshire region near by. At South Mountain, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's auditorium near Pittsfield, the South Mountain Quartet will play Schumann's piano quartet in E flat Op. 47, with Gunnar Johansen as the assisting pianist; Kodaly's quartet in D and Joseph Jongen's quartet in A.

Jacques Gordon's string quartet, assisted by Frank Sheridan, pianist, will play a Brahms program composed of the quartet in C minor and quintet in F minor at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. At the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington, Mass., an instrumental program will be given under Hugo Kortschak's direction. These three concerts begin at 4 o'clock daylight saving time.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 [illegible]

Mr. and Mrs. Harry D. Segar of 61 Bay State Road have returned from Cooper House, Quogue, L. I.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Reed of North Street, Dalton, had as their week-end guests Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence White of Boston and Miss June Wright of Northfield. Mr. White is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was here for the Festival.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 7 1936

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES AT STOCKBRIDGE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard in Hills By Thousands

Stockbridge, Aug. 16.—(AP)—The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed tonight after three days of performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky which were heard by thousands of people from all over the country. The festival was the most successful of those ever held here both from point of attendance and excellence of musical fare.

News of the World of Music

The Matter of Tone Versus Tune

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE outdoor performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival, near Lenox, last Thursday evening, stressed by indirection the emphasis that we of this decadent musical day have come to place upon tone as opposed to tune. The quality which sets the Boston Symphony Orchestra above and apart from all other orchestras, as Bostonians like to believe, is not its precision, its elasticity or even its virtuosity, but rather its tone of unparalleled glow, warmth, sheen and richness.

* * * *

And it was this very element of tone which inevitably was not realized at its full value at the first concert of the festival which closes this afternoon. The shell under which the orchestra played had been ingeniously designed to reflect the sound of the instruments. The difficulty is that it did its job almost too well in most respects, yet not well enough in others. The somewhat freakish acoustic properties of this reflector were especially considerate, or inconsiderate, to the brass instruments. The tone of the trumpets stood out like the proverbial sore thumb, and in fortissimo passages suggested the clarion blasts that wrecked the walls of Jericho. On the other hand, the kettle drums had a curiously unresonant timbre, wooden and hollow, and in a remoter portion of the huge tent in which the audience sat, where the faintest murmur of flutes or violins could be distinctly heard, the violas, 'cellos and basses wholly disappeared for a few measures near the beginning of the Allegretto of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

* * * *

The above observations are those, if the expression may be pardoned, of a connoisseur in orchestral sonorities. Inevitably the music critic gets that way, as the winebibber comes to have his ineradicable preferences in the matter of vintages. Most of the 5000 presumable music-lovers who heard the concert were probably not so queasy. And there may have been spots in the tent from which the orchestra sounded very nearly as it should, making allowance for the fact that the full complement of strings was not present—the strings, which not only furnish needed balance to the brass, but which are perhaps the chief glory of the Boston Symphony.

* * * *

All other considerations aside, concerts such as these are valuable for the missionary work that they do. There were people in last Thursday evening's audience plainly unused to the ways and procedures of symphony concerts. In Bayreuth fashion the trumpets played preliminary fanfares to warn the audience of the concert's imminence. And one listener, at least, mistook the Bach-Schoenberg Chorale-Prelude with which the concert proper began, for a somewhat more extended form of warming-up and still looked for the first number, while another decided that the concert must be done at the beginning of the intermission, although the whole of Sibelius' Second Symphony remained to be played.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 7 1936

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, received an ovation tonight as they brought to a close the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. More than 3,000 persons, many of them summer visitors from all parts of the country, gathered on the spacious estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson to hear the third concert prepared by Dr. Houssevitzky. Nearly 12,000 persons attended the festival.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
Aug. EAGLE 17/36

DINNER AND DANCE IS HELD AT CLUB

About 30 attended the weekly dinner at the Country Club of Pittsfield Saturday night after the Boston Symphony concert that afternoon at Holmwood. About 100 attended the dance later in the evening, for which Bill Dehey and his orchestra played.

79

TRIBUNE

Chicago, 17/36

Musical Events Occupy Colony at Pittsfield

Chicagoans and Guests Attend Concerts Given by Boston Symphony.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Outstanding in a week-end crowded with music are the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts being held in a marquée tent at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. Over 4,000 tickets were sold for each concert.

Seen attending one of the concerts were Prof. Albert Sprague Coolidge and Mrs. Coolidge of Cambridge, who with their four children motored down from Greensboro, Vt., and are guests for a week of Mr. and Mrs. Willem Willeke at Mountain house, Pittsfield. Mr. Willeke is the director of Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge's music colony on the mountain. Next Sunday afternoon Prof. Coolidge will play the viola with the South Mountain String quartet in the weekly concert.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs of Chicago and Los Gatos, Cal., had as guests in their box at the symphony concert, Miss Kathleen Parlow, the child violinist of San Francisco, her mother, Mrs. George Parlow, and Mr. and Mrs. Gunar Johansen. Mr. Johansen is pianist in the South Mountain music colony.

Entertain Miss Kate S. Buckingham at Concert.

At another concert, Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs entertained Miss K[illegible] S. Buckingham of Chicago; her guest, Joseph Bentonelli, tenor in the Metropolitan Opera company; Charles H. Jones, headmaster of the Lebanon school, and Mrs. Jones.

Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice recently was hostess for a musical held at Mount Hope farm, Williamstown. Archer Gibson of New York was organist.

At Music mountain, Falls Village, Conn., the Gordon String quartet is playing a Brahms program with Frank Sheridan, pianist.

Countess Giovanni Cardelli of Great Barrington and Mrs. John H. Hamline, the former Minerva O. Beebe of 395 Woodland road, Lake Forest, were the honored guests at a luncheon which Mrs. William Felton Barrett gave at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Larz A. Holloway of 589 Sheridan road, Glencoe, Ill., has joined his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway, at Tamarack, Tyringham.

Metzes Give Dinner Party Before Symphony Program.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz of 2300 Lincoln Park West are doing a great deal of entertaining at Fernbrook, Lenox. They recently gave a dinner before one of the symphony concerts. With Miss Edith Meyer of Geneva, Switzerland, and Prof. William Lindsay of the University of Minnesota, who are with them at Fernbrook, the Metzes were among the guests at a dinner which Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton of Boston gave at Highwood, Windsor. Mrs. Metz plans to give a large garden tea at Fernbrook.

Prof. and Mrs. Livingston Hall of Weston, Mass., and Mr. and Mrs. William W. Barton of Rockford, Ill., recently returned to Great Barrington for a 100 mile horseback trip over the Green mountain trail in Vermont.

Mr. and Mrs. George O. Forbes of the North Egremont colony are on a motor trip to Bar Harbor, Me.

Mrs. Max MacMurray recently left Mahkeenac farm, Stockbridge, for Cleveland, O., following a three months' visit with her sister, Mrs. George Higginson. Later she is going to her ranch in Arizona.

Mrs. Louise Sherman Taylor, Miss Helen Campbell Taylor of 1540 Lake Shore drive, and Mrs. William Campbell Taylor of Hinsdale, Ill., were the guests of Mrs. Franklin Palmer at the Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington.

Prof. and Mrs. William Howard Doughty Jr. of Elscot, Williamstown, are departing for a visit with their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Doughty III., at Evanston, Ill.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 17 1936

By JAY ROSENFELD

For the second program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Serge Koussevitzky chose two compositions by Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff, famous members of "the Five," the prelude to "Khovanstchina" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Capriccio." It is no Chauvinism which influenced Koussevitzky to play the works of his countrymen, but rather a consanguinity of tastes which at the same time permits him to be an outstanding interpreter of the Russian school.

Comparisons Shown

The placing of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" between the two Russian pieces allowed, too, some very profitable comparisons. How much the founder of the French impressionistic school drew from and departed from the Russians is not easily calculable but that it was his leaping-off point is undeniable. The intimacy of Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff as well as of the the support given the concerts and the appreciation of the audiences more than compensate for the 12 months of work and worry which made the Festival possible. Speaking for the board of trustees, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the board, made the following statement:

"I'm simply delighted at the response. It means a future, we hope, but what that future is, we don't know. The success of the Festival is due entirely to an unprecedented community spirit of cooperation in Berkshire, neighboring New York and Connecticut. For the board may I say, we are deeply grateful."

Given Ovation

The 10-minute ovation accorded Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the close of the final concert at Holmwood last night left no room for doubt as to what the audience thought of the orchestra's performances. The spectacle of over 5000 people rising to their feet, applauding like mad, and shouting "encore" and "bravo" must have been as encouraging to the members of the orchestra as it was to the Festival committee and everyone else who is interested in the future of the Festival.

Throughout the concert the response of the listeners was gratifying. A respectful quiet was maintained between movements of the symphonies—a mark of appreciation which gratified those who were annoyed by the applause at the first two concerts. At the end of the Lohengrin prelude the audience accorded the orchestra the "perfect tribute" of a momentary silence.

Rainstorm Helps

Minor difficulties which marred the opening concert were eliminated Saturday and Sunday. The revised traffic system, by which two entrances to the estate were used, speeded up the arrival of cars and lessened the number of late-comers. After the concert last night the parking space was cleared in less than 30 minutes.

The storm Friday night, which caused some anxiety because of the strain it put on the rope of the canopy, proved beneficial in another respect, for it gave the orchestra's shell a thorough soaking which mellowed the tone of the brass instruments. Several critics, among them Koussevitzky himself, had complained the first night because of the hard and brittle tone which the thin shell gave to the instruments. In a further attemp to improve the tonal effect, the conductor made slight changes in the seating arrangement for the second and third concerts.

Prominent Persons

Prominent among the guests of political fame seen at the week-end concerts were: Governor Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island; Adolph A. Berle, Jr., city chamberlain of New York, and Mrs. Berle; Norman Davis, American ambassador-at-large, and Mrs. Davis; Henry Morgenthau, Sr., former ambassador to Turkey, and Mrs. Morgenthau; Owen Johnson, Democratic candidate for Congress from this district; and John Shepard, Jr., former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla.

The musical world offered a variety of interested attendants: Guiseppe Bentonelli, noted opera star; Leo Reisman, orchestra leader; Miss Mae Mukle of London, Eng., noted cellist, who was the guest of Miss Gertrude Watson of this city; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Mrs. Spalding; Jacques Gordon, director of the Gordon String Quartet; Willen Willeke, director of South Mountain music colony; Marjorie Edwards, child violinist; Philip Chapel, of London, Eng., noted pianist; Paul Stassevitch, noted violinist and teacher of Ruggerio Ricci; Louis Persinger, violinist; Naoum Benditsky, cellist of the Gordon String Quartet; Alexander Bloch, director of the music colony at Hillsdale, N. Y., and Mrs. Bloch; and Mrs. William Fried, daughter of Edwin Franko Goldman, noted band leader;

Prominent in art and literary circles were the following guests at the Festival: Henry Hudson Kitson, the sculptor; Augustus Vincent Pack, the painter of New York and Deerfield, and Mrs. Pack; and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sterner of Richmond; Sidney Howard, the playwright; Prof. Hudson Strode, the writer; Walter Prichard Eaton, dramatic critic and author, and Mrs. Eaton; and Mrs. Leslie Frost Francis, daughter of Robert Frost, the poet.

New York socialites observed in the boxes were: Miss Emily Lawrence, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson; Mrs. Bayard Cushing Hoppin, with her sister, Miss Anna Alexander; Mr. and Mrs. John Greenleaf, with Mr. and Mrs. Halstead Lindsley; Charles Inman; Mrs. Coster Schermerhorn, with her father, Harris Fahnestock; and Mr. and Mrs. H. Henry Alexander.

Others were: Alexander Kirkland and Josephine Hutchinson, guest stars at the Berkshire Playhouse this month; Carl Dreyfuss, publisher of the Boston American, and a truee of the Boston Symphony, with Mrs. Dreyfuss, and their

---

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 17 1936

OVERFLOW CROWDS AT BERKSHIRE CONCERTS

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16 — Showers which threatened to mar Saturday's Berkshire Festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, cleared later, and it turned out to be a perfect summer afternoon. As on Thursday night, there was a large overflow audience outside the marquee tent.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his orchestra received an ovation no less enthusiastic than at the opening concert on Thursday night. The first half of the program consisted of the larghetto affetuoso from Handel's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

The second half was devoted entirely to the well known Brahms Symphony No. 2, in D major.

The traffic jam at the single entrance, which delayed the opening half an hour Thursday night, was eliminated Saturday afternoon by opening a second gate on the south side. This had been delayed because of sharp turns on the road in the estate.

The evening program today which brought this the third annual and most memorable of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals to a close included magnificent renditions of the prelude to "Lohengrin' 'and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger" of Richard Wagner and the superb Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Opus 64 of Tshaikovsky. Another overflow crowd was present. Among the Columbia county residents who attended the second and third concorts of the festival were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jones of the Lebanon School for Boys, Mrs. Seymour, Miss Kate Van Alstyne, Miss Ann Terrell of Chatham, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Frisbee of Stuyvesant Falls, Mrs. Charles B. Benson Jr., Miss Mabel Esselstyn, her house guest, Miss Katherine Coon of Poughkeepsie, Mrs. Jacob Esselstyn, Miss Mary Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kittle and their house guests, the Rev. Calvin Stickles and Mrs. Stickles of Detroit, Mich., and Carl Relyea, Mrs. Howard U. Herrick and Miss Jane Herrick of Claverack, Miss Bernice Bristol of Copake, James E. Leath of Kinderhook, and Mrs. Grace F. Newman, the Misses Reutenauer, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, her house guest, Mrs. Joseph M. Conover of Philadelphia, Pa., Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Miss Vera Clapper, Miss Eva Sciutto, Miss Ruth Jessup, Miss Augusta Eigo, Mr. and Mrs. C. Werter Van Deusen, William E. Kline, Theodore H. Kline and Clayton Carhart of this city.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

Berkshire Music Festival Comes to a Close

The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed last night after three days of performances by the Boston Symphoy Orchestra under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky. It was the most successful ever held in the Berkshires and was attended by thousands of people from all over the country.

* * *

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 17 1936

ATIONAL MUSIC HISTORY MADE AS GREAT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL COMES TO CLOSE

First Great Musical Event in America Pays Its Own Way, Trustees Discover at End of Final Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra — Tremendous Music Beautifully Rendered by Dr. Koussevitzky and His Men—Audiences of 15,000 Attend Three Events—Hope for Future Festivals Bright

Musical history was made in the Berkshires over the Festival weekend. For the first time in America an out-door musical event of such a nature paid for itself. Although the total receipts and expenditures have not yet been tabulated, the trustees feel confident the $18,000 budget will be met.

15,000 Attend

Total attendance at the three concerts was 15,000, or almost twice the number present at last year's Festival. The biggest day at the box office was Saturday, when many people bought tickets for both the second and the third concerts.

Officials of the Festival feel that

Continued on Eighth Page

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

The People's Forum

Breaking Tradition

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Through your columns a Cleveland visitor has expressed indignation that the audience of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival failed in their appreciation of last Thursday's concert by applauding at the wrong time.

Many in such a large audience have not the same opportunities of hearing symphonic music as those living in Cleveland, Boston or such cities, and so should not be taken to task for being unfamiliar with or forgetting the more formal atmosphere of the concert hall, where applause is reserved for the end of the last movement of the symphony.

Without question the Boston Symphony Orchestra has honored Berkshire County but the Berkshire Hills themselves have anticipated this honor in providing so magnificent a setting in which to perform. Under the influence of this natural beauty, to hear such an orchestra may also move the most experienced listener to break a tradition.

Surely Dr. Koussevitzky, so gifted he can interpret the intricate music of the masters and convey its beauty to even the least musical of us, can also interpret the spontaneous enthusiasm of his open air audience, through its untimely applause, as anything other than disrespect to himself and his orchestra. Further evidence of this enthusiasm is the great number of people who, not content with only one concert, were at Saturday's and Sunday's performances.

Let us hope the organizers of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival have sufficient faith in the audience to carry their good work on into the future years.

ADRIAN COMPER
Pittsfield.

Symphonic Applause

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

It would seem, from a letter published in your Saturday issue, that the East has yet something to learn from the Middle West—even to its manners at a concert, the audience of which was heterogeneous and numbered four thousand souls; four thousand souls "out for a holiday!"

Such an audience perhaps differs from the homogeneous and accustomed audiences gathered weekly in Cleveland—"place aux dames!"—and in Boston, during the winter. A discriminating silence of course characterizes those audiences.

Possibly the outstanding consideration is that a large heterogeneous audience experienced high delight and wanted to manifest that delight; that a heterogeneous audience heartily endorsed the Symphonic Festival, in true festival spirit, and would warmly welcome Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to Berkshire again.

CAROLYN KELLOGG CUSHING
Pittsfield.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

THE NOTE BOOK

By
J. H.

Music Al Fresco: Time and Tempo

TONE coloring. . . The turquoise sea. . . Richness of tone, nobility of spirit. . . Strings sang the great airs as if inspiration were in them. . . A wide range, surely, from the simple thread of folk song, to the thunder that was in the mood magic of creative man. . . Thinness at times only suggested sensitiveness of expression in that temple that housed our hearts. . . "The sky is no higher than your heart is high," wrote Edna St. Vincent Millay—the poet of tenderness, of passion and of prophecy. . . Strains vanish into silence—and one might wish they would go on and on and on forever—like a great love. . . Dr. Koussevitsky performs with deep feeling and a fine style. He is a perfect interpreter of Wagner. . . . Vibrant the pattern of our tapestry of intonation, rich and radiant the memory of those lovely days. . . Mr. John C. Lynch had a right to be happy, for it was his splendid enthusiasm, his confidence and his great abilities that helped to carry forward the project to splendid success. . . . Elusively charming Lesley Frost was there, out of the mid-west. . . Judge Robinson and Mrs. Robinson came down for the final concert. . . Halstead Lindsley a patron. . . Once upon a time it was recorded that the crickets chirped. Then someone wrote a cricket doesn't chirp, it rubs its legs together to make the eerie sound we loosely describe as song. . . Everyone ought to know music—the best music—for it is at hand every moment of our lives for acceptance and appreciation. . . How natural it is to speak of the Book of Revelations, when it is the Book of Revelation. . . A young man, born and bred in the Blue Grass country, never saw horse racing until he came East! He was at Saratoga Springs the other day. . . Several persons arose after a movement in the Wagner division. "Seventh inning," said the girl behind me.

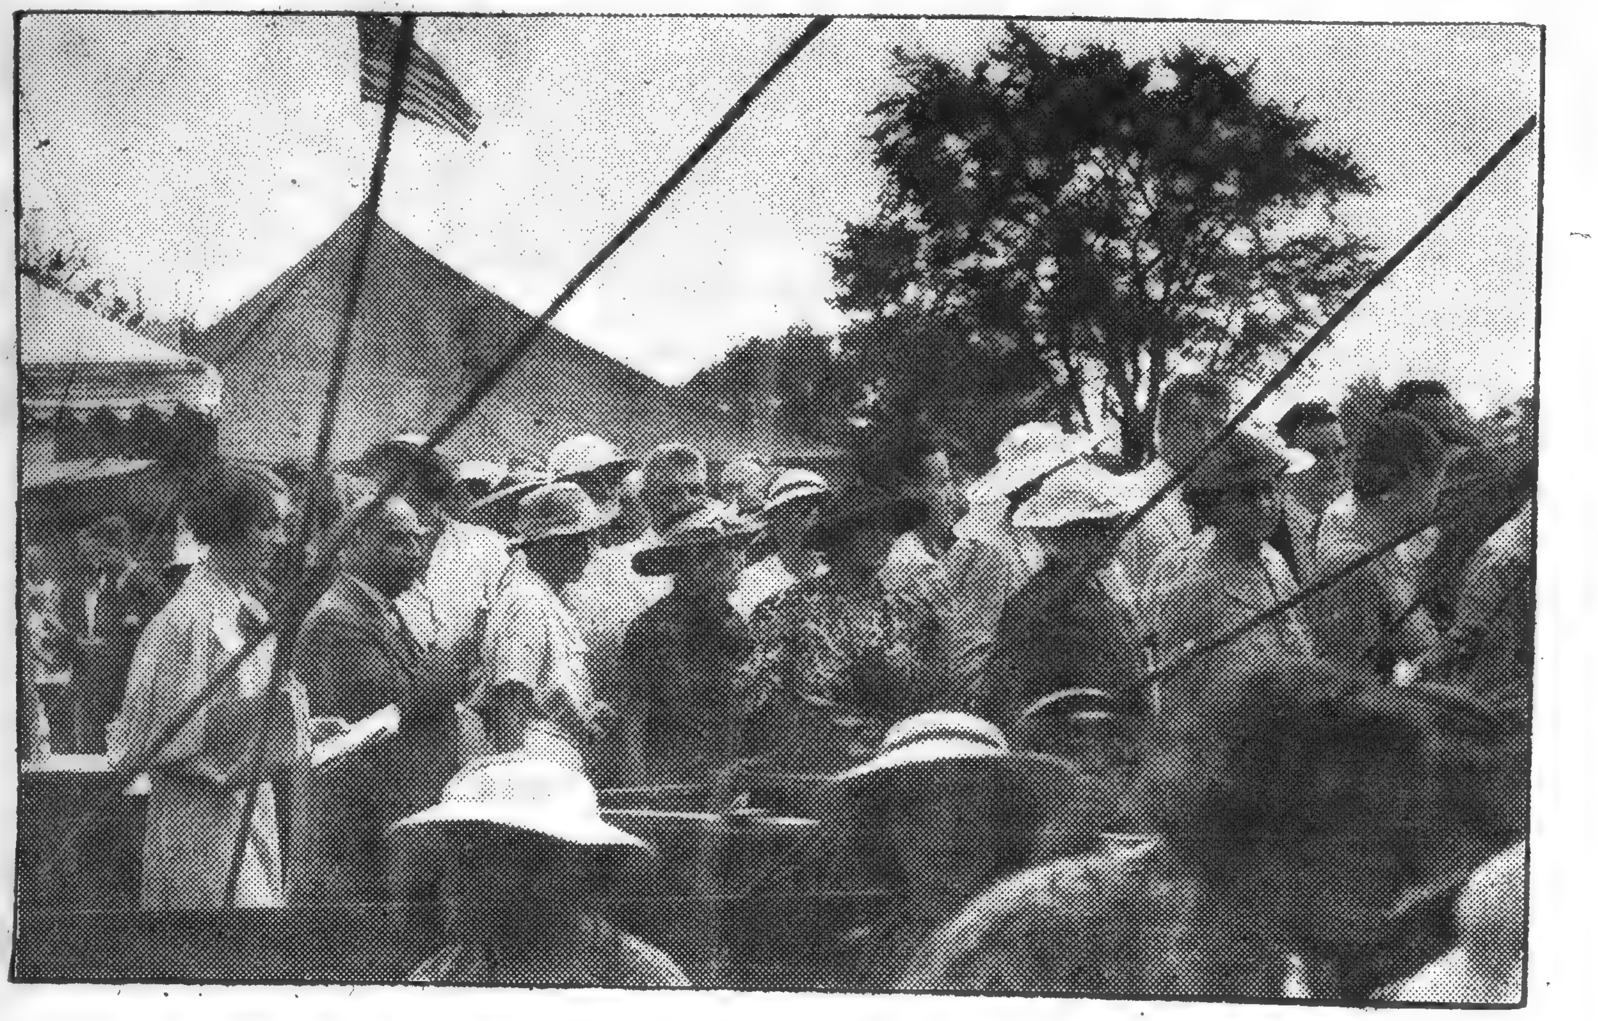
Robert Talcott Francis was noted at the concert. Saw him driving a car the other day—first time, for me . . . Artist Hamilton among those present and accounted for. Nothing artistic escapes him . . . Many of the things Father Coughlin said about the members of the newspaper fraternity are true. But it is a trade, a profession, a calling, or what have you that calls for all there is in a man. He cannot hold anything back. He throws into the scale everything he has of emotional and spiritual resource. He cannot spare himself if he would . . . I never could understand the excitement over traffic jams. Persons who are going nowhere in particular usually make the most fuss about it. You'd think they'd welcome the opportunity to visit for an hour or so in the car . . . My emotions are none too well coordinated anyway and there are times when I feel the impulse to applaud right in the middle of a piece. It is too bad that, in the expression of our high appreciation, we have to be hampered by rules and regulations much as if we were buying soap for the laundry . . . "The mountains should be an eternal challenge to our youth to climb—Walter Prichard Eaton.

Silas P. Smith had an experience with monoxide gas that had a very serious effect upon him at the time and for a long while afterwards. A reporter saw him here when he was recovering from the effects of the inhalation. Mr. Smith was a clever amateur boxer in his younger days, wanted to go into the game professionally, but his trainer couldn't see it. He attended all the bouts, was a quick, accurate judge of fighters.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION Aug. 17/36

80

Part of the 5000 at Lenox



(Photo by Don Jose Browning)

The entrance to the boxes at the second concert of the third Berkshire music festival at the Lenox estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson yesterday. A crowd estimated at 5000 heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

AUG 16 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO CONCLUDE TONIGHT

Will Climax Three Afternoon Concerts and a Talk by Olin Downes

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will come to a close tonight at the estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge with the third concert in the series of three given by the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Tonight's concert will climax a day of musical activities that will start at the Berkshire playhouse at 12.15, where Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give a lecture on the music to be heard in the final program.

Three concerts are scheduled for this afternoon: At South mountain, where the South Mountain string quartet, led by Willem Willeke, will present a program of chamber music; at the Cummington Playhouse-in-the-Hills, where students at the summer school of music and art there will be heard in a program of concerted numbers, and at Falls Village, Ct., where the Gordon quartet, under the direction of Jacques Gordon will play.

At the South mountain concert the program will be as follows:—

Quartet in E-flat major, Op 47 . Schumann
  Sostenuto assai; allegro ma non troppo
  Scherzo: trio 1 and 2
  Andante cantabile
  Finale
Quartet in D-major, Op 10 .... Kodaly
  Allegro
  Andante quasi recitative; allegro giocoso
Quartet in A-major, Op 50 .... Jongen
  Allegro moderato
  Lento
  Molto

The students at Cummington will be heard in the following program:—

Quartet in G-minor .... Mozart
  Allegro
  Andante
  Rondo
Quartet in D-major .... Haydn
  Allegro moderato
  Adagio cantabile
  Menuetto, allegretto
  Finale, vivace
Concerto for piano and string orchestra in F-minor .... Bach Allegro moderato
  Largo
  Presto

Participating in the Mozart quartet will be Eleanor Goddard, piano; Alice Mary Cable, violin; Nathan Gottschalk, viola and Walter Piasecki, 'cello. In the Haydn quartet the following will perform: William Ehrenkrantz, first violin; Alice Mary Cable, second violin; Nathan Gottschalk, viola, and Walter Piasecki, 'cello. Selma Mednikov, pianist, will be soloist in the Bach concerto, assisted by the following ensemble: Julius Bernstein, Alice Cable, Lorraine Crittendon, Elias Dann, William Ehrenkrantz, Nathan Gottschalk, Adolf Konrad, Alice Kortschak, Arthur Merovich, Walter Piasecki, and Winnifred Zinninger.

The Gordon string quartet will present the Brahms piano quintet in F-minor, Op 34, with Frank Sheridan, pianist, and the Brahms quartet in C-minor, Op 51, No 1.

The Boston Symphony's program tonight at 8.30 follows:—

Symphony in A-major, Op 90 . Mendelssohn
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Symphony No 5 in E-minor .. Tschaikowsky.

Koussevitzky Given Ovation At Second Lenox Concert

Brilliant Music Charms Crowd

Damp Weather Fails to Affect Excellence of Boston Symphony

By FRANCIS REGAL

Lenox, Aug. 15—The third Berkshire symphonic festival, which opened Thursday evening with a brilliance to which perfect weather contributed, gave its second concert this afternoon in defiance of the weather but with equal success. The audience was large and a southwesterly breeze through the open walls of the vast tent kept all the auditors comfortable in spite of the oppressive air. The threatened rain held off and no one was heard to express regret that there had been no test of the canvas roof. No one had reason to complain except the musicians, who were conventionally attired in the "dark suit" prescribed for orchestra players from time immemorial. Bostonian dignity commanded respect but the men would have been happier in shirtsleeves.

But neither Dr Koussevitzky nor the well-inured veterans of the Boston Symphony orchestra permitted a foggy day to dampen their energy or to affect their style. It would be too much to say that the damp heat did not affect the tone of this superb organization. Such weather modifies the orchestral scale of values materially, leaving the wind sections little altered while the more sensitive stringed instruments are more or less muffled and lack the crisp ring which they have on a dry and sunny day. That is a law of Nature and not much can be done about it, but at least the case is not so bad as it used to be before violinists were converted to the steel first string, in place of catgut.

(Continued on Eighth Page)

Festival Heads Expect Surplus

Plans for 1937 Made as Crowd of 5000 Jams Lenox Estate

Lenox, Aug. 15—At least 5000 men and women from all over Western Massachusetts and many sections of New York state and New England attended this afternoon the second concert in the Berkshire music festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood. It was a highly enthusiastic audience and Dr Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, received an ovation. After the final Brahms composition he was recalled four times but as on Thursday night there were no encores.

About 500 more tickets were sold than for the first concert. Practically every seat in the large marquee tent and the overflow settees were fully occupied. During the intermission visitors walked through the beautiful park, one of the show places of the Berkshire hills, and admired the view across Laurel lake from the house and the gardens.

The showers during the morning threatened to dampen the concert but the weather cleared about noon and

(Continued on Eighth Page)

MICHIGAN POLICE

BIG OVATION TO SYMPHONY

LENOX, Aug. 15 (AP)—Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, expected at the Berkshire Music Festival today, was not present, but more than 5000 persons gathered on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Ellison to give an ovation to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A meeting of the trustees of the Berkshire Symphony Festival Association with Dr. Koussevitsky, Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Corporation, and George E. Judd, general manager, will be held Monday night to discuss possibilities of the Boston Symphony leaders making Lenox and Stockbridge a summer musical centre.

T

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 17 1936

About 12,000 Persons Hear Boston Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17, (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky ended its Berkshire music festival concert series last night. Approximately 12,000 persons attended the festival.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSED

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 17—The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky ended its Berkshire music festival concert series last night. Approximately 12,000 persons attended the festival.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

Aug 16/36

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Final Concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival To Be Given Tonight

THE final concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held this evening at 8:30 p. m. at "Holmwood," the magnificent estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Lenox and Stockbridge, when the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will end this unique orchestral feast in a blaze of musical glory.

The Festival marked the first time in his thirteen years in America that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted during the summer and the first time in the orchestra's 55 years of existence that it has appeared away from home, out of doors.

From the standpoint of attendance the festival apparently is as great a success financially as it is artistically and without doubt is the beginning of a permanent musical center to rival if not surpass the Salzberg festival.

The natural amphitheatre set among the Berkshire Hills lends an artistic background for an orchestra, under its famous conductor that ranks as high as any orchestra abroad.

Great names in the social, business, and artistic circles of America are among the sponsors, and with the larger group of ordinary music lovers, form an audience that is a cross-section of a newer and ever-increasing musical new world.

Adequate free parking space is available for 2,000 cars. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, the marshall and his assistants and the state police have handled the tremendous crowd in a most efficient manner.

The program for tonight includes the "Italian Symphony by Mendelssohn, the Preludes to "Lohengrin and "Die Meistersinger" of Wagner and the Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 5.

This will be the final opportunity for music lovers in the Albany Area to hear this magnificent orchestra under ideal conditions at a time when the local musical situation is dormant.

* * *

Albany Should Have Own Band Concerts

WHAT has become of the band concerts that many thousands of Albanians used to enjoy a few years ago, during the summer, in Washington Park?

At least once a week under the direction of a municipal director of concerts, music lovers used to gather around the old band tower at the lake house and listen to good music with sometimes a soloist as an added attraction.

When the new lake house was built, a special band stand with a good acoustural shell behind the players was incorporated but at the present time is a silent tribute to the glory that was.

Possibly it is too late this season for any series of band concerts but the plan is advisable for next year.

Any good musical organization is an asset to a city. It is one of the best advertising mediums that a municipality can have and it gives the opportunity to many in the city to hear music when they are unable to attend the larger season's offerings.

We have a fine band under the leadership of Roscoe Adams, prepared at all times to furnish the best in band literature. We have two symphony orchestras and many WPA groups to draw from, and yet the summer season in Albany is devoid of music.

Let us have in the budget next year an appropriation for outdoor concerts, the cost of which is negligable in proportion to the great pleasure such concerts will afford our own citizens and the strangers in our midst.

* * *

Albany Conservatory Success Assured

GREAT credit is due the musical and business accumen of two outstanding Albany musicians for the establishment of the first concrete Conservatory of Music in Albany.

Edward Morris and Ford Hummel have combined their individual talents and gathered about them at 340 State street in the old Russell home a group of assistants that insures success.

For the thirty years Troy has supported two conservatories, namely, the Emma Willard and the Troy Conservatory, and it was inevitable that some day some one with vision should establish such an institution in Albany.

The director of the Conservatory is Edward Morris, widely known concert pianist and master teacher. He started teaching when nine years of age and was the youngest graduate from Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore where he later taught, still later going to Smith college.

At the age of 17, Mr. Morris appeared as soloist with the Philadelphia and New York Philharmonic orchestras.

Mr. Morris' full experience in the field of composition and in concert appearances makes him eminently of great value as a teacher.

Ford Hummel and his sons, Earle and Stanley, are Albany's outstanding musical family. The father, Ford Hummel, was winner of a violin scholarship at Ithaca college and the Metropolitan college in New York, and was for years a concert artist. His teacher was Ovid Musin, celebrated Belgian violinist.

Further study with the late Franz Kneisel rounded out a preparation that is invaluable.

Earle Hummel began his career at the age of five. At nine he appeared with his father in recital of double concertos and since has given many recitals in New York and Albany.

Stanley Hummel began his study of piano with his mother, later becoming a pupil of Edward Morris, receiving a scholarship at the Juilliard school in New York city where he studied with Joseph Lhevinne. For the past three years he has been associate instructor at the Juilliard school where he has been awarded several scholarships. He also won a fellowship in the Salzberg Academy of Music, Austria, where he taught concert repertoire.

Stanley Hummel has appeared in numerous recitals in New York's Town Hall and has appeared with leading symphony orchestras.

The voice department will include: George H. Pickering, director of the Emma Willard School of Music in Troy; Cecil Wright, well-known organist and teacher of voice who has his own studio in Glens Falls and is associated with the Schenectady Conservatory of Music.

Associated with Mr. Pickering and Mr. Wright is Miss Jessie Patterson, graduate of the Albany Academy for Girls, the Institute of Musical Art of the Juilliard Foundation, New York. She was a pupil of Oscar Seagle, exponent of the De Reszke method of singing.

Miss Patterson was formerly head of the Department of Singing in the Bennett School of Millbrook, New York, and will specialize in breath, resonance and diction and Italian, German and French repertoire.

The department of Dalcroze Eurhythmics will be under the supervision of Josephine Noel Kauffman, a graduate of Grinnell college and Iowa university.

Mrs. Kauffman was assistant to Frances Gutelius of Washington, D. C., where her work included private and group piano lessons in connection with the Dalcroze System.

The other member of the faculty is Marjorie McDonough, who will teach piano and the history of music. Miss McDonough studied at State College and the Academy of Holy Names.

Faculty recitals will be given during the winter at the Albany Institute of History and Art and advanced pupils will be presented at the Morris-Hummel studios.

* * *

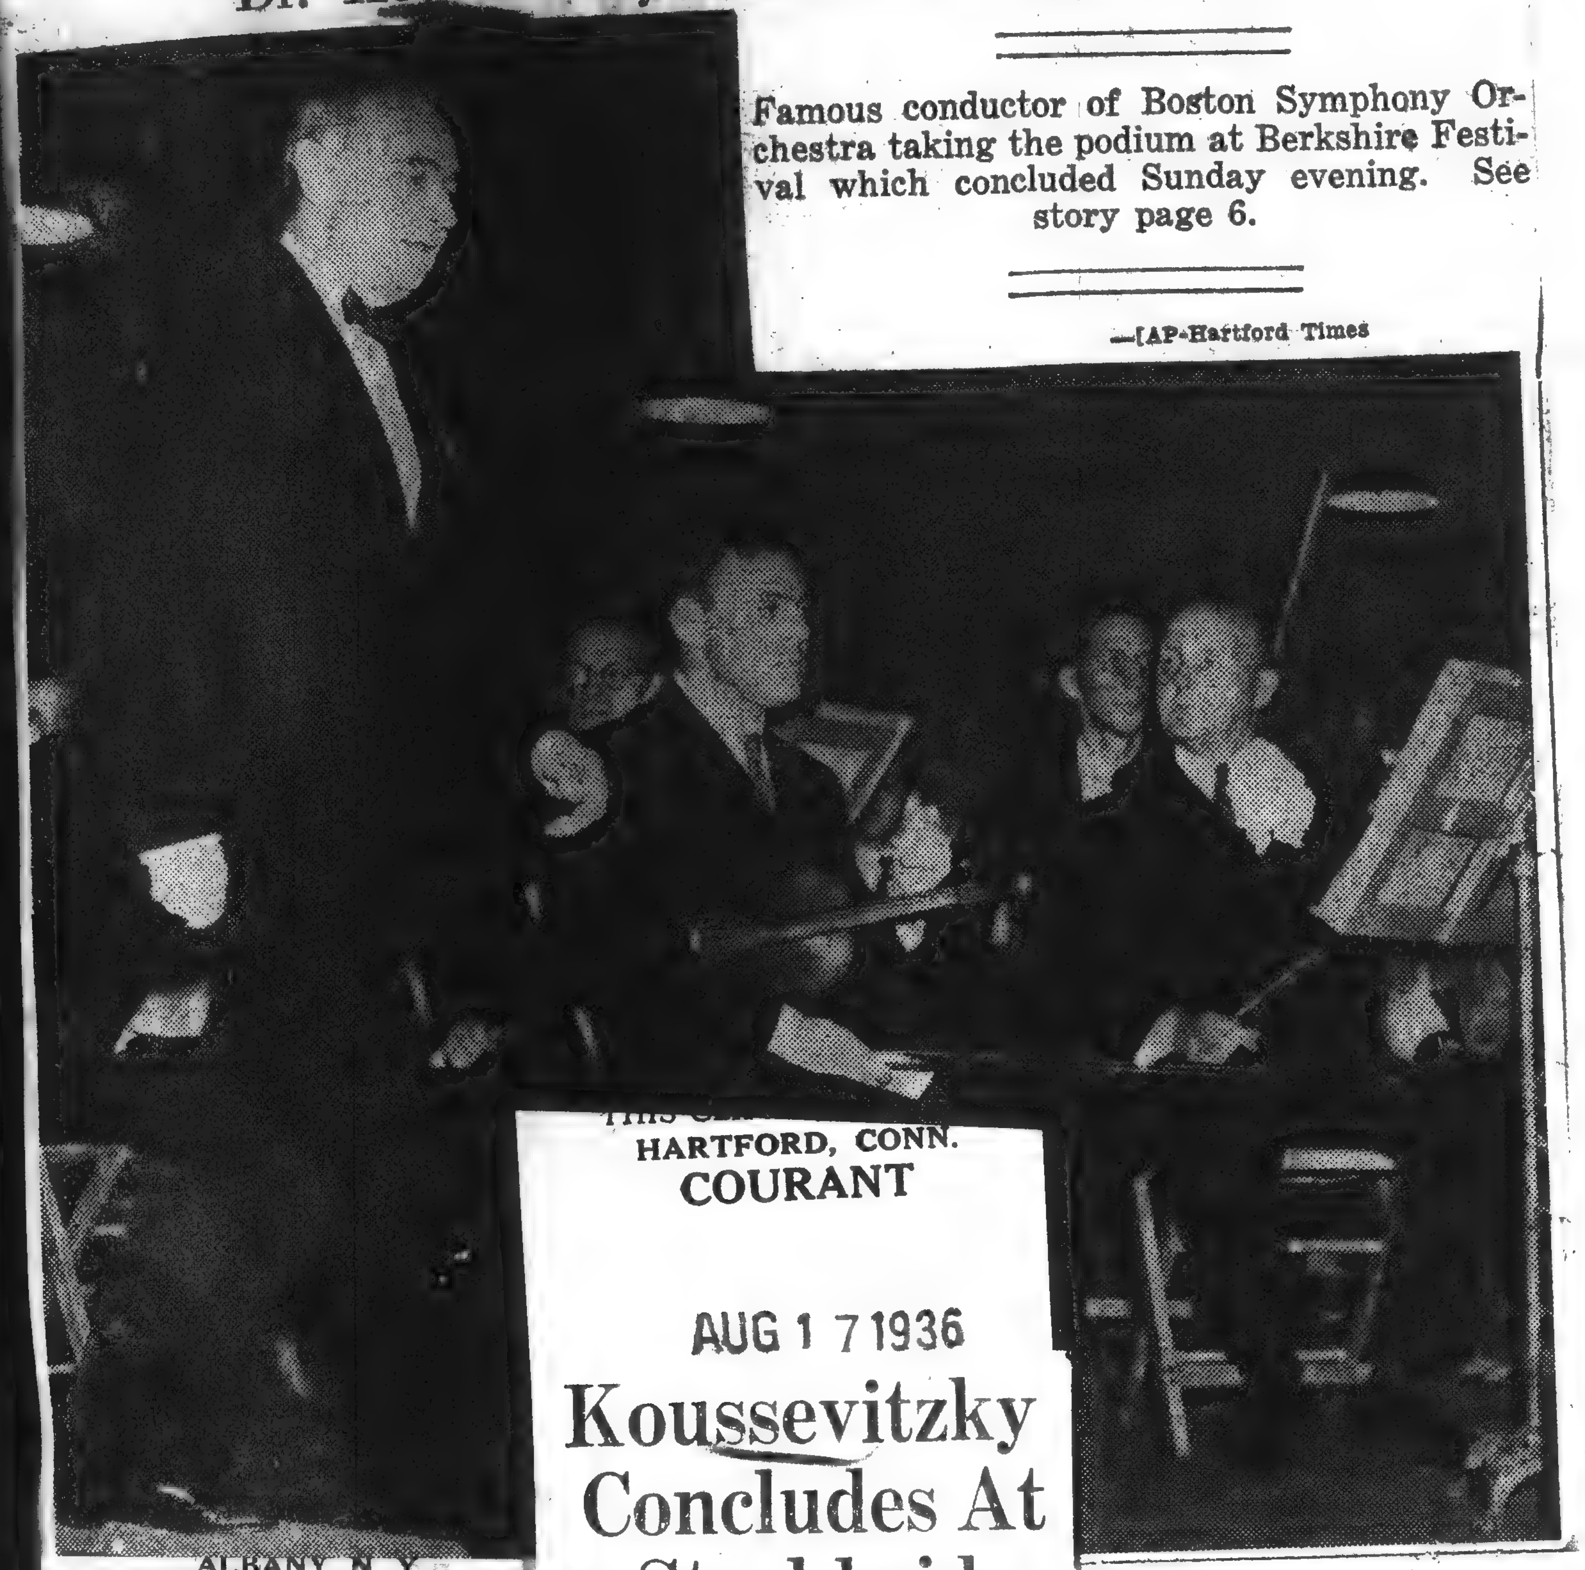
Stanley Hummel At Music Festival

STANLEY HUMMEL, assisted by a concert orchestra under the direction of Georges Barraere, played the Eschaikowsky Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, last evening at the music festival in Chautauqua, N. Y. Mr. Hummel will also play this concerto at the first concert in the fall of the Albany Symphony orchestra, John A. Carabella, conductor.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 7 1936

Dr. Koussevitzky Hailed at Stockbridge



Famous conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra taking the podium at Berkshire Festival which concluded Sunday evening. See story page 6.

—[AP-Hartford Times

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

FINAL CONCERT IN BERKSHIRES

17/36

Boston Symphony Orchestra presents Remarkable Performance

By RAY A. MOWERS

Distant lighting helped man-made electric energy to light the stage for the final concert in the Berkshire symphonic Festival series last night at Holmwood, the fine country esate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson near Stockbridge, Mass.

As was the case at the first concert there by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Thursday night and again Saturday afternoon, patrons of the arts from Albany and the Capital District in the audience of nearly 6,000 heard some of the world's greatest music interpreted by an organization with few rivals anywhere.

Lawn Dotted with Listeners

Many had discovered that the expansive lawn outside the canvas canopied concert hall afforded greater comfort on a hot night and the added distance from the stage lent enchantment. The grassy turf was strewn with happy people sitting or reclining in silence as Serge Koussevitzky and his men poured out their souls and those of the composers whose works they presented.

It was with considerable satisfaction the promoters of the Festival saw the figurative curtain fall on the last event in the series and heard the peons of praise and delight which continued to shower upon them long after the last roar of applause for the orchestra had subsided. The Festival was a Class A success from every possible angle and unquestionably will lead to even greater plans for the future.

Readings eBautiful

Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony in A Major which opened last night's concert, magnificently as it was presented, was excelled in public interest by the orchestra's playing of the numbers which followed it. Seldom, if ever, in musical history have more toweringly beautiful readings of the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" been heard.

And then came the Tschaikowski "Fifth," the most popular of the symphonies from the great Russian's pen. It was a fitting climax to a superb performance and a soul-gratifying festival of music.

Many a moon will have waxed and waned before those present last night will find their memories of what they heard and setting in which they heard it growing dim.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 1 7 1936

Koussevitzky Concludes At Stockbridge

Directs Boston Symphony Superbly in Last Concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—Under lowering skies after an intensely sultry day, the three-day Berkshire Symphonic Festival concluded with a concert of superb musical magnitude, by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was "husbandry in the heavens" with but few stars dimly to be seen as the festival audience, which has maintained a consistent attendance of 4000 throughout three days due to series subscriptions, trouped in far more on time than usual under the russet canopy. To the initial fanfare of a Wagnerian motif, the "names" of the art and social worlds clambered into their boxes, though many of those who held reserve seat tickets deserted them for the greater cool of the darkness outside. The same festival spirit pervaded the assembling and seating, and the scene was colorful with costume and garb ranging from the most elaborate gowns and wraps, and stiff-shirt fronts, to camel's hair coats thrown over tennis court wear.

Koussevitzky Gets Ovation.

As the square cut, square featured Dr. Koussevitzky came briskly out to the podium, the salvos of applause from the audience gave to him and his orchestra which had risen to greet him, the most enthusiastic greeting of the three concerts. It was a "hai" which had connotations of "farewell" at the same time.

The eminent doctor of music had selected for this concluding concert a particularly apt and persuasive program. Doubtless he had his empyric reason for the choice, after all. Wagner and Tschaikowsky are are especially suited to open air concerting, but it is pleasant and surely not inaccurate to believe that the spirit of the final occasion primarily governed his selection.

Mendelssohn Fits Day.

At any rate the "Italian" symphony of Mendelssohn which opened the evening certainly recalled the brilliant summer day just over, and the sunny Alban hills found their counterpart in the Berkshires. However the truth and beauty of this work lie not so much in these suggestions as in its final classical form —romanticist that Mendelssohn was, he could be a formalist well enough when he chose, and this symphony represents one of his rarest attainments in this temper.

Such a work as this requires obviously the utmost clarity, finesse and precision in interpretation and performance. Last night it received the most elegant in both, that this correspondent can recall having heard. What is unusual Dr. Koussevitzky took all the sections in almost the identical vein and expression—a delicateness, a sheer budding buoyancy, a lightness even in the final movement of Saltatelli and Tarantelle—which was as elegant as it is rare. He sought no depth in this symphony of surface shimmer. He strove only for limpidity and lightness, and he attained it—he and his splendid orchestra—with an impeccability, a transparency and a fleeting quality quite beyond word of adulation. It was very grand indeed, a masterful interpretation and nothing short of a virtuoso performance by every part of the orchestra.

Contrasting Wagner.

Of all the Wagfinerian excerpts, probably the best known are the "Lohengrin" prelude and the overture to "Die Meistersinger." In a way, their playing by the Boston orchestra needs no comment, so well known is it. Yet because last night's playing of both seemed even to outdo the reptuation, it does need at least that comment. The mystical Isthung ancient German landscape was drawn with ineffable beauty. The pomposities of "Die Meistersinger" were set out with such brilliant balance of thematic complexities, that the audience gave it the next most prolonged applause of the entire series.

But it was for the Tschaikowsky fifth that the audience reserved their great ovation. It was fitting that the sombreness of this work should be the farewell, the "Abschiedstuck" of the festival. It was fitting that the festival should conclude with a simply magnificent embodiment of this beautiful and tortured vision of something "seen through a glass darkly." It was a peak of interpretation. How often we now hear it said that this Fifth is sentimental and somewhat "vulgar." True, it has been a mess of sententious pottage often enough. But all lovers and defenders of this opus, owe to Dr. Koussevitzky great gratitude for the restraint without beggaring, the piognancy without sententiousness, the fullness without overdoing, with which he invested it last night.

Audience Spellbound.

It was overpowering with richness and superb in its emotional dimension. And it is impossible for me to recall a time when such resonance such sonority surged up and through it, when such beauty of detail (above all in the horn section of the second movement) stirred in it. The audience which had applauded every movement of the Mendelssohn sat spellbound here, not interrupting the mood once throughout, but at the end, they gave it thunderous applause and cheered with "bravos".

Splendidly as they had done in the two previous concerts, it was as if they had especially summed themselves for this final work of the festival, Dr. Koussetzky and his men, for it had an almost ceremonial impressiveness about it.

81

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends; Koussevitzky and Orchestra Hailed

By WILLIAM T. CHASE, JR.
[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

LENOX, Aug. 16—The third annual Berkshire symphonic festival came to a brilliant close this evening with the playing of the final concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's lovely estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Both conductor and orchestra were given an ovation after an extraordinary dramatic and intense reading of the Tchaikovsky fifth symphony, the last selection on the program. Immediately after the theme typical of fate, "the eternal note of sadness," had reached its climax in the finale, the audience of between four and five thousand persons rose in a body and applauded, cheered and shouted their approval for a number of minutes.

FESTIVAL SPIRIT APPARENT

This demonstration was in keeping with the festival spirit everywhere apparent the last few days. In spite of very hot weather and pronounced humidity, everybody was out to have a good time, musically speaking, of course, and the results were entirely satisfactory. Close to 15,000 people, counting serial ticket holders as separate individuals, must have heard the noted conductor and the great Boston orchestra during the three concerts. Cars from all parts of the country, as well as one with a Hawaii registration, assembled in the parking space. Many attending the festival also visited a variety of other attractions in the vicinity, among them chamber music concerts, dance recitals and plays.

Besides the Tchaikovsky, tonight's program included Mendelssohn's delightful "Italian" Symphony and the preludes to Wagner's music dramas "Lohengrin," and "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg." Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were very much on their mettle, giving of their best, and at times seeming virtually in mid-season form.

Reasons for the artistic success of the concluding concert were easily to be found. Certain difficulties were experienced at the opening, Thursday night, for the low broad shell and the huge canvas canopy, 2500 feet long and 120 feet in width, were found to distort details of orchestration. The following morning at rehearsal Dr. Koussevitzky moved about the vast enclosure listening while Richard Burgin, the concert master, conducted. The outcome of this was a toning down of woodwinds and brasses and more emphasis on the strings. While vastly improved, however, the acoustics were not perfect. The shape of the canopy and an upward slope on the grounds caused the orchestra to sound better to those far in the rear, for example.

TRAFFIC PROBLEM SOLVED

But these were minor matters after all and did not seriously detract from enjoyment of the orchestra's superlative playing. A more puzzling problem, Thursday night, that of the traffic, was likewise partially solved by yesterday afternoon. A drive near the back of the grounds was opened in addition to the one already in use. Persons came earlier, cars were parked with more rapidity and nearly everybody was seated when the program commenced. There was considerably less delay in getting away, too, and that was a great improvement.

Estimates placed the attendance yesterday at more than 5000 persons, an increase of nearly a thousand over that of Thursday. The audience overflowed from under the canopy, and also occupied a number of benches at the sides and rear. Bright summer clothes and a feeling of gay anticipation lent the affair a sort of garden party atmosphere, an atmosphere heightened by the presence of nearby booths in which refreshments, music books and so on were being sold. This evening, though, there was just a touch of sadness mingling with the carnival air, for Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony were ending their first visit to the Berkshires and, incidentally, the orchestra's first summer series outside Boston in the famous organization's history.

Returning to yesterday afternoon, attention naturally centered on the interpretation of the Brahms second symphony. An extremely effective one it was, with here and there a of a particular theme or solo passage than one has come to expect from the playing in Symphony Hall. This was no doubt made necessary by the outdoor nature of the proceedings. The program began with the "Larghetto e Affetuoso" from Handel's concerto grosso for string orchestra, opus 6, No. 6, in G minor, and continued with the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina," Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" and Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol, opus 34. One or two errors in the woodwinds and the squeaking of a bat, or perhaps it was a cricket, were the only faults, and hardly worth mentioning at that. They did nothing to mar one's complete pleasure in the performances.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT

One of the nearly numberless events associated with the Berkshire festival was the chamber music concert this afternoon by the South Mountain string quartet at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield. It was the sixth of eight Sunday concerts under the direction of William Willeke and the participating artists were Kathleen Parlow, first violin; Edwin Ideleer, second violin; Conrad Held, viola; Mr. Willeke, 'cello, and Gunnar Johansen, piano. The program consisted of Robert Schumann's Quartet in E flat major, Opus 47, Zoltan Kodaly's quartet in D major, Opus 10, and Joseph Jongen's quartet in A major, Opus 50.

This interesting and intelligently selected program was more than competently performed, a decided accomplishment when one recalls the damping effect of the extreme heat and humidity. So hot was it, in fact, that some of the capacity audience were forced to move to benches outside the building. With this in mind the gusto with which the Schumann quartet was played was rather remarkable. Composed in 1842, and dedicated to Count Wielhorsky the quartet had a geniality and freshness pleasing to hear, although it did not quite compare with the better known quintet. The solo 'cello part in the Andante, often considered as a tribute to Count Wielhorsky, was beautifully interpreted by Mr. Willeke.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

AUG 2 0 1936

Berkshire Symphonic Festival a Success

(Special to The Post)

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 20—With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000, coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

19 1936

* * *

Symphonic Festival at Berkshires

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky closed the three-concert Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday night at the Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson near Lenox, Mass. The audience of some five thousand, listening with the keenest attention despite the sweltering heat, had heard the Bostonians in their typically brilliant fashion play a program that began and ended with the Symphonies of Mendelssohn in A major and Tchaikovsky in E minor and included, in between, two Wagnerian Preludes — "Lohengrin" and "Meistersinger."

The opening program Thursday night consisted of the Larghetto from Handel's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice Espagnole" and Brahms's Second Symphony.

High lights of the Festival were a very spirited performance of the Brahms symphony, and the beautiful presentation of the Moussorgsky Prelude on Saturday and the grandiloquent rendering of the closing number of the Festival, Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, which so gripped the audience as to result in a demonstration of applause that lasted many minutes.

81

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 7 1936

Dr. Koussevitzky Hailed at Stockbridge

Famous conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra taking the podium at Berkshire Festival which concluded Sunday evening. See story page 6.

—[AP-Hartford Times

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

FINAL CONCERT IN BERKSHIRES

17/36

Boston Symphony Orchestra presents Remarkable Performance

By RAY A. MOWERS

Distant lighting helped man-made electric energy to light the stage for the final concert in the Berkshire symphonic Festival series last night at Holmwood. the fine country esate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson near Stockbridge, Mass.

As was the case at the first concert there by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Thursday night and again Saturday afternoon, patrons of the arts from Albany and the Capital District in the audience of nearly 6,000 heard some of the world's greatest music interpreted by an organization with few rivals anywhere.

Lawn Dotted with Listeners

Many had discovered that the expansive lawn outside the canvas canopied concert hall afforded greater comfort on a hot night and the added distance from the stage lent enchantment. The grassy turf was strewn with happy people sitting or reclining in silence as Serge Koussevitzky and his men poured out their souls and those of the composers whose works they presented.

It was with considerable satisfaction the promoters of the Festival saw the figurative curtain fall on the last event in the series and heard the peons of praise and delight which continued to shower upon them long after the last roar of applause for the orchestra had subsided. The Festival was a Class A success from every possible angle and unquestionably will lead to even greater plans for the future.

Readings eBautiful

Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony in A Major which opened last night's concert, magnificently as it was presented, was excelled in public interest by the orchestra's playing of the numbers which followed it. Seldom, if ever, in musical history have more toweringly be autiful readings of the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" been heard.

And then came the Tschaikowski "Fifth," the most popular of the symphonies from the great Russian's pen. It was a fitting climax to a superb performance and a soul-gratifying festival of music.

Many a moon will have waxed and waned before those present last night will find their memories of what they heard and setting in which they heard it growing dim.

Kousse- and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was "husbandry in the heavens" with but few stars dimly to be seen as the festival audience, which has maintained a consistent attendance of 4000 throughout three days due to series subscriptions, trouped in far more on time than usual under the russet canopy. To the initial fanfare of a Wagnerian motif, the "names" of the art and social worlds clambered into their boxes, though many of those who held reserve seat tickets deserted them for the greater cool of the darkness outside. The same festival spirit pervaded the assembling and seating. and the scene was colorful with costume and garb ranging from the most elaborate gowns and wraps. and stiff-shirt fronts. to camel's hair coats thrown over tennis court wear.

Koussevitzky Gets Ovation.

As the square cut. square featured Dr. Koussevitzky came briskly out to the podium, the salvos of applause from the audience gave to him and his orchestra which had risen to greet him, the most enthusiastic greeting of the three concerts. It was a "hai" which had connotations of "farewell" at the same time.

The eminent doctor of music had selected for this concluding concert a particularly apt and persuasive program. Doubtless he had his empyric reason for the choice. after all. Wagner and Tschaikowsky are are especially suited to open air concerting, but it is pleasant and surely not inaccurate to believe that the spirit of the final occasion primarily governed his selection.

Mendelssohn Fits Day.

At any rate the "Italian" symphony of Mendelssohn which opened the evening certainly recalled the brilliant summer day just over, and the sunny Alban hills found their counterpart in the Berkshires. However the truth and beauty of this work lie not so much in these suggestions as in its final classical form —romanticist that Mendelssohn was, he could be a formalist well enough when he chose, and this symphony represents one of his rarest attainments in this temper.

Such a work as this requires obviously the utmost clarity, finesse and precision in interpretation and performance. Last night it received the most elegant in both. that this correspondent can recall having heard. What is unusual Dr. Koussevitzky took all the sections in almost the identical vein and expres sion—a delicateness, a sheer budding buoyancy, a lightness even in the final movement of Saltatelli and Tarantelle—which was as elegant as it is rare. He sought no depth in this symphony of surface shimmer. He strove only for limpidity and lightness. and he attained it—he and his splendid orchestra—with an impeccability. a transparency and a fleeting quality quite beyond word of adulation. It was very grand indeed. a masterful interpretation and nothing short of a virtuoso performance by every part of the orchestra.

Contrasting Wagner.

Of all the Wagfinerian excerpts probably the best known are the "Lohengrin" prelude and the overture to "Die Meistersinger." In a way. their playing by the Boston orchestra needs no comment. so well known is it. Yet because last night's playing of both seemed even to outdo the reptuation. it does need at least that comment. The mystical Isthung ancient German landscape was drawn with ineffable beauty. The pomposities of "Die Meistersinger" were set out with such brilliant balance of thematic complexities. that the audience gave it the next most prolonged applause of the entire series.

But it was for the Tschaikowsky fifth that the audience reserved their great ovation. It was fitting that the sombreness of this work should be the farewell. the "Abschiedstuck" of the festival. It was fitting that the festival should conclude with a simply magnificent embodiment of this beautiful and tortured vision of something "seen through a glass darkly." It was a peak of interpretation. How often we now hear it said that this Fifth is sentimental and somewhat "vulgar." True, it has been a mess of sententious pottage often enough. But all lovers and defenders of this opus. owe to Dr. Koussevitzky great gratitude for the restraint without beggaring. the piognancy without sententiousness, the fullness without overdoing, with which he invested it last night.

Audience Spellbound.

It was overpowering with richness and superb in its emotional dimension. And it is impossible for me to recall a time when such resonance such sonority surged up and through it. when such beauty of detail (above all in the horn section of the second movement) stirred in it. The audience which had applauded every movement of the Mendelssohn sat spellbound here, not interrupting the mood once throughout, but at the end, they gave it thunderous applause and cheered with "bravos".

Splendidly as they had done in the two previous concerts, it was as if they had especially summed themselves for this final work of the festival, Dr. Koussetzky and his men, for it had an almost ceremonial impressiveness about it.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends; Koussevitzky and Orchestra Hailed

By WILLIAM T. CHASE, JR.
[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

LENOX, Aug. 16—The third annual Berkshire symphonic festival came to a brilliant close this evening with the playing of the final concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting. at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's lovely estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Both conductor and orchestra were given an ovation after an extraordinary dramatic and intense reading of the Tchaikovsky fifth symphony, the last selection on the program. Immediately after the theme typical of fate, "the eternal note of sadness," had reached its climax in the finale. the audience of between four and five thousand persons rose in a body and applauded. cheered and shouted their approval for a number of minutes.

FESTIVAL SPIRIT APPARENT

This demonstration was in keeping with the festival spirit everywhere apparent the last few days. In spite of very hot weather and pronounced humidity, everybody was out to have a good time, musically speaking, of course. and the results were entirely satisfactory. Close to 15,000 people, counting serial ticket holders as separate individuals, must have heard the noted conductor and the great Boston orchestra during the three concerts. Cars from all parts of the country, as well as one with a Hawaii registration, assembled in the parking space. Many attending the festival also visited a variety of other attractions in the vicinity. among them chamber music concerts, dance recitals and plays.

Besides the Tchaikovsky, tonight's program included Mendelssohn's delightful "Italian" Symphony and the preludes to Wagner's music dramas "Lohengrin," and "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg." Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were very much on their mettle. giving of their best, and at times seeming virtually in mid-season form.

Reasons for the artistic success of the concluding concert were easily to be found. Certain difficulties were experienced at the opening, Thursday night, for the low broad shell and the huge canvas canopy, 2500 feet long and 120 feet in width. were found to distort details of orchestration. The following morning at rehearsal Dr. Koussevitzky moved about the vast enclosure listening while Richard Burgin, the concert master. conducted. The outcome of this was a toning down of woodwinds and brasses and more emphasis on the strings. While vastly improved. however. the acoustics were not perfect. The shape of the canopy nd an upward slope on the grounds aused the orchestra to sound bet- r to those far in the rear, for ample.

TRAFFIC PROBLEM SOLVED

But these were minor matters after all and did not seriously detract from enjoyment of the orchestra's superlative playing. A more puzzling problem, Thursday night, that of the traffic, was likewise partially solved by yesterday afternoon. A drive near the back of the grounds was opened in addition to the one already in use. Persons came earlier. cars were parked with more rapidity and nearly everybody was seated when the program commenced. There was considerably less delay in getting away. too. and that was a great improvement.

Estimates placed the attendance yesterday at more than 5000 persons, an increase of nearly a thousand over that of Thursday. The audience overflowed from under the canopy. and also occupied a number of benches at the sides and rear. Bright summer clothes and a feeling of gay anticipation lent the affair a sort of garden party atmosphere, an atmosphere heightened by the presence of nearby booths in which refreshments, music books and so on were being sold. This evening, though, there was just a touch of sadness mingling with the carnival air, for Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony were ending their first visit to the Berkshires and, incidentally, the orchestra's first summer series outside Boston in the famous organization's history.

Returning to yesterday afternoon, attention naturally centered on the interpretation of the Brahms second symphony. An extremely effective one it was, with here and there a of a particular theme or solo passage than one has come to expect from the playing in Symphony Hall. This was no doubt made necessary by the outdoor nature of the proceedings. The program began with the "Larghetto e Affetuoso" from Handel's concerto grosso for string orchestra. opus 6, No. 6, in G minor, and continued with the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina." Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" and Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol. opus 34. One or two errors in the woodwinds and the squeaking of a bat, or perhaps it was a cricket, were the only faults, and hardly worth mentioning at that. They did nothing to mar one's complete pleasure in the performances.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT

One of the nearly numberless events associated with the Berkshire festival was the chamber music concert this afternoon by the South Mountain string quartet at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Chamber Music in Pittsfield. It was the sixth of eight Sunday concerts under the direction of William Willeke and the participating artists were Kathleen Parlow, first violin; Edwin Ideleer, second violin; Conrad Held. viola; Mr. Willeke. 'cello, and Gunnar Johansen. piano. The program consisted of Robert Schumann's Quartet in E flat major, Opus 47. Zoltan Kodaly's quartet in D major, Opus 10. and Joseph Jongen's quartet in A major, Opus 50.

This interesting and intelligently selected program was more than competently performed. a decided accomplishment when one recalls the damping effect of the extreme heat and humidity. So hot was it. in fact. that some of the capacity audience were forced to move to benches outside the building. With this in mind the gusto with which the Schumann quartet was played was rather remarkable. Composed in 1842. and dedicated to Count Wielhorsky the quartet had a geniality and freshness pleasing to hear, although it did not quite compare with the better known quintet. The solo 'cello part in the Andante. often considered as a tribute to Count Wielhorsky, was beautifully interpreted by Mr. Willeke.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

AUG 2 0 1936

Berkshire Symphonic Festival a Success

(Special to The Post)

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 20—With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000, coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

* * *

Symphonic Festival at Berkshires

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky closed the three-concert Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday night at the Holmwood estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson near Lenox, Mass. The audience of some five thousand, listening with the keenest attention despite the sweltering heat, had heard the Bostonians in their typically brilliant fashion play a program that began and ended with the Symphonies of Mendelssohn in A major and Tchaikovsky in E minor and included, in between, two Wagnerian Preludes — "Lohengrin" and "Meistersinger."

The opening program Thursday night consisted of the Larghetto from Handel's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice Espagnole" and Brahms's Second Symphony.

High lights of the Festival were a very spirited performance of the Brahms symphony, and the beautiful presentation of the Moussorgsky Prelude on Saturday and the grandiloquent rendering of the closing number of the Festival, Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, which so gripped the audience as to result in a demonstration of applause that lasted many minutes.

Berkshire Festival Concludes Tonight

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

Lenox, Aug. 15.

TOMORROW EVENING Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third and final concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, thus bringing to a close an event destined to prove of vast import to the musical world.

Ruth Marsters

For the ultimate significance of the festival goes far beyond the fact of its immediate success, considerable as that has been.

The unprecedented (and courageous) undertaking that it was for the great orchestra to perform in the summer out-of-doors must be considered in the nature of an experiment and the results valued according to their implications for the future.

That there is a festival-minded music public is obviously proven. It would be impossible to be a part of the audience that gathered 5,000 strong from all parts of the country to fill the huge tent and overflow into outside benches and not feel the eagerness and enthusiasm that gave to the whole a spirit of carnival.

* * *

AS OBVIOUSLY proven are certain fundamental laws governing the conditions favorable to orchestral performance.

It is right that a summer music festival should mean the opportunity of enjoying the beauties of nature as well as music, but not at the same time. They do not mix.

The same canopy arrangement that admits cooling pine-scented breezes is wont to do odd and frightful things to music, conspiring to make the brasses sound and resound, the strings to become lost, the wood winds dampened and the tympani to becomes a havoc wrecking instrument.

That the vagaries of the acoustics were overcome to a miraculous degree probably represents one of the most striking achievements in the long and honorable history of Dr. Koussevitzky's association with the orchestra.

* * *

IT WAS marvelous to witness this victory over circumstances at the opening concert on Thursday evening.

The first number, Schonberg's arrangement of the Bach Chorale prelude "Komm Gott Schopfer Heiliger Geist" was completely lost in the disintegration of sound.

While the performance of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture which followed, much was remedied and a certain balance of tone achieved, it was necessarily a studied performance, lacking in dramatic power.

With the Beethoven symphony, though balance was finally achieved, the result was necessarily a careful rather than a great performance. One that bore but slight resemblance to past performances of the work by the same orchestra and conductor.

That the orchestra finally soared to great heights of artistic expression in the Sibelius second symphony which concluded the first program was accordingly the more stirring in the triumph over great odds that it represented.

* * *

THE GROUND thus gained at the first concert has not been lost and Saturday's performance was one worthy in every respect of the virtuoso orchestra and its distinguished conductor.

The point has, however, been definitely proven that a concert hall is a necessary equipment for orchestral performances.

There is every reason to believe that an auditorium will be provided for future Berkshire festivals.

There is no reason why if this is accomplished that the festival season could not be lengthened or why the Berkshires could not become on of the great music centers of the world rivaling Salzburg and Beyreuth.

Leads Brilliant Concert

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its customarily brilliant vein yesterday at the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Festival-Goers Hear Symphony at Its Best

By Leo Gaffney

Lenox, August 15.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra enraptured 5000 people here this afternoon, causing thunders of applause to go rolling through these hills.

It was the second formal orchestral concert of three given on the grand estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Friday's suspension concertizing, in order to allow for other activities, was a happy respite for conductor and orchestra alike. Because of the ponderous insistence of the brass choir in the first program, Dr. Koussevitzky regrouped the instruments and the result of Saturday's concert was the clear perfection of Boston's orchestra as Boston knows it.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA, in its customarily brilliant vein under Dr. Koussevitzky, played a program that began with a prelude in the form of the Larghetto from Handel's sixth concerto grosso in G minor for string orchestra. This music afforded the festival crowd an opportunity to hear the vaunted beauty of tone of the strings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The prelude to Moussorgky's "Khovanstchina," which followed, was another chance for the citizenry hereabouts to observe the orchestra and conductor in one of the latter's specialties, Russian music. The incredibly beautiful horn solo, dying out in the faintest wisp of sound, was even more attractive in the sylvan setting here than indoors in a concert hall.

Equally beautiful, in the impressionistic manner of DeBussy, was "The Afternoon of a Faun," by DeBussy. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio," tone color for which the Bostonians have long been noted. Again it was Russian music being brilliantly presented under the Russian conductor. The concert closed with a grandiloquent presentation of Brahms' second symphony, which brought the audience to its feet in applause and cheers.

* * *

TOMORROW AFTERNOON, just prior to the third and concluding concert of the Boston Symphony, the interest of the large throngs here is divided between two strong-quartet concerts nearby.

At South Mountain, where Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge has her temple of music, there will be a program of chamber music by the South Mountain quartet. Admission is free. If the event is anything like last year's, the audience will overflow the temple and be spread devotely all over this green hill.

At the same time, 4 p. m., Jacques Gordon and his quartet will give a goodly program of chamber music on Music Mountain, Falls Village, Connecticut.

The final concert of the festival takes place tomorrow night at Holmwood, the Emerson estate, and the audience will then take its last look at the panoramic concert grounds, at least for another year.

* * *

BUT FOR the festival, Holmwood is "closed." Although in Europe at the present time, Mrs. Emerson has authorized the entire property to be used for the event.

Some idea of the property's size is gained by the fact of its location in three towns at once. The villa is in Lee, the music tent in Lenox and other parts in Stockbridge.

Symphony Leader, Librarian

(Photo by Don Jose Browning)

Dr Serge Koussevitzky (left) director of the Boston Symphony orchestra which is playing at the Berkshire music festival at Lenox, and Leslie Rogers, librarian for the orchestra, who has the task of arranging music before the concert and rearranging it after the musicians have left.

the Spanish caprice deliver quite all the electricity that Mr Koussevitzky was putting into it.

No such allowance was necessary for most of the Brahms Symphony No 2, in D-major, which brought the program to an impressive close. Possibly the adagio did suffer a little. It is a movement of great beauty, but its spell is easily broken; it needs the most favorable conditions for holding attention to the end, and for this movement a concert hall may be preferable. But all the other three movements evidently held the audience closely and all the movements were finely played.

The opening allegro was slightly faster than it is sometimes heard, but with no detriment to its lyric quality, and the poetic grace given to the third movement which replaces the usual scherzo was charming. This used to be the most popular in America of the four Brahms Symphonies, but lately the others have been overtaking it in popular favor, and the first perhaps now gets most votes.

That is largely because of its supposed resemblance to Beethoven; in this second symphony Brahms is no longer writing a Beethoven "10th symphony," and falls into the elegiac rather than the heroic vein. Yet the finale has great power, and Mr Koussevitzky gave to its noble song theme an inspiring nobility and breadth, bringing a fine concert to a heartening close.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 21 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OUTSTANDING SUCCESS

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee looks ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

On Sept. 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 Festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG [illegible] 1936

Among those who attended the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concert Sunday at "Holmwood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, were Mrs. Grace Fritts Newman, Mrs. Philip Reutenauer, Miss Elizabeth Reutenauer and Albert Knapp.

Music Notes

By Wm. F. Vollmer

Music in the Hills

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, gave the third and last concert of the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday night at "Holmwood," Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. The program, held under the vast canopy, consisted of Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony," Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger," and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

. . . .

A chamber music concert was also held on Sunday afternoon at South Mountain, Mrs. Elizabeth's Sprague Coolidge's auditorium near Pittsfield, with the South Mountain Quartet playing.

. . .

At the Playhouse-in-the-Hills Cummington, Mass., an instrumental program was given under Hugo Kortschak's direction.

. . .

Jacques Gordon's String Quartet, assisted by Frank Sheridan, pianist, gave a Brahms program at Music Mountain.

* * *

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 1 8 1936

Summer Music

By FRANCIS REGAL

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, which has carried through with great success a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its distinguished leader, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, is the highwater mark thus far of a musical revival which is of special importance for New England because of the large number of musical people who spend their summers here. This festival and other related musical activities illustrate the extraordinary changes which have taken place within the memory of the present generation.

Berkshire used to have its musical festivals, but they were of a very different type. Pittsfield had a choral society, and so did North Adams, and the two cities would hold festivals so timed that the same visiting orchestra could serve both on the same tour in order to reduce cost. These were urban festivals and were held in the largest buildings available. They were given in the spring before the summer visitors to Berkshire had arrived, and they usually marked the close of the musical season.

Until comparatively recent times there was no summer musical season. Whether from choice or from necessity professional musicians took a long vacation. Those who could afford it went to Europe. Many retired to the country and studied or loafed to fit their mood. A good many orchestra players found jobs in summer hotels, but singers and music teachers had little to do. Like college students, young musicians believed in a long vacation, and teachers found their classes dropping off before June ended.

Conditions in more recent times have changed radically for reasons which might provide a chapter for a social history of America. But the World war contributed to the change by bringing to this country so many of the famous virtuosi and musical pedagogs of the old world. It was no longer considered necessary for success to go abroad for study, and the establishment here of so many eminent teachers led to a demand for "master classes." This opportunity appealed to young professional musicians in all parts of the country who were free after the season ended and the schools and colleges closed.

It was logical, therefore, that summer classes should be formed at attractive places in the country, and the movement, once started, spread rapidly. In recent years the musical activities of New England have been growing and have included an increasing number of concerts.

But this trend also links up with the remarkable development of outdoor life in America, the result of the popularity of games, sports and automobiling. The colleges did their part by providing great stadiums which proved as suitable for concerts (Jupiter willing) as for football games. California with its arid climate took the lead in transferring orchestral music to the open air, but the East, long used to summer band concerts, plucked up courage and followed the example. The stadium concerts in New York have given a great impetus to this movement.

In New England another factor has been the Berkshire festival of chamber music maintained for a number of years by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge at the Music temple on her South mountain estate at Pittsfield, that has been transferred to Washington, but music teaching and summer chamber music concerts have been continued at the Music temple under the direction of Willem Willeke. All these developments have prepared the way for the great festival of symphonic music which has been carried on for three seasons by a public spirited group.

Such an enterprise calls for courage, for a country music festival is at the mercy of the elements, but this year a big tent has given shelter in case of rain, and if the new trend continues it is not inconceivable that Berkshire may sometime have a vast "music shed" suitable for all weather. For the mere assembling of the audience rain makes little difference, for the essential factor in the regional music festival is the automobile.

Times have changed since music on a large scale was a monopoly of the large city; the Berkshire festival is located "between Lenox and Stockbridge on route 7," and music-lovers come to it from as far away as Boston and New York.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

Berkshire Festival Outstanding Success Looks Ahead To 1937

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have either one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, membrs and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as membership. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 Festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL HAS SMALL SURPLUS

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented acheivement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee yesterday looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000, coming from 25 States, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis for 1936.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 1 4 1936

Symphonic Festival Already Has 30 Boxholders and Many Sustaining Members for 1937

Mrs. Grace Coolidge, President's Widow and Friend, Mrs. F. B. Adams, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and Mrs. Lowell Thomas Included—Sustaining Members Come From Wide Area—Membership Lists Close Nov. 1

Thirty patrons and many sustaining members have already sent their membership blanks with checks to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge to impress on the Festival management their hope of even greater success in 1937 than was experienced this summer with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Mrs. Grace Coolidge, widow of President Coolidge, and her friend, Mrs. F. B. Adams, Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, and Mrs. Lowell Thomas are already on the membership and patron list.

If more than three concerts are given by the Boston orchestra next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying additional tickets at the membership rate. The membership lists close Nov. 1. Patrons who had boxes this year are urged by the Festival management to send in their blanks at once. Several new patrons have sent in their names and they will be allotted boxes in the order of their receipt.

List of Patrons

Patrons for 1937 to date are Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Percy Musgrave and Mrs. W. M. Bullitt, Mrs. James Lawson Karrick, all of Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Comstock, Robert K. Wheeler, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, of Great Barrington; Miss Mary Parsons, Harris Fahnestock, Grenville L. Winthrop, Giraud Foster, John Shepard Jr., Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Miss Ellen Bullard and Miss Anna R. Alexandre of Lenox; Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, Mrs. Walter Atherton and Mrs. A. D. Budd of Windsor; Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Mrs. James H. Andrews, Mrs. E. A. Jones, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, of Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond; Mrs. N. H. Busey Jr., of Lee; Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice of Williamstown; Mrs. Evelyn Adams of Colebrook, Conn.; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; Mrs. Herbert Scoville of Taconic, Conn.

Sustaining memberships include the following:

Adams, Mrs. R. A. J. Hewat; Albany, Miss Elizabeth B. Carey; Mrs. L. S. Waldman; Amherst, Miss Mildred Pierpont; Bennington, Mrs. James S. Dennis, Mrs. Vincent Ravi-Booth, Mrs. F. S. Bradley; Colebrook, Dr. and Mrs. William Mather Lewis, Mrs. W. M. Wheeler; Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Sawyer, Mrs. M. Murray Crane; Great Barrington, Egremont and Sheffield, Miss Jean C. Redd, Professor Edward V. Huntington; T. Ellis Ramsdell, Mrs. John Emerson LaVeck, Frank Beattie Jr., Mrs. F. H. Turner, Mrs. William Stanley, Charles E. Hotchkiss, W. W. Bowers, Mrs. Frank Fall, Mrs. M. C. O. Fox.

Hudson, Mrs. Harry Pattison; Lanesboro, Mrs. E. M. Whiting, Miss Margery Whiting, Miss Marjorie R. Shaw; Lee, Mrs. R. S. Binkerd, Miss Dorothy Murdock, Mrs. Charles E. Bassett, Clarence N. Durant, Carl Wurtzbach; Lenox, William Alexander, Mr. and Tod Burke, Mrs. Ross Whistler, William L. Bull, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Weisbach, Peter A. Nielson, Miss Edith M. Flood, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Sears, Miss Mary R. Curtin, Miss Reloise Meyer, Mrs. Samual Frothingham, Prescott Buffum; Monterey, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Stafford; Norfolk and Winsted, Miss Edith M. Shepard, Mrs. John A. Topping, Mrs. Theron Rockwell, Mrs. William S. Curtis; North Adams, Mrs. and Mrs. Hugh P. Drysdale; Northampton, Mrs. M. K. Crooks, Mrs. Grace Coolidge, Mrs. F. B. Adams, Miss Dorothy Pease.

Pittsfield Members

Pittsfield, Mr. and Mrs. Monroe B. England, Mrs. Henry A. Francis, Miss Mary A. Bristol, Mrs. Charles L. Hibbard, Dr. and Mrs. Nathan Finkelstein, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Washburne, William D. Goodwin Mrs. Max E. Butler, Kenneth D. Beardsley, Miss Katharine McCormick, Edward C. Boutwell, Miss Mabel A. White, Mrs. John B. Thomas, Mrs. Albert England, Mrs. John Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate, Miss Mary R. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles K. Ferry, Mrs. Thomas A. Chatfield, Mrs. Russell A. Hibbs, Mr. and Mrs. C. Boardman Tyler, Mrs. Modestino Criscitiello, Miss Marjorie E. Miller, Donald B. Miller, Robert P. Easland, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell, Mrs. Newton H. Bates, Mrs. W. E. Cushing, Mrs. Frank H. Palmer, Mrs. Brenton S. Pomeroy, Miss Bertha C. Meyer, Miss Agnes Morewood.

Sharon, Lakeville and Falls Village, Miss Anne Sherman Hoyt, Mrs. G. G. Haven, Mr. and Mrs. Ward Belcher, Miss Emily H. Whitney, Miss G. Louise Robinson.

Stockbridge, Mrs. Charles E. Hull, Mr. and Mrs. John P. Potter, Dr. and Mrs. O. H. Kimberley, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Eleanor Sparks, William Miles; Williamstown, Mrs. Howard P. Stabler, Roderick Danaher; also several from Boston, Springfield, Worcester, Longmeadow, Millbrook, N. Y., Long Island and New York City.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

FESTIVAL MUSIC, BOOKS EXHIBIT

Unusual Interest is Being Shown in Display at Public Library.

Unusual interest is being shown in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival book and music display at the North Adams public library. Books on music appreciation, the symphony orchestra, and lives of the composers whose works were played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, as well as some of the music scores are included. There is also a "biographical chronicle" of the conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky. The list follows:

Beethoven—Symphony No. 7. Arranged as a piano solo, orchestral score in miniature on order.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 2. Miniature orchestral score.

Brahms—Symphony No. 2 and Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 5—in the new Harcourt Brace series of miniature scores with a special system of markings to enable the novice to follow the tune and identify the themes as they appear and reappear.

Wagner—Prelude to "Lohengrin" and Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"—arranged as piano solos.

Music Appreciation; Orchestras

Symphonic Masterpieces — Olin Downes. Glorified program notes that will appeal to the musical minded, whether listeners or players.

Victor Book of the Symphony—Charles O'Connell.

Symphonies and Their Meaning—Philip H. Goepp. On order.

Making An Orchestra—D. B. Commins. The appearance and function of each instrument.

Layman's Music Book—Olga Samaroff Stokowski. Developing yourself as an active listener.

How to Understand Music—Oscar Thompson. Opens doors to the pleasures of music.

Twentieth Century Music—Marion Bauer. How it developed, how to listen to it.

From Bach to Stravinsky—Edited by David Ewen. History of music by its foremost critics.

Biographies

Sergei Koussevitzky and His Epoch—Arthur Lourie.

Tschaikowsky—Edwin Evans. The Master Musicians' series.

My Musical Life—Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Moussorgsky—Oskar von Riesemann. A critical biography.

Georg Friedrich Handel—Wilhelm Hitzig. A life in German, with many pictures.

Mendelssohn, "A Second Elijah"—Schima Kaufman.

Conductor Is Cheered As Festival Is Ended

Lenox, Aug. 16—The third annual Berkshire Music festival closed tonight with a final concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate. The attendance tonight, it was officially stated, was more than 5000, somewhat larger than yesterday. The total attendance for the series was about 15,000 and there will be a surplus over and above the budget requirement, which totaled $18,000.

Conductor Serge Koussevitzky received tonight an ovation which, if anything, was more spontaneous and enthusiastic than those he received the preceding concerts. He was recalled four times each before the intermission and at the close. There were no encores again tonight, but the audience stood and applauded and cheered for 10 minutes, refusing to leave until the orchestra finally started to leave.

It was a beautiful, warm summer night, perfect in every respect. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival association, said tonight, "The public response has been wonderful and we are greatly encouraged. We believe that there is a demand for a continuation of this festival and we shall do everything possible toward its fulfilment."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 1 7 1936

Evening Ends

Favorite Numbers Orchestra Under Ends With Tschaik

By FRANCIS REGAL

Lenox, Aug. 16 — At the closing concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, given tonight in the big tent at Holmwood, Dr Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra presented another fine program which followed the lines marked out in the earlier concerts. No novelties. No modernist music. Nothing harsh or controversial. This is a sound conception of the needs of a festival still in the experimental stage and intended to be as wide as possible in its appeal.

Mr Koussevitzky has shown plenty of courage in asking Boston to give at least one hearing to a good deal of rather wild and extravagant music, and that is one of the duties which a great symphony orchestra may reasonably assume. But there is a wide difference between an orchestra's regular season and a short series of concerts addressed to all Berkshire and to as many people from outside as can be persuaded to come. The very fact that a symphonic tent show is experimental may be taken to exclude experimental music.

Old Favorites Are Heard

All of the works heard tonight were old favorites, although the opening number, Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, has been less frequently presented than some of this composer's works and is considerably less familiar than his "Scotch" symphony. The latter is a more powerful and energetic work, and is cast in a larger mold. Naturally it has made the stronger impression and held favor, along with the violin concerto, even after the partial eclipse of Mendelssohn's fame which set in toward the end of the last century.

The "Italian" symphony, a work conceived early but troublesome in execution and not published until after his death, was less fortunate but in recent times it has had a well deserved return to public favor. Possibly in respect to its subject matter it should be reckoned a minor work but few of the lighter symphonies equal it in charm. The 19th century attack on Mendelssohn, which Wagner led, made much of the "elegance of his music, a charge based on a careful neatness and precision, which were carried as far as possible in the "Italian" symphony.

(Continued from First Page)

One can understand how such high finish can irritate listeners who prefer a rougher and bolder style. Yet when it is not mere spit-and-polish, but the true mirror of a lucid and fastidious mind high finish is a great preservative and the new generation is enjoying to the full the smooth and melodious score of Mendelssohn's Fourth and last symphony. In the skilled hands of the Boston musicians all can feel the composer's perfect mastery of the orchestra; he was not an innovator in coloring or technic, but in full and harmonious sonority Mendelssohn has seldom equaled. On its own level his "Italian" symphony is a masterpiece which has lost little by the flight of time.

This was the only work given tonight which was even relatively unknown. The only question raised by the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" was how the famous slow crescendo, so thrilling in the theater, would come out in an open-air performance; the prelude to "Die Meistersinger" wears better but that also is too familiar to have any surprises for the present generation. Less frequently presented short works might perhaps have been found which would have led up equally well to Tschaikowsky's fifth symphony which gave the concert a superb climax.

This too, is much played but it stands wear better than most of the music of Tshaikowski, a composer so gloomy, intense and unrestrained that some of his finest works, while unaffected by the lapse of time, should not be heard too frequently. The "Pathetic" symphony, for example, takes too much out of the listener.

The fifth is less exhausting and therefore need not be laid away so frequently for a rest, while it contains in full measure those qualities which give the great Russian's music a place of its own. As an interpreter of Tschaikowsky Mr Koussevitzky is unsurpassed and in the opinion of some good judges unequaled; it was a fitting thing to reserve this favorite symphony to give the final impression left by the festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

64

AUG 17 1936

Berkshire Symphony Fete Ends Successful Program

Magnificent Performances by Boston Symphony Under Koussevitzky Heard by Thousands From All Over Country

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16—Up here in the Berkshire Hills far away from the noise and rush of the city, the third annual Berkshire Symphony Festival closed tonight. It has been a most successful festival, due in great part to the interest engendered by the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great leader, Serge Koussevitzky. Thousands of people attended the three performances coming from all parts of the country.

This has been no strictly society affair. The summer residents in the Berkshires were out in full force, but the greater part of the huge audiences have been made up of music lovers who came long before the concerts began and stayed until the last note was played.

This is quite as it should be, for if this festival is to expand and continue it needs the support of all music lovers. Stockbridge may yet become a national symphonic shrine to which will come those thousands who yearly go to Europe for summer music. If present plans mature the musician and music lover alike will hear in Stockbridge music of a quality which Europe cannot at present hope to equal. It is doubtful if anywhere in Europe one can find an orchestra the equal of the Boston Symphony and certainly there are few conductors of the caliber of Koussevitzky.

Excellent Programs

The programs have been excellent, well planned and designed to interest the audiences. There were no American works but there was no reason why there should be. The time will come, of course, when American works will appear on the programs, but the present is, in some ways, a time of experiments, and it would not do to stray far from the beaten path. That the present methods followed by the board of trustees is correct is judged by the fact that it is said that this year the festival will earn its expenses. If this proves true it will be a complete triumph for the trustees Even in the best days of festivals deficits were expected and if in these depressed days a musical festival can pay its own way the future indeed looks bright.

(Continued from First Page)

One has heard magnificent performances during these three concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky is tremendously interested in the festival and its possibilities and he seems to have given much of this enthusiasm to his men. They have played under difficulties of heat and bugs, conquered imperfect acoustics and the like and come proudly through their baptism of outdoor performance.

Great Applause

Tonight the huge audience expressed its approval in no uncertain manner. Shouts mingled with applause, applause which Dr. Koussevitzky shared with his men. The Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 5 was magnificently played. It is one of the works in which Dr. Koussevitzky excells. Who today can equal him in its interpretation? In like manner the Italian Symphony by Mendelssohn was given a suave and gracious reading, a fitting opening to this splendid program.

Between the symphonies one heard superlative performances of the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger." Some of Wagner's greatest passages are to be found in this music and it was evident tonight that Koussevitzky felt their power.

The festival is over. Only the finest memories remain and hopes for the future.

Trustees to Meet

The festival trustees have been called to meet with the festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at her home in Stockbridge Monday afternoon to consider the future. At the meeting will be Dr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

In a statement released after the concert tonight, Miss Robinson Smith in behalf of the trustees declared: "We are overjoyed at the public response to our endeavors to establish a festival center in the Berkshires. We have had people with us from at least 25 States and Canada and what impresses me most is that the crowd has been a representative one. That is as it should be. We don't know what the future will be, but there cannot help but be a future with the great response that we have had this year. The festival is a success and it has been a success through the awakening of a community spirit through this entire region including neighboring New York and Connecticut."

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

The future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is assured, if one may judge by the enthusiastic throngs of music-lovers attending the three concerts given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in Stockbridge last week. Thousands from far and near gathered to hear the programs, and it does not seem too much to predict that this Berkshire musical event may in time become as important as some of the European festivals, attracting many people who in the past have been accustomed to going abroad to hear special series of concerts.

Selection of the Boston Symphony for this year's festival was a most felicitous choice, for its prestige in the musical world, like that of its distinguished conductor, is secure. It is to be hoped that the same arrangements may be made for next year's festival, and that the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, "Holmwood," again will be available for the event.

The programs chosen for this year were designed to appeal to the great majority of patrons, rather than to the group interested particularly in "modern" composers. This is as it should be, if a festival is to succeed. In time, it may seem well to include some American composers in the bill of fare, but at present the trustees of the festival appear justified in their decision to offer classical works whose popularity already has been established.

It was a thrilling experience to see the huge audience stand in tribute to Koussevitzy and his inspired orchestra at the conclusion of the festival Sunday night, and to hear the spontaneous "bravos" and cheers that marked his repeated "curtain calls."

The success of this festival means much, not only to patrons of music, but to the general business interests in this section of the state. An influx of visitors from 25 states and Canada, such as was recorded at Stockbridge last week, is bound to have a favorable effect on many enterprises in a dozen communities. The support which the mercantile groups of Western Massachusetts have given to this event is well deserved.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

Aug. 21

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL '37 PLANS ON WAY

Special to the Telegram

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 20.—With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today began planning for 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends; Koussevitzky and Orchestra Hailed

By WILLIAM T. CHASE, JR.
[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

LENOX, Aug. 16—The third annual Berkshire symphonic festival came to a brilliant close this evening with the playing of the final concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's lovely estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Both conductor and orchestra were given an ovation after an extraordinary dramatic and intense reading of the Tchaikovsky fifth symphony, the last selection on the program. Immediately after the theme typical of fate, "the eternal note of sadness," had reached its climax in the finale, the audience of between four and five thousand persons rose in a body and applauded, cheered and shouted their approval for a number of minutes.

FESTIVAL SPIRIT APPARENT

This demonstration was in keeping with the festival spirit everywhere apparent the last few days. In spite of very hot weather and pronounced humidity, everybody was out to have a good time, musically speaking, of course, and the results were entirely satisfactory. Close to 15,000 people, counting serial ticket holders as separate individuals, must have heard the noted conductor and the great Boston orchestra during the three concerts. Cars from all parts of the country, as well as one with a Hawaii registration, assembled in the parking space. Many attending the festival also visited a variety of other attractions in the vicinity, among them chamber music concerts, dance recitals and plays.

Besides the Tchaikovsky, tonight's program included Mendelssohn's delightful "Italian" Symphony and the preludes to Wagner's music dramas "Lohengrin," and "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg." Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were very much on their mettle, giving of their best, and at times seeming virtually in mid-season form.

Reasons for the artistic success of the concluding concert were easily to be found. Certain difficulties were experienced at the opening, Thursday night, for the low broad shell and the huge canvas canopy, 2500 feet long and 120 feet in width, were found to distort details of orchestration. The following morning at rehearsal Dr. Koussevitzky moved about the vast enclosure listening while Richard Burgin, the concert master, conducted. The outcome of this was a toning down of woodwinds and brasses and more emphasis on the strings. While vastly improved, however, the acoustics were not perfect. The shape of the canopy and an upward slope on the grounds caused the orchestra to sound better to those far in the rear, for example.

TRAFFIC PROBLEM SOLVED

But these were minor matters after all and did not seriously detract from enjoyment of the orchestra's superlative playing. A more puzzling problem, Thursday night, that of the traffic, was likewise partially solved by yesterday afternoon. A drive near the back of the grounds was opened in addition to the one already in use. Persons came earlier, cars were parked with more rapidity and nearly everybody was seated when the program commenced. There was considerably less delay in getting away, too, and that was a great improvement.

Estimates placed the attendance yesterday at more than 5000 persons, an increase of nearly a thousand over that of Thursday. The audience overflowed from under the canopy, and also occupied a number of benches at the sides and rear. Bright summer clothes and a feeling of gay anticipation lent the affair a sort of garden party atmosphere, an atmosphere heightened by the presence of nearby booths in which refreshments, music books and so on were being sold. This evening, though, there was just a touch of sadness mingling with the carnival air, for Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony were ending their first visit to the Berkshires and, incidentally, the orchestra's first summer series outside Boston in the famous organization's history.

Returning to yesterday afternoon, attention naturally centered on the interpretation of the Brahms second symphony. An extremely effective one it was, with here and there a of a particular theme or solo passage than one has come to expect from the playing in Symphony Hall. This was no doubt made necessary by the outdoor nature of the proceedings. The program began with the "Larghetto e Affetuoso" from Handel's concerto grosso for string orchestra, opus 6, No. 6, in G minor, and continued with the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina," Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" and Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol, opus 34. One or two errors in the woodwinds and the squeaking of a bat, or perhaps it was a cricket, were the only faults, and hardly worth mentioning at that. They did nothing to mar one's complete pleasure in the performances.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 21 1936

SYMPHONY CONCERTS WERE GREAT SUCCESS

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecendented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee looks ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

On September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 Festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Berkshire Festival Has Small Surplus

Leaders Already Looking to 1937 Event; Annual Meeting Sept. 15

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented acheivement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this years' festival was 15,000, coming from 25 States, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have either one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as membership. The membership lists will close Nov. 1.

On Sept. 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for Sept. 15 at which time officers will be elected.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Berkshire Symphony Fete Ends Successful Program

Magnificent Performances by Boston Symphony Under Koussevitzky Heard by Thousands From All Over Country

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17—Up here in the Berkshire Hills far away from the noise and rush of the city, the third annual Berkshire Symphony Festival closed yesterday. It has been a most successful festival, due in great part to the interest engendered by the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great leader, Serge Koussevitzky. Thousands of people attended the three performances coming from all parts of the country.

This has been no strictly society affair. The summer residents in the Berkshires were out in full force, but the greater part of the huge audiences have been made up of music lovers, who came long before the concerts began and stayed until the last note was played.

This is quite as it should be, for if this festival is to expand and continue it needs the support of all music lovers. Stockbridge may yet become a national symphonic shrine to which will come those thousands who yearly go to Europe for summer music. If present plans mature the musician and music lover alike will hear in Stockbridge music of a quality which Europe cannot at present hope to equal. It is doubtful if anywhere in Europe one can find an orchestra the equal of the Boston Symphony and certainly there are few conductors of the caliber of Koussevitzky.

Excellent Programs

The programs have been excellent, well planned and designed to interest the audiences. There were no American works but there was no reason why there should be. The time will come, of course, when American works will appear on the programs, but the present is, in some ways, a time of experiments, and it would not do to stray far from the beaten path. That the present methods followed by the board of trustees is correct is judged by the fact that it is said that this year the festival will earn its expenses. If this proves true it will be a complete triumph for the trustees Even in the best days of festivals deficits were expected and if in these depressed days a musical festival can pay its own way the future indeed looks bright.

One has heard magnificent performances during these three concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky is tremendously interested in the festival and its possibilities and he seems to have given much of this enthusiasm to his men. They have played under difficulties of heat and bugs, conquered imperfect acoustics and the like and come proudly through their baptism of outdoor performance.

Great Applause

Last night the huge audience expressed its approval in no uncertain manner. Shouts mingled with applause applause which Dr. Koussevitsky shared with his men. The Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 5 was magnificently played. It was one of the works in which Dr. Koussevitzky excells. Who today can equal him in its interpretation? In like manner the Italian Symphony by Mendelssohn was given a suave and gracious reading, a fitting opening to this splendid program.

Between the symphonies one heard superlative performances of the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger." Some of Wagner's greatest passages are to be found in this music and it was evident tonight that Koussevitzky felt their power.

The festival is over. Only the finest memories remain and hopes for the future.

Trustees to Meet

The festival trustees have been called to meet with the festival president Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at her home in Stockbridge this afternoon to consider the future. At the meeting will be Dr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

In a statement released after the concert last night, Miss Robinson Smith in behalf of the trustees declared: "We are overjoyed at the public response to our endeavors to establish a festival center in the Berkshires. We have had people with us from at least 25 States and Canada and what impresses me most is that the crowd has been a representative one. That is as it should be. We don't know what the future will be, but there cannot help but be a future with the great response that we have had this year. The festival is a success and it has been a success through the awakening of a community spirit through this entire region including neighboring New York and Connecticut."

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

AUG 20 1936

Berkshire Festival Attended by 15,000

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936 The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. The membership lists close November 1.

September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 17 1936

Permanence of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is Now Definitely Assured

Series of Three Magnificent Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra Attended by Total of Approximately 15,000 Persons—Receipts More Than Cover This Year's Budget of $18,000 and Leave Balance to be Applied to Last Year's Deficit—Ambitious Plans for Future in Abeyance Until More Sober Thinking Replaces Enthusiasm Engendered by This Year's Festival's Great Success.

Its permanence assured by the discovery of the real formula for its success in a series of three magnificent concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra that had brought out a combined attendance of approximately 15,000, the Berkshire Symphonic festival closed its third season at Holmwood in Lenox last evening.

Counting receipts which more than covered its $18,000 budget and left a balance to be applied to last year's deficit, officers of the festival corporation this morning said that there was now no longer any doubt that it would continue as an annual affair. The only question is which of the ambitious plans for its development as an even greater and more important event that have been developing in the minds of many of those associated with it since the first concert in this season's series made its artistic and financial success a certainty, shall be adopted and carried out.

Arrangements that had been made tentatively over the week-end for a meeting today of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, with the officers of the corporation to begin the shaping of future plans for the institution were abandoned last night when those in charge came to the realization that their ideas, inspired by the grand success of this year, needed to crystalize under more sober thinking before any definite planning should be done for the future. But they said that there was no question whatever now that the festival would be an annual affair; that the only matters to be decided were the means of making it a more important and valuable institution. These will be decided after the members of the corporation and Dr. Koussevitzky have had an opportunity to think out the numerous ideas that have sprung from this year's success, and have conferred about them.

No definite figures as to revenue and profit from this year's series were available today but officers of the corporation said there was no doubt at all that the $18,000 budget, which had seemed like an immense overhead when this year's undertaking was planned, had been covered and that there would be a balance to be applied to the reduction of last year's deficit. There is little expectation that this debt can be wiped out entirely but this year's success makes possible the liquidation of a part of it.

No exact count of the ticket stubs had been made today but those in charge said that there were more than 4,500 under the great marquee tent or about its fringes at the opening concert Thursday evening, that 5,000 were on the grounds for the second concert Saturday afternoon and that last evening's crowd at the concluding offering was well above 5,000. The large attendance with which the series started and the steady increase in the crowd as the series progressed was credited entirely to the magnetism for music lovers of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

On Saturday afternoon when the feature of the program was Brahms' Second symphony in D major, played after a first part which had been taken from the works of Handel, Mussorgsky, Debussy and Rimsky-Korsakov, and last evening when Dr. Koussevitzky offered Mendelssohn's Symphony in A major, the Lohengrin and Meistersinger preludes of Wagner and Tchaikovsky's E minor symphony, the ovations given him and his orchestra on Thursday evening were surpassed by the enthusiastic audiences. Time and again they called him back to the platform both at the intermission and at the conclusion of the concerts, rising spontaneously to add hearty cheers to their applause. That nothing finer than the orchestra's work under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton in the three concerts has ever been heard in the Berkshires was the positive assertion of discriminating music lovers who attended each of the programs and whose enthusiasm for the annual repetition of the festival is as great as that of Dr. Koussevitzky, who had never led his orchestra in an out-door concert until he conducted Thursday's program, and of the officers of the festival.

By opening to incoming traffic a second road from the main highway to the parking lot near the concert tent, the committee on arrangements overcame Saturday afternoon and last evening the difficulties in reaching the grounds that had been experienced on Friday night. Then a single narrow road leading into Holmwood, the expansive estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson where the affair took place, had been found grossly inadequate and many of those who had left home in what they supposed was ample time did not get their cars onto the ground and into the parking lot until part of the concert had been played even though it was delayed for nearly a half hour out of consideration for them. The opening of the second road greatly expedited the approach to the concert scene by automobile. Better arrangements were also in effect for the departure of the cars after the concert.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

SHIRE FESTIVAL HAS SMALL SURPLUS

Dr. Koussevitzky to Discuss Plans for Next Year's Musical Event

Stockbridge, Aug. 20.—With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as membership. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 20 1936

NOW LOOK TO 1937 MUSIC FESTIVAL

With All Bills Paid and Slight Surplus

AFTER THIS YEAR'S

Sustaining Memberships and Patrons Will be Invited on Same Basis as in 1936.

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee is looking ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it," today said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have either one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the membership rate. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshire to discuss plans for the 1937 Festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

Berkshire Festival Has Slight Surplus

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony orchestra and its great conductor, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have either one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as membership. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

Miss Hazel Fuller arrived at her home Wednesday after passing a week at Scout camp Edith Macy at Briarcliff Manor.

Mr and Mrs Earle H. Kittle, their guest, Rev. Calvin Stickles, also Carl Relyea attended the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Sunday evening.

Mr and Mrs William Spath of Cold Springs, Mr and Mrs Gus Erickson and daughter, Joyce, and Miss Martin of Stottville were Sunday guests of Mr and Mrs Benedict Spath.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WITH SLIGHT SURPLUS, IS MAKING PLANS FOR NEXT SEASON

Sustaining Membership and Patron List Now Open To Close Nov. 1—Dr. Koussevitzky of Boston Symphony Orchestra Coming to Berkshires Sept. 20—Members Have Privileges if More Than Three Concerts Are Given

With all bills practically paid and a slight surplus in the treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining members and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance for the three concerts given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate in Lenox, was 15,000, coming from 25 States, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has shown conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge.

Lists Now Open

The sustaining membership and patron lists are now open on the same basis as 1936. Invitations will be in the mails within a few days. Those wishing to subscribe at once may do so by writing the office at Stockbridge. A sustaining member pays $5 and in return may have one or two tickets for three concerts depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays $75 for a box seating six for three concerts.

If there are more than three concerts, sustaining members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the membership rate.

The membership lists close Nov. 1.

Dr. Koussevitzky is coming to the Berkshires Sept. 20, to discuss plans for 1937. The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held Sept. 15 at which time officers will be elected.

The Festival Idea; An Experiment in The Berkshires

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Let us at once admit that there can be no question about the energy and sincerity of the interested parties (as Dickens might have put it) in the current Berkshire festival of symphonic music. Their aim, let us also admit, is to make in the beautiful setting of the countryside around Stockbridge and Lenox a definite place of pilgrimage for lovers of music. The summer is the time, and the project has no strings attached to it as would be connected with a festival in a conservatory or to answer the needs of a particular group.

Now let us proceed to admit the sucess of the concerts this past week by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky, on Mrs. Emerson's estate. The first night indicated an extraordinary success, and evidently the idea of such a serious symphonic festival appealed to large masses of the people. If this had not been so, no one would have had to linger for half an hour in a stream of caterpillar-like traffic, and the festival would not have had the impetus even to consider the plans for another year. But obviously the popular interest was there, and hence we are entitled to discuss improvements and prospects for another year.

First it must be said that festivals must have an idea behind them. Bayreuth need hardly be cited as an example, though of course it established the precedent. Salzburg began because it was the birthplace of Mozart and it flourishes today on that initial idea. The last time that the present writer was in Salzburg (in 1934) another idea was broached in doing honor to Richard Strauss. But "The Egyptian Helen" was not much of a success and another of Strauss' operas was withdrawn. What took its place? Why, none other than the popular hit of that season and any other—Mozart's "Don Giovanni!"

The lesson is easy to comprehend. If, as in Salzburg, you work hard and intelligently to establish such a composer as Mozart in the popular consciousness, it is foolish to disestablish him when the festival in his name has become famous. In that same year we met as celebrated French novelist (Francois Mauriac, as a matter of fact) who said that the only fault he found with Salzburg was that he did not have the opportunity to hear enough Mozart, which was one of the reasons why he came. Naturally there is no sense in being hidebound and confining oneself exclusively to one composer, but there is also no point in deserting the composer (or the idea) which has made one's fame.

"Caesar had his Brutus and Charles I his Cromwell; let George III profit by their example.' ' Salzburg is by no means dead, but do not let' Lenox make the same mistakes! Later on we shall have something to say on the English Mozart festival at Glyndebourne

Again, the Berkshires must follow their own course. They have begun as a symphonic festival, then they must not stray too far from this ideal. Opera is enticing, but not—let us agree—in the open air. There are countless choral works which should be given a hearing. But we are all too well aware of the public apathy for choral works.

The Berkshire Festival can become a real summer shrine of music, if present records of attendance are of any value, for the future. New and neglected works should be performed, for there is no point in merely imitating the winter repertoire. But there should be no rash ventures into other fields, if only because the festival aims to be broadly popular. The annual festival at Hartford has erred on the side of being too esoteric and too precious. From the practical side it may be said that the traffic situation on the first night at Lenox must have alienated a good many music lovers who hoped for the quiet of the country and not the congestion of Fifty-seventh street. Musically there is no question but that a great opportunity exists for the summer season in this part of the world. Only, for the most part, let achievement precede publicity!

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

WILL PLAN ANOTHER BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Lenox Event of Last Week a Financial Success — May Enlarge Scope of Program

Stockbridge, Aug. 21—(AP)—Officials of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, in which the Boston Symphony orchestra played here last week said tonight the festival had netted a small surplus, and termed this "an almost unprecedented achievement in America."

"The reception accorded the orchestra proves conclusively the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, declared.

More than 15,000 persons from 25 states, Europe and Canada attended the festival, she said.

Plans will be made for the fourth annual event at a meeting here September 15. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, will attend another meeting September 20 to discuss the possibility of enlarging the scope of next year's program, Miss Smith said. This year the Boston orchestra gave only three concerts.

85

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 17 1936

Permanence of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is Now Definitely Assured

Series of Three Magnificent Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra Attended by Total of Approximately 15,000 Persons—Receipts More Than Cover This Year's Budget of $18,000 and Leave Balance to be Applied to Last Year's Deficit—Ambitious Plans for Future in Abeyance Until More Sober Thinking Replaces Enthusiasm Engendered by This Year's Festival's Great Success.

Its permanence assured by the discovery of the real formula for its success in a series of three magnificent concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra that had brought out a combined attendance of approximately 15,000, the Berkshire Symphonic festival closed its third season at Holmwood in Lenox last evening.

Counting receipts which more than covered its $18,000 budget and left a balance to be applied to last year's deficit, officers of the festival corporation this morning said that there was now no longer any doubt that it would continue as an annual affair. The only question is which of the ambitious plans for its development as an even greater and more important event that have been developing in the minds of many of those associated with it since the first concert in this season's series made its artistic and financial success a certainty, shall be adopted and carried out.

Arrangements that had been made tentatively over the week-end for a meeting today of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, with the officers of the corporation to begin the shaping of future plans for the institution were abandoned last night when those in charge came to the realization that their ideas, inspired by the grand success of this year, needed to crystalize under more sober thinking before any definite planning should be done for the future. But they said that there was no question whatever now that the festival would be an annual affair; that the only matters to be decided were the means of making it a more important and valuable institution. These will be decided after the members of the corporation and Dr. Koussevitzky have had an opportunity to think out the numerous ideas that have sprung from this year's success, and have conferred about them.

No definite figures as to revenue and profit from this year's series were available today but officers of the corporation said there was no doubt at all that the $18,000 budget, which had seemed like an immense overhead when this year's undertaking was planned, had been covered and that there would be a balance to be applied to the reduction of last year's deficit. There is little expectation that this debt can be wiped out entirely but this year's success makes possible the liquidation of a part of it.

No exact count of the ticket stubs had been made today but those in charge said that there were more than 4,500 under the great marquee tent or about its fringes at the opening concert Thursday evening, that 5,000 were on the grounds for the second concert Saturday afternoon and that last evening's crowd at the concluding offering was well above 5,000. The large attendance with which the series started and the steady increase in the crowd as the series progressed was credited entirely to the magnetism for music lovers of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

On Saturday afternoon when the feature of the program was Brahms' Second symphony in D major, played after a first part which had been taken from the works of Handel, Mussorgsky, Debussy and Rimsky-Korsakov, and last evening when Dr. Koussevitzky offered Mendelssohn's Symphony in A major, the Lohengrin and Meistersinger preludes of Wagner and Tchaikovsky's E minor symphony. the ovations given him and his orchestra on Thursday evening were surpassed by the enthusiastic audiences. Time and again they called him back to the platform both at the intermission and at the conclusion of the concerts, rising spontaneously to add hearty cheers to their applause. That nothing finer than the orchestra's work under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton in the three concerts has ever been heard in the Berkshires was the positive assertion of discriminating music lovers who attended each of the programs and whose enthusiasm for the annual repetition of the festival is as great as that of Dr. Koussevitzky, who had never led his orchestra in an out-door concert until he conducted Thursday's program, and of the officers of the festival.

By opening to incoming traffic a second road from the main highway to the parking lot near the concert tent, the committee on arrangements overcame Saturday afternoon and last evening the difficulties in reaching the grounds that had been experienced on Friday night. Then a single narrow road leading into Holmwood, the expansive estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson where the affair took place, had been found grossly inadequate and many of those who had left home in what they supposed was ample time did not get their cars onto the ground and into the parking lot until part of the concert had been played even though it was delayed for nearly a half hour out of consideration for them. The opening of the second road greatly expedited the approach to the concert scene by automobile. Better arrangements were also in effect for the departure of the cars after the concert.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

SHIRE FESTIVAL HAS SMALL SURPLUS

Dr. Koussevitzky to Discuss Plans for Next Year's Musical Event

Aug 20/36

Stockbridge, Aug. 20.—With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as membership. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 20 1936

NOW LOOK TO 1937 MUSIC FESTIVAL

With All Bills Paid and Slight Surplus

AFTER THIS YEAR'S

Sustaining Memberships and Patrons Will be Invited on Same Basis as in 1936.

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee is looking ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it," today said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have either one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the membership rate. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshire to discuss plans for the 1937 Festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

Berkshire Festival Has Slight Surplus

Aug 20/36

With all bills paid and a slight surplus in its treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement in America, the Berkshire Symphonic festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining memberships and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance at this year's festival was 15,000 coming from 25 states, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony orchestra and its great conductor, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The sustaining membership and patron lists for 1937 are now open on the same basis as 1936. A sustaining member pays dues of $5 and may have either one or two tickets for three concerts, depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays dues of $75 for a box seating six for three concerts. If there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as membership. The membership lists will close November 1.

On September 20 Dr Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to discuss plans for the 1937 festival.

The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., is scheduled for September 15 at which time officers will be elected.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

Miss Hazel Fuller arrived at her home Wednesday after passing a week at Scout camp Edith Macy at Briarcliff Manor.

Mr and Mrs Earle H. Kittle, their guest, Rev. Calvin Stickles, also Carl Relyea attended the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Sunday evening.

Mr and Mrs William Spath of Cold Springs, Mr and Mrs Gus Erickson and daughter, Joyce, and Miss Martin of Stottville were Sunday guests of Mr and Mrs Benedict Spath.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WITH SLIGHT SURPLUS, IS MAKING PLANS FOR NEXT SEASON

Sustaining Membership and Patron List Now Open To Close Nov. 1—Dr. Koussevitzky of Boston Symphony Orchestra Coming to Berkshires Sept. 20—Members Have Privileges if More Than Three Concerts Are Given

With all bills practically paid and a slight surplus in the treasury, an almost unprecedented achievement, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival executive committee today looked ahead to 1937. Sustaining members and patrons will be invited on the same basis as 1936. The total attendance for the three concerts given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate in Lenox, was 15,000, coming from 25 States, Europe and Canada.

"The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has shown conclusively that the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," said the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge.

Lists Now Open

The sustaining membership and patron lists are now open on the same basis as 1936. Invitations will be in the mails within a few days. Those wishing to subscribe at once may do so by writing the office at Stockbridge. A sustaining member pays $5 and in return may have one or two tickets for three concerts depending on where he chooses to sit. A patron pays $75 for a box seating six for three concerts.

If there are more than three concerts, sustaining members and patrons will have the privilege of buying tickets for the additional concerts at the membership rate.

The membership lists close Nov. 1. Dr. Koussevitzky is coming to the Berkshires Sept. 20, to discuss plans for 1937. The annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held Sept. 15 at which time officers will be elected.

The Festival Idea; An Experiment in The Berkshires

Her. Aug. 21/36

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Let us at once admit that there can be no question about the energy and sincerity of the interested parties (as Dickens might have put it) in the current Berkshire festival of symphonic music. Their aim, let us also admit, is to make in the beautiful setting of the countryside around Stockbridge and Lenox a definite place of pilgrimage for lovers of music. The summer is the time, and the project has no strings attached to it as would be connected with a festival in a conservatory or to answer the needs of a particular group.

Now let us proceed to admit the sucess of the concerts this past week by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky, on Mrs. Emerson's estate. The first night indicated an extraordinary success, and evidently the idea of such a serious symphonic festival appealed to large masses of the people. If this had not been so, no one would have had to linger for half an hour in a stream of caterpillar-like traffic, and the festival would not have had the impetus even to consider the plans for another year. But obviously the popular interest was there, and hence we are entitled to discuss improvements and prospects for another year.

First it must be said that festivals must have an idea behind them. Bayreuth need hardly be cited as an example, though of course it established the precedent. Salzburg began because it was the birthplace of Mozart and it flourishes today on that initial idea. The last time that the present writer was in Salzburg (in 1934) another idea was broached in doing honor to Richard Strauss. But "The Egyptian Helen" was not much of a success and another of Strauss' operas was withdrawn. What took its place? Why, none other than the popular hit of that season and any other—Mozart's "Don Giovanni!"

The lesson is easy to comprehend. If, as in Salzburg, you work hard and intelligently to establish such a composer as Mozart in the popular consciousness, it is foolish to disestablish him when the festival in his name has become famous. In that same year we met as celebrated French novelist (Francois Mauriac, as a matter of fact) who said that the only fault he found with Salzburg was that he did not have the opportunity to hear enough Mozart, which was one of the reasons why he came. Naturally there is no sense in being hidebound and confining oneself exclusively to one composer, but there is also no point in deserting the composer (or the idea) which has made one's fame.

"Caesar had his Brutus and Charles I his Cromwell; let George III profit by their example.' ' Salzburg is by no means dead, but do not let Lenox make the same mistakes! Later on we shall have something to say on the English Mozart festival at Glyndebourne Again, the Berkshires must follow their own course. They have begun as a symphonic festival, then they must not stray too far from this ideal. Opera is enticing, but not—let us agree—in the open air. There are countless choral works which should be given a hearing. But we are all too well aware of the public apathy for choral works.

The Berkshire Festival can become a real summer shrine of music, if present records of attendance are of any value, for the future. New and neglected works should be performed, for there is no point in merely imitating the winter repertoire. But there should be no rash ventures into other fields, if only because the festival aims to be broadly popular. The annual festival at Hartford has erred on the side of being too esoteric and too precious. From the practical side it may be said that the traffic situation on the first night at Lenox must have alienated a good many music lovers who hoped for the quiet of the country and not the congestion of Fifty-seventh street. Musically there is no question but that a great opportunity exists for the summer season in this part of the world. Only, for the most part, let achievement precede publicity!

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

WILL PLAN ANOTHER BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Lenox Event of Last Week a Financial Success — May Enlarge Scope of Program

Stockbridge, Aug. 21—(AP)—Officials of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, in which the Boston Symphony orchestra played here last week said tonight the festival had netted a small surplus, and termed this "an almost unprecedented achievement in America."

"The reception accorded the orchestra proves conclusively the American public is ready for the festival idea and will support it," Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, declared.

More than 15,000 persons from 25 states, Europe and Canada attended the festival, she said.

Plans will be made for the fourth annual event at a meeting here September 15. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, will attend another meeting September 20 to discuss the possibility of enlarging the scope of next year's program, Miss Smith said. This year the Boston orchestra gave only three concerts.

BLANK PAGE

87

Berkshire Festival
News
for 1937 ~

—Boston News— THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Finds Permanent Home

Tanglewood provides setting for fourth season of summer concerts by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra—Two series of programs are planned for August.

Only the rustle of the wind in the pines and hemlocks will disturb the hushed moment just before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky again raises his baton to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of the 1937 season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 5.

Over the wooded and grassy slopes of Tanglewood in Stockbridge, where Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and where years before Kickapoo Indians gathered in communal deliberation, will float the strains of Beethoven's Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies to open the fourth season of New England's summer festival.

With three previous symphonic festivals giving the Berkshires the appearance of a national music center, donation of Tanglewood as a home for summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, places the undertaking on a permanent basis. The estate of 210 acres was presented to the Orchestra last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a sponsor of the Berkshire concerts.

Tanglewood lies on the northern slope of the Stockbridge Bowl, a mile of meadow, woods, parks with giant pines and stately birches contrasting with the well-kept formality of lawns, pools and magnificent hemlocks. Twinkling Lake Mahkeenac lies in the basin.

Seats for 5000

The concerts will be given on the upper end of the slope, with more than 5000 seats arranged on a slight rise. Audiences will be sheltered against the weather by a huge tent-roof, planned to aid the acoustics. The stage for the orchestra is at the foot of the incline.

No startlingly beautiful building is planned, apparently, which would dwarf the natural scenic beauty of the estate and the surrounding hills. Eliel Saarinen, commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival, will defer final drafts until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Present plans indicate an intention to merge the building with its surroundings, making it as inconspicuous as possible.

The festival has grown rapidly in drawing power and the size of the project this year has been doubled because it was impossible to fill all the requests for seats in the one week last year.

Two Series of Concerts

Two series of concerts are planned for this season. The first, beginning Aug. 5, continues on the 7th and 8th. The second, beginning Aug. 12, continues on the 14th and 15th.

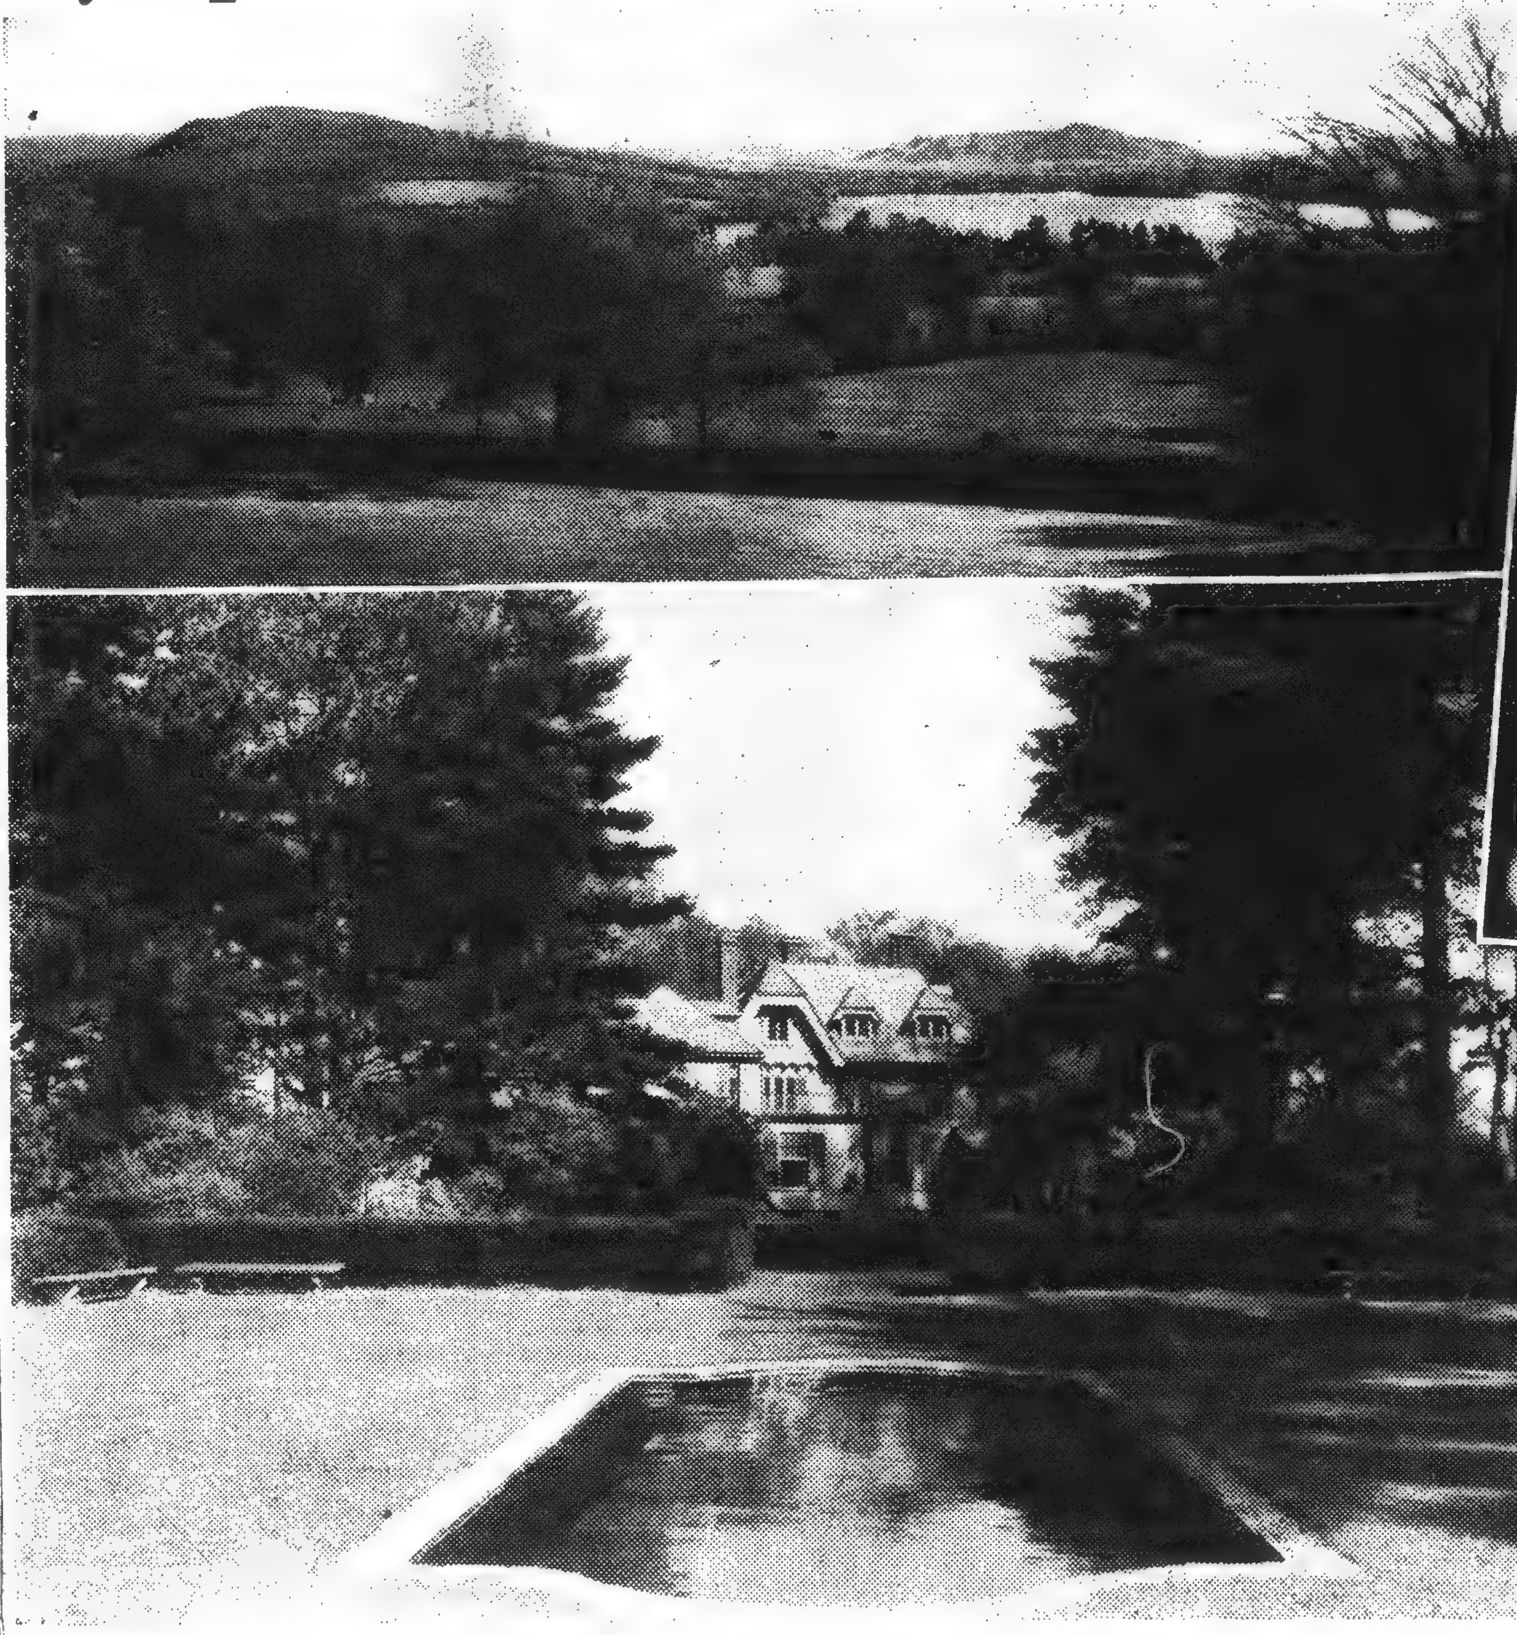
In the first week there will be an all-Beethoven program (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Leonore" Overture); Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and ballet music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire-Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week there will be an all-Wagner program, including excerpts form "Rienzi", "Tannhäuser", "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried"; also an all-Brahms program (the First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture), Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius, and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

The concert sponsors have no intention of interfering with the many cultural summer activities already established in the Berkshires.

Mention is made on festival posters of 13 activities planned at the same time, including Ted Shawn's dance recitals, the Mohawk Drama Festival, and the Berkshire Garden Center, which has contributed flowers and shrubs to add to the attraction of Tanglewood.

Tanglewood was established in 1849 by William Tappan, Boston banker and merchant. Its landscaping features include a formal garden, an avenue of towering pines, a rose garden, which is entered through an iron gate brought from Italy, and a privet hedge, 12 feet high and interspersed with hemlock.



Tanglewood, Given to Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks

Upper—Site of Concerts Looking Toward Lake Wahkeenie
Lower—House and Portion of Formal Garden on Estate

John Gass: Underwood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

HORTICULTURE

Vol. XV. June 15, 1937 No. 12

Published Semi-Monthly
by the MASSACHUSETTS HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY
at HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

EDWARD I. FARRINGTON, Editor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES
One Year, in advance, $1.00; To Foreign Countries, $2.00

Nature Wedded to Music

NATURE is being wedded to music in an unusually fitting setting at Stockbridge, Mass., a lovely town in the Berkshires. The 210-acre estate known as "Tanglewood" has been given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which has been a musical event in the western part of the state for the last three years.

"Tanglewood" is beautifully situated between Stockbridge and Lenox, overlooking the famous Stockbridge Bowl, containing Lake Mahkeenac. It is historically interesting, because it was on the shores of this lake that the Stockbridge tribe of Indians gathered for their campfires. It was at "Tanglewood," too, that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, although, unfortunately, the little red cottage in which he wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales" was burned some years ago.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 27 1937

Festival Patron List Grows To 106

Executive Committee Meets With Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia

Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia was hostess at Wheatleigh in Lenox yesterday to a meeting of the executive committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The list of patrons, growing almost daily, has reached a total of 106.

New patrons include Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis of Stockbridge and New York; Ernest B. Dane of Boston, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is taking a box for both series of concerts in August. Mr. and Mrs. Dane have made reservations at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox for the first two weeks in August.

Trustees of the Festival will meet at Wheatleigh June 8 and the advisory board will meet at a place to be announced June 15.

New Circular Printed

The new Festival circular with scenes from "Tanglewood," a picture of the orchestra conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and a map showing routes to "Tanglewood," has been printed, and 8500 copies will be distributed through a selected mailing list and by community chairmen. The single sheet circular has already reached a circulation of 65,000 with thousands of them having been passed out in the South through the efforts of Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

The Festival, the Mohawk Drama Festival and the Bennington School of the Dance are cooperating on another single sheet circular which will have a circulation of 45,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 6 - 1937

CONCERTS IN BERKSHIRES

Festival Will Be Held In Tent—Delay in Providing Shed

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., June 5.—The Berkshire festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are to be given in a tent in August again this year, as a permanent music shed cannot be completed in time at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, now owned by the orchestra. The canopy will be placed north of the formal garden.

More than fifty per cent of the festival's $40,000 budget has been subscribed. The corporation has elected Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield executive vice president.

pines and hemlocks will disturb the hushed moment just before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky again raises his baton to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of the 1937 season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 5.

Over the wooded and grassy slopes of Tanglewood in Stockbridge, where Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and where years before Kickapoo Indians gathered in communal deliberation, will float the strains of Beethoven's Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies to open the fourth season of New England's summer festival.

With three previous symphonic festivals giving the Berkshires the appearance of a national music center, donation of Tanglewood as a home for summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, places the undertaking on a permanent basis. The estate of 210 acres was presented to the Orchestra last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a sponsor of the Berkshire concerts.

Tanglewood lies on the northern slope of the Stockbridge Bowl, a mile of meadow, woods, parks with giant pines and stately birches contrasting with the well-kept formality of lawns, pools and magnificent hemlocks. Twinkling Lake Mahkeenac lies in the basin.

Seats for 5000

The concerts will be given on the upper end of the slope, with more than 5000 seats arranged on a slight rise. Audiences will be sheltered against the weather by a huge tent-roof, planned to aid the acoustics. The stage for the orchestra is at the foot of the incline.

No startlingly beautiful building is planned, apparently, which would dwarf the natural scenic beauty of the estate and the surrounding hills. Eliel Saarinen, commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival, will defer final drafts until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Present plans indicate an intention to merge the building with its surroundings, making it as inconspicuous as possible.

The festival has grown rapidly in drawing power and the size of the project this year has been doubled because it was impossible to fill all the requests for seats in the one week last year.

Two Series of Concerts

Two series of concerts are planned for this season. The first, beginning Aug. 5, continues on the 7th and 8th. The second, beginning Aug. 12, continues on the 14th and 15th.

In the first week there will be an all-Beethoven program (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Leonore" Overture); Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and ballet music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire-Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week there will be an all-Wagner program, including excerpts form "Rienzi", "Tannhäuser", "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried"; also an all-Brahms program (the First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture), Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius, and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

The concert sponsors have no intention of interfering with the many cultural summer activities already established in the Berkshires.

Mention is made on festival posters of 13 activities planned at the same time, including Ted Shawn's dance recitals, the Mohawk Drama Festival, and the Berkshire Garden Center, which has contributed flowers and shrubs to add to the attraction of Tanglewood.

Tanglewood was established in 1849 by William Tappan, Boston banker and merchant. Its landscaping features include a formal garden, an avenue of towering pines, a rose garden, which is entered through an iron gate brought from Italy, and a privet hedge, 12 feet high and interspersed with hemlock.

Tanglewood, Given to Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks

Upper—Site of Concerts Looking Toward Lake Wahkeenic
Lower—House and Portion of Formal Garden on Estate

John Gass; Underwood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 27 1937

Festival Patron List Grows To 106

Executive Committee Meets With Mrs. Carlos M.

HORTICULTURE

GARDENING IN NEW ENGLAND Section

The Results of an Unusual Winter

Mr. Hamblin presents a report on plants which proved reliable for Spring foliage effects

WEATHER conditions throughout New England were unusual during the entire Winter of 1936-37. Reports on the behavior of plants following a Winter which brought no snow and little really cold weather are proving exceedingly interesting. There can be no doubt that last Winter was particularly favorable to flowering trees and shrubs, for seldom has such a remarkable inflorescence been witnessed as during this Spring.

On the other side of the ledger, however, must be placed the behavior of many low-growing perennials and rock plants. Unprotected by snow, as during colder Winters, many of the so-called evergreen herbs came through very browned and sickly looking. Many species had flower buds killed. A few were killed outright.

One of the most informative of reports on the effects of the past Winter on the evergreen herbs is that of the Lexington (Mass.) Botanic Garden, of which Mr. Stephen F. Hamblin is director. For the benefit of New England gardeners a digest of Mr. Hamblin's report follows:

Most of the species of thyme survived the mild Winter very well, particularly the forms of mother-of-thyme, Thymus serpyllum. The dwarf forms were less harmed than the taller varieties. The silver variegated, the golden, and the very downy sorts were not as hardy to the winter sun as the plain green kinds. T. azoricus and T. micans did not survive. Big sprawly T. odoratissimus looks just the same every month of the year, regardless of temperatures.

All the forms of moss phlox, Phlox subulata, remained green. P. brittoni is indifferent to winter weather, and really looks like a gray thyme until the flowers appear. It can also well be noted here that the two species of phlox mentioned are the only phloxes which are really evergreen at this latitude.

The perennial species of iberis took a scorching. Even some of the flower buds were killed. As soon as the flowers are faded, they will need to be given a close clipping. Iberis tenoreana came through more completely green than any of the "evergreen" iberis and it flowered as abundantly as usual.

The evergreen species of alyssum were unharmed. The best kinds are little known as yet. The common goldentuft is always rather ragged until it blooms.

The big evergreen saxifrages were a pitiful sight this Spring, lifting their petioles with ragged bits of dead leaves attached. They are not permanently harmed, merely scorched. The evergreen veronica, Veronica armena, survived, but all the evergreen pentstemons are dead, even the roots. Four or five species of the santolina group were as brown as if dead, but soon put out new leaves near the ground. They will recover. Even many of the evergreen dianthus, particularly those with gray-blue foliage, including the grass pink, were browned on the tops of the foliage tufts.

Since so many of the evergreen herbs, which are usually counted upon to supply foliage as a background for the earliest Spring flowers, many of which have the habit of blooming before their foliage appears, came through in such poor condition, it was a relief this Spring to turn to plants which are wholly herbaceous. These plants frankly die to the ground with the first cold of Autumn, but push up fresh green foliage in early April. Most of these plants seemed undisturbed by the unsual weather of last Winter and produced green leaves this Spring according to schedule.

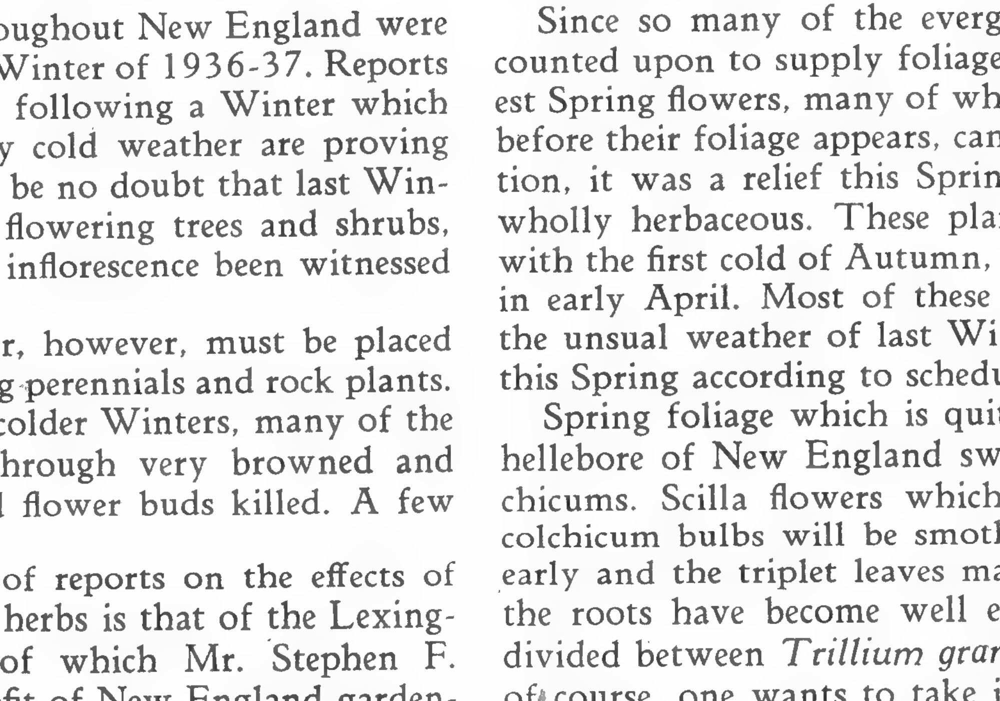
Spring foliage which is quite like that of the native false-hellebore of New England swamps, is produced by the colchicums. Scilla flowers which are planted too close to the colchicum bulbs will be smothered. Trilliums also shoot up early and the triplet leaves make big masses of foliage when the roots have become well established. Leafage honors are divided between Trillium grandiflorum and T. erectum, but, of course, one wants to take into consideration the fact that the big white flowers of the former are better than the dull red, smelly ones of the latter.

Except for the tuft of leaves above the flowers, the crown imperial, Fritillaria imperialis might be taken for a very robust lily two months ahead of season. The stems grow as fast as asparagus shoots with many leaves as broad as those of the Hanson lily and more abundant.

Bloodroot makes much foliage the instant the flowers have fallen, but much taller is the twinleaf, Jeffersonia diphylla, a two-leaved bloodroot, making very effective clumps of dark green foliage by late April.

The daylilies furnish grass-like foliage in April. The old-fashioned tawny daylily, Hemerocallis fulva, produces foliage six inches high while April is yet young. This species withstands more wetness in the winter soil than the other daylilies. The orange-colored hybrids developed from H. aurantiaca, the early daylily, H. dumortieri, and the Amur daylily, H. middendorffi, also produce foliage very early.

At the top of the list of plants which produce early foliage is the bleedingheart, Dicentra spectabilis. The arching stems grow several inches each night and soon make big clumps of fern-like foliage. The Dutchmans-breeches, D. cucullaria, also produces an abundance of finely cut foliage very early in the season. The similar squirrel-corn, D. canadensis, is not as productive of foliage, nor does it grow as well in the border. The fringed bleedingheart, D. eximia, has foliage of a similar growth, but it is darker green in color. It remains in good foliage all Summer and flowers continuously.



A view of the trial gardens at the Berkshire Garden Center.

series of programs are planned for August.

Only the rustle of the wind in the pines and hemlocks will disturb the hushed moment just before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky again raises his baton to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of the 1937 season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 5.

Over the wooded and grassy slopes of Tanglewood in Stockbridge, where Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and where years before Kickapoo Indians gathered in communal deliberation, will float the strains of Beethoven's Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies to open the fourth season of New England's summer festival.

With three previous symphonic festivals giving the Berkshires the appearance of a national music center, donation of Tanglewood as a home for summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, places the undertaking on a permanent basis. The estate of 210 acres was presented to the Orchestra last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a sponsor of the Berkshire concerts.

Tanglewood lies on the northern slope of the Stockbridge Bowl, a mile of meadow, woods, parks with giant pines and stately birches contrasting with the well-kept formality of lawns, pools and magnificent hemlocks. Twinkling Lake Mahkeenac lies in the basin.

Seats for 5000

The concerts will be given on the upper end of the slope, with more than 5000 seats arranged on a slight rise. Audiences will be sheltered against the weather by a huge tent-roof, planned to aid the acoustics. The stage for the orchestra is at the foot of the incline.

No startlingly beautiful building is planned, apparently, which would dwarf the natural scenic beauty of

---

Berkshire Garden Center

THE Berkshire Garden Center at Stockbridge, Mass., is a community enterprise, which in two brief years has achieved an enviable record and set a high standard for similar projects. The Center was founded in 1935 by members of the Lenox Garden Club, with the co-operation of the Lenox Horticultural Society and the garden clubs of Richmond, Great Barrington, Pittsfield and Richmond Valley. It was designed by its organizers to provide a clearing house for garden information, to carry out horticultural experiments and to provide a meeting place for interested organizations.

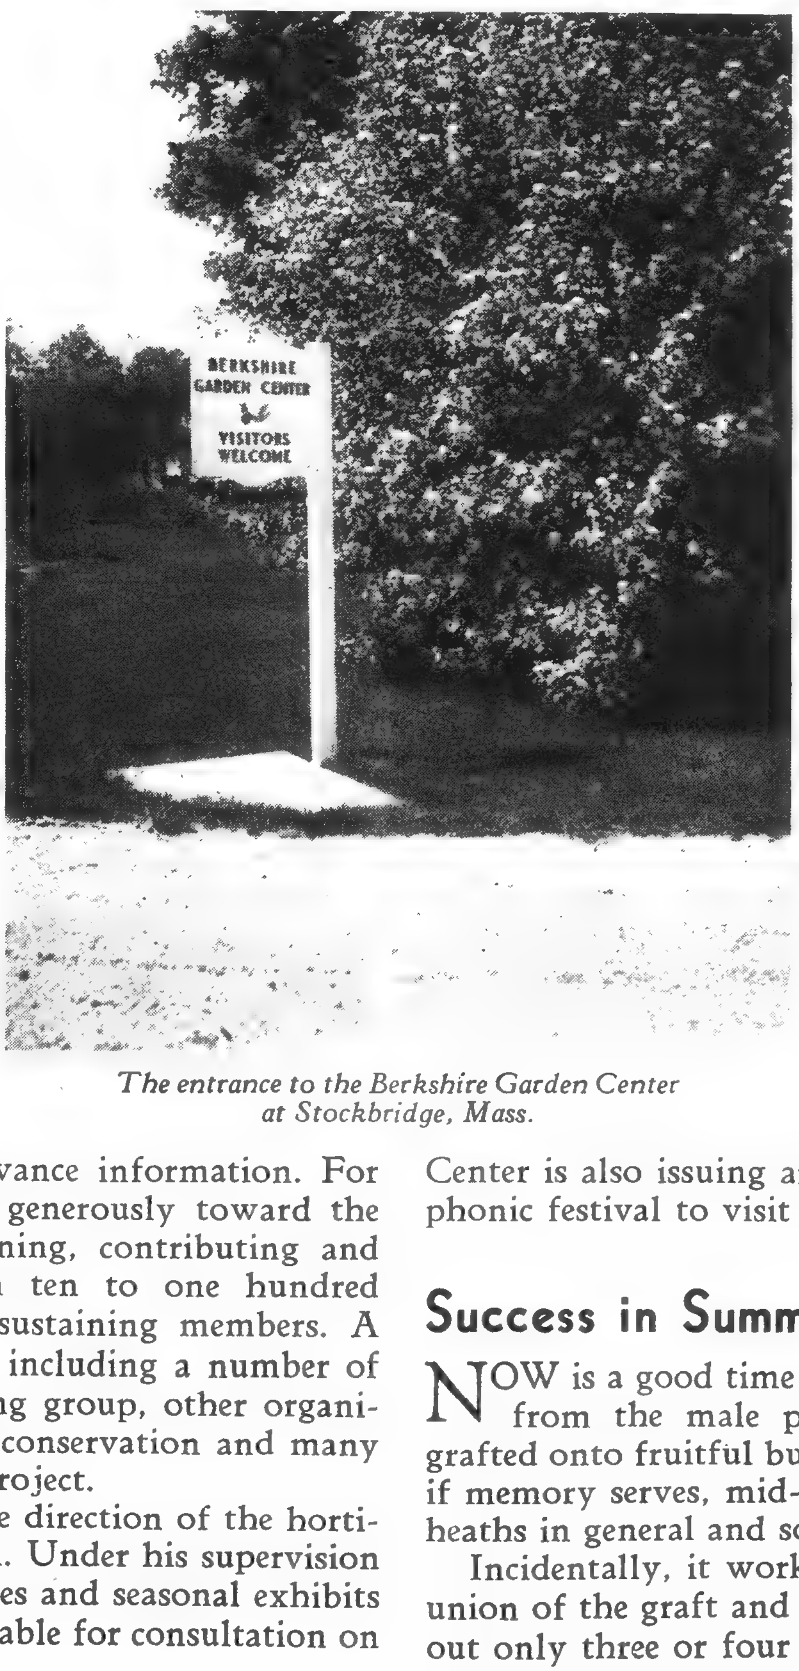
Probably the variety of memberships offered has been one of the chief factors in the center's success, for in this way its facilities have been placed in reach of everyone. Anyone may join for fifty cents a year and enjoy all the facilities. There is another membership at a dollar which places the person on the mailing list to receive certain advance information. For those who wish to contribute more generously toward the work of the center, there are sustaining, contributing and associate memberships ranging from ten to one hundred dollars. Organizations may join as sustaining members. A membership totaling more than 500, including a number of garden clubs other than the organizing group, other organizations interested in horticulture and conservation and many individuals attests the success of the project.

The work of the center is under the direction of the horticultural director, A. Kenneth Simpson. Under his supervision a trial garden is maintained and lectures and seasonal exhibits are arranged. The director is also available for consultation on gardening problems.

The trial gardens have proved of particular interest both to members and to garden makers throughout the region. In 1936 trials included novelty annuals, hardy asters, both early and late varieties, chrysanthemums, hardy varieties suitable for the Berkshires, daylilies, a dry-wall planting and a planting of native shrubs. (See Gardening in New England, November 1, 1936, for a report of the novelty annual trials.) An herb garden is being added as a 1937 project and a demonstration of edging plants.

During the Summer a series of weekly lectures on seasonal topics, given by authorities in various fields, is presented. A library of books, bulletins and catalogues is also maintained. Children's activities are sponsored, including a flower show and a tent caterpillar gathering project, which last year resulted in a total of 290,393 egg clusters being destroyed.

The Center, through its director, is this year co-operating with the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood," near Stockbridge, during the first and second weeks of August, in making plantings which will be at their height at that season. The Center is also issuing an invitation to all visitors to the symphonic festival to visit the Center and its trial gardens.



The entrance to the Berkshire Garden Center at Stockbridge, Mass.

Success in Summer Grafting

NOW is a good time to lay in an inexpensive stock of holly from the male plants of nurserymen. They may be grafted onto fruitful bushes. I have not grafted any lately, but if memory serves, mid-summer grafting is best for holly, the heaths in general and some of the walnuts.

Incidentally, it works well with apples, too, giving a firm union of the graft and stock. Apples in summer grafting send out only three or four leaves before putting up a top bud. A firm union then becomes established, so that birds cannot munch away the new growth.

I have found summer grafting to work well with hickories, but not later than the last of August, for the new growth after that time is exposed to winterkilling. I have grafted hickories up to the middle of September experimentally, but to do so is a waste of one's time.

—Robert T. Morris, M.D.

Stamford, Conn.

Florence Fennel as a Salad Plant

WHEREVER Italians congregate it is certain that the vegetable known as Florence fennel, and sometimes catalogued as finnochio, will be found. This vegetable is extensively used in Italy as a salad, and there is no reason why American garden makers should not become acquainted with it. In some ways it resembles celery, for it has a large leaf stalk which is blanched in the same way, becoming white and crisp. The flavor is rather sweet and has a slight suggestion of anise. There is also a fragrance which suggests anise.

SPRAY WITH LINCO COLLOIDAL SULFUR

This new Sulfur Fungicide is the result of many years research and practical tests in the field.

Of the many products tested for fungicidal control at the Arnold Arboretum at Forest Hills, Mass. LINCO COLLOIDAL SULFUR proved to be outstanding for this work.

LINCO COLLOIDAL SULFUR will successfully protect from the ravages of fungous diseases Orchard apple trees, Ornamental Apples, Hawthorns, Pears, and shrubs such as Shadbush, Quince, Chokeberry, etc.

LINCO COLLOIDAL SULFUR is also an excellent insecticide for the control of the RED SPIDER MITE on ornamental trees, shrubs, vines, annuals and perennials.

LINCO COLLOIDAL SULFUR is sold in convenient sized packages for use on small and large estates.

Write for further details and price list.
Complete spray schedule and dilution table furnished with all orders.

LINDER & COMPANY, INC.
Sole Manufacturers
296 North Beacon Street Brighton, Mass.

JAPANESE YEW
Large and rare specimens
Prices from $1 to $350 each
See our Taxus C. Nana
Evergreens and Perennials
We issue No Catalog. Write for information or preferably visit our Nurseries at 33 Pleasant Street, South Natick, Mass.
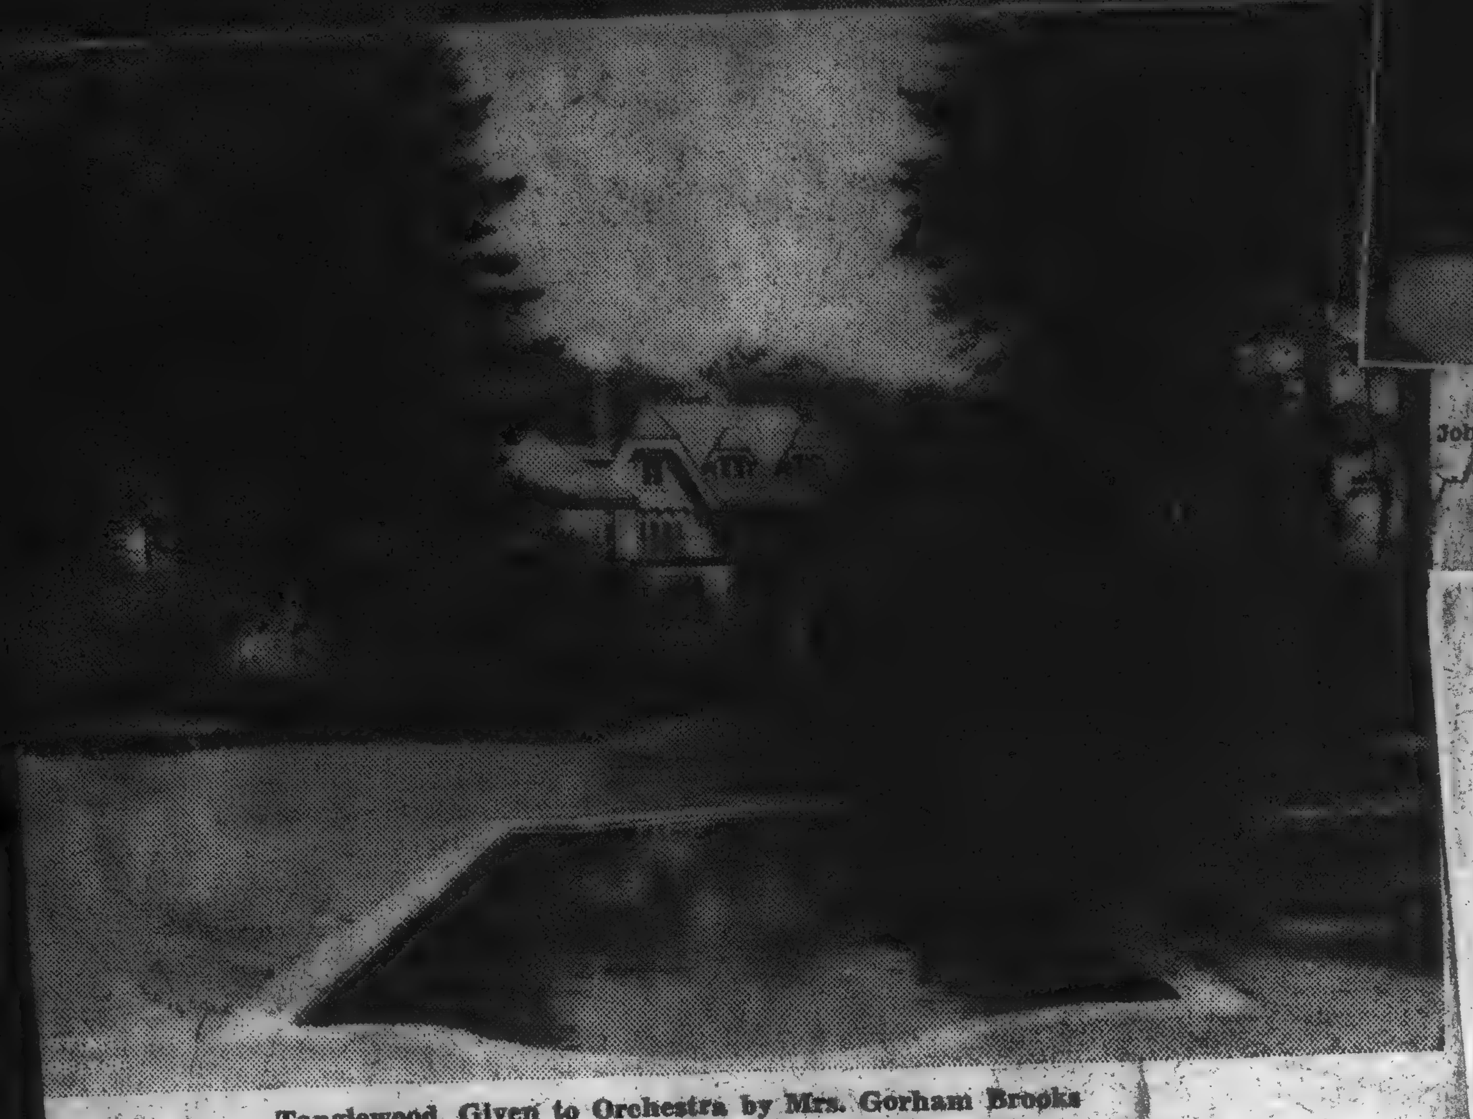
OLD TOWN NURSERIES, Inc.

S-L-N Invisible
PLANT STAKES
A trial lot of 25 36" for $2.00
Invisible PLANT SUPPORTS
A trial package 4 5", 4 10" and 4 15" for $2
Send for our new circular on
S-L-N Garden Gadgets
W. B. ESSELEN
80-B Boylston Street Boston



Tanglewood, Given to Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks

Upper—Site of Concerts Looking Toward Lake Wahkeenie
Lower—House and Portion of Formal Garden on Estate

John Gass: Underwood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 27 1937

Festival Patron List Grows To 106

Executive Committee Meets With Mrs. Carlos M.

Little-Known Flowering Shrubs

Dr. McFarland recommends several kinds to vary the garden picture

NOT in a full half-century of garden observation, 28 years of which have been in the more intimate surroundings at "Breeze Hill," have I enjoyed a Spring as fine as the one now merging into early Summer. It is one of the amusements or occupations coming with years beyond the Supreme Court age, that I have to wonder why. The past Winter brought almost no snow and little severe weather, which pleasing condition seems to be reflected in all woody plants.

When the lilacs are almost finished, with the deutzias coming in, and the philadelphus group on the edge of bloom, it seems unfair to horticultural friends not to mention a few things out of the usual run, which will add to garden attractiveness and tend to reduce garden imitation and similarity.

One of the earlier lilacs, Syringa microphylla, which came to us from the Department of Agriculture in 1926, and much more enduringly from the Arnold Arboretum in 1934, has just given us its peculiarly attractive inflorescence. Compared with the average species lilac, its blooms, which are really lilac in color, are quite different in shape, being in a sense bunchy. The plant is rounded and thoroughly attractive. It has persisted, apparently with complete comfort, on the north side of a shrubbery border, getting scarcely 40 per cent of sunshine.

Long ago I called attention to the extreme beauty of S. pubescens, one of the lilac species which Professor Charles S. Sargent believed to be dominant in attractiveness. It is both early and late, and sometimes repeats its bloom scantily later in the season. Right now, when most of the so-called French lilacs are just passing their magnificent prime, S. pubescens, a great rounded bush which has been with us since 1913, is a mass (if so dainty a thing can ever be mentioned that way) of exquisite bloom. There is a peculiarly airy pungency in the fragrance of this lilac, my adjectives in relation to which I admit are probably strained. One dominating factor is that this fine old bush blooms from its eight-foot top to the ground, all over, every year. That is, the fortunate possessor of this lilac can expect it to refuse to become leggy, and, therefore, not to require the direct beheading which Dr. E. H. Wilson beneficently enforced upon the collection at the Arnold Arboretum.

Then, that most distinct of all the species, S. reflexa, is, as this is written in late May, just coming into bloom as the vulgaris hybrids are passing. It holds its panicles differently from any other lilac, and its somewhat rugose foliage is different from any other lilac I know. The flowers are the nearest to a clear pink I have seen in any lilac. The shrub is a bit awkward, but not anything like as much so as the average French lilac. Why more nurserymen have not yet discovered it, I do not know.

Another less usual but thoroughly desirable shrub is Neillia sinensis, which has been with us since 1923 by Arnold Arboretum provision. It is obviously akin to the spireas, from which Dr. L. H. Bailey distinguishes it because of its stipulate leaves and shining seeds, although I confess I have never seen any of its seeds. At "Breeze Hill" it is a six-foot shrub, of graceful habit and with pleasing foliage, sufficiently different from the average spirea to attract the eye. For an altogether too short time the plant is covered with its terminal racemes of very dainty flowers, the buds of which are light carmine, merging into clear pink as maturity occurs. The shrub does not have the tendency to become gross, which characterizes the various spireas. While it does not long continue to bloom, it very surely pays its way in different beauty.

I have been among those who inveighed against the weigelas as coarse shrubs, and save in the case of the red flowering Eva Rathke, they are coarse as generally grown. Five Lemoine hybrids are, however, anything but coarse either in growth or bloom, and I commend Avalanche, Feerie, Girondin, Profusion and Richesse, which have been with us for a dozen years as excellent shrubs just preceding the main spirea burst, and by their relatively upright habit giving a garden resource of high value. It is hard to imagine a more pleasing early white shrub than the Avalanche weigela.

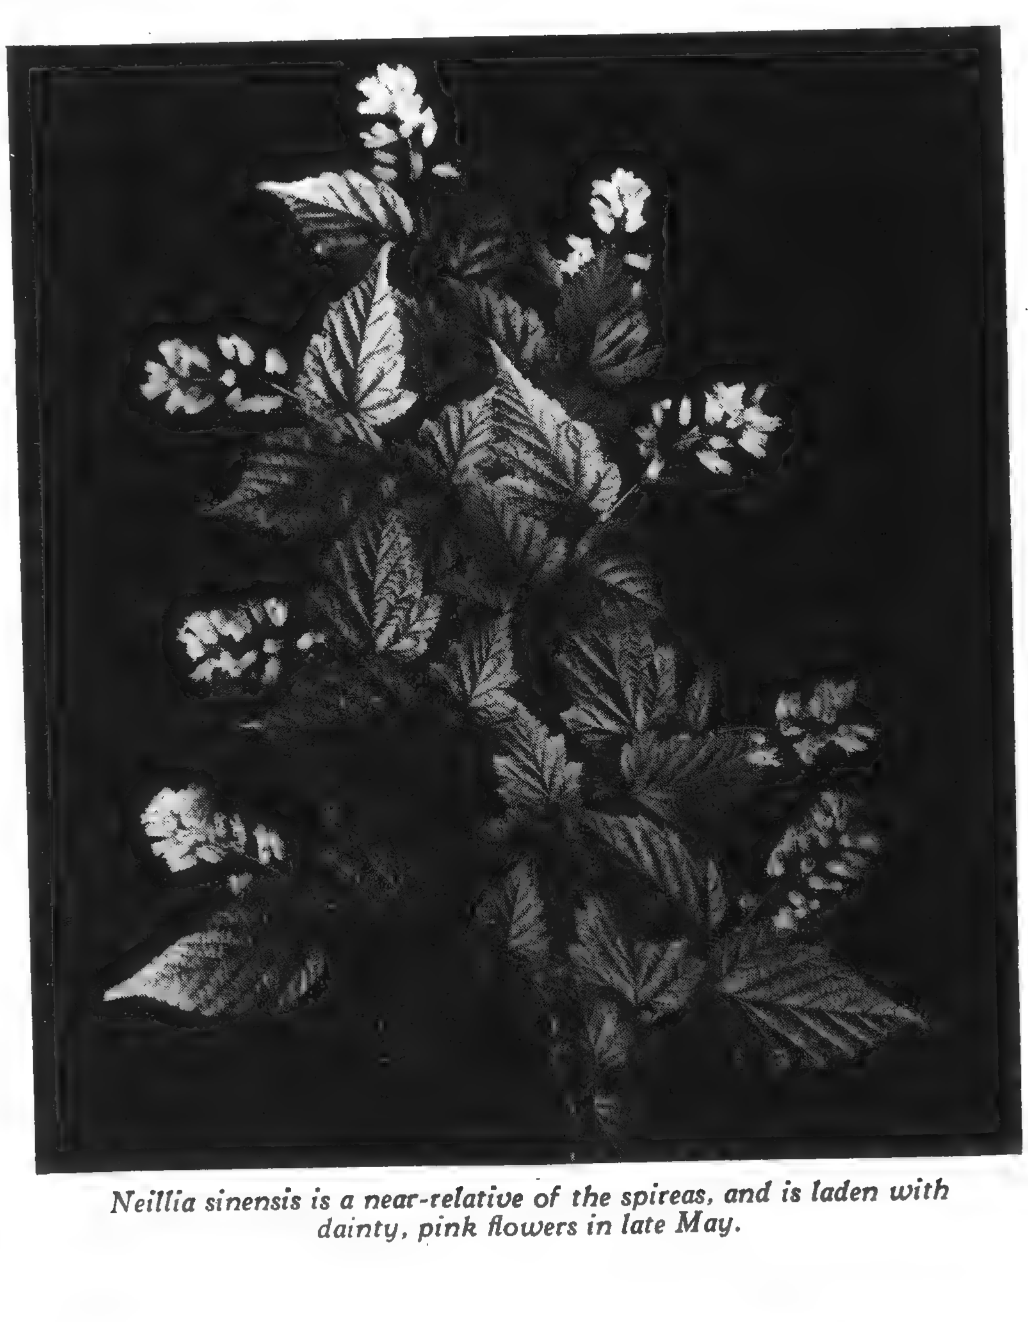
Just about the time when America was being isolated from plants from abroad, that shrewd and able plantsman, the late John Dunbar, of Highland Park, Rochester, N. Y., brought in a group of deutzias, mostly from Lemoine. He was always willing to give propagating material, although not many nurserymen seem to have been interested. From wood he supplied in 1919 I grew 17 varieties at "Breeze Hill," and have kept them in sight so as to show that the ordinary deutzias which the nurserymen make available in America are just no competition at all.

This is not the place to intimately describe these deutzias, but I may say that D. candida provides at the moment of writing a mass of large white flowers that is pleasingly decorative and lovely.

Then, the fact that many of these newer deutzias are more or less pink in bloom as well as varying tremendously in habit, adds to the attraction they give in the shrubbery borders. The rosea varieties are exciting me just now, but, to be frank, I do not know any one of the group I would want to be without. They include early and late varieties, but all of them seem to be willing to happily endure much shade, and therefore fit into a garden which respects trees and yet wants shrubbery.

To save myself and my garden friends embarrassment, let me say that I do not know of a nurseryman who has all or most of these shrubs, although undoubtedly some of them are in certain nurseries, as all of them ought to be.

Harrisburg, Pa. —J. Horace McFarland.



Neillia sinensis is a near-relative of the spireas, and is laden with dainty, pink flowers in late May.

…IAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 12,

…mphonic Festival Finds Permanent Ho…

John Cass, Underwood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

…son of
…oncerts by Dr.
…ussevitzky and the Boston orchestra—Two series of programs are planned for August.

Only the rustle of the wind in the pines and hemlocks will disturb the hushed moment just before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky again raises his baton to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of the 1937 season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 5.

Over the wooded and grassy slopes of Tanglewood in Stockbridge, where Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales," and where years before Kickapoo Indians gathered in communal deliberation, will float the strains of Beethoven's Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies to open the fourth season of New England's summer festival.

With three previous symphonic festivals giving the Berkshires the appearance of a national music…
ter, donation of Tanglew…
home for summer…
Boston Sympho…
the underta…
basis…

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 27 1937

Festival Patron List Grows To 106

Executive Committee Meets With Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia

Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia was hostess at Wheatleigh in Lenox yesterday to a meeting of the executive committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The list of patrons, growing almost daily, has reached a total of 106. New patrons include Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis of Stockbridge and New York; Ernest B. Dane of Boston, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is taking a box for both series of concerts in August. Mr. and Mrs. Dane have made reservations at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox for the first two weeks in August.

Trustees of the Festival will meet at Wheatleigh June 8 and the advisory board will meet at a place to be announced June 15.

New Circular Printed

The new Festival circular, with scenes from "Tanglewood," a picture of the orchestra conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and a map showing routes to "Tanglewood," has been printed, and 8500 copies will be distributed through a selected mailing list and by community chairmen. The single sheet circular has already reached a circulation of 65,000 with thousands of them having been passed out in the South through the efforts of Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

The Festival, the Mohawk Drama Festival and the Bennington School of the Dance are cooperating on another single sheet circular which will have a circulation of 45,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 6 - 1937

CONCERTS IN BERKSHIRES

Festival Will Be Held in Tent—Delay in Providing Shed

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., June 5.—The Berkshire festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are to be given in a tent in August again this year, as a permanent music shed cannot be completed in time at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, now owned by the orchestra. The canopy will be placed north of the formal garden.

More than fifty per cent of the festival's $40,000 budget has subscribed. The corpora… elected Mrs. George…
Pittsfield executiv…

INFORMATION OBSCURED

H O R T I C U L T U R E

Vol. XV. June 15, 1937 No. 12

Published Semi-Monthly
by the MASSACHUSETTS HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY
at HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

EDWARD I. FARRINGTON, Editor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES
One Year, in advance, $1.00; To Foreign Countries, $2.00

Nature Wedded to Music

NATURE is being wedded to music in an unusually fitting setting at Stockbridge, Mass., a lovely town in the Berkshires. The 210-acre estate known as "Tanglewood" has been given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which has been a musical event in the western part of the state for the last three years.

"Tanglewood" is beautifully situated between Stockbridge and Lenox, overlooking the famous Stockbridge Bowl, containing Lake Mahkeenac. It is historically interesting, because it was on the shores of this lake that the Stockbridge tribe of Indians gathered for their campfires. It was at "Tanglewood," too, that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, although, unfortunately, the little red cottage in which he wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales" was burned some years ago.

The grounds of "Tanglewood" are notable for their magnificent trees and their evergreen hedges, some of which have been allowed to grow very tall and are in splendid condition. Gardens and pools help to make the place attractive, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made an arrangement with the Berkshire Garden Center at Stockbridge to plan and plant the borders of a formal garden on the estate in such a way as to make them attractive at the time of the Music Festival. Indeed, the co-operation of the Berkshire Garden Center with the Symphony Orchestra is one of the interesting features of this new venture. The concerts will be given for two weeks in August. Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's famous leader, will return from Europe, where he has been having his vacation, in time to conduct the Festival.

"Tanglewood," where music is wedded to nature.

The Peoni…

DUTIES on Ohio, and in United States. Fello into parts ornamente
Wert is a cheerful tow with trees.

The writer's hosts sha
There were rows of peony borders. There were vigorous places, and neighbors' yards h
These peony bushes were a preci as early as May 15 this year, with and with their treasures of flower diameter, soon to burst open and beauty and the fragrance of the peony

Every one of these buds was due to be in order to participate in the Annual P ducted this year on that date. Van Wert peo plants have been trained to be ready for, and an annual peony festival on an early Wednesday

It is observable that the Van Wertites keep o and developing their peonies, as do their bre flowers all over the world. They, too, have tapped China and in Japan. The writer was vouchsafed the of looking upon a species recently imported from which had been filled with bloom since May 7. The of each flower were large, airy and fluffy, in very dou
layers. A ruddy glow tinged the whitish background colo
The flowers of each plant were lifted in a close mass above the leaves and each plant looked like a large Hindu turban.

—Lemon L. Uhl.

Boston, Mass.

Books for Vacation Days*

SCHOOL is out. Furniture dons summer covers. Trunks are packed. It is the general exodus to the country, the hills, or the sea. What Nature books will you take along?

To go with you on tramps through the fields and woods, sunny meadow or shady ravine, take one or more of the following:

Fieldbook of American trees and shrubs, by F. S. Mathews.
Fieldbook of American wildflowers, by F. S. Mathews.
Our native trees, by H. L. Keeler.
American plants for American gardens, by E. A. Roberts and E. Rehmann.
Harper's guide to wild flowers, by Mrs. C. A. Creevey.
The flower-finder, by G. L. Walton.
A guide to the wild flowers, by N. Taylor.
Our ferns in their haunts, by W. N. Clute.
Fieldbook of common ferns, by H. Durand.
The fern lover's companion, by G. H. Tilton.

For a tramp over sand dunes and along the beach:

The sea-beach at ebb-tide, by A. F. Arnold.
The book of the seashore, by H. J. Shannon.

There are numerous books which the children will enjoy, which will give them an introduction to plants, and answer some of their innumerable questions. A few of them are:

The Burgess flower book for children, by T. Burgess.
Trees every child should know, by J. E. Rogers.
The human side of plants, by R. Dixon.
The flower and the bee, by J. H. Lovell.
The bee people, by M. W. Morley.

For a rainy day in front of a log fire,—a quiet, still, summer afternoon under a graceful elm,—or tucked under your arm until you reach the soft carpet beneath your favorite pine, we suggest:

Wild gardens of New England, by W. P. Eaton.
Under green apple boughs, by L. Grebenc.
Four hedges, by C. Leighton.
The forest, by S. E. White.

Anthologies of poetry:

Up from the earth, by S. Spencer.
Study to be quiet, by B. L. Edwards.

---

*A list compiled in the library of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, JUNE 6, 1937

Famed Tanglewood Estate Prepared For Berkshire Symphonic Festival

By LAWRENCE DAME

PITTSFIELD, June 5—Although as tranquil as the hills and lakes which form its setting, Tanglewood estate, new home of the Berkshire symphonic festival, today felt the gathering of spectral throngs, harbingers of the 30,000 music lovers expected to attend the six August concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

New details concerning one of America's greatest artistic projects came to light today as volunteers, working for the fourth consecutive season to make the festival a success, paced across the green lawns under cathedral pines, determining where to seat 5000 persons at each outdoor concert.

Imaginatively, executives saw the crowds pour into the estate, as they will from Aug. 5 to 15. Looking still further into the future, they visualized a time when the temporary tent to be raised in August will be supplanted by a permanent festival building, plans for which are now being drawn by Eliel Saarinen, famous Finnish architect.

Of all the visions evoked by Tanglewood, which Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline gave the Boston Symphony orchestra as its summer home last February, perhaps the most ambitious saw this 210-acre property, situated between Lenox and Stockbridge, as the premier music center of America, worthy of rank with the festival places of Europe.

DETAILS REHEARSED

As robins and thrushes sang where poignant music will spring forth next August, those at Tanglewood today could not help dreaming. But they also held to practical activities, designed to bring perfect enjoyment to those who will hear Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his orchestra transform the estate into a fairyland of harmonic illusion.

The rehearsal of such details as audience-placing and traffic supervision, directed by G. E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, was just as important as a Boston Symphony rehearsal. It was something more. It illustrated the extraordinary community spirit of all Berkshire towns and the co-operation of festival committees scattered all over the country.

"It's the biggest thing Berkshire has ever known," declared George W. Edman of this model town, energetic clerk of the board of trustees head by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge. His statement was merely an echo of what they are saying in the shops and hotels, the farmhouses and mansions of this independent county. His voice was only one of a chorus of those serving without pay in a non-profitmaking enterprise.

As Mr. Edman spoke, the eyes could not help wandering to the wooded ramparts of Berkshire hills, across the Tanglewood meadows and shimmering Lake Mahkeenac.

In the sunlight and delicate blue mist, one recalled the Wienerwald, those charming sylvan hills outside Vienna, so dear to Beethoven. From such a panorama as that offered by Tanglewood ,across its native hemlock and private hedges, great composers like Brahms and Sibelius have drawn their inspiration. Some believe that not only will their music thrill multitudes at Tanglewood, but the estate itself will inspire new pieces of American music.

ONCE HAWTHORNE HOME

Nathaniel Hawthorne, Salem dreamer, came in 1850 and occupied a red cottage, now gone, on Tanglewood estate. There he plotted The House of the Seven Gables and wrote Tanglewood Tales. Later the world of wealth and fashion moved in and created the great Berkshire estates.

With this new society world came cultivated tastes for artistic expression. Such women as Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge established a repertoire of chamber music on her mountain property.

In 1934, Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Owen Johnson, wife of the novelist, and others encouraged the goal of a general Berkshire music gathering by their sponsorship of the first symphonic festival, on the old Dan Hanna farm, near Tanglewood in Stockbridge. Henry Hadley, Somerville composer, diercted three concerts. Seven thousand persons heard 60 members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Little money was lost—all festival proponents expect to lose some—and the committee was encouraged to plan a 1935 festival. That resulted in a deficit of $3500 and near discouragement.

Although not admitting defeat, Berkshire townsfolk and summer residents had their optimism jarred. They decided to make one more trial. By happy thought, they enlisted the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They found Mr. Judd, its manager, sympathetic, and Dr. Koussevitzky soon became enthusiastic.

The thought of going into the country for open-air concerts appealed to the Russian orchestra leader. He recalled his younger days, when he led an orchestra up and down the Volga, playing to peasants in the Czarist hamlets.

So the Boston Symphony orchestra, one of the world's most distinguished music groups, came to what the natives simply call "Berkshire." More than 15,000 music lovers responded last year, from 25 states and Canada, to hear three concerts under a tent on the Holmwood estate, lent by Mrs. Margaret Emerson. The concerts cost about $18,000 and, to the astonishment of the committee, created a small surplus.

Even at that, the Berkshire festival would have looked into the future with anxiety had not Mrs. Brooks given Tanglewood to the orchestra as its summer home. Her grandfather, William Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, established the estate in 1849. Her gift was made in honor of her musician-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston.

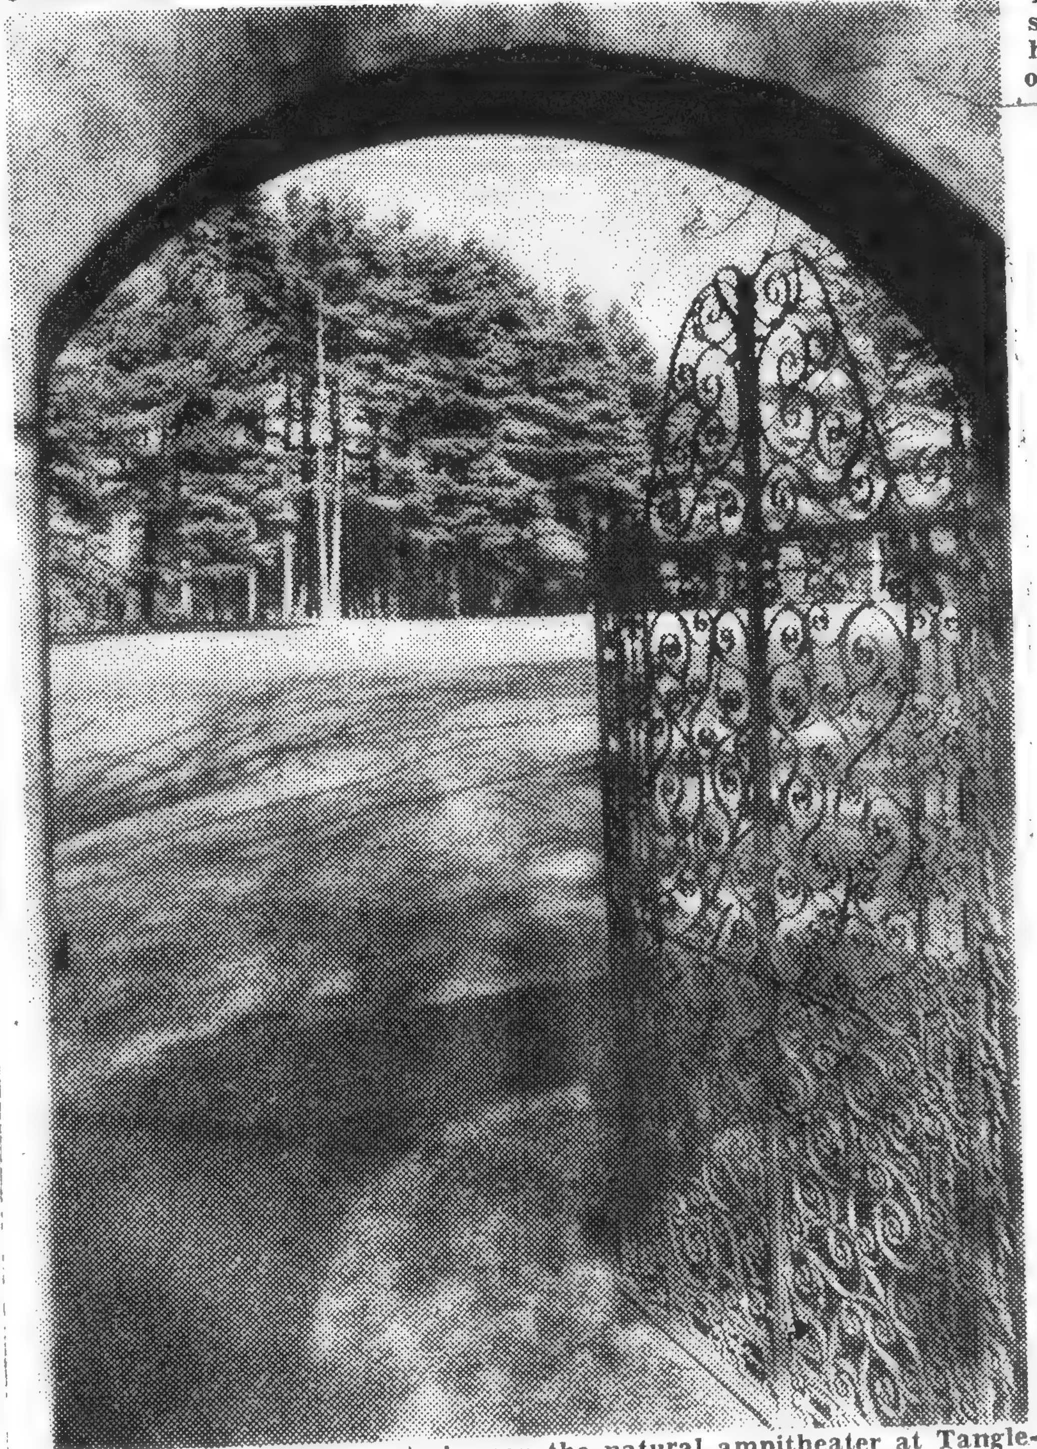
All seems clear now. Enthusiastic as are festival trustees and cooperating committees, including a Canadian branch, over prospects of the future, they are not allowing themselves to be carried away by high spirits. They seem to understand festival limitations. Loose talk of making Tanglewood into another Salzburg is discounted. Executives want to work with materials at hand. They want Tanglewood to be itself, and not an imitation of something else.

Enormous possibilities exist, of course, particularly when such a creative person as Dr. Koussevitzky, now in Europe, has adopted the project as his own child. His brain is sure to bring great things to music in this vernal place. Great operas, typical of the country, have been openly envisaged by the orchestra leader. Perhaps they may be given some day—if the necessary $500,000 for opera production could be found.

Yet, for the present, festival sponsors want to "go slow" and concentrate on good symphony programs, devoted to the repertory of orchestral music.

SCENE OF FOURTH BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

The front lawn at Tanglewoo showing the lakes and Berkshir hills which surround the new estat of the Boston Symphony Orchestra



Through this old Italian gate is seen the natural ampitheater at Tanglewood which will be occupied by music lovers at the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August. On the unseen side of the gate are formal gardens and a loggia, which will be used at concert intermissions as a foyer.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Berkshire Garden Center Aids in Planting Gardens As Setting for Festival

June 4/37

The Berkshire Garden Center, a community enterprise, opened in Stockbridge in 1935 by members of the Lenox Garden Club, with the cooperation of the Lenox Horticultural Society, the Garden Clubs of Richmond, Great Barrington, Pittsfield and Richmond Valley, is helping with the planting of annuals and their supervision at "Tanglewood," where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts will be presented August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15.

Annuals that will bloom the first two weeks in August are being planted as fillers in the formal borders, under the supervision of A. Kenneth Simpson, horticultural director of the Garden Center. The initial labor of preparation is being carried out by students of the vocational agriculture classes in the Stockbridge High School, under John Burrington. For this work the students receive credits. These formal gardens will be used as an open air foyer at the time of the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchetra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Because many music lovers are also garden lovers, the Berkshire Garden Center extends an invitation to persons attending the festival to plan their schedule to include a visit to the Center. The Garden Center provides a clearing house for garden information and horticultural experiment and a place where those interested in horticulture and gardening may meet. There are weekly lectures by experts throughout the season, a library of garden books, a file of nursery catalogues and garden magazines, and a continuous indoor display of named flowers in season. Outside, the trial gardens are a constant source of interest. Experiments with day lilies, rock garden plants, and also a new herb garden add greatly to the many attractions. While the Garden Center was started by a group of garden clubs who assist in maintaining it, the very large membership includes other organizations interested in horticulture and conversation, and many individuals not members of any garden club.

This enterprise is just one of the many expressions of interest by all Berkshire residents to conserve the beauties of nature and add to them where possible, thus increasing the joy and satisfaction in a setting with such great and varied possibilities.

Among those actively interested in the Garden Center are Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Belches, Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, the Rev. E. Russell Bourne, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Carl A. Gersdorff, Walter Pritchard Eaton, Mrs. George Forbes, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Miss Marian Hague, Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Mrs. John O. Lynch and Miss Heloise Boyer.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUN 7 - 1937

Moment

By MAUD

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will assemble its illustrious personnel for two weeks in August with concerts on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of each week, for the Fourth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," a delightful 210-acre estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's incomparable leader, will return from his Summer sojourn in Europe to conduct the Festival.

In the first week there will be an all-Beethoven program, (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Leonore" Overture); also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe;" Tschaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and ballet music from "Rosamunde;" Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire-Bird;" Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week there will be an all-Wagner program, including excerpts from "Rienzi;" "Tannhauser;" "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried;" also an all-Brahms program, (the First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture); Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Schenerazade."

Because many musicians are also gardeners, the Berkshire Garden Center, a community enterprise which includes the Lenox Garden Club, the Lenox Horticultural Society, the Garden Clubs of Richmond, Great Barrington, Pittsfield and Richmond Valley will have a flower show. Annuals that will bloom the first two weeks in August are being planted as fillers in the formal borders at Tanglewood. The Garden Center, in Stockbridge, provides a clearing house for garden information and horticultural experiment. There are weekly lectures by experts throughout the season, a library of garden books, a file of nursery catalogs and garden magazines and a continuous indoor display of named flowers in season. Outside, the trial gardens are a constant source of interest. Experiments with day lilies, rock garden plants and also a new herb garden add to the attractions.

THE Kuhlau Sonatina for two pianos and the "Soldier's Chorus," Gounod, in duet form, will feature the recital by pupils of Doris V. Francis, in Cluett's music room, June 10 at 7:45 p. m. Mrs. H. E. Letterton will appear with Miss Francis in the Kuhlau number and Marjorie Van Auken and Elaine Male will play the duet. The Junior Rhythm Band will open the program. The public is invited.

Other pupils appearing will be Gordon Hahn, Betty Templeton, Betty Murray, Dorothy Getty, Betty Hopkins, Lois Walker, Mary Lou Keenholts, Frank Capello, Esther Young, Gladys E. Hopkins, Kenneth Sierleja and Madeline Bramer. The final pupil recital of the season will be held June 29.

ARTHUR CATRICALA, cellist, of the Schenectady Conservatory of Music, will be the assisting artist at benefit concert for David De Voe lutist, at the Kingsborough Hote Gloversville, tomorrow at 8:15 p. [illegible] Mr. Catricala will offer Ravel, S[illegible]u-mann, Saint-Saens and Eccle[illegible] numbers.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

90 JUN 5 - 1937

Music Festival To Open Aug. 5

Boston Symphony to Play in Berkshire Series on "Tanglewood" Estate

Announcements have been received in Schenectady of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, directing, beginning August 5 and continuing through August 15.

The festival will take place this year in the new permanent site, "Tanglewood" the property which Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline has given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the festivals. The estate extends from West street in Lenox to the shore of Lake Mahkeenac in Stockbridge. Nathaniel Hawthorne the New England writer once lived at Tanglewood in a little house which was burned a few years ago. There he wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," and "The House of Seven Gables."

The announcement says that "in the first week there will be an all-Beethoven program (the fifth and Pastoral symphonies and the third "Leonore" overture); also Mozart's symphony in E flat; Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe;" Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony; Schubers's "Unfinished" symphony, and ballet music from "Rosamunde;" Stravinsky's suite from "The Fire-Bird;" Franck's symphony in D minor, and two movements from the string sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

"In the second week there will be an all-Wagner program including excerpts from "Rienzi," "Tannhauser," "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried;" also an all-Brahms program (the first and third symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture); Haydn's symphony in G major, 88; the seventh symphony of Sibelius; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

1 13 1937

Berkshire Garden Center A Community Enterprise

The Berkshire Garden center, a community enterprise, opened in Stockbridge in 1935 by members of the Lenox Garden club with the cooperation of the Lenox Horticultural society, the Garden clubs of Richmond, Great Barrington, Pittsfield and Richmond Valley, is helping with the planting of annuals and their supervision at "Tanglewood", where the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts will be presented August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15.

Annuals that will bloom the first two weeks in August are being planted as fillers in the formal borders under the supervision of A. Kenneth Simpson, horticultural director of the center. The initial labor of preparation is being carried out by students of the vocational agriculture classes in the Stockbridge high school, under John Burrington. For this work the students receive credits. These formal gardens will be used as an open air foyer at the time of the concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Because many music lovers are also garden lovers, the Berkshire Garden center extends an invitation to persons attending the festival to plan their schedule to include a visit to the center. The Garden center provides a clearing house for garden information and horticultural experiment and a place where those interested in horticulture and gardening may meet.

There are weekly lectures by experts throughout the season, a library of garden books, a file of nursery catalogs and garden magazines, and a continuous indoor display of named flowers in season. Outside, the trial gardens are a constant source of interest. Experiments with day lilies, rock garden plants, and also a new herb garden add greatly to the many attractions. While the Garden center was started by a group of garden clubs who assist in maintaining it, the very large membership includes other organizations interested in horticulture and conservation, and many individuals not members of any garden club.

This enterprise is just one of the many expressions of interest by all Berkshire residents to conserve the beauties of nature and add to them where possible, thus increasing the joy and satisfaction in a setting with such great and varied possibilities.

Among those actively interested in the Garden center are Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mr and Mrs Edward F. Belches, Mrs Thomas Blodgett, Rev E. Russell Bourne, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs Carl A. deGersdorff, Walter Pritchard Eaton, Mrs George Forbes, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs, Miss Marian Hague, Mr and Mrs Bernhard Hoffman, Mrs Owen Johnson, Mrs Shaun Kelly, Mrs John J. Lynch and Miss Heloise Dyer.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

JUN 1 1 1937

Host of Prominent Personages Coming This Fall to Berkshire Festival

Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of Joseph H. Choate, late ambassador to Great Britain; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Edward Taft, trustee of the orchestra; Albert Spalding, America's eminent violinist, and Mrs. Alto Rockefeller Prentice of Williamstown and New York are but a few of the many patrons for the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival to be held in August. Only a limited number of boxes remain, according to the acting president, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, of Lenox and New York.

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky will play six concerts, August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15, at beautiful "Tanglewood," 210 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge presented as a permanent home for the festival, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

"The thousands we expect for the concerts will be representatives of all kinds of people in this country and Canada," said Mrs. de Heredia, whose lovely summer home is not far from "Tanglewood." "We have but a limited number of boxes remaining and hope that music lovers wishing to make reservations will do so at once to avoid disappointment."

Other patrons (boxholders) include Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Ellen Bullard of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge and New York, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont and New York, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington and New York, Mr. and Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Lee and New York, Mrs. de Heredia, Mr. and Mrs. Norval H. Busey, jr., of Lee and New York, Giraud Foster of Lenox and New York, Grenville L. Winthrop of Lenox and New York, Mr. and Mrs. R. Jay Flick of Lenox and New York, Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane of Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers of Lenox and Miami Beach, Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister of Toledo, Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York, Mrs. Edwards Spencer of Lenox and New York, Mrs. James H. Andrews of Chatham and Southern Pines, N. C., Mr. and Mrs. Edward Davis of Stamford, Vt., Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield.

Also Miss Gertrude Watson of Pittsfield, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond and Los Gatos, Calif., Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt of Stockbridge and Louisville, Ken., Mr. and Mrs. Carl de Gersdorff of New York and Stockbridge, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of Stockbridge and New York, Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Hoffman of Stockbridge and Santa Barbara, Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay C. Hoguet, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawson Karrick, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Musgrave of Stockbridge.

Also Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan of New York and Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. John Butler Swann, Mr. and Mrs. Heaton I. Treadley of Stockbridge, Professor and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown, Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. Atherton of Boston and Windsor, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor and Cleveland, Mrs. Herbert Scoville of Taconic, Conn., and New York, Mrs. E. E. Whitney of Greenwich and New York, Mrs. Evelyn W. Adams of Colebrook, Conn., and New York, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of Salisbury, Conn., and New Haven, James E. Leath of Kinderhook, New York, Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Smith of Dublin, N. H., and Milton, Mrs. Mathew John Whittel of Washington, D. C., Mrs. R. B. Danielson of Manchester and Groton, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, jr., of New York and Great Barrington.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

JUN 13 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES UPSETS TRENDS

No profit for anyone, nothing monumental planned, and no duplications, either

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass., June 12 (AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will open August 5th for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival-giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

Surplus for Improvement

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." no neo-Gothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of Tanglewood, the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Cont. above right

Was Indian Council Ground

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his Tanglewood Tales was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up in the middle of it.

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Konjapod,
"Have mercy on him, gracious God,
"As he would do if he were God
"And you were Johnny Kongapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

Only Concerts on Program

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute or Juilliard School, but ~~one~~ which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of thirteen other enterprises ranging from the well-established Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 13 1937

Music

Berkshire Festival Reverses Usual Methods

Stockbridge, Mass., June 12—(AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens Aug. 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

Profits For Improvements.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental". No neo-Gothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood", the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Elliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Indian Council Spot.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up in the middle of it.

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

'Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
'Have mercy on him, gracious God
'As he would do if he were God
'And you were Johnny Kongapod.''

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

Plans New Training.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

DANVILLE, VA.
REGISTER

JUN 13 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL TRENDS REVERSED

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Never Plans to Make Any Money From Venture

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 12.—(AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental.' No Neo-Gothic or Pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up the middle of it.

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writer connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
"Have mercy on him, gracious God,
"As he would do if he were god
"And you were Johnny Kongapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

JUN 13 1937

Berkshires Will Resound With Classic Music Again

By John Selby

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. – (AP) – The Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens Aug. 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty, so that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Seek No Monument

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental". No neogothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up in the middle of it.

Indian From Wisconsin

Last year's festival, the third, was visited and approved, incidentally, by the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony and artistic director ~~of the~~ festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly Dr. Koussevitzky and the Berkshire backers have not the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

In four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

JUN 20 193

* * *

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens Aug. 5 for its fourth Summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival-giving business. For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies, Salzburg especially, where the annual Summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty. The home of the festival, the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales," was part of an Indian council ground, and last year's festival was visited by what proved, incidentally but literally, the last of the Mohican Chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, 50-year-old congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director ~~of the~~ festival, has doubled the size of the festival this year and will continue it for two weeks instead of the usual seven days.

* * *

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

JUN 13 1937

Berkshire Music Festival Tosses "Trends" to Winds

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 12.—(A.P.)—The Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens Aug. 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Nothing Spectacular

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-gothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival, will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Has Rich History

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up the middle of it.

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shores of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
"Have mercy on him, gracious God,
"As he would if he were God
"And you were Johnny Kongapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Entirely Novel

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony and artistic director ~~of the~~ festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

JUN 13 1937

Berkshire Fete Is Reversing Popular Trend

Curious Symphony Show Steering Clear of Making Money.

By JOHN SELBY.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 12.—(AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenos free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-Gothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival, will not decide on a final home until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up in the middle of it.

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod.
Have mercy on him, gracious God,
As he would do if he were God
And you were Johnny Kongapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the Symphonic Festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
EXPRESS

JUN 13 1937

FESTIVAL BACKERS WANT NO PROFITS

Berkshire Group Plans Series Of Concerts for Art's Sake Only

(By Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 12. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens Aug. 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival-giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. so that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-Gothic or psuedo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "tanglewood tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up the middle of it.

Chief Konqapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
"Have mercy on him, gracious God,
"As he would do if he were God
"And you were Johnny Kongapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute of Julliard School, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well-established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in your years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE

JUN 13 1937

FESTIVAL OF BERKSHIRES IS SET AUGUST 5

Almost Every "Trend" Is Reversed; Profit Put Back Into Improvements.

BY JOHN SELBY.

By Associated Press.

Stockbridge, Mass., June 12.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival-giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies, Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theatre has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-gothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

○ ○ ○

To Design Permanent Home.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival, will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up in the middle of it.

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic. Although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod.
"Have mercy on him, gracious God,
"As he would do if he were God
"And you were Johnny Kongapod."

○ ○ ○

Last of Mohicans.

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Doctor Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not an other Curtis Institute or Juilliard School, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Doctor Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well-established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 14 1937

OPERA IS PROPOSED FOR THE BERKSHIRES

Koussevitzky Group Hopes to Give Performances Next Year With Symphony Festival

Although the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at Stockbridge, Mass., in August will be devoted entirely to programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is probable that next season choral works and even operas may be presented. Operatic performances, however, will not be attempted unless money enough can be raised to give them in a finished manner.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and artistic director of the festival, also is considering the idea of establishing a school on the property which Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the orchestra as a permanent home for its annual event. The school's curriculum may consist largely of the advanced study of symphonic literature and the art of conducting.

Emil Saarinen, the architect commissioned to design an auditorium for the festival, will not decide on final plans until he has witnessed one of the festival gatherings, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. The building probably will be as inconspicuous as possible, so that it will merge into and harmonize with the countryside character of its surroundings.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
JUN 14 1937

Music Festival In Berkshires To Attract Many

Reservations Being Made For Symphonic Concerts August 5, 7, 8 and 12

Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of Joseph H. Choate, late ambassador to Great Britain; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Edward Taft, trustee of the orchestra; Albert Spalding, America's eminent violinist, Alta Rockefeller Prentice of Williamstown and New York, and Mrs. E. E. Whitney of Greenwich and New York, are among the many patrons for the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held in August. Only a limited number of boxes remain, according to the acting president, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, of Lenox and New York.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky will play six concerts, August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15, at beautiful "Tanglewood," 210-acre estate between Lenox and Strockbridge presented as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

"The thousands we expect for the concerts will be representative of all kinds of people in this country and Canada," said Mrs. de Heredia, whose lovely summer home is not far from "Tanglewood." "We have but a limited numbers of boxes remaining and hope that music lovers wishing to make reservations will do so at once to avoid disappointment."

MAHANOY CITY, PA.
RECORD-AMERICAN
JUN 22 1937

A MUSICIAN'S TROUBLES!

Dedham, Mass., June 22 (U.P.)—Ernest Panenka, 30, Boston symphony orchestra member who blew a sour note on his bassoon every time he thought of his wife, has an uncontested divorce on musical grounds.

A deposition from Conductor Serge Koussevitzky stated that Panenka's original work with the orchestra was so satisfactory that he soon became first bassoonist. After 1936, the deposition read, Panenka appeared absent-minded and disconsolate.

Panenka previously had testified that his wife objected strenuously to his bassoon practice at home and that he finally bought a piano to keep up with his music. Then, he said, his wife whistled, sang or rattled dishes to disturb him.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUN 15 1937

ADVISORY BOARD OF B'KSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL IN SESSION

An important meeting of the advisory board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held yesterday at the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, Mass., and was attended by about fifty persons, all intensely interested in making the Festival's six concerts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the musical event of the season in this section of the United States. Prior to the meeting, the advisory committee and several members of the board of trustees were entertained at luncheon at the Berkshire Inn by Robert K Wheeler, a member of the board of trustees.

In the absence in Europe of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, Mass., executive vice president, presided. After a word or two of welcome, Mrs. Edman introduced Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, of Lenox, Mass., vice president. Mrs. de Heredia spoke of the splendid co-operation the trustees were receiving from the advisory committee in furthering the Festival, which she characterized as a "wonderful thing in the musical world."

George W. Edman, of the board of trustees, then spoke of the wonderful generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., in giving her property, "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. She has done this as a memorial to her father and mother. Mr. Edman described "Tanglewood's" fine location, its accessibility, and stated that, with four exits to the property, there never could be any traffic jam." He told of the fine work being done to the grounds by the Berkshire Garden Centre.

Henry W. Dwight, treasurer, gave a concise account of the Festival's finances, after which Mrs. Owen Johnson, of Stockbridge, gave some delightful and humorous reminiscences of the beginnings and first year, "that exciting and wonderful year," as she said, of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. She termed the Boston Symphony Orchestra a "perfected orchestra" and Kousevitsky a "genius."

A list of the number of subscribers in the various towns was read, literature distributed, and announcement was made that the next meeting, with a tea following, will be held at "Tanglewood" sometime early in July.

Those from Columbia county who attended yesterday's meeting and luncheon were Mrs. Alexander Bloch, of Hillsdale, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley and Mrs. Wendover Neefus, of this city.

Many additions will be made within a few weeks to the following list of those from this section of the county who have already subscribed: James E. Leath, Mrs. J. Sanderson Hand, Mrs. Thomas Hastings, Mrs. Ernest P. Hoes, Mrs. Paul Judson, Alfred T. Ogden, Miss Florence Brooks and Mrs. William B. Van Alstyne, of Kinderhook; Miss Mabel Esselstyn, Miss Mary Bristol and Charles Heermance, of Claverack, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley and Gerald S. Bliss, of this city.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD
JUN 22 1937

BASSOON WINS DIVORCE

Musician's Practice Leads to Decree

DEDHAM, Mass., June 21 (U.P). Ernest Panenka, 30, Boston symphony orchestra member who struck a sour note on his bassoon every time he thought ◆Serge Koussevitzky stated that Panenka's original work with the orchestra was so satisfactory that he soon became first bassoonist. A year ago, the deposition read, Panenka appeared disconsolate.

Panenka had testified his wife objected strenuously to his bassoon practice at home.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

Koussevitsky Helps Bassoon Player Get Divorce from Wife

Dedham, Mass., June 21.—(AP)—A deposition by Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony Orchestra director, today helped Ernst Panenka, of Brookline, Mass., bassoon player in the orchestra, to win a divorce from his wife, Rosa.

Koussevitsky, vacationing in Europe, in his deposition said that Panenka was such an excellent bassoonist that he soon became first bassoonist in the orchestra. But in 1936, he delivered so many sour notes, that Koussevitsky demoted him to the ranks, and told him his sour notes indicated troubles at home.

Panenka explained the trouble with his bassoon playing was his wife.

Judge Joseph R. McCoole awarded him the decree on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment, and Panenka agreed to pay his wife $15 weekly.

Pittsburgh PRESS

SUNDAY, JUNE 20, 1937

Festival To Feature Boston Symphony As Week-End Attraction

Music Patron Gives Vast Estate For Pavilion Where Concerts Will Be Regular Attractions

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Critic

OUT IN Western Massachusetts where the picturesque section known as the Berkshire Hills gladdens the eyes of all who pass that way a notable non-profit music project is evolving

I refer to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival that has been held annually for the past three years at Stockbridge, Mass., and which will be held this year on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two weekends in August with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as the artistic magnets of the event.

Mr. Lewando

Last season the common undertaking of the Boston Orchestra and Berkshire Festival Association attained the highest point in artistic achievement since the festival's founding, scoring an emphatic success. Fifteen thousand persons attended the three performances, every one of which was a complete sell-out. Final accounting showed the Festival was out of the red by a wide margin.

The business success of this musical venture resulted from many happy contributing factors, executive skill and administrative efficiency.

The guiding genius, though, is Festival President Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge and New York City, whose vision, courage and artistic sense have won many to a great musical cause.

* * *

PROBABLY THE most important proponent of the Berkshire Festival and what it stands for is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Orchestra. Enthralled with its possibilities, he dreams and plans great things which when realized will make the Berkshire Festival as famous in America as that of Salzburg is in Europe.

Last year Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate was the scene of memorable accomplishment. It was offered for sale to the Festival Association but sufficient funds could not be raised to purchase the property. Moreover, the committee was unable to find another likely location that could be bought at a figure within the limit of the Association's exchequer. For a time it looked as if the festival was doomed.

* * *

FINALLY, a backer appeared in the person of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., who by one act of generosity set at rest forever all fears for a festival site. She offered as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra her 210-acre estate, "Tanglewood," situated between Stockbridge and Lenox overlooking the mirror-like surface of Stockbridge Bowl (Lake Mahkeenac).

Mrs. Brooks' gift is in the nature memorial to her mother and of Dr. Kous-ful-n of the was Tap-tends Lake n this akapot
Tribe
Haw-Berk-ed cot-Hawglewood ouse of Seven Gables.

* * *

NEXT CAME the problem of erectin ga suitable pavilion for the festival performances.

This architectural assignment was given to Eliel Saarinen and when the opening concert day rolls around a pavilion accommodating 5000 persons will have been completed with the utmost attention given to matters of acoustic, comfort and artistic appearance.

Interest in the Berkshire Festival is running high. It is estimated that there will be an attendance of 30,000. The membership campaign

Concert Leader

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, eminent conductor, who will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of concerts that will feature the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., in August.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
JUN 22 1937

ERNEST Panenka, 30, Boston Sym-

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUN 20 1937

Round and Round With the Music

"BEETHOVEN'S EIGHTH SYMPHONY," played by Felix Weingartner and The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and published by Columbia. (Set No. 292.)

"BEETHOVEN'S EIGHTH SYMPHONY," played by Serge Koussevitsky and The Boston Symphony Orchestra and published by Victor (M 336).

Within a month of each other both Victor and Columbia have responded to popular appeal by issuing new recordings of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. It is supposedly one of Beethoven's minor symphonies. The new rendering of it should do much to dispel that sentiment. The symphony is, I believe, the shortest Beethoven ever wrote. It is also the merriest. It was written in 1812, played in Vienna in 1814, but not in New York until 1844. As is customary with works as startlingly new as Beethoven's must have been to the audience of his day, it was not well received. It is a very bold, very gay symphony and curiously enough, although it was one of his later symphonies—which one would expect to be romantic—the Eighth is a reversion to the manner of the First and Second symphonies. It is very classical and strict in form. The transitions from one theme to another have a Mozartian flavor in their simplicity, also a Mozartian joyousness. After the stupendous effort which Beethoven's Seventh symphony must have called for, the Eighth was probably written as a joyful diversion.

The opening theme of the second movement is amusing to notice for it was written to describe and mock the inexorable metronome.

A second unusual point about it is the frequent and well accentuated syncopation which we moderns are most apt to associate with jazz.

Both recordings are excellent. We may be forgiven for a native predilection for the Boston Symphony. There is a certain briskness and sharpness, a certain degage air which Weingartner, although a Viennese seems to lack. Nevertheless, the second movement was treated more sympathetically by this latter. The Columbia records themselves seem to have improved tremendously of late. We are very glad to point this out. This symphony is absolutely indispensable to anyone building a musical library. Because it is short and expensive, it makes an excellent summer house gift. Because it is so merry, children will be sure to like it.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

SYMPHONY LEADER AIDS MUSICIAN WIN DIVORCE

DEDHAM, June 21—A deposition by Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is now in Europe, helped Ernst Panenka of Brookline, bassoon player in the orchestra, to obtain a divorce today from his wife, Rosa, in Dedham Probate Court.

Koussevitzky stated in the deposition that he engaged Panenka and that the latter's work was so satisfactory that he made him first bassoon. Since 1936, however, the famous orchestra leader found Panenka absent-minded and sullen and no longer fraternized with fellow players, and Koussevitzky was forced to demote him to the ranks. When questioned about the change, Panenka told his leader that family trouble was responsible.

The divorce was granted by Judge Joseph R. McCoole on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment. Panenka was ordered to pay his wife $15 weekly.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 11 1937

Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, Mass., is helping with the planting of annuals at Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts will be presented Aug. 6, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Garden Center provides a clearing house for gardening information and invites persons attending the festival to visit the trial gardens.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 14 1937

OPERA IS PROPOSED FOR THE BERKSHIRES

Koussevitzky Group Hopes to Give Performances Next Year With Symphony Festival

Although the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at Stockbridge, Mass., in August will be devoted entirely to programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is probable that next season choral works and even operas may be presented. Operatic performances, however, will not be attempted unless money enough can be raised to give them in a finished manner.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and artistic director of the festival, also is considering the idea of establishing a school on the property which Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the orchestra as a permanent home for its annual event. The school's curriculum may consist largely of the advanced study of symphonic literature and the art of conducting.

Emil Saarinen, the architect commissioned to design an auditorium for the festival, will not decide on final plans until he has witnessed one of the festival gatherings, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. The building probably will be as inconspicuous as possible, so that it will merge into and harmonize with the countryside character of its surroundings.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
JUN 14 1937

Music Festival In Berkshires To Attract Many

Reservations Being Made For Symphonic Concerts August 5, 7, 8 and 12

Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large; Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of Joseph H. Choate, late ambassador to Great Britain; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Edward Taft, trustee of the orchestra; Albert Spalding, America's eminent violinist, Alta Rockefeller Prentice of Williamstown and New York, and Mrs. E. E. Whitney of Greenwich and New York, are among the many patrons for the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held in August. Only a limited number of boxes remain, according to the acting president, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, of Lenox and New York.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky will play six concerts, August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15, at beautiful "Tanglewood," 210-acre estate between Lenox and Strockbridge presented as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

"The thousands we expect for the concerts will be representative of all kinds of people in this country and Canada," said Mrs. de Heredia, whose lovely summer home is not far from "Tanglewood." "We have but a limited numbers of boxes remaining and hope that music lovers wishing to make reservations will do so at once to avoid disappointment."

MAHANOY CITY, PA.
RECORD-AMERICAN
JUN 22 1937

A MUSICIAN'S TROUBLES!

Dedham, Mass., June 22 (U.P.)—Ernest Panenka, 30, Boston symphony orchestra member who blew a sour note on his bassoon every time he thought of his wife, has an uncontested divorce on musical grounds.

A deposition from Conductor Serge Koussevitzky stated that Panenka's original work with the orchestra was so satisfactory that he soon became first bassoonist. After 1936, the deposition read, Panenka appeared absent-minded and disconsolate.

Panenka previously had testified that his wife objected strenuously to his bassoon practice at home and that he finally bought a piano to keep up with his music. Then, he said, his wife whistled, sang or rattled dishes to disturb him.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUN 15 1937

ADVISORY BOARD OF B'KSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL IN SESSION

An important meeting of the advisory board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held yesterday at the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, Mass., and was attended by about fifty persons, all intensely interested in making the Festival's six concerts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the musical event of the season in this section of the United States. Prior to the meeting, the advisory committee and several members of the board of trustees were entertained at luncheon at the Berkshire Inn by Robert K Wheeler, a member of the board of trustees.

In the absence in Europe of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, Mass., executive vice president, presided. After a word or two of welcome, Mrs. Edman introduced Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, of Lenox, Mass., vice president. Mrs. de Heredia spoke of the splendid co-operation the trustees were receiving from the advisory committee in furthering the Festival, which she characterized as a "wonderful thing in the musical world."

George W. Edman, of the board of trustees, then spoke of the wonderful generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., in giving her property, "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. She has done this as a memorial to her father and mother. Mr. Edman described "Tanglewood's" fine location, its accessibility, and stated that, with four exits to the property, there never could be any traffic jam." He told of the fine work being done to the grounds by the Berkshire Garden Centre.

Henry W. Dwight, treasurer, gave a concise account of the Festival's finances, after which Mrs. Owen Johnson, of Stockbridge, gave some delightful and humorous reminiscences of the beginnings and first year, "that exciting and wonderful year," as she said, of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. She termed the Boston Symphony Orchestra a "perfected orchestra" and Koussevitsky a "genius."

A list of the number of subscribers in the various towns was read, literature distributed, and announcement was made that the next meeting, with a tea following, will be held at "Tanglewood" sometime early in July.

Those from Columbia county who attended yesterday's meeting and luncheon were Mrs. Alexander Bloch, of Hillsdale, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley and Mrs. Wendover Neefus, of this city.

Many additions will be made within a few weeks to the following list of those from this section of the county who have already subscribed: James E. Leath, Mrs. J. Sanderson Hand, Mrs. Thomas Hastings, Mrs. Ernest P. Hoes, Mrs. Paul Judson, Alfred T. Ogden, Miss Florence Brooks and Mrs. William B. Van Alstyne, of Kinderhook; Miss Mabel Esselstyn, Miss Mary Bristol and Charles Heermance, of Claverack, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley and Gerald S. Bliss, of this city.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD
JUN 22 1937

as much smoke as the present candle does in that many minutes.

It is hoped that a grenade will be perfected which will consist of 12 cells, each to be ignited by a separate fuse during flight. At the moment of impact a detonating charge would scatter the pieces so that a considerable area would be covered.

Army officers believe such grenades would be of incalculable value as a defense against tank attacks. A battalion would, at present, have no chance against a company of 15 or 20 tanks, crossing a ridge line to the battalion front if the battalion had no one-pounders and

---

Koussevitzky Helps Bassoon Player Get Divorce from Wife

Dedham, Mass., June 21.—(AP)—A deposition by Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony Orchestra director, today helped Ernst Panenka, of Brookline, Mass., bassoon player in the orchestra, to win a divorce from his wife, Rosa.

Koussevitsky, vacationing in Europe, in his deposition said that Panenka was such an excellent bassoonist that he soon became first bassoonist in the orchestra. But in 1936, he delivered so many sour notes, that Koussevitsky demoted him to the ranks, and told him his sour notes indicated troubles at home.

Panenka explained the trouble with his bassoon playing was his wife.

Judge Joseph R. McCoole awarded him the decree on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment, and Panenka agreed to pay his wife $15 weekly.

Pittsburgh PRESS

SUNDAY, JUNE 20, 1937

Th

Festival To Feature Boston Symphony As Week-End Attraction

Music Patron Gives Vast Estate For Pavilion Where Concerts Will Be Regular Attractions

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Critic

OUT IN Western Massachusetts where the picturesque section known as the Berkshire Hills gladdens the eyes of all who pass that way a notable non-profit music project is evolving

I refer to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival that has been held annually for the past three years at Stockbridge, Mass., and which will be held this year on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as the artistic magnets of the event.

Mr. Lewando

Last season the common undertaking of the Boston Orchestra and Berkshire Festival Association attained the highest point in artistic achievement since the festival's founding, scoring an emphatic success. Fifteen thousand persons attended the three performances, every one of which was a complete sell-out. Final accounting showed the Festival was out of the red by a wide margin.

The business success of this musical venture resulted from many happy contributing factors, executive skill and administrative efficiency.

The guiding genius, though, is Festival President Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge and New York City, whose vision, courage and artistic sense have won many to a great musical cause.

* * *

PROBABLY THE most important proponent of the Berkshire Festival and what it stands for is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Orchestra. Enthralled with its possibilities, he dreams and plans great things which when realized will make the Berkshire Festival as famous in America as that of Salzburg is in Europe.

Last year Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate was the scene of memorable accomplishment. It was offered for sale to the Festival Association but sufficient funds could not be raised to purchase the property. Moreover, the committee was unable to find another likely location that could be bought at a figure within the limit of the Association's exchequer. For a time it looked as if the festival was doomed.

* * *

FINALLY, a backer appeared in the person of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., who by one act of generosity set at rest forever all fears for a festival site. She offered as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra her 210-acre estate, "Tanglewood," situated between Stockbridge and Lenox overlooking the mirror-like surface of Stockbridge Bowl (Lake Mahkeenac).

Mrs. Brooks' gift is in the nature of a memorial to her mother and father. Thus the first of Dr. Koussevitzky's requests had been fulfilled. Next came the problem of erecting a suitable pavilion for the performances this year.

Ideally located, "Tanglewood" was established in 1849 by William Tappan of Boston. The estate extends from West Street in Lenox to Lake Mahkeenac in Stockbridge. On this site in earlier days Chief Konkapot and the Stockbridge Indian Tribe held their pow-wows.

At "Tanglewood" Nathaniel Hawthorne resided while in the Berkshires. Here, in the little red cottage, burned 46 years ago, Hawthorne first related his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of Seven Gables."

* * *

NEXT CAME the problem of erectin ga suitable pavilion for the festival performances.

This architectural assignment was given to Eliel Saarinen and when the opening concert day rolls around a pavilion accommodating 5000 persons will have been completed with the utmost attention given to matters of acoustic, comfort and artistic appearance.

Interest in the Berkshire Festival is running high. It is estimated that there will be an attendance of 30,000. The membership campaign

Concert Leader

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, eminent conductor, who will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of concerts that will feature the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., in August.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
JUN 22 1937

° ° °

ERNEST Panenka, 30, Boston Sym-

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUN 20 1937

Round and Round With the Music

"BEETHOVEN'S EIGHTH SYMPHONY," played by Felix Weingartner and The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and published by Columbia. (Set No. 292.)

"BEETHOVEN'S EIGHTH SYMPHONY," played by Serge Koussevitsky and The Boston Symphony Orchestra and published by Victor (M 336).

Within a month of each other both Victor and Columbia have responded to popular appeal by issuing new recordings of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. It is supposedly one of Beethoven's minor symphonies. The new rendering of it should do much to dispel that sentiment. The symphony is, I believe, the shortest Beethoven ever wrote. It is also the merriest. It was written in 1812, played in Vienna in 1814, but not in New York until 1844. As is customary with works as startlingly new as Beethoven's must have been to the audience of his day, it was not well received. It is a very bold, very gay symphony and curiously enough, although it was one of his later symphonies—which one would expect to be romantic—the Eighth is a reversion to the manner of the First and Second symphonies. It is very classical and strict in form. The transitions from one theme to another have a Mozartian flavor in their simplicity, also a Mozartian joyousness. After the stupendous effort which Beethoven's Seventh symphony must have called for, the Eighth was probably written as a joyful diversion.

The opening theme of the second movement is amusing to notice for it was written to describe and mock the inexorable metronome.

A second unusual point about it is the frequent and well accentuated syncopation which we moderns are most apt to associate with jazz.

Both recordings are excellent. We may be forgiven for a native predilection for the Boston Symphony. There is a certain briskness and sharpness, a certain degage air which Weingartner, although a Viennese seems to lack. Nevertheless, the second movement was treated more sympathetically by this latter. The Columbia records themselves seem to have improved tremendously of late. We are very glad to point this out. This symphony is absolutely indispensable to anyone building a musical library. Because it is short and expensive, it makes an excellent summer house gift. Because it is so merry, children will be sure to like it.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

SYMPHONY LEADER AIDS MUSICIAN WIN DIVORCE

DEDHAM, June 21—A deposition by Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is now in Europe, helped Ernst Panenka of Brookline, bassoon player in the orchestra, to obtain a divorce today from his wife, Rosa, in Dedham Probate Court.

Koussevitsky stated in the deposition that he engaged Panenka and that the latter's work was so satisfactory that he made him first bassoon. Since 1936, however, the famous orchestra leader found Panenka absent-minded and sullen and no longer fraternized with fellow players, and Koussevitzky was forced to demote him to the ranks. When questioned about the change, Panenka told his leader that family trouble was responsible.

The divorce was granted by Judge Joseph R. McCoole on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment. Panenka was ordered to pay his wife $15 weekly.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 11 1937

Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, Mass., is helping with the planting of annuals at Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts will be presented Aug. 6, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Garden Center provides a clearing house for gardening information and invites persons attending the festival to visit the trial gardens.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
JUL 7 - 1937

93

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUN 20 1937

Strange Festival Reverses Every 'Trend' in Business

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 19 (AP)— The Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Natural Beauty

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-Gothic or pesudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up the middle of it.

Famous Epitaph

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
"Have mercy on him, gracious God,
"As he would do if he were God
"And you were Johnny Konapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

Symphonic Concerts

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Houssevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

JUN 20 1937

Berkshire Festival Is Reversing 'Trends'

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., JUNE 19.—(AP).—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival-giving business. Etc. like above

---

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

JUL 7 - 1937

Olin Downes Plans To Deliver Four Music Lectures

Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month, on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield, Mass.

Mr. Downes will lecture Aug. 5, 6, 12, and 13, at 11 o'clock. The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will give its concerts at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Aug. 5, 7, and 8; Aug. 12, 14, and 15.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

JUN 22 1937

SOUR NOTES CAUSED BY WIFE'S ACTIONS

Bassoonist Granted Divorce After Reading of Deposition of Orchestra Conductor.

DEDHAM, June 21 (AP)—A deposition by Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, today helped Ernest Panenka, of Brookline, bassoon player in the orchestra, to win a divorce.

Koussevitsky, now vacationing in Europe, said in his deposition that Panenka was an excellent bassoonist—the best in the orchestra in fact.

But in 1936, he added, Panenka delivered so many sour notes, that Koussevitsky suspected troubles at home and demoted him to the ranks.

Unless Panenka could patch things up and regain his former ability, the orchestra would get a new bassoonist, Koussevitsky said in his affidavit.

Panenka explained the trouble was due to his wife, Rosa. He said she slammed doors, threw dishes around and even whistled while he was practicing, and also tore up pictures he made as a hobby.

Judge Juseph R. Coole awarded him the decree on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment, and Panenka agreed to pay his wife $15 weekly alimony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 22 1937

SOUR BASSOON NOTES WIN PLAYER DIVORCE

Boston Symphony Director's Deposition Aids Suit of Orchestra Musician

DEDHAM, Mass., June 21 (AP).—

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 22 1937

Bassoon Player Is Granted Divorce On Musical Grounds

Dedham, June 22—Ernest Pan-

WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL

JUN 2 [illegible]

Wife Caused Musician To Make Sour Notes So He Gets Divorce

DEDHAM, Mass., June 22 (U.P.).

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

JUN 22 1937

Musician Gets Divorce; His Wife Played Havoc With Bassoon Practice

DEDHAM, Mass., June 22.

MOUNT CARMEL, PA.
ITEM

JUN 22 1937

MUSICAL DISCORD WINS MAN DIVORC

DEDHAM, Mass., June 22 (UP).

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

JUN 22 1937

Sour Notes on Bassoon Win Musician Divorce

Dedham, Mass., June 22 (UP). —Ernest Panenka, 30, Boston

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 26 1936

Summer Recitals

Several Events This Week at Northeastern Resorts

Although it has probably not yet equaled the number of summer theaters, there is an increasing number of concerts each summer in resorts of the Northeastern states. Among those announced for this week are:

East Hampton, L. I., John Drew Memorial Theater, tonight: Marion Newberry, soprano; Jacob Schwartzdorf and Richard Gordon, pianists.

Whitefield, N. H., Chase Barn Theater, today at 4: Norbert Lauga, violinist; Reginald Boardman, pianist.

Cummington, Mass., Berkshire region, Playhouse-in-the-Hills, today at 4: Lonny Epstein, piano; Hugo Kortschak, violin; Harry Berman, viola. Viola and piano sonata, Hindemith; Trio in E flat, Op. 40, Mozart.

Vineyard Haven, Mass., Mrs. Arnsdorf's studio, Monday night: Virginia and Mary Drane, violinists.

Bennington, Vt., Yellow Barn, Tuesday night: Ray Lev, pianist.

Mystic, Conn., William G. Hammond's studio, Wednesday afternoon.

Lake Placid, N. Y., Ka-ren-ni-oke, Thursday afternoon: John Corigliano, violin; Clarence Adler, piano. Sonatas by Grieg, Franck and Saint-Saens.

The principal musical event in the Berkshire region, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, will be held near Stockbridge, Mass., on August 13, 15 and 16.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1936

Berkshire Festival It is good news to music-lovers that Dr. Koussevitzky has for the first time in this country consented to conduct a series of Summer festival concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A three-day program of the highest artistic character has been arranged at Stockbridge for August 13, 15, and 16.

Almost every city from Maine to California has plenty of Summer music. In some of the larger centers the quality of the performances is unquestionably high. There are the Stadium concerts in New York by the Philharmonic Orchestra under distinguished conductors and with fine assisting artists. There are good performances of Summer opera, too, in most of the big towns.

But we have no great Summer music festival like those, for instance, at Salzburg and Bayreuth. And only the privileged few can go abroad to hear a month's series of concert and opera given under ideal conditions and with artists gathered from the four corners of the world.

The United States may eventually have a similar festival for its residents who are unable to go abroad. Dr. Koussevitzky's initial appearances at Stockbridge are a step in the right direction. Perhaps America will yet have a Salzburg in the Berkshires, the White Mountains, or the Rockies. In the meantime Worcester, Cincinnati, and a growing number of other cities will continue to enjoy their Fall or Winter festivals.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1936

SUPPORT IS URGED FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

August Event Now in Critical Stage — Financial Success in Doubt

Pittsfield, July 27—Declaring that the Berkshire symphonic festival was in a critical stage, trustees today issued a statement urging greater support and emphasized the advantage of buying subscription tickets for the concerts to be held August 13, 15 and 16. The festival is scheduled for Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The Boston symphony orchestra and Dr Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction.

The trustees' statement follows: "Naturally it will mean more revenue to the festival if single admissions are purchased but since the festival is a nonprofit making venture designed to establish a great music center in western New England, we would be guilty of an unforgivable oversight if we failed to emphasize the advantage of buying subscriptions. Subscriptions are all transferable.

"We have sol widespread area assure a financi two weeks will men will meet Griswold at St By that time whether the futu is in doubt. Therefore we ask every music lover and others interested in the success of this venture to contact their local chairmen at once or write directly to the office at Stockbridge."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 6 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL LECTURE SERIES

Olin Downes Will Discuss Program by Boston Orchestra

Olin Downes, New York Times critic, will give a series of lectures next month at the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition to the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The talks will be given at 11 a.m. Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13. Because the hall's seating capacity is limited invitation to the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and festival patrons.

Serge Koussevitsky will lead the symphony orchestra in the concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 183, Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. Mr. Downes is nationally known. He began his musical studies when eight years old and continued them in Boston with Homer Norris in harmony, Carl Baermann in piano and Dr. Louis Kelterborn in history of music. He began his newspaper work on the Boston Post and transferred to the Times in 1924. He has written some books on music, his latest being "Symphonic Masterpieces."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 6 - 1937

LECTURE SERIES BY OLIN DOWNES

On Music to be Played at Festival

Olin Downes, eminent critic of the New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane memorial addition of the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield.

Mr. Downes will lecture August 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 a. m. The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will give its six concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 183, August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15.

Because the seating capacity of the hall is limited, invitations to attend the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and patrons of the festival. Tickets for the series or for single lectures may be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1937

CRITIC TO LECTURE ON FESTIVAL MUSIC

Olin Downes to Discuss Boston Series at Berkshire Museum

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield. Mr. Downes will lecture Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 a. m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will give its concerts at "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 183, Aug. 5, 7 and 8; Aug. 12, 14 and 15.

Because the seating capacity of the hall is limited, invitations to attend the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and patrons of the Festival. Tickets for the series or for single lectures may be obtained at the Festival office in Stockbridge, Mass.

93

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUN 20 1937

Strange Festival Reverses Every 'Trend' in Business

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 19 (AP) The Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business.

For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty. So that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Natural Beauty

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-Gothic or pesudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of "Tanglewood," the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up the middle of it.

Famous Epitaph

Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
"Have mercy on him, gracious
God,
"As he would do if he were God
"And you were Johnny Konapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

Symphonic Concerts

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Houssevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute or Juilliard school, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

Believe it or not—in four years the symphonic festival never has had a quarrel with one of its neighbors.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

JUN 20 1937

Berkshire Festival Is Reversing 'Trends'

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., JUNE 19.—(AP).—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival-giving business. Etc. like above

---

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

JUL 7 - 1937

Olin Downes Plans To Deliver Four Music Lectures

Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month, on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield, Mass.

Mr. Downes will lecture Aug. 5, 6, 12, and 13, at 11 o'clock. The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will give its concerts at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Aug. 5, 7, and 8; Aug. 12, 14, and 15.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

JUN 22 1937

SOUR NOTES CAUSED BY WIFE'S ACTIONS

Bassoonist Granted Divorce After Reading of Deposition of Orchestra Conductor.

DEDHAM, June 21 (AP)—A deposition by Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, today helped Ernest Panenka, of Brookline, bassoon player in the orchestra, to win a divorce.

Koussevitsky, now vacationing in Europe, said in his deposition that Panenka was an excellent bassoonist—the best in the orchestra in fact.

But in 1936, he added, Panenka delivered so many sour notes, that Koussevitsky suspected troubles at home and demoted him to the ranks.

Unless Panenka could patch things up and regain his former ability, the orchestra would get a new bassoonist, Koussevitsky said in his affidavit.

Panenka explained the trouble was due to his wife, Rosa. He said she slammed doors, threw dishes around and even whistled while he was practicing, and also tore up pictures he made as a hobby.

Judge Juseph R. Coole awarded him the decree on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment, and Panenka agreed to pay his wife $15 weekly alimony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 22 1937

SOUR BASSOON NOTES WIN PLAYER DIVORCE

Boston Symphony Director's Deposition Aids Suit of Orchestra Musician

DEDHAM, Mass., June 21 (AP).—

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN [illegible]

Bassoon Player Is Granted Divorce On Musical Grounds

Dedham, June 22—Ernest Pan-

WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL

JUN [illegible]

Wife Caused Musician To Make Sour Notes So He Gets Divorce

DEDHAM, Mass., June 22 (U.P.).

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

JUN 22 1937

Musician Gets Divorce; His Wife Played Havoc With Bassoon Practice

DEDHAM, Mass., June 22.

MOUNT CARMEL, PA.
ITEM

JUN 22 1937

MUSICAL DISCORD WINS MAN DIVORCE

DEDHAM, Mass., June 22 (UP).

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

JUN 22 1937

Sour Notes on Bassoon Win Musician Divorce

Dedham, Mass., June 22 (UP) —Ernest Panenka, 30, Boston

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 26 1936

Summer Recitals

Several Events This Week at Northeastern Resorts

Although it has probably not yet equaled the number of summer theaters, there is an increasing number of concerts each summer in resorts of the Northeastern states. Among those announced for this week are:

East Hampton, L. I., John Drew Memorial Theater, tonight: Marion Newberry, soprano; Jacob Schwartzdorf and Richard Gordon, pianists.

Whitefield, N. H., Chase Barn Theater, today at 4: Norbert Lauga, violinist; Reginald Boardman, pianist.

Cummington, Mass., Berkshire region, Playhouse-in-the-Hills, today at 4: Lonny Epstein, piano; Hugo Kortschak, violin; Harry Berman, viola. Viola and piano sonata, Hindemith; Trio in E flat, Op. 40, Mozart.

Vineyard Haven, Mass., Mrs. Arnsdorf's studio, Monday night: Virginia and Mary Drane, violinists.

Bennington, Vt., Yellow Barn, Tuesday night: Ray Lev, pianist.

Mystic, Conn., William G. Hammond's studio, Wednesday afternoon.

Lake Placid, N. Y., Ka-ren-ni-oke, Thursday afternoon: John Corigliano, violin; Clarence Adler, piano. Sonatas by Grieg, Franck and Saint-Saens.

The principal musical event in the Berkshire region, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, will be held near Stockbridge, Mass., on August 13, 15 and 16.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1936

Berkshire Festival It is good news to music-lovers that Dr. Koussevitzky has for the first time in this country consented to conduct a series of Summer festival concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A three-day program of the highest artistic character has been arranged at Stockbridge for August 13, 15, and 16.

Almost every city from Maine to California has plenty of Summer music. In some of the larger centers the quality of the performances is unquestionably high. There are the Stadium concerts in New York by the Philharmonic Orchestra under distinguished conductors and with fine assisting artists. There are good performances of Summer opera, too, in most of the big towns.

But we have no great Summer music festival like those, for instance, at Salzburg and Bayreuth. And only the privileged few can go abroad to hear a month's series of concert and opera given under ideal conditions and with artists gathered from the four corners of the world.

The United States may eventually have a similar festival for its residents who are unable to go abroad. Dr. Koussevitzky's initial appearances at Stockbridge are a step in the right direction. Perhaps America will yet have a Salzburg in the Berkshires, the White Mountains, or the Rockies. In the meantime Worcester, Cincinnati, and a growing number of other cities will continue to enjoy their Fall or Winter festivals.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1936

SUPPORT IS URGED FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

August Event Now in Critical Stage — Financial Success in Doubt

Pittsfield, July 27—Declaring that the Berkshire symphonic festival was in a critical stage, trustees today issued a statement urging greater support and emphasized the advantage of buying subscription tickets for the concerts to be held August 13, 15 and 16. The festival is scheduled for Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The Boston symphony orchestra and Dr Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction.

The trustees' statement follows: "Naturally it will mean more revenue to the festival if single admissions are purchased but since the festival is a nonprofit making venture designed to establish a great music center in western New England, we would be guilty of an unforgivable oversight if we failed to emphasize the advantage of buying subscriptions. Subscriptions are all transferable.

"We have sold subscriptions in a widespread area but not enough to assure a financial success. The next two weeks will be critical. Subchairmen will meet with Mrs Charles C. Griswold at Stockbridge August 4. By that time we ought to know whether the future of the festival is in doubt. Therefore we ask every music lover and others interested in the success of this venture to contact their local chairmen at once or write directly to the office at Stockbridge."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 6 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL LECTURE SERIES

Olin Downes Will Discuss Program by Boston Orchestra

Olin Downes, New York Times critic, will give a series of lectures next month at the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition to the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The talks will be given at 11 a.m. Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13. Because the hall's seating capacity is limited invitation to the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and festival patrons.

Serge Koussevitsky will lead the symphony ~~orchestra~~ in the concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 183, Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. Mr. Downes is nationally known. He began his musical studies when eight years old and continued them in Boston with Homer Norris in harmony, Carl Baermann in piano and Dr. Louis Kelterborn in history of music. He began his newspaper work on the Boston Post and transferred to the Times in 1924. He has written some books on music, his latest being "Symphonic Masterpieces."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 6 - 1937

LECTURE SERIES BY OLIN DOWNES

On Music to be Played at Festival

Olin Downes, eminent critic of the New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane memorial addition of the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield.

Mr. Downes will lecture August 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 a. m. The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will give its six concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 183, August 5, 7 and 8; August 12, 14 and 15.

Because the seating capacity of the hall is limited, invitations to attend the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and patrons of the festival. Tickets for the series or for single lectures may be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1937

CRITIC TO LECTURE ON FESTIVAL MUSIC

Olin Downes to Discuss Boston Series at Berkshire Museum

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 3 - 1937 94

DOWNES, EMINENT CRITIC, TO LECTURE ON FESTIVAL AT MUSEUM IN PITTSFIELD

New York Times Writer To Discuss Music of Boston Symphony Orchestra in Four Talks To Be Given in Ellen Crane Addition Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13—Tickets for Lectures Available First to Members Because of Limited Seating Capacity

Olin Downes, eminent critic of the New York Times, who started to write music criticism in Boston in his 20th year, will give a series of four lectures next month, on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the Berkshire Museum.

Mr. Downes will lecture Aug. 5, 6, 12, and 13, at 11 A. M. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will give its six xconcerts at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 183, Aug. 5, 7 and 8, and Aug. 12, 14 and 15.

Capacity Limited

Because the seating capacity of the hall is limited, invitations to attend the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and patrons of the Festival. Tickets for the series or for single lectures may be obtained at the Festival office in Stockbridge.

Mr. Downes, a national figure, was born in Evanston, Ill., Jan. 27, 1886. He commenced the study of the piano at the age of 8 and continued his studies in Boston when he was 16, with Homer Norris, in harmony; Carl Baermann, in piano; Dr. Louis Kelterborn, in the history of music. He played piano accompaniments in studios and studied the viola a little; taught and accompanied whenever he got any work to do in that direction, and then began writing music criticism for The Post.

On Jan. 1, 1924, Mr. Downes went from The Post to The Times. He has written two or three books, the latest one being "Symphonic Masterpieces."

Taught Theory and History

In 1912-13, Mr. Downes taught theory and music history at Chautauqua Institute and assisted in similar courses at Harvard University Summer School and Boston University. He has likewise lectured at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, at a number of universities throughout the country and contributed to many magazines, including "Musical Quarterly," the "New Music Review," "The Musician," "Musical America" and periodicals, including "The Saturday Evening Post," "The North American Review," "Vanity Fair," and others.

"If I were to go into details of where I thought I had learned the most, I would say it was from the remarkable Dr. Louis Kelterborn in Boston, who started his career as a student of jurisprudence under Nietzsche at Basle and became a remarkably broad-minded musician," said Mr. Downes today in commenting on his experience.

OLIN DOWNES

. . . My experience convinces me, that the Beethovens and the Wagners wrote their music for the plain men and women of the world . . ."

"For some four years he gave me a background of general music history and actual detailed ecquaintance with many masters' works whose contents and form he discussed with me most illuminatingly; and also from the writings of the incomparable Philip Hale, which I read daily in Boston before and after I started writing myself, for some 24 years; and not the least from some intensive work of a few months at the Congressional Library in Washington in my 15th year.

"The Man in the Street"

"I am happy to say that there were no professional musicians in my generation in my family and that I approached music in a sense from the outside standpoint of the man in the street, rather than from the professional and sophisticated background that a professional musical family would have given me.

"Perhaps for these reasons, music is, to me, very much an integral part of a man's living and thinking, rather than a specialized art, to be cultivated only by connoisseurs, critics and artists; and my experience convinces me, not only that the Beethovens and the Wagners wrote their music for the plain men and women of the world, but that their art is readily assimilated and intensely enjoyed by people with no technical knowledge or particular experience of it."

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

JUL 10 1937

Berkshire Festival Is Well Subscribed

Over $20,000—more than the total budget of last year, and over half the coming season's budget of $40,000—has already been raised by the management of the Berkshire Festival through subscriptions in the form of patrons and memberships, according to The New York Times.

The details of the sources of income are as follows: Patrons pay $75 for a box; full membership, at $10, buys one high or two lower priced tickets for each of six concerts; sustaining membership for $5, affords the same privileges as full membership, but for three concerts only.

Tanglewood, new home of the festival, is equipped for 5,000 customers. All the seats will be under canvas.

The need for a $40,000 budget is twofold. The orchestra will give six concerts, as against three of last season. Also (and therefore) the management must face the expense of housing for two weeks the full personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the festival, is expected about July 27, and will make his headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

JUL 9 - 1937

• • •

Hub Symphony Orchestra Has Permanent Home For Its Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has begun a new development; one that is likely to be more significant than anything since it was founded by Henry Lee Higginson 56 years ago.

This was not yet fully perceptible even last summer, when Dr. Koussevitzky and his men played the three concerts that constituted the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. When the story came over the wires, a few months ago, that Mrs. Gorhan Brooks of Brookline had given her beautiful and historic "Tanglewood" estate in the Berkshire hills to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival it took on new significance. From now on, assuming a continued success and growth of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston orchestra will devote an appreciable part of the year not to one more extension of its regular season (either at home or afield) but to a different kind of season altogether.

The new season will differ from the regular one in those obvious ways in which festivals differ from regular concerts.

At the Berkshire Festival the audiences will be clearly composed not only of natives of summer residents hereabouts but also of many who will have been attracted from long distances specifically for the purpose of attending the festival.

Last year the festival attendants from twenty-five States certainly included a goodly number of persons who had come from distant places and at considerable inconvenience to attend the outdoor concerts of the world-famous orchestra and its conductor. The festival this August, when the orchestra will give six concerts in two weeks instead of three in one, is certain to draw greatly increased numbers and from farther distances and many Maine music-lovers will no doubt be among them.

The "hall" where the concerts will be given is a good-sized field, capable of accommodating at least five thousand persons comfortably, and surrounded by natural walls of trees. There is also a natural slope to the field, so that orchestra and conductor, at the foot of it, will be visible to the audience without benefit of tiers for the chairs.

Eventually, as has already been disclosed, there will be a permanent auditorium or some similar and suitable structure.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 13 1937

More than half the $40,000 budget has been raised by the management of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival thru subscriptions in the form of patrons and memberships. That sum is more than the total budget of last year.

The doubled budget is necessary because the orchestra will give six concerts as against three in 1936 and the full personnel of the Boston Symphony orchestra must be housed for two weeks. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the festival, is expected about July 27 and will make his headquarters at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club.

The Schubert Memorial, Inc., has elected Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, as president to succeed the late Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Dr. Gabrilowitsch held that office from the organization's beginning in 1928.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 14 1937

FUNERAL MARCH FOR GERSHWIN

Boston, July 14. — (UP) — Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, last night played the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Heroic" Symphony in memory of George Gershwin, modern composer who died in Hollywood Sunday.

The regular outdoor esplanade concert was interrupted to announce the tribute to Gershwin, "known and admired by the orchestra, and esteemed by Mr. Fiedler . . . as a stimulating figure in American music . . . who added earnest effort to real talent."

More than 8,000 music lovers, many of them wrapped in overcoats and blankets because of a sudden cool spell, lined Charles river bank.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

JUL

Critic Will Lecture

Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month on the compositions to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The lectures will be given on August 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 a.m., in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the Berkshire Museum, Pittfield, Mass.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUL 10 1937

MUSIC FEATURES FOR BERKSHIRES

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens August 5 for its fourth Summer, is reversing almost every "trend" in the festival giving business. For one thing, this curious festival will never make any money for anybody. This will shock many European festival bodies; Salzburg, especially, where the annual Summer gathering of eager musical seekers is a financial success, but where the municipal theater has had to close down in poverty.

The Berkshires take everything quite seriously, even their beauty, so that the festival, although more successful than most, will always turn back any surplus for improvement. This same serious spirit has, for example, kept every inch of the main road between Stockbridge and Lenox free of gasoline stations.

Secondly, the socially and musically prominent among the festival's backers apparently do not want to do anything "monumental." No neo-gothic or pseudo-classic buildings are likely to dwarf the magnificent hemlock hedges and soaring pines of Tanglewood, the property Mrs. Gorham Brooks has given the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

Eliel Saarinen, who has been commissioned to design a permanent home for the festival, will not decide on a final form until he has seen a crowd on the estate, according to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Probably the building will be as inconspicuous as possible, designed to merge with the "country" atmosphere and tradition.

Originally the 210-acre estate where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was part of an Indian council ground; an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, an enormous tree having grown up in the middle of it. Chief Konkapot of the Stockbridge tribe of Mohican Indians held council on the shore of Lake Mahkeenic; although many writers connect Abraham Lincoln's famous rhymed epitaph with a Kickapoo Indian, some believe it refers to this same chief:

"Here lies poor Johnny Kongapod,
Have mercy on him, gracious God,
As he would do if he were God
And you were Johnny Kongapod."

Last year's third festival was visited and approved, incidentally, by (literally) the last of the Mohican chiefs. He is the Rev. Samuel Miller, an impressive 50-year-old Congregational minister from Gresham, Wis., and his Indian name is Uhm-Pa-Tuth.

Thirdly, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and artistic director of the festival, has no intention of duplicating anybody else's project. He has doubled its size this year, but only because last year so many wanted to attend that one week was not enough.

This year only symphonic concerts will be given. Perhaps a large chorus will take part next year. If money can be found to give opera in a finished (and not a "festival") manner, that may be done. Dr. Koussevitzky is playing also with the idea of a school on the big estate—not another Curtis Institute or Juilliard School, but one which does not touch any other field—perhaps for the advanced study of the symphonic literature and conducting.

And lastly, neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the Berkshire backers has the least intention of interfering with the large number of cultural activities already under way in the neighborhood. In fact, the festival announcement carries free mention of 13 other enterprises ranging from the well established Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge to Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

JUL 14 193

Boston Symphony Honors Gershwin

BOSTON, July 14, (UP)—Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, last night played the funeral march from Beethoven's "Heroic" symphony in memory of George Gershwin, modern composer who died in Hollywood Sunday.

The regular outdoor esplanade concert was interrupted to announce the tribute to Gershwin "Known and admired by the orchestra, and esteemed by Mr. Fiedler * * * as a stimulating figure in American music * * * who added earnest effort to real talent.'

More than 8,000 music lovers many of them wrapped in overcoats and blankets because of a sudden cold spell, lined Charles River bank.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 10 1937

Every Saturday

★ ★ ★

Mayor No Warwick He Says, Denying He Proposes To Perpetuate Dynasty.

Week's High Light

MAYOR BAGG'S decision not "to stick my nose into this election" was the high point of this week's City Hall news.

His statement offsets reports that the retiring chief executive of the city was planning to take an active part in the campaign in an effort to perpetuate his administration. Some municipal wags were saying that the Mayor intended to place a complete ticket in the field and already had held interviews with potential candidates.

"I have had my time," the Mayor said in reiterating his decision not to seek reelection or take part in the campaign. He apparently intends to make a clean break in leaving City Hall, and that probably is the only way in which he can be reasonably sure of the rest he is entitled to after four years of strenuous municipal life.

With only two candidates in the field—Thomas A. Macken and Harry Kannes—and two to be nominated, the mayoralty field is wide open. Councilman-at-Large William F. Magner, Alfred C. Daniels, Charles W. Dewey and others are being mentioned as potential candidates. Council President Denis T. Noonan and City Clerk Harold F. Goggins are definitely in the campaign picture and because of their acknowledged vote-getting strength no true appraisal of the election situation can be gained until they make known their intentions. Their attitude right now seems to be that "it's too hot to discuss politics."

* * *

Zoning Down County

IN GREAT BARRINGTON a few days ago, the fifth special town meeting of the year was held. The one and only purpose of the session was to act on zoning. A law pertaining thereto has been in effect there since 1932. The assemblage, the largest ever to convene for a special town meeting, literally tossed the report of the planning board out the window—a report that a group of five intelligent men had labored over for several days—not in their own interests, but in the interest of the town.

If Planning Boards are to function they must have the cooperation of the voters. In the first place, every town in Berkshire County would obtain beneficial results from community planning, properly directed. No one has questioned the integrity of those conducting the administration in Great Barrington, but apparently only persons interested in changing the by-laws attended the session.

It must be granted that changes some times are necessary in all things, including zoning laws, as a town grows. The recommendations for changes however should remain in the hands of the Planning Board.

After all, Great Barrington does have some industries, but the major part of its business is derived from the summer guest and tourist trade. If this is the case, and apparently it is, some consideration should be given that phase of zoning, if alterations are to be made in the regulations.

An attractive town, well planned, should receive its share of summer trade despite a few industries, if movements on town planning have the full cooperation of all townspeople, not a few. The charm of a well developed, unspoiled business section and its commercial value to the whole community, should not be jeopardized for the commercial interests of the few. Protection of the interests of the majority is the principle behind zoning and all just laws.

* * *

Cont. above right on next page.

Olin Downes's

OLIN Down critic o
Times, will de on the music t
Berkshire Sym
the Boston Sy
An able and d
Downes is equ
on the lecture
his boyhood in the orchestra gallery of Sym
the age of 20 b criticism for th remained in B
the great Phili when he joined lectures to be shire Museum
5 and 6 and Au
A. M., will affor cellent opportun
ter understandi joyment of the val.

Fourth Kept Po

Chief Sullivan
a difficult situa case of the ma ticket for th
Fourth was good Firing on the tinued desultori
Sunday-Monday was as quiet
chief took occas appreciation for received especia
in heralding the sult was a happi
have been possib
stances.

Many officials of Chief Sullivan of dangerous fire solutely prohibit ordinance or oth restrictions shou size. A difficult this raucous ag satisfied with t
of another gener boisterousness a time the reason noise is somethi alysis. That we to teach children
form of rattles,
toy pistols does
Most persons thi aboard this eart
selves heard. Th
cret if it does n
ororate or condo

SPRINGF
EVENIN

J

SIX CON WILL B AT TAN

Serge Kou nounces D grams by phony

Details of the will make up the Boston Symphony
Serge Koussevitzk
public by the dir shire Symphonic concerts will be g
new home of the Orchestra, betwe
Stockbridge.

The concerts
two groups of th
three, will be give at 8.30 p. m. and
p. m. The second
Aug. 12-14 at 8.30
4.40 p. m.

This will be
symphonic festival
be given by the Orchestra. Doubled
formances are alre
a subscription so the belief that a
America of the firs
ing established.

The programs w
Aug. 5—Beethov
ture to "Leonore" N
6, "Pastoral"; Sym

Aug. 7—Mozart,
flat; Hill, Two m
Sinfonietta for
Ravel, Second Su
Chloe"; Tchaikowsk
4.

Aug. 8—Schubert,
"Rosamunde"; Sch
Symphony; Stravi
"L'Oiseau de Feu
phony in D minor

Aug. 12—Wagn
to "Rienzi"; "A lude and Liebestod
Isolde"; "The Ride
"Waldweben from lude to "Parisfal";
hauser."

Aug. 14—Haydn,
in G major No. 8
phony No. 7;
"Scheherazade."

Aug. 15 — Bra
demic Festival O
No. 3; Symphony

95

Olin Downes's Lectures

OLIN Downes, eminent music critic of The New York Times, will deliver four lecture on the music to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra An able and delightful writer, Mr Downes is equally as entertaining on the lecture platform. He spen his boyhood in Boston, listened t the orchestra from the "peanut" gallery of Symphony Hall, and a the age of 20 began to write musi criticism for the Boston Post. H remained in Boston, a colleague o the great Philip Hale, until 192 when he joined The Times. Hi lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, Aug 5 and 6 and Aug. 12 and 13 at 1 A. M., will afford the public an excellent opportunity to obtain a better understanding and greater enjoyment of the music at the Festival.

* * *

Fourth Kept Police Busy

Chief Sullivan and his men faced a difficult situation for, as in the case of the man who bought the ticket for the clambake—the Fourth was good for all three days. Firing on the several fronts continued desultorily until mid-night Sunday-Monday and the city at 6 was as quiet as the tomb. The chief took occasion to express his appreciation for the cooperation he received especially from the press in heralding the danger. The result was a happier day than would have been possible in other circumstances.

Many officials share the opinion of Chief Sullivan that, if the sale of dangerous firecrackers is not absolutely prohibited by municipal ordinance or other means, positive restrictions should be placed upon size. A difficulty found is that, in this raucous age, persons are not satisfied with the simpler noises of another generation. They want boisterousness and variety. Meantime the reason why people like noise is something that eludes analysis. That we start at the cradle to teach children to like it in the form of rattles, drums, horns and toy pistols does not explain it all. Most persons think they were put aboard this earth to make themselves heard. That reveals the secret if it does not altogether exororate or condone Congress.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SIX CONCERTS WILL BE GIVEN AT TANGLEWOOD

Serge Koussevitzky Announces Details of Programs by Boston Symphony Orchestra

Details of the six concerts which will make up the six programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky have been made public by the directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. All concerts will be given at Tanglewood, new home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, between Pittsfield and Stockbridge.

The concerts will be diveded into two groups of three each. The first three will be given on Aug. 5 and 7 at 8.30 p. m. and on Aug. 8 at 4.30 p. m. The second group will be given Aug. 12-14 at 8.30 a. m. and Aug. 15 at 4.40 p. m.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

The programs will be as follows:

Aug. 5—Beethoven program, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"; Symphony No. 5.

Aug. 7—Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Hill, Two movements from the 'Sinfonietta for String Orchestra"; Ravel, Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikowsky, Symphony No. 4.

Aug. 8—Schubert, Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Schubert, "Unfinished" Symphony; Stravinsky, Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu"; Franck, Symphony in D minor.

Aug. 12—Wagner program, Overture to "Rienzi"; "A Siegfried Idyl;" Prelude and Libestod from "Tristan and Isolde"; "The Ride of the Valkyries"; "Waldweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parisfal"; Overture to "Tanhauser."

Aug. 14—Haydn, Symphony No. 13 in G major (No. 88); Sibelius, Symphony No. 7; Rimsky - Korsakoff "Scheherazade."

Aug. 15 — Brahms program, Academic Festival Overture; Symphony No. 3; Symphony No. 1.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 1 1 1937

Olin Downes to Lecture At Berkshire Festival

Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times, will give a series of four lectures next month, on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The lectures will be given in the new Ellen Crane memorial addition of the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield.

Mr Downes will lecture August 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 a. m. The Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitsky will give its concerts at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, on route 183, August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

Because the seating capacity of the hall is limited, invitations to attend the lectures are being sent first to sustaining members and patrons of the festival. Tickets for the series or for single lectures may be obtained at the festival office at Stockbridge.

Mr Downes was born in Evanston, Ill., January 27, 1886. He commenced the study of the piano at the age of eight and continued his studies in Boston when he was 16, with Homer Norris in harmony, Carl Baermann in piano, Dr Louis Kelterborn in the history of music. He played piano accompaniments in studios and studied the viola a little; taught and accompanied whenever he got any work to do in that direction and then began writing music criticism for the Boston Post.

On January 1, 1924, Mr Downes went from the Post to the Times. He has written two or three books, the latest one being "Symphonic Masterpieces."

In 1912-13 Mr Downes taught theory and music history at Chautauqua institute and assisted in similar courses at Harvard University Summer school and Boston university. He has likewise lectured at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, at a number of universities throughout the country and contributed to many magazines, including Musical Quarterly, the New Music Review, the Musician, Musical America," and periodicals, including the Saturday Evening Post, the North American Review, Vanity Fair and others.

"If I were to go into details of where I thought I had learned the most, I would say it was from the remarkable Dr Louis Kelterborn in Boston, who started his career as a student of jurisprudence under Nietzsche at Basle and became a remarkably broadminded musician," said Mr Downes in commenting on his experience. "For some four years he gave me a background of general music history and actual detailed acquaintance with many masters' works whose contents and form he discussed with me most illuminatingly, and also from the writings of the incomparable Philip Hale, which I read daily in Boston before and after I started writing myself, for some 24 years, and not the least from some intensive work of a few months at the Congressional library at Washington in my 15th year.

"I am happy to say that there were no professional musicians in my generation in my family and that I approached music in a sense from the outside standpoint of the man in the street, rather than from the professional and sophisticated background that a professional musical family would have given me.

"Perhaps for these reasons, music is, to me, very much an integral part of a man's living and thinking, rather than a specialized art to be cultivated only by connoisseurs, critics and artists, and my experience convinces me, not only that the Beethovens and the Wagners wrote their music for the plain men and women of the world, but that their art is readily assimilated and intensely enjoyed by people with no technical knowledge or particular experience of it."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 1 7 1937

Downes Lecture Tickets Go to Members First

Because of the demand for seats for the four lectures to be given by Olin Downes, Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13 at the Berkshire Museum, this city, Berkshire Symphonic Festival members who wish reservations are urged to return application blanks for tickets at once. After a reasonable time, if there are tickets left, they will be issued to subscribers and the general public. Mr. Downes will lecture on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Aug. 5, 7 and 8; Aug. 12, 14 and 15. On the list who have already applied for tickets are members and patrons from a widespread area.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 1

BERKSHIRE MPHONIC FESTIVAL OFFERED AT TANGLEWOOD

The Berkshire

BY EUGENE STINSON

THE fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival—the second to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky—has been doubled in extent and moved to a new locale, Tanglewood, an estate lying between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., and presented to the orchestra last winter.

The festival this summer will consist of six concerts in a space of two weeks and will commence Thursday, Aug. 5, the date of the opening of the final week of the Chicago Symphony's "festival" at Ravinia. Mr. Koussevitzky's program for this occasion will consist of works of Beethoven, the favorite "Leonore" overture, the "Pastoral" symphony and the fifth.

On the following Saturday evening Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct a Mozart symphony (E flat), two string movements by Hill, Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite and the fourth symphony of Tschaikowsky. On Sunday afternoon the program begins with Schubert, the ballet music for "Rosamunde" and the Unfinished symphony, continuing with Strawinsky's "Fire-Bird" and the Franck symphony.

A Wagnerian program is scheduled for the second Thursday evening concert: the overture to "Rienzi," "A Siegfried Idyl," the prelude and finale of "Tristan," "The Ride of the Valkyries," the Waldesweber from "Siegfried," the prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhaeuser."

A Haydn symphony in G (No. 88), Sibelius' seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Schererezade" are listed for Saturday evening; the festival closes the following afternocn, Aug. 15, with a Brahms program; the Academic Festival overture, the third symphony and the first.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 1 7 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL ATTRACTS GROUP

Six Are Coming From Pacific Coast

Attracted to the Berkshires by the Symphonic Festival, a party of six persons from Alameda, Calif., is leaving the Pacific coast this week by motor and upon arrival in the Berkshires will stay two to three months.

This information was received today at the office of the Berkshire Hills Conference. The group has never been to Berkshire before. In reply to the question as to what influenced them to come, the reply was:

"The Berkshire Symphonic Festival."

News releases have been issued regularly from the Festival office to a list of 150 to more than 300 newspapers and returns from a clipping bureau indicate that about twice as much space has been given to these releases as was given last year. Newspapers on the list cover every state in the Union and Canada. Included in the releases are weekly stories of activities at South Mountain in Pittsfield as well as of the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra next month at Tanglewood.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 16 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FETE TO FEATURE GREAT COMPOSERS

Appearing in the programs of the Berkshire symphonic festival to be held in the new auditorium at the festival site Tanglewood, near Lenox, in August, will be several modern works but the programs will be made up mostly of the established writings of well known composers, according to the program announcements recently sent out by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced the program in full:

Thursday, August 5, 8:30—Beethoven program, Overture to Leonore No. 3, Symphony 6, "Pastoral," Symphony 5.

Saturday, August 7, 8:30—Mozart, Symphony in E flat, Hill, two movement from the Sinfonietta for string orchestra; Ravel, Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky, Symphony 4.

Sunday, August 8, 4:30—Schubert, ballet music from "Rosamunde" and "Unfinished" Symphony; Stravinsky Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu"; Franck, Symphony in D minor.

Thursday, August 12, 8:30—Wagner program—Overture to "Rienzi," a Siegfried Idyl, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde," The Ride of the Valkyries, Walweben from "Siegfried," Prelude to "Parsifal," Overture to "Tannhauser."

Saturday, August 14, 8:30).—Haydn, Symphony 13 in G major (88); Sibelius, Symphony 7; Rimsky-Korsakov, "Scheherazade."

Sunday, August 15, 4:30—Brahms program, Academic Festival Overture, Symphony 3, Symphony 1.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JU

KOUSSEVITSKY SAILS HOME NEXT WEEK

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will sail next week on the Ile de France, and is expected to arrive in New York, July 27. He will have ample time to complete preparations for the annual symphonic festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Tanglewood, the estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. The concerts will be given Thursday and Saturday afternoons, August 5 and 7, and 12 and 14, and Sunday afternoons, August 8 and 15.

For the first evening concert, August 5, Dr. Koussevitsky has chosen a Beethoven program including the overture to "Leonore No. 3," and the two symphonies, No. 6, known as the "Pastoral," and No. 5. The second evening program, August 7, will be a more varied one including one or two works from composers of the modern school, a plan which he also will carry out in the first Sunday afternoon concert, August 8. An all Wagner program will be presented August 12 and the last program will be all Brahms, the academic festival overture and the symphonies No. 3 and No. 1.

So many Washingtonians, summering in the Berkshires, will have the privilege of hearing this leading orchestra of the country, a privilege which is denied them at home.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 1 7 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

Serge Koussevitsky Returns from Europe to Conduct Opening August 5

Serge Koussevitzky, the famous conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is about to sail from France on his return in preparation to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Koussevitzky is expected to arrive on the Ile de France, on July 27. The two weeks of concerts will inaugurate as a festival site Tanglewood, the beautiful and historic estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, in the Berkshire Hills, which was presented to the orchestra last winter. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 5 and 7, at 8.30, and Sunday afternoon, August 8, at 4.30; Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 12 and 14, at 8.30, and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4.30.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival, and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

Dr. Koussevitzky here announces the programs in full:

Thursday, Aug. 5 (8.30)

Beethoven Program—
  Overture to Leonore, No. 3
  Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"
  Symphony No. 5

Saturday, Aug. 7 (8.30)

Symphony in E flat — Mozart
Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra — Hill
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe" — Ravel
Symphony No. 4 — Tchaikovsky

Sunday, Aug. 8 (4.30)

Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" — Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony — Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu" — Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor — Franck

Thursday, Aug. 12 (8.30)

Wagner Program—
  Overture to "Rienzi"
  A Siegfried Idyl
  Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"
  The Ride of the Valkyries
  Waldweben from "Siegfried"
  Prelude to "Parsifal"
  Overture to "Tannhauser"

Saturday, Aug. 14 (8.30)

Symphony No. 13, in G major (No.— 88) — Haydn
Symphony No. 7 — Sibelius
"Scheherazade" — Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday, Aug. 15 (4.30)

Brahms Program—
  Academic Festival Overture
  Symphony No. 3
  Symphony No. 1

Tickets are on sale in Northampton and can be procured from Northampton School for Girls, The Music House, and from Miss Jane Bowker, at the Hampshire Bookshop.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 10 1937

96

Berkshire Festival Announces Programs

Six Concerts On Two Successive Weekends in August to Be Given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 'Tanglewood' — Selections Well Chosen for the Etnertainment of a Discriminating Public—Other Activities in That Vicinity

By BENJAMIN BUXTON

THE SIX programs to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival during the first and second weekends in August at Tanglewood, the festival's new home between Stockbridge and Lenox, have been arranged by Dr Koussevitzky with sound judgment. The selection of these programs is not startling for its modernity, nor orthodox for its classicism, yet there is sufficient contrast throughout to hold the attention of the intelligent symphonic listener.

With double the number of concerts previously given at the festival, the directors have wisely spread the series over two weekends, with an interval of a day between the first and second, both weeks. The schedule follows: Thursday night, August 5, at 8.30; Saturday night, August7, at 8.30; Sunday afternoon, August 8, at 4.30; Thursday night, August 12, at 8.30; Saturday night, August 14, at 8.30, and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4.30.

These programs have been arranged with an obvious desire to please the public, but a public whose taste has already become cultivated to the point of preferring the best. It is only in recent years that concerts entirely devoted to the works of one composer have been prevalent, yet in the coming festival series, three such programs are listed, one by Beethoven, one by Wagner and one by Brahms. Each one of these has become increasingly popular during the past seasons, and their particular styles are no longer unfamiliar to concertgoers, radio listeners, and phonograph record collectors.

Beethoven Program

In the first program, on Thursday, August 5, three of Beethoven's works will be played. Two of these, the "Leonore" overture No 3 and the Fifth symphony, are known to everyone. The centerpiece is the Sixth symphony, "Pastoral," not as frequently played as the Fifth or Seventh, and in lighter vein, with its "program" which makes it unique among the Beethoven symphonies.

The Wagner program, scheduled for Thursday night, August 12, will offer an interesting and comprehensive cross section of that composer's works, with the early "Rienzi," selections from the "Ring" cycle, from "Tristan," "Parsifal," and "Tannhaeuser." The complete list is as follows: Overture to "Rienzi"; "A Siegfried Idyl," "Prelude and Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde"; "The Ride of the Valkyries" from "Die Walkuere"; "Waldweban" from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal" and Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

The closing concert of the series, on Sunday afternoon, August 15, will be an all-Brahms program which will include three favorite works: The "Academic" festival overture, the Third and First symphonies.

The list of composers programmed for the other three concerts is interesting and varied: Mozart, Hill, Ravel, Tschaikowsy, Schubert, Stravinsky, Franck, Haydn, Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakoff. Here is classicism, romanticism, and in judicious splashes, modernism. One of the high spots of the festival will undoubtedly be the performance of the Seventh symphony of Sibelius, Finnish composer, many of whose works Dr Koussevitzky has introduced to this country. Those who heard him conduct the great Second symphony at the festival last year and during a previous season at the Springfield Auditorium, will recall it with the utmost pleasure, and will be interested to compare it with the much later Seventh.

If he has permitted himself the luxury of selecting a work by one of his favorite composers, Koussevitzky, on this same program, which will take place Saturday night, August 12, has chosen the colorful and melodious "Scheherazade" suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff, which sings and plays itself and which offers no problems of unfamiliarity. In the Haydn Symphony in G-major, No 88, the clear-cut idiom of classicism should also cause no mental tangles.

The second program, Saturday night, August 7, will include Mozart's E-flat symphony, two movements from a sinfonietta for string orchestra by Edward Burlingame Hill, contemporary Negro composer who has but recently come into prominence, the brilliant "Daphnis and Chloe" second suit of Ravel, and Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony.

The third program, Sunday afternoon, August 8, will also find listeners on familiar ground in Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and his ballet music from "Rosamunde," Franck's Symphony in D-minor, and Stravinsky's "Firebird" suite.

Regarded as he whole, these selections cannot be considered light summer entertainment, but with very few exceptions there are none which the public has not had an opportunity to hear in concert or over the radio during the past few years. A total of 10 symphonies for six concerts may sound formidable, but should give no cause for worry to present-day music lovers.

It is also necessary to call attention to the wealth of cultural entertainment of virtually every kind offered in the Berkshires. For chamber music the tourist has three places from which to choose on Sunday afternoons: South mountain, near Pittsfield; Falls Village, Ct., and the "Playhouse-in-the-Hills," Cummington. Ted Shawn's dancers appear each Friday afternoon at Becket, and the playhouse at Stockbridge and the art exhibition there are also to be considered.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

JUL 16 193

Koussevitzky To Return

Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is about to sail from France on his return in preparation to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He is expected to arrive on the Ile de France, on July 27.

The two weeks of concerts will inaugurate as a festival site Tanglewood, the historic estate between Stockbridge and Lenox in the Berkshire Hills, which was presented to the orchestra last winter.

The concert series will start on Thursday August 5. It will be the fourth annual symphonic festival, and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUL 16

Art and Music Fete Planned

Joint Program Set for August 4

THE Berkshire Symphonic festival, with lectures by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, and the twenty-ninth annual exhibition of the Stockbridge Art association will be held simultaneously in the Pittsfield, Mass., museum this summer.

Mr. Downes lectures will be concerned with the music of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

Usually held at Stockbridge, shortly after Labor day, the exhibition this year will open with the traditional Varnishing Day reception on Wednesday, Aug. 4, the day before the opening of the festival and the day before the first of Mr. Downes' lectures. The exhibition will continue through Aug. 18.

Formal announcement of the exhibition is made by Miss Olive Beaver for the exhibition committee, which consists of Nora Iasagi Bullitt, Margaret French Cresson, Jean MacLane, Marie O. Kobbe and John C. Johansen.

"We are delighted to avail ourselves of the opportunity offered us through the kindness of Miss Laura M. Bragg, director, and the trustee of the museum," said the committee today.

The exhibition will be in the Ellen Crane Memorial addition completed only last month, while the lectures by Mr. Downes will be in the theater of the same addition. Miss Bragg, the museum director was for several years director of the Museum at Charleston, S. C., honorary life director of that institution.

Artists from Massachusetts, New York, Vermont and New Hampshire have contributed in the past to the great success attending the Stockbridge show.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 18 1937

Program Prepared For 4th Festival In the Berkshires

Koussevitzky Sails for Six Concerts on Two Week Ends of August

Serge Koussevitzky is due here on July 27 on the Ile de France to begin rehearsals with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will be held on a new site, the Tanglewood Estate near Lenox, Mass., on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. The programs will be:

Thursday, August 5, 8:30

BEETHOVEN PROGRAM

Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; Symphonies Nos. 6 and 5.

Saturday, August 7, 8:30

Symphony in E flat..............Mozart
Two Movements from Sinfonietta for strings..............Hill
"Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.....Ravel
Symphony No. 4, in F minor..Tchaikovsky

Sunday, August 8, 4:30

Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Unfinished Symphony..............Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu"..Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor...........Franck

Thursday, August 12, 8:30

WAGNER PROGRAM

Overture to "Rienzi"; Siegfried Idyll: Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde"; Valkyries' Ride: Waldweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

Saturday, August 14, 8:30

Symphony in G, No. 13 (88).....Haydn
Symphony No. 7..................Sibelius
Scheherazade..........Rimsky-Korsakoff

Sunday, August 15, 4:30

BRAHMS PROGRAM

Academic Festival Overture; Symphonies Nos. 3 and 1.

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give four lectures on the festival programs in the Ellen Crane Memorial Addition of the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield on Thursday and Friday mornings, August 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 o'clock.

Information about tickets for the concerts and lectures, routes to Tanglewood and other activities during this period in the region is obtainable by application to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

In the second program of the chamber-music series at South Mountain, Pittsfield, today at 4 o'clock, the South Mountain Quartet will play Haydn's quartet in D, Op. 76; Reger's quartet in F sharp minor, Op. 121, and Dvorak's quintet in F, Op. 81.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 21 1937

HOTEL BOOKINGS HEAVY FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, July 20—Hotels in Lenox, Stockbridge and Great Barrington were reported booked full today for the first two weekends in August when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts will be given at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton.

Hotels and inns at Richmond, Pittsfield, Lee and Dalton are catching the overflow with many reservations reported from these towns. Many guests are also making reservations in private homes for the festival. According to the festival office however there is no housing shortage yet since there are comfortable quarters left in many surrounding towns.

Community chairmen meeting with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at Glendale, reported a great increase in enthusiasm as the time for the concerts draws near. Community chairman were asked to pass along to music lovers the information, that there has been an unusual demand for reserved seats and if they wish to avoid disappointment, early application would be advisable.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
TIMES (Semi-Weekly)

JUN 18 1937

Musicians of Today

by LUELLA M. WIERS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a concert in the Montclair High School on Feb. 9, 1938, as the extra in connection with the Unity Concert Course, is something more than half a century old. More notable than the span of its years is its place in the growth of musical America.

In 1881 the late Mayor Henry L. Higginson realized the first dream and aspiration of his life by founding in Boston an orchestra of European standards—a phenomenon then unknown in America. The idea had come to him as a student in Vienna. It was an ambitious dream for an inpecunious young man, but after many years, having made a fortune as a banker, he was able to finance the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He engaged the finest musicians in Europe and brought to this country a succession of the greatest conductors of their time. He set a new precedent by expecting of the musicians entire devotion to the orchestra. To the conductor he gave entire artistic freedom. The wisdom of these policies soon showed as each conductor gave of his genius to the improvement of the ensemble. Soon the orchestra had the attention of the world.

George Henchel first established the orchestra in his three seasons of 1881-1884. Then came Wilhelm Gericke, who through twelve years drilled it into what came to be its tradition of perfection. Arthur Nikisch, the most illustrious conductor of the day, had a shorter term, as did also Emil Paur and Max Fielder. In 1900, Symphony Hall, the orchestra's present home, was built. Dr. Karl Muck, from 1906, carried the orchestra to an unprecedented degree of virtuosity and beauty. In his eighty-fourth year, the orchestra's founder left it in control of a board of trustees.

After two French conductors, Henri Raband and Pierre Monteux, the term of Serge Koussevitzky began in 1924 and, it will be seen, has extended beyond any single term of a previous conductor. The long association of such an orchestra and such a leader is eloquently justified by the results. The great Russian conductor has brought new beauties to the Boston Symphony concerts, a fresh importance and distinction as shown in the enlarged public, the festivals and special choral concerts, the broadened repertory—new and old—of the regular concerts, and the qualities of the performance which indicates the direction of a genius Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert are now available. Telephone Montclair 2-6770.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 20 1937

Plan Berkshire Music Festival At Stockbridge

Koussevitzky to Conduct Boston Symphony; Art Exhibit Planned

Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is expected to arrive from France on the Ile de France, July 27. Koussevitzky returns to conduct the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the second to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. All performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

The complete programs for the two week Festival at Stockbridge from August 5 to August 15, have been announced as follows: Thursday, August 5, 8:30 p. m., Beethoven Program, Overture to "Lenore," No. 3; Symphony, "Pastoral," No. 6 and "Symphony No. 5;" August 7, 8:30 p. m., "Symphony in E flat," Mozart; two movements from the "Sinfonietta for String Orchestra," Hill; Second Suite, Daphnis and Chloe," Ravel and "Symphony No. 4," Tchaikovsky; August 8, 4:30 p. m., Ballet Music from "Rosamunde," Schubert; "Unfinished Symphony," Schubert; Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu," Stravinsky and "Symphony in D minor," Franck.

August 12, 8:30 p. m., Wagner program, "Overture to Rienzi," "A Siegfried Idyl," "Prelude" and "Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde," "The Ride of the Valkyries, "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," "Prelude to Parsifal," "Overture to Tannhauser;" August 14, 8:30 p. m., "Symphony No. 13 in G major," Haydn; "Symphony No. 7," Sibelius and "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov; August 15, Brahms Program, "Academic Festival Overture;" "Symphony No. 3," and "Symphony No. 1."

Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony in the new Ellen J. Crane Memorial Room of the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield, in conjunction with the Festival. These coincide also with the 29th Annual Exhibition of the Stockbridge Art Association, held at the Museum this year.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 18 1937

BERKSHIRE PROGRAMS

THE fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Mass., Thursday, Aug. 5, with an all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, consisting of the "Leonore" overture, No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the Fifth symphony. Mr. Koussevitzky is expected to arrive on the Ile de France from Europe July 27 to begin rehearsals of the orchestra for the six concerts of the series.

At the second concert, Aug. 7, the orchestra will be heard in Mozart's symphony in E flat major; two movements from Hill's "Sinfonietta for String Orchestra"; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite, No. 2, and the Fourth symphony by Tchaikovsky.

The Sunday list, Aug. 8, begins with two Schubert numbers, namely, the ballet music from "Rosamunde" and the "Unfinished" symphony, following which Stravinsky's "Firebird" suite and the Franck symphony will be presented.

Thursday, Aug. 12, the program will be devoted to excerpts from Wagner's operas, comprising the overture to "Rienzi"; the prelude and "Love Death" from "Tristan und Isolde"; the "Ride of the Valkyries"; the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried"; the prelude from "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhaeuser."

Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, opens the program for Aug. 14, which also contains the Seventh symphony by Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" suite.

A Brahms program Sunday, Aug. 15, will bring the festival to a close. The selections at this event will be the "Academic Festival" overture and the First and Third symphonies.

All of the concerts will take place at 8:30 P. M., except the two Sunday events, which are scheduled for 4:30 P. M.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y
UNION-STAR

JUL 23 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Tickets Ready

Mrs. Dudley Diggs of Schenectady, chairman of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for Schenectady and vicinity, announces that tickets have been placed on sale at Cluett's Music Store.

The six Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given August 5, 7, 8, 12, 13 and 15 under Serge Koussevitzky's baton at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate near Stockbridge, Mass., given as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

There is ample free parking space nearby.

N. ADA
TRAN

JUL

Downes Le
To Go To

Because of th
for the four lec
Olin Downes, Au
at the Berkshir field, Berkshire
val members, w first choice for to return appli
with the festiva
After a reas for the lecture available, will scribers and the arrangement is the limited sea theater in the Crane memori
the lectures wi
Mr. Downes
music to be pl
Symphony orch ton of Serge K
glewood, Augus
August 12, 14
Applications
and tickets for sent directly at Stockbridge

WASHING
PO

JUL

Berkshir
Will Be
By K

Serge Kousse
the Boston Sym about to sail return trip to the Berkshire Koussevitzky is on the Ile de F
The two wee inaugurate as a wood, the bea estate between Lenox in the B was presented winter. The co on Thursday
nings. August o'clock and August 8, at 4
and Saturday and 14, at 8:30
afternoon, Aug
This will be symphonic fest to be given b phony Orchest tent, all perfor anticipated by large as to con
a musical festiv
first importance

HOLY Transc

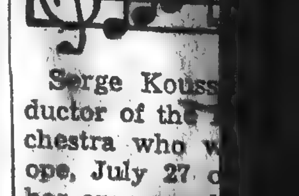
JUL



Serge Kouss
ductor of the chestra who w
ope, July 27
has announced
Berkshire Sym
ust 5-15 as foll
Thursday ev
thoven progra nore", No. 3; toral"; Symph
Sunday aftern
phony in E fla
ments from String Orchest
"Daphnis and
phony No. 4,
Sunday afte
let Music from enzi", a Siegf from "L'Oise sky; and Sy Franck.
Thursday
Wagner prog
zenzi", a Sief
Liebestod fro
The Ride of weben from "Parsifal"; a hauser".
Sunday a
Symphony N
88, Haydn; S
us; and "S
Korsakov.
Sunday
Brahms pro
Overture;
Symphony

97

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 19 1937

Downes Lecture Seats To Go To Members First

Because of the demand for seats for the four lectures to be given by Olin Downes, August 5, 66, 12 and 13 at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, Berkshire Symphonic Festival members, who are being given first choice for tickets, are urged to return application blanks issued with the festival tickets.

After a reasonable time, tickets for the lectures, if there are any available will be issued to subscribers and the general public. This arrangement is necessary because of the limited seating capacity of the theater in the new Ellen Judith Crane memorial addition, where the lectures will be given.

Mr. Downes will lecture on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15.

Applications for lecture tickets and tickets for the concerts may be sent directly to the Festival office at Stockbridge.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

Berkshire Music Will Be Conducted By Koussevitzky

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is about to sail from France on his return trip to prepare to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Koussevitzky is expected to arrive on the Ile de France, on July 27.

The two weeks of concerts will inaugurate as a festival site Tanglewood, the beautiful and historic estate between Stockbridge and Lenox in the Berkshire Hills, which was presented to the orchestra last winter. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 5 and 7, at 8:30 o'clock and Sunday afternoon, August 8, at 4:30 p. m.; Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 12 and 14, at 8:30 o'clock and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4:30 p. m.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival, and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 20 1937

Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who will return from Europe, July 27 on the Ile de France, has announced the program for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 5-15 as follows:

Thursday evening, August 5: Beethoven program, Overture to "Leonore", No. 3; Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"; Symphony No. 5.

Sunday afternoon, August 8: aBlphony in E flat, Mozart; two movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, Hill; Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe", Ravel; Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky.

Sunday afternoon, August 8: aBllet Music from "Rosamunde", Schuenzi", a Siegfried Idyl; Prelude and from "L'Oiseau de Feu", Stravinsky; and Symphony in D minor, Franck.

Thursday evening, August 12: Wagner program, Overture to "Rizenzi", a Siefried Idyl; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"; The Ride of the Valkyries; Waldweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal"; and Overture to "Tannhauser".

Sunday afternoon, August 15: Symphony No. 13 in G major, No. 88, Haydn; Symphony No. 7, Sibelius; and "Scheherazade", Rimsky-Korsakov.

Sunday afternon, August 15: Brahms program, Academic Festival Overture; Symphony No. 3; and Symphony No. 1.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD
JUL 23 1937

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

It's almost time to begin thinking about our own American "Salzburg", the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will open at Tanglewood, Mass., Thursday, August 5, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Koussevitzky will arrive next Tuesday on the Ile de France from Europe to begin rehearsals.

There will be six concerts this year instead of three. Our information at date about Tanglewood, its permanency, characteristics, and so on, is scant. Two years ago the festival was given on the Hanna farm, with Henry Hadley conducting an orchestra assembled for the occasion. Last year it took place at Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 7, a fine sweep of land and trees on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. There were reasons why that site could not be obtained a second year, however. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra brought the music to the festival last year also.

Public response to the festival last year was extraordinary. One of the nation's foremost critics called it the exceptional musical event of the summer in America. An average of 5,000 persons attended each of the three concerts. A fair representation from Bergen County was reported among those audiences.

In comparison with audiences at the Lewisohn Stadium, where 15- and 16,000 individuals have gathered on certain occasions, these Berkshire attendances would not be considered great—until the relative proportions of populations is taken into account, and also the fact that the Berkshire festival was given on a private estate loaned for the occasion. Add to these items the difficulties of cheap transportation. Then those audiences seem magnificent.

Critics agreed that the performances were of a quality to set them wholly apart from any others heard at summer concerts in America. Olin Downes, of the New York Times, itemized three reasons: "The presence of one of the two or three most distinguished conductors in the world, who gave of his very best; the qualities of a celebrated symphony orchestra of the same rank, appearing as a unit for the first time outside its concert series of the winter season; and the extermination on the part of all concerned to spare no pains in preparing the kind of performances which usually are reserved for the climaxes of the winter season."

The future of the Berkshire Festivals is a question of paramount interest to music lovers of the East. America in the summertime can provide a great audience for these events. That is one of the fundamental facts established. The locale is beautiful, and is so situated that a substantial patronage from many places in the United States, even from other countries, is practical.

Schedule for this season's programs will be as follows:

Thursday, August 5, 8:30 p. m.—Beethoven program. Overture to "Leonore", No. 3, and Symphonies 6 and 5.

Saturday, August 7, 8:30 p. m.—Symphony in E flat, Mozart; two movements from Sinfonietta for strings, Hill; "Daphnis et Cloe", Suite No. 2, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, F minor, Tschaikowsky.

Sunday, August 8, 4:30 p. m.—Ballet music from "Rosamunde" and the "Unfinished" Symphony, Schubert; Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu", Stravinsky; Symphony in D minor, Franck.

Thursday, August 12, 8:30 p. m.—Wagner Program. Overture to "Rienzi"; "Siegfried Idyll"; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde"; Valkyrie's Ride; "Walweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhauser".

Saturday, August 14, 8:30 p. m.—Symphony in G, No. 13 (88), Haydn; Symphony No. 7, Sibelius; "Scherazade", Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Sunday, August 15, 4:30 p. m.—Brahms program. "Academic Festival Overture"; Symphonies Nos. 3 and 1.

Information about tickets, how to get to Tanglewood, etc., is obtainable by application to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

John Barnett Returned

John Barnett of Englewood, who returned from Europe last weekend, has brought with him many fresh ideas and viewpoints regarding musical Europe.

His perspective, that of an American music-loving youth, visiting Europe for the first time, concentrating his interests on music at the chief musical centers, is one to be encountered rarely. His mission there, as a student in conducting, a protege of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, of course centers even greater interest in him than in his observations as a traveler. From both angles, however, an interview with him is of much interest. An interview with John Barnett will appear in this column.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 24 1937

Berkshire Festival Plays Will Feature Two Noted Players

The featured players heading productions of the Berkshire Playhouse during the two weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., will be Alexander Kirkland and Edith Barrett.

The Festival concerts by the Bos- Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's baton, will be given at nearby "Tanglewood," August 5, 7 and, 12, 14 and 15.

Kirkland will be seen, the week of August 2, in a new play, "Many Mansions," by the father-and-son writing team of Eckert Goodman and Jules Eckert Goodman. It is described as a play about the Anglican church, written from inside-the-ministry angle, and affording young Kirkland a role as powerful as his successful Dr. Ferguson in the Pulitzer Prize winning play, "Men in White,"

Miss Barrett will star in a revival of the late Langdon Mitchell's "Becky Sharp." She was last seen at the Playhouse during the summer of 1935 in a production of "Trelewney of the Wells" and in the interval since has been appearing on Broadway and in the Pacific Coast offering of "Parnell," as well as other plays.

The all-Sibelius program which was slated to be given under Werner Janssen's baton at the Hollywood Bowl last Tuesday night was announced as the "first in America" by the Bowl's publicity department. An article in last Sunday's issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES referred to the schedule accordingly as "what is said to be the first all-Sibelius orchestral program ever offered in this country." But a correspondent rightly has stated that the first concert devoted entirely to the Finnish composer's orchestral works on this side of the Atlantic was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, in Carnegie Hall Nov. 17, 1932. The program consisted of the "Swanwhite" suite, the tone-poem "Tapiola" and the First symphony. During that same season Mr. Koussevitzky later programmed all seven Sibelius symphonies at regular concerts of the Boston series.

N ROME NY Times

...still remain a myster

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 26 1937

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his wife, who are returning to the United States on the Ile de France, are expected at the Savoy-Plaza tomorrow. Also arriving at the same hotel this week is Bell Gurnee, who has been visiting at Bar Harbor.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 24 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL TICKETS ON SALE

At Apothecary Hall in This City

SIX CONCERTS

Will be Given at "Tanglewood" by Boston Symphony Orchestra With Dr. Koussevitsky Directing.

Subscription or single tickets for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival have been placed on sale at Apothecary Hall in this city. The concerts which are to be given at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The program, which will include six concerts, has been arranged by Dr. Koussevitzky as follows:

Thursday, August 5, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Beethoven; Symphony No. 6 "Pastoral", Beethoven; Symphony No. 5, Beethoven.

Saturday, August 7, Symphony in E flat major, Mozart; Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, Edward Burlingame; Moderato e risoluto, Hill; Scherzo: Allegro vivace "Daphnis et Chloe" Second Suite, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky.

Sunday, August 8, Ballet, Music from Rosamunde, Schubert; "Unfinished Symphony," Schubert; Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu", Stravinsky; Symphony in D minor, Franck.

Thursday, August 12, Overture to "Rienzzi", Wagner; A Siegfried Idyl, Wagner; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde", Wagner; The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure", Wagner; Waldweben from "Siegfried", Wagner; Prelude to "Parsifal', Wagner; Overture to "Tannhauser", Wagner.

Saturday, August 14, Symphony in

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 25 1937

Celebration in Berkshires Today For Church That Is 175 Years Old

Bishop Lawrence to Join in St. James Event at Great Barrington —Will Be Honored Later at Rector's Luncheon— Music Festival Opens on Aug. 5

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 24.—The Right Rev. William Appleton Lawrence, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Western Massachusetts, has come from Bar Harbor, Me., to participate in the 175th anniversary celebration of St. James Church in Great Barrington, which will be observed tomorrow.

Bishop Lawrence is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. George B. de Gersdorff at the Old Rectory, which was built on Stockbridge Plain more than a hundred years ago and which was occupied by the late Rev. Dr. Arthur Lawrence during the thirty-four years he was rector of St. Paul's Church. The late Dr. Lawrence was an uncle of Mrs. de Gersdorff and a first cousin of the Right Rev. William Lawrence, retired, father of the present Bishop.

Mrs. de Gersdorff, the former Miss Isabel C. Lawrence, is a cousin of her guest, for whom she gave a garden party this afternoon. At the tea tables were Mrs. Francis C. Huntington of New York, who is also a guest at the Old Rectory; Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs. Franklin Chase Downing and Mrs. Henry Ivison Parsons.

Bishop Lawrence will preach the sermon at tomorrow's service at St. James Church, and later will be guest of honor at a luncheon to be given at the Berkshire Inn by the rector, the Rev. Edward C. M. Tower.

In the evening Bishop Lawrence will preach at the sunset service in the garden of Wheatleigh, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia's estate, and will be guest of honor at a supper party there.

Festival Boxes Bought

Among the purchasers of boxes for the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, beginning Aug. 5, are Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. Adolf A. Berle Jr., Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. James Lawson Karrick, Mrs. Herbert Scoville, Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Grenville Lindall Winthrop and Giraud Foster.

Also Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Mrs. Edward Davis, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorf, Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway, Mrs. John Butler Swann, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mrs. Percy Musgrave, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Miss Ellen Bullard, Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs. Norval H. Busey and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane.

The festival, of which Miss Grace Robinson Smith and Mrs. de Heredia are president and vice president, respectively, will be held at Tanglewood.

Ball at Golf Club

The combined Lenox Horse Show and Stockbridge golf tournament ball was held tonight at the Stockbridge Golf Club. Among those who entertained with dinners before the dance were Mr. and Mrs. Lowell M. Clucas and Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet.

Earlier today Mrs. R. Jay Flick gave a luncheon at Uplands, Lenox, for the officers of the Lenox Horse Association and show judges. Reginald W. Rives, one of the judges, and Mrs. Rives are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Flick.

Another horse-show ball will be held on Friday at the conclusion of the first day's showing of the eleventh annual event of the Pittsfield Riding and Polo Club at the country club at Holmesdale. On the ball committee are the Misses Mary and Louise Robbins, Mrs. Brenton Crane Pomeroy and Mrs. William Thompson Rice, the former Miss Agnes Van Santvoord of Troy, N. Y.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 27 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY LANDS IN NEW YORK

Conductor and Boston Orchestra To Rehearse for Festival Opening

(Special to THE EAGLE)

NEW YORK, July 27.—Serge Koussevitzky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, landed here today aboard the French liner, Ile de France, and immediately began discussing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival where he and the orchestra will appear next week and the week following.

Koussevitzky will go directly to Boston where he and the orchestra will enter intensive rehearsals in preparation for their six Berkshire concerts. The orchestra will come to "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., for a rehearsal next week Thursday. The Festival opens that evening.

The conductor has been in Europe on a vacation since the first week in May.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUL 27 1937

Boston Conductor Arrives

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrived in the Ile de France today and will be at the Savoy-Plaza.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 19 1937

Downes Lecture Seats To Go To Members First

Because of the demand for seats for the four lectures to be given by Olin Downes, August 5, 66, 12 and 13 at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, Berkshire Symphonic Festival members, who are being given first choice for tickets, are urged to return application blanks issued with the festival tickets.

After a reasonable time, tickets for the lectures, if there are any available will be issued to subscribers and the general public. This arrangement is necessary because of the limited seating capacity of the theater in the new Ellen Judith Crane memorial addition, where the lectures will be given.

Mr. Downes will lecture on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15.

Applications for lecture tickets and tickets for the concerts may be sent directly to the Festival office at Stockbridge.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

Berkshire Music Will Be Conducted By Koussevitzky

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is about to sail from France on his return trip to prepare to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Koussevitzky is expected to arrive on the Ile de France, on July 27.

The two weeks of concerts will inaugurate as a festival site Tanglewood, the beautiful and historic estate between Stockbridge and Lenox in the Berkshire Hills, which was presented to the orchestra last winter. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 5 and 7, at 8:30 o'clock and Sunday afternoon, August 8, at 4:30 p. m.; Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 12 and 14, at 8:30 o'clock and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4:30 p. m.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival, and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 20 1937

Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who will return from Europe, July 27 on the Ile de France, has announced the program for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 5-15 as follows:

Thursday evening, August 5: Beethoven program, Overture to "Leonore", No. 3; Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"; Symphony No. 5.

Sunday afternoon, August 8: aBlphony in E flat, Mozart; two movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, Hill; Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe", Ravel; Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky.

Sunday afternoon, August 8: aBllet Music from "Rosamunde", Schuenzi", a Siegfried Idyl; Prelude and from "L'Oiseau de Feu", Stravinsky; and Symphony in D minor, Franck.

Thursday evening, August 12: Wagner program, Overture to "Rizenzi", a Siefried Idyl; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"; The Ride of the Valkyries; Waldweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal"; and Overture to "Tannhauser".

Sunday afternoon, August 15: Symphony No. 13 in G major, No. 88, Haydn; Symphony No. 7, Sibelius; and "Scheherazade", Rimsky-Korsakov.

Sunday afternon, August 15: Brahms program, Academic Festival Overture; Symphony No. 3; and Symphony No. 1.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD
JUL 23 1937

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

It's almost time to begin thinking about our own American "Salzburg", the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will open at Tanglewood, Mass., Thursday, August 5, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Koussevitzky will arrive next Tuesday on the Ile de France from Europe to begin rehearsals.

There will be six concerts this year instead of three. Our information at date about Tanglewood, its permanency, characteristics, and so on, is scant. Two years ago the festival was given on the Hanna farm, with Henry Hadley conducting an orchestra assembled for the occasion. Last year it took place at Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 7, a fine sweep of land and trees on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. There were reasons why that site could not be obtained a second year, however. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra brought the music to the festival last year also.

Public response to the festival last year was extraordinary. One of the nation's foremost critics called it the exceptional musical event of the summer in America. An average of 5,000 persons attended each of the three concerts. A fair representation from Bergen County was reported among those audiences.

In comparison with audiences at the Lewisohn Stadium, where 15- and 16,000 individuals have gathered on certain occasions, these Berkshire attendances would not be considered great—until the relative proportions of populations is taken into account, and also the fact that the Berkshire festival was given on a private estate loaned for the occasion. Add to these items the difficulties of cheap transportation. Then those audiences seem magnificent.

Critics agreed that the performances were of a quality to set them wholly apart from any others heard at summer concerts in America. Olin Downes, of the New York Times, itemized three reasons: "The presence of one of the two or three most distinguished conductors in the world, who gave of his very best; the qualities of a celebrated symphony orchestra of the same rank, appearing as a unit for the first time outside its concert series of the winter season; and the extermination on the part of all concerned to spare no pains in preparing the kind of performances which usually are reserved for the climaxes of the winter season."

The future of the Berkshire Festivals is a question of paramount interest to music lovers of the East. America in the summertime can provide a great audience for these events. That is one of the fundamental facts established. The locale is beautiful, and is so situated that a substantial patronage from many places in the United States, even from other countries, is practical.

Schedule for this season's programs will be as follows:

Thursday, August 5, 8:30 p. m.—Beethoven program. Overture to "Leonore", No. 3, and Symphonies 6 and 5.

Saturday, August 7, 8:30 p. m.—Symphony in E flat, Mozart; two movements from Sinfonietta for strings, Hill; "Daphnis et Cloe", Suite No. 2, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, F minor, Tschaikowsky.

Sunday, August 8, 4:30 p. m.—Ballet music from "Rosamunde" and the "Unfinished" Symphony, Schubert; Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu", Stravinsky; Symphony in D minor, Franck.

Thursday, August 12, 8:30 p. m.—Wagner Program. Overture to "Rienzi"; "Siegfried Idyll"; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde"; Valkyrie's Ride; "Walweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhauser".

Saturday, August 14, 8:30 p. m.—Symphony in G, No. 13 (88), Haydn; Symphony No. 7, Sibelius; "Scherazade", Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Sunday, August 15, 4:30 p. m.—Brahms program. "Academic Festival Overture"; Symphonies Nos. 3 and 1.

Information about tickets, how to get to Tanglewood, etc., is obtainable by application to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

John Barnett Returned

John Barnett of Englewood, who returned from Europe last weekend, has brought with him many fresh ideas and viewpoints regarding musical Europe.

His perspective, that of an American music-loving youth, visiting Europe for the first time, concentrating his interests on music at the chief musical centers, is one to be encountered rarely. His mission there, as a student in conducting, a protege of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, of course centers even greater interest in him than in his observations as a traveler. From both angles, however, an interview with him is of much interest. An interview with John Barnett will appear in this column.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 26 1937

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his wife, who are returning to the United States on the Ile de France, are expected at the Savoy-Plaza tomorrow. Also arriving at the same hotel this week is Bell Gurnee, who has been visiting at Bar Harbor.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 24 1937

Berkshire Festival Plays Will Feature Two Noted Players

The featured players heading productions of the Berkshire Playhouse during the two weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., will be Alexander Kirkland and Edith Barrett.

The Festival concerts by the Bos-Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's baton, will be given at nearby "Tanglewood," August 5, 7 and, 12, 14 and 15.

Kirkland will be seen, the week of August 2, in a new play, "Many Mansions," by the father-and-son writing team of Eckert Goodman and Jules Eckert Goodman. It is described as a play about the Anglican church, written from inside-the-ministry angle, and affording young Kirkland a role as powerful as his successful Dr. Ferguson in the Pulitzer Prize winning play, "Men in White,"

Miss Barrett will star in a revival of the late Langdon Mitchell's "Becky Sharp." She was last seen at the Playhouse during the summer of 1935 in a production of "Trelewney of the Wells" and in the interval since has been appearing on Broadway and in the Pacific Coast offering of "Parnell," as well as other plays.

The all-Sibelius program which was slated to be given under Werner Janssen's baton at the Hollywood Bowl last Tuesday night was announced as the "first in America" by the Bowl's publicity department. An article in last Sunday's issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES referred to the schedule accordingly as "what is said to be the first all-Sibelius orchestral program ever offered in this country." But a correspondent rightly has stated that the first concert devoted entirely to the Finnish composer's orchestral works on this side of the Atlantic was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, in Carnegie Hall Nov. 17, 1932. The program consisted of the "Swanwhite" suite, the tone-poem "Tapiola" and the First symphony. During that same season Mr. Koussevitzky later programmed all seven Sibelius symphonies at regular concerts of the Boston series.

N ROME NY Times

…still remain a myster

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 24 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL TICKETS ON SALE

At Apothecary Hall in This City

SIX CONCERTS

Will be Given at "Tanglewood" by Boston Symphony Orchestra With Dr. Koussevitsky Directing.

Subscription or single tickets for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival have been placed on sale at Apothecary Hall in this city. The concerts which are to be given at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The program, which will inciude six concerts, has been arranged by Dr. Koussevitzky as follows:

Thursday, August 5, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Beethoven; Symphony No. 6 "Pastoral", Beethoven; Symphony No. 5, Beethoven.

Saturday, August 7, Symphony in E flat major, Mozart; Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, Edward Burlingame; Moderato e risoluto, Hill; Scherzo: Allegro vivace "Daphnis et Chloe" Second Suite, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky.

Sunday, August 8, Ballet Music from Rosamunde, Schubert; "Unfinished Symphony," Schubert; Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu", Stravinsky; Symphony in D minor, Franck.

Thursday, August 12, Overture to "Rienzzi", Wagner; A Siegfried Idyl, Wagner; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde", Wagner; The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure", Wagner; Waldweben from "Siegfried", Wagner; Prelude to "Parsifal', Wagner; Overture to "Tannhauser", Wagner.

Saturday, August 14, Symphony in G. major, No. 88, Haydn; Symphony No. 7, Sibelius; "Scheherazade", Rimsky-Korsakov.

Sunday, August 15, "Academic Festival" Overture, Brahms; Symphony No. 3, Brahms, Symphony No. 1, Brahms.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 27 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY LANDS IN NEW YORK

Conductor and Boston Orchestra To Rehearse for Festival Opening

(Special to THE EAGLE)

NEW YORK, July 27.—Serge Koussevitzky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, landed here today aboard the French liner, Ile de France, and immediately began discussing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival where he and the orchestra will appear next week and the week following.

Koussevitzky will go directly to Boston where he and the orchestra will enter intensive rehearsals in preparation for their six Berkshire concerts. The orchestra will come to "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., for a rehearsal next week Thursday. The Festival opens that evening.

The conductor has been in Europe on a vacation since the first week in May.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
JUL 27 1937

Boston Conductor Arrives

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrived in the Ile de France today and will be at the Savoy-Plaza.

…kshires Today …s 175 Years Old

… in St. James Event at Great Barrington —Will Be Honored Later at Rector's Luncheon— Music Festival Opens on Aug. 5

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 24.—The Right Rev. William Appleton Lawrence, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Western Massachusetts, has come from Bar Harbor, Me., to participate in the 175th anniversary celebration of St. James Church in Great Barrington, which will be observed tomorrow.

Bishop Lawrence is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. George B. de Gersdorff at the Old Rectory, which was built on Stockbridge Plain more than a hundred years ago and which was occupied by the late Rev. Dr. Arthur Lawrence during the thirty-four years he was rector of St. Paul's Church. The late Dr. Lawrence was an uncle of Mrs. de Gersdorff and a first cousin of the Right Rev. William Lawrence, retired, father of the present Bishop.

Mrs. de Gersdorff, the former Miss Isabel C. Lawrence, is a cousin of her guest, for whom she gave a garden party this afternoon. At the tea tables were Mrs. Francis C. Huntington of New York, who is also a guest at the Old Rectory; Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs. Franklin Chase Downing and Mrs. Henry Ivison Parsons.

Bishop Lawrence will preach the sermon at tomorrow's service at St. James Church, and later will be guest of honor at a luncheon to be given at the Berkshire Inn by the rector, the Rev. Edward C. M. Tower.

In the evening Bishop Lawrence will preach at the sunset service in the garden of Wheatleigh, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia's estate, and will be guest of honor at a supper party there.

Festival Boxes Bought

Among the purchasers of boxes for the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, beginning Aug. 5, are Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. Adolf A. Berle Jr., Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. James Lawson Karrick, Mrs. Herbert Scoville, Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Grenville Lindall Winthrop and Giraud Foster.

Also Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Mrs. Edward Davis, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorf, Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway, Mrs. John Butler Swann, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mrs. Percy Musgrave, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Miss Ellen Bullard, Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs. Norval H. Busey and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane.

The festival, of which Miss Grace Robinson Smith and Mrs. de Heredia are president and vice president, respectively, will be held at Tanglewood.

Ball at Golf Club

The combined Lenox Horse Show and Stockbridge golf tournament ball was held tonight at the Stockbridge Golf Club. Among those who entertained with dinners before the dance were Mr. and Mrs. Lowell M. Clucas and Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet.

Earlier today Mrs. R. Jay Flick gave a luncheon at Uplands, Lenox, for the officers of the Lenox Horse Association and show judges. Reginald W. Rives, one of the judges, and Mrs. Rives are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Flick.

Another horse-show ball will be held on Friday at the conclusion of the first day's showing of the eleventh annual event of the Pittsfield Riding and Polo Club at the country club at Holmesdale. On the ball committee are the Misses Mary and Louise Robbins, Mrs. Brenton Crane Pomeroy and Mrs. William Thompson Rice, the former Miss Agnes Van Santvoord of Troy, N. Y.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 25 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY SPEAKS

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who returns this week to America to conduct the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, said interesting things about conducting to an interviewer of The Atlantic Monthly. The practical knowledge, the lack of pose, the common sense of his remarks come, it should be remembered, from a distinguished orchestral leader, not a dilettante, not a dabbler with the baton. Mr. Koussevitzky disagrees with the practice of conducting everything from memory if this is not a perfectly natural and simple thing for a conductor to do.

"Do you think," asked the interviewer, "that there is actually any difference in the effect achieved by the conductor?"

"To my mind," replied Dr. Koussevitzky, "this is a purely individual matter. One man feels more comfortable without a score, another more comfortable with it. You will find that almost always a pianist-conductor will conduct from memory, because he is used to memorizing vast quantities of music for performance as a soloist and continues to do so in his orchestral work. If you are asking me why I use a score"—there was a twinkle in his eyes as he answered my none too subtle question—"I can only say quite simply that I never made a practice of working without one. As a soloist I was, of course, accustomed to playing everything from memory. But I have never carried over that habit into my conducting. I am certain that any first-rate conductor knows his scores well enough to dispense with them entirely, so his choice is a personal one. As long as he feels completely free in the method he has chosen, how can there be any difference in the effect of his performance? If he is nervous without a score, the audience will be aware of it at once; if on the other hand he feels bound, tied down, when he uses one, they will be equally sensitive to his mood. There is this to be said, however: unless a man has an absolutely phenomenal memory, his determination never to use a score will in some degree limit his répertoire. We have, alas, just so much time for what we want to do—and there seems to be no limit to the amount of music that we must study and perform."

* * *

Of audiences and their effect upon a conductor: "Do you know, I often wonder if the public realizes the part they play. The contact with the audience—that is as vital to the success of an orchestral performance as it is to an individual musician, actor or speaker. This contact, I believe, is of equal importance to the audience. To listen eagerly in company with other listeners is a rich experience; the waves of attentive sympathy which travel through an interested audience create an almost electric effect upon both hearer and performer. So! These currents the conductor has to set in motion. When he succeeds in establishing the contact, a good performance is assured."

The interviewer mentioned difficulties experienced in reading an orchestral score. "Why try?" said Koussevitzky. "Unless you are a serious student of music and wish to learn how certain effects are achieved, you will gain nothing at all by bringing a score to a concert. On the contrary, you will lose, because your attention is divided, you cannot give yourself up to the music, you are cheating yourself of the supreme enjoyment."

He picked up a score of Roussel's Fourth symphony. "Look at this first page. It happens to be very simple. When I was young—a hundred years ago!—I would study that music at first horizontally, line by line, then vertically, measure by measure, to make sure I had missed nothing. Then I would read it all together. Now, naturally, I no longer study separately the horizontal and the vertical, for I hear it in my mind at the same time. Occasionally, when the dissonances are so sharp that I do not trust my mind's ear to hear them accurately, I play a few measures on the piano. Then the work begins—the work which is required before the music can be brought to life by performance. I study, study, study. I study the notes and I contemplate the purpose of this piece of music; then, finally, I arrive at the point where I feel that I realize what the composer wished to say, what is the true meaning of his music. The procedure is the same for program music as for absolute music—no so-called 'program' gives anything but the mere outline of the composer's thought.

"The composer's thought! That is the key to the mystery, a key not always easy to find. You know, it is an error common to many whose musical education is incomplete to think that everything lies in the printed page of a composition. They sit at a concert with the score on their knees, following so carefully that they can hardly listen to the music. 'Ah,' they murmur—even in their excitement they must remember that they are in a concert hall—'Ah, what is that accent? Why that pause? It is not indicated here on the printed page. It is wrong!' Then they scribble little indignant notes on the margins of their nice, clean music.

. . . What they do not realize, perhaps have not had time to learn, is that there is more to a score than the simple ability to read it will reveal. Tempo is retarded to clarify modulations, to reveal harmonic beauties of certain passages; accents are emphasized to point a phrase and make it more expressive. These liberties are accorded the interpreter by the composer. As an example of the greatest living composer's attitude on questions of this kind, I must tell you about Sibelius. I was working on his Fourth symphony and was much troubled by the tempo in one movement. I wrote him, asking his advice, saying that I simply could not feel the tempo as it was indicated in the score. His answer was, 'The right tempo is as you feel it.'"

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
JUL 26 1937

Boston Symphony Festival Program In Berkshires

Among the 134 people who have paid $150 each for the boxes for Berkshire Symphony festival are Mrs. Heaton Ives Treadway and Mrs. Owen Johnson. This festival brings the Boston Symphony orchestra to Berkshire where now it has a permanent home at Tanglewood with its formal gardens, cathedral pines and rolling meadows overlooking Stockbridge Bowl.

In the first week (Aug. 5, 7, and 8) there will be an all-Beethoven programme (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Lenore" Overture); also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tschaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire-Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week (Aug. 12, 14 and 15) there will be an all-Wagner programme, including excerpts from "Rienzi"; "Tannhauser"; "The Valkyrie" and "Siegried"; also an all-Brahms programme (The First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture); Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

Tickets for this festival or for any part of it may be had at Heidner's Music store.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
JUL 26 1937

Serge Koussevitzky To Start Berkshire Concert Rehearsals

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will return from Europe tomorrow aboard the S. S. "Ile de France" and will go directly to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 5.

Six concerts will be given by the orchestra, Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at "Tanglewood", the 210-acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline as a permanent home for the Festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4:30 o'clock to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers while the other concerts will be at 8:30 o'clock at night.

There will be no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

REHEARSALS TO START FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

Serge Koussevitzky Will Arrive Soon to Start Work for Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, July 26—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned from Europe today aboard the Ile de France and will come directly to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, August 5.

Six concerts will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15 at "Tanglewood," 210 acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4.30 p. m. to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8.30 in the evening.

There will be no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000. There is free parking space on the grounds for thousands of cars.

Mr Koussevitzky and party, and several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club in nearby Lenox during the festival weeks.

Hotels and inns at Stockbridge, Great Barrington and Lenox are booked to capacity, but there are ample accommodations in private homes, and in nearby Pittsfield, Dalton, Lee and other communities. Complete information may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire symphonic festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
JUL 27 1937

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is due here today on the Ile de France and will go directly to Lenox, Mass., to begin rehearsals with his orchestra for the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens Thursday night, August 5. During the two festival week ends Dr. Koussevitzky and several trustees of the Boston Symphony will make their headquarters at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUL 27 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY RETURNS FROM EUROPE

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has returned from Europe aboard the Lle de France and will go directly to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Syphonic Festival, August 5.

Six concerts will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 at beautiful "Tanglewood,' 210 acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4:30 p. m. to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8:30 in the evening.

It was at "Tanglewood" that Hawthorne lived when in the Berkshires.

There will be no no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5,000. There is free parking space on the grounds for thousands of cars.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Time Should Be Allowed for Parking by Motorists

The opening concert Thursday evening, Aug. 5, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will start promptly at 8.30, said the Festival President, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith today.

"Because of the hundreds of motors that will be coming to Tanglewood, from all parts of the country, we ask that music lovers make a reasonable allowance of time for parking in the large areas on the estate and the time necessary to reach their seats," said Miss Robinson Smith. "The concerts must begin promptly. The opening night will feature a broadcast, so it is readily understood why a rigid schedule must be maintained.

"In addition, many persons wishing to drive home after the concerts do not want to be delayed until an extremely late hour. Prompt openings will be appreciated by everyone. Of that we are certain.

Subscriptions to the Festival concerts are transferable and so priced as to be within the range of almost everyone.

Charles E. Williams, of Pittsfield, district traffic agent of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, has made arrangements for special cars from New York on the morning train from the Grand Central. The return trip will start from Stockbridge shortly before 8 p. m. following the Sunday concerts, Aug. 8 and 15.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 27 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

Serge Koussevitzky Expected Today for Series Opening August 5

Serge Koussevitzky, the famous conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, arrives this week from France on his return in preparation to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic festival. Koussevitzky is expected to come on the Ile de France today. The two weeks of concerts will inaugurate as a festival site Tanglewood, the beautiful and historic estate between Stockbridge and Lenox in the Berkshire hills, which was presented to the orchestra last winter. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 5 and 7, at 8.30 and Sunday afternoon, August 8, at 4.30; Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 12, and 14, at 8.30, and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4.30.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

Dr. Koussevitzky here announces the programs in full:

Thursday, August 5 (8.30) Beethoven program:
Overture to Leonore, No. 3.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"
Symphony, No. 5.

Saturday, August 7 (8.30):
Symphony in E flat — Mozart
Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe"
Ravel
Hill
Symphony No. 4 — Tschaikovsky

Sunday, August 8 (4.30):
Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" — Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony — Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Eau" — Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor — Franck

Thursday August 12 (8.30). Wagner program:
Overture to "Rienzi"
A Siegfried Idyl
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"
The Ride of the Valkyries
Waldweben from "Siegfried"
Prelude to "Parsifal"
Overture to "Tannhauser"

Saturday, August 14 (8.30):
Symphony, No. 15, in G major (No. 38) — Haydn
Symphony No. 7 — Sibelius
Scheherazade — Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday, August 15, (4.30): Brahms program:
Academic Festival Overture
Symphony No. 3
Symphony No. 1

Tickets for the series or for single performances may be had at the Music house, where information concerning the festival may be had.

RECORD
JUL 28 193

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL TO BE HELD IN AUGUST AT TANGLEWOOD

Mrs. Albert Bergeron, chairman, pro-tem, of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for Amherst and vicinity, announces that for the conveniece of music lovers, tickets have been placed on sale at Miss Cutler's Gift Shop.

The six Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14, and 15th under Serge Koussevitzky's baton at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

There is ample free parking space a few steps from where the concerts will be given. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre is in charge of this detail.

Complete information may be had by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Office, Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 25 1937

98

KOUSSEVITZKY SPEAKS

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who returns this week to America to conduct the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, said interesting things about conducting to an interviewer of The Atlantic Monthly. The practical knowledge, the lack of pose, the common sense of his remarks come, it should be remembered, from a distinguished orchestral leader, not a dilettante, not a dabbler with the baton. Mr. Koussevitzky disagrees with the practice of conducting everything from memory if this is not a perfectly natural and simple thing for a conductor to do.

"Do you think," asked the interviewer, "that there is actually any difference in the effect achieved by the conductor?"

"To my mind," replied Dr. Koussevitzky, "this is a purely individual matter. One man feels more comfortable without a score, another more comfortable with it. You will find that almost always a pianist-conductor will conduct from memory, because he is used to memorizing vast quantities of music for performance as a soloist and continues to do so in his orchestral work. If you are asking me why I use a score"—there was a twinkle in his eyes as he answered my none too subtle question—"I can only say quite simply that I never made a practice of working without one. As a soloist I was, of course, accustomed to playing everything from memory. But I have never carried over that habit into my conducting. I am certain that any first-rate conductor knows his scores well enough to dispense with them entirely, so his choice is a personal one. As long as he feels completely free in the method he has chosen, how can there be any difference in the effect of his performance? If he is nervous without a score, the audience will be aware of it at once; if on the other hand he feels bound, tied down, when he uses one, they will be equally sensitive to his mood. There is this to be said, however: unless a man has an absolutely phenomenal memory, his determination never to use a score will in some degree limit his répertoire. We have, alas, just so much time for what we want to do—and there seems to be no limit to the amount of music that we must study and perform."

* * *

Of audiences and their effect upon a conductor: "Do you know, I often wonder if the public realizes the part they play. The contact with the audience—that is as vital to the success of an orchestral performance as it is to an individual musician, actor or speaker. This contact, I believe, is of equal importance to the audience. To listen eagerly in company with other listeners is a rich experience; the waves of attentive sympathy which travel through an interested audience create an almost electric effect upon both hearer and performer. So! These currents the conductor has to set in motion. When he succeeds in establishing the contact, a good performance is assured."

The interviewer mentioned difficulties experienced in reading an orchestral score. "Why try?" said Koussevitzky. "Unless you are a serious student of music and wish to learn how certain effects are achieved, you will gain nothing at all by bringing a score to a concert. On the contrary, you will lose, because your attention is divided, you cannot give yourself up to the music, you are cheating yourself of the supreme enjoyment."

He picked up a score of Roussel's Fourth symphony. "Look at this first page. It happens to be very simple. When I was young—a hundred years ago!—I would study that music at first horizontally, line by line, then vertically, measure by measure, to make sure I had missed nothing. Then I would read it all together. Now, naturally, I no longer study separately the horizontal and the vertical, for I hear it in my mind at the same time. Occasionally, when the dissonances are so sharp that I do not trust my mind's ear to hear them accurately, I play a few measures on the piano. Then the work begins—the work which is required before the music can be brought to life by performance. I study, study, study. I study the notes and I contemplate the purpose of this piece of music; then, finally, I arrive at the point where I feel that I realize what the composer wished to say, what is the true meaning of his music. The procedure is the same for program music as for absolute music—no so-called 'program' gives anything but the mere outline of the composer's thought.

"The composer's thought! That is the key to the mystery, a key not always easy to find. You know, it is an error common to many whose musical education is incomplete to think that everything lies in the printed page of a composition. They sit at a concert with the score on their knees, following so carefully that they can hardly listen to the music. 'Ah,' they murmur—even in their excitement they must remember that they are in a concert hall—'Ah, what is that accent? Why that pause? It is not indicated here on the printed page. It is wrong!' Then they scribble little indignant notes on the margins of their nice, clean music.

. . . What they do not realize, perhaps have not had time to learn, is that there is more to a score than the simple ability to read it will reveal. Tempo is retarded to clarify modulations, to reveal harmonic beauties of certain passages; accents are emphasized to point a phrase and make it more expressive. These liberties are accorded the interpreter by the composer. As an example of the greatest living composer's attitude on questions of this kind, I must tell you about Sibelius. I was working on his Fourth symphony and was much troubled by the tempo in one movement. I wrote him, asking his advice, saying that I simply could not feel the tempo as it was indicated in the score. His answer was, 'The right tempo is as you feel it.'"

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
JUL 26 1937

Boston Symphony Festival Program In Berkshires

Among the 134 people who have paid $150 each for the boxes for Berkshire Symphony festival are Mrs. Heaton Ives Treadway and Mrs. Owen Johnson. This festival brings the Boston Symphony orchestra to Berkshire where now it has a permanent home at Tanglewood with its formal gardens, cathedral pines and rolling meadows overlooking Stockbridge Bowl.

In the first week (Aug. 5, 7, and 8) there will be an all-Beethoven programme (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Lenore" Overture); also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tschaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire-Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week (Aug. 12, 14 and 15) there will be an all-Wagner programme, including excerpts from "Rienzi"; "Tannhauser"; "The Valkyrie" and "Siegried"; also an all-Brahms programme (The First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture); Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

Tickets for this festival or for any part of it may be had at Heidner's Music store.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
JUL 26 1937

Serge Koussevitzky To Start Berkshire Concert Rehearsals

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will return from Europe tomorrow aboard the S. S. "Ile de France" and will go directly to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 5.

Six concerts will be given by the orchestra, Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at "Tanglewood", the 210-acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline as a permanent home for the Festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4:30 o'clock to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers while the other concerts will be at 8:30 o'clock at night.

There will be no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 27 1937

REHEARSALS TO START FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

Serge Koussevitzky Will Arrive Soon to Start Work for Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, July 26—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned from Europe today aboard the Ile de France and will come directly to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, August 5.

Six concerts will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15 at "Tanglewood," 210 acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4.30 p. m. to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8.30 in the evening.

There will be no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000. There is free parking space on the grounds for thousands of cars.

Mr Koussevitzky and party, and several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club in nearby Lenox during the festival weeks.

Hotels and inns at Stockbridge, Great Barrington and Lenox are booked to capacity, but there are ample accommodations in private homes, and in nearby Pittsfield, Dalton, Lee and other communities. Complete information may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire symphonic festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
JUL 27 1937

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is due here today on the Ile de France and will go directly to Lenox, Mass., to begin rehearsals with his orchestra for the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens Thursday night, August 5. During the two festival week ends Dr. Koussevitzky and several trustees of the Boston Symphony will make their headquarters at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUL 27 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY RETURNS FROM EUROPE

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has returned from Europe aboard the Ile de France and will go directly to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Syphonic Festival, August 6.

Six concerts will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 at beautiful "Tanglewood," 210 acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4:30 p. m. to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8:30 in the evening.

It was at "Tanglewood" that Hawthorne lived when in the Berkshires.

There will be no no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5,000. There is free parking space on the grounds for thousands of cars.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 28 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Time Should Be Allowed for Parking by Motorists

The opening concert Thursday evening, Aug. 5, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will start promptly at 8.30, said the Festival President, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith today.

"Because of the hundreds of motors that will be coming to Tanglewood, from all parts of the country, we ask that music lovers make a reasonable allowance of time for parking in the large areas on the estate and the time necessary to reach their seats," said Miss Robinson Smith. "The concerts must begin promptly. The opening night will feature a broadcast, so it is readily understood why a rigid schedule must be maintained.

"In addition, many persons wishing to drive home after the concerts do not want to be delayed until an extremely late hour. Prompt openings will be appreciated by everyone. Of that we are certain.

Subscriptions to the Festival concerts are transferable and so priced as to be within the range of almost everyone.

Charles E. Williams, of Pittsfield, district traffic agent of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, has made arrangements for special cars from New York on the morning train from the Grand Central. The return trip will start from Stockbridge shortly before 8 p. m. following the Sunday concerts Aug. 8 and 15.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 27 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

Serge Koussevitzky Expected Today for Series Opening August 5

Serge Koussevitzky, the famous conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, arrives this week from France on his return in preparation to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic festival. Koussevitzky is expected to come on the Ile de France today. The two weeks of concerts will inaugurate as a festival site Tanglewood, the beautiful and historic estate between Stockbridge and Lenox in the Berkshire hills, which was presented to the orchestra last winter. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 5 and 7, at 8.30 and Sunday afternoon, August 8, at 4.30; Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 12, and 14, at 8.30, and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4.30.

This will be the fourth annual symphonic festival and the second to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Doubled in extent, all performances are already anticipated by a subscription so large as to confirm the belief that a musical festival in America of the first importance is being established.

Dr. Koussevitzky here announces the programs in full:

Thursday, August 5 (8.30) Beethoven program:

Overture to Leonore, No. 3.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"
Symphony, No. 5.

Saturday, August 7 (8.30):

Symphony in E flat Mozart
Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe" Ravel
Hill
Symphony No. 4 Tschaikovsky

Sunday, August 8 (4.30):

Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Eau" Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor Franck

Thursday August 12 (8.30):

Wagner program:
Overture to "Rienzi"
A Siegfried Idyl
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"
The Ride of the Valkyries
Waldweben from "Siegfried"
Prelude to "Parsifal"
Overture to "Tannhauser"

Saturday August 14 (8.30):

Symphony, No. 13, in G major (No. 88) Haydn
Symphony No. 7 Sibelius
Scheherazade Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday, August 15, (4.30):

Brahms program:
Academic Festival Overture
Symphony No. 3
Symphony No. 1

Tickets for the series or for single performances may be had at the Music house, where information concerning the festival may be had.

RECORD
Amh , Mass
JUL 28 1937

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL TO BE HELD IN AUGUST AT TANGLEWOOD

Mrs. Albert Bergeron, chairman, pro-tem, of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for Amherst and vicinity, announces that for the conveniece of music lovers, tickets have been placed on sale at Miss Cutler's Gift Shop.

The six Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14, and 15th under Serge Koussevitzky's baton at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

There is ample free parking space a few steps from where the concerts will be given. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre is in charge of this detail.

Complete information may be had by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Office, Stockbridge, Mass.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1937

99

Pops Concerts at Season's End --- Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Prospect

nergy and Intelligence Among Picturesque Hills iciently the Berkshirites Proceed to Shape Their Forthcoming Series of Concerts

By Moses Smith

TOCKBRIDGE, June 25—It curious thing that a Bos- ian must spend a day or two he enticing atmosphere that rounds these Berkshire hills realize fully that the Boston phony Orchestra has begun ew development; one that is y to be more significant anything since it was founded y Henry Lee Higginson fifty- years ago. This was not yet perceptible even last sum- when Dr. Koussevitzky and men played the three con- s that constituted the third ual Berkshire Symphonic ival. The notion began to t some force when the story e over the wires, a few ths ago, that Mrs. Gorham ks of Brookline had given beautiful and historic glewood" estate to the Bos- Symphony Orchestra as a anent home for the festi- But the impression was pened by the first breath- g views in and from the glewood" grounds and was allized by a series of con- ations with the "natives." is an old story that the s grows greener beyond own back yard; and (an- r side of the same medal- that we take our own he- for granted after a while. so one expects to encounter patent fact that Dr. Kous- zky and his magnificent or- tra are regarded much more rently by the people here by the loyal Boston con- goer who may sit before perhaps twenty-five times ar as they make music. This, he saying goes, is only hu- nature.

Significant Change

t the significant thing is that a Bostonian comes y with a renewed and tened regard for the con- r and musicians of the on Symphony Orchestra. new element in the complex at the institution we call the on Symphony Orchestra is about to undergo an im- ant change, a change that t merely the result of the ge explained by regarding it ugh different atmospheres. most from the beginning, it rue, the Boston Symphony estra has not been a purely institution. And it did not require the advent of the radio to make it a national institution. But the emphasis in the past, while concerts away from home steadily increased in number, has been alternately or coincidentally on increasing the orchestra's income and prestige — neither motive, let it be added hastily, an unworthy one. From now on, however, assuming a continued success and growth of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston orchestra will devote an appreciable part of the year not to one more extension of its regular season (either at home or afield, but to a different kind of season altogether.

The new season will differ from the regular one in those obvious ways in which festivals differ from regular concerts. A home-town audience, familiar with the orchestra and its traditions, and, at the other extreme, an audience at a one-night stand on the road, resemble each other in the important aspect of homogeneity. All of the members (more or less) are from the given locality. But at the Berkshire Festival the audiences will be clearly composed not only of natives or summer residents hereabouts but also of many who will have been attracted from long distances specifically for the purpose of attending the festival.

That I am not spinning out an imaginary tale was already apparent at last season's beginning of the revitalized Festival. The attendants from twenty-five states certainly included a goodly number of persons who had come from distant places and at considerable inconvenience to attend the outdoor concerts of the world-famous orchestra and its conductor. How much more apparent the unusal constitution of the audience will be next August, when the Orchestra will give six concerts in two weeks instead of three in one, is predicted by the most casual conversation with the people here who are responsible for making the coming Festival a success.

Leaving Nothing to Chance

They seem to have "lined up" everything and to have neglected nothing that is humanly predictable. They have prevailed upon stubborn railroad officials to change their schedules; coaxed and wheedled the bus companies into promising more frequent and more accomodating service during the festival. Realizing from the beginning that subscription members who pay (or promise to pay) in advance are necessary to insure against disaster, they have built up an astonishingly large membership in their Festival association. When the books closed on May 1 for the coming festival, the number of memberships was almost exactly double that of last season.

The most important single element responsible for the success to date has been the inspired appeal of the festival promoters to mutuality of interest. They began by insisting that it was not a Stockbridge festival, but a Berkshire festival—for the whole county and, indeed, for the whole Berkshire district. At one leap, therefore, the residents of four States were enlisted. They have not been ashamed to employ, in addition to the obvious cultural and artistic arguments, the appeal to local pride, in the best application of that phrase. In a sense, they are "selling" the Berkshires again to the country and to the world. And they seem to be succeeding.

Aside from any other considerations, they ought to succeed, if this writer may presume to express an opinion. An overnight stay in this enchanting country, with the weather man dressed in his most propitious costume, imbues one with enthusiasm all over again. No doubt, I hasten to add, there are equally glorious scenes in New England. But their inhabitants were, so to say, beaten to the draw, so far as a pretentious festival is concerned, by the Berkshirites; and it is not likely that the latter will cede their advantage.

Beautiful Berkshires

A visit to "Tanglewood" not only confirms your ruminations. It intensifies them. As you enter the grounds from the outer road (I hope but do not promise that my topography is correct) and proceed leisurely through the spacious grounds you encounter one lovely vista after another. In addition to its natural advantages, the place has been admirably landscaped, if a tyro in these matters may venture an opinion; so that where-ever you stand, the outlook is beautiful. Coming up to the house itself, which is incongruously ornate and almost ugly in contrast with the artful simplicity of the grounds, you command a superb view of the mountains in the distance, with Mahkeenac Lake at the foot of the sloping estate in between.

Going around the house you can catch sight of a lovely formal garden, surrounded by the same kind of beautifully-grown and well-trimmed hedge that surrounds much of the estate, but somewhat shorter than the encircling hedge, which has an altitude of nine feet. Standing next to the little statue group in the middle of the garden (as the artist, too, has done, in the acompanying sketch) you are enabled, again with the thoughtful assistance of the landscape architect, to observe the thrilling contrast between the formalism about you and the ruggedness in the distance.

Audience and Musicians

A foyer, someone has already called it, for the music "hall" which you have already passed. This "hall" is a good-sized field, capable of accommodating at least five thousand persons comfortably, and surrounded by natural walls of trees, which will not only serve the purpose of partially shielding the auditors from extraneous sounds but will also effectively separate the field from parking fields and so forth. There is also a natural slope t the field, so that orchestra an conductor, at the foot of it, wi be visible to the audience without benefit of tiers for the chairs.

Eventually, as has already been disclosed, there will be permanent auditorium or some similar and suitable structur presumably on this same fiel But that is for the future, n for this year. In the meanwhile both the Festival and Boston Symphony Orchestra managements will do (and are alread doing, as you quickly note) considerable amount of tempo rary "alterations" to provide fo the comfort and enjoyment o both musicians and audience At the foot of the field there wi be a platform for the orchestra, and by its side a tuning room for the musicians. The audience will have to content itself this year with the same tent that did duty last year. The house will be transformed for man purposes—rest rooms, telephon booths, press rooms and so fort Roads will be resurfaced; park ing fields prepared. The garden ing, which has already resulte in such beautiful spots, will b continued at an intensive pace Further down, across one of th main roads—the estate seems be the better part of a mi long—is the inviting lake, wit the hills beyond. By its shor is a community clubhouse, whic will be vacant for the duratio of the festival guests. Some the musicians have already i dicated their intention of cam ing by the shore for the festiv period.

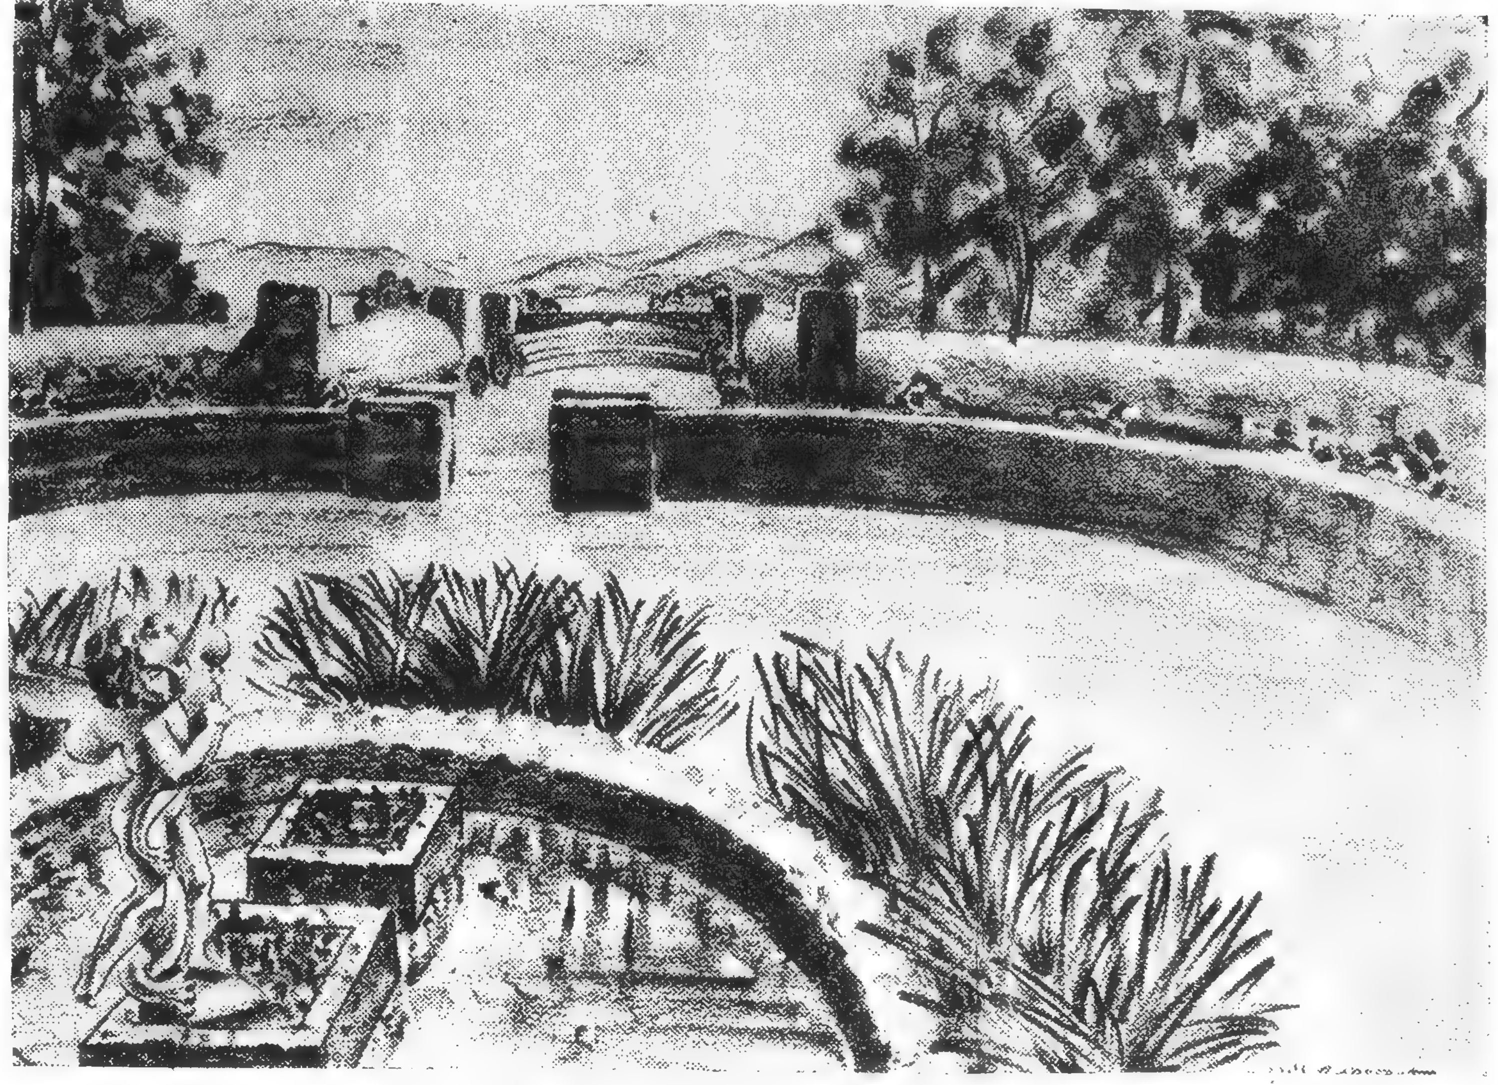
It would be possible to dwell greater length on the advantag and beauty of "Tanglewoo that are so rich in promise the success of future festiva Nor have I begun to exhaust t theme of the originality, ener intelligence and asorted v tues of the co-operating perso and agencies that have broug the festival to its present i portance. But I have writt enough for one day.

"Where Music Dwells Lingering . . ."



SCENE AT TANGLEWOOD ESTATE

Permanent Home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Through the Generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Who Gave the Property to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Sketch, Showing the Formal Gardens and a Glimpse of e Lake and Hills in the Distance, Was Made for the Transcript by Will Rapport

---

AT STOCKBRIDGE

Her

For the next two weeks, Stockbridge in the Berkshires will be the nation's musical capital. At "Tanglewood," the famous estate which was recently made the festival's permanent home, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in six concerts. If last year's experience is a safe guide, the audiences will be extremely large, and those who wish to hear the entire programs will do well to arrive early and find places to park their cars. The site is so beautiful that a short wait before the concert begins should pass most enjoyably.

The sponsors are so far cautiously restricting the programs to familiar works. Thursday evening, for example, will be an all-Beethoven program, and the following Thursday will be all-Wagner. The only new work to be presented—and this has already been heard several times in Boston—is Sibelius' seventh symphony.

Probably this policy is the wisest when the festival is young and when it must make friends among a constituency which is based more on geographical lines than anything else. But if it is to become distinctive and an annual gathering-place for followers of music from all over the country and possibly from abroad, it must eventually concentrate on some special field of music, and do that surpassingly well. In short, the festival should be encouraged to develop a definite character and an artistic personality.

Meantime, while this purpose is in the formative stage, Stockbridge and the Boston orchestra provide an impressive combination for the performance of great music from many sources. Possibly the audiences by their reaction to it will indicate the specialization which the festival should cultivate in the future.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL AUG. 5

Koussevitzky Goes to Lenox For Rehearsals

STOCKBRIDGE, July 27—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has just returned from abroad, will come directly here to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival Aug. 5, it was announced today

Six concerts will be given by the full orchestra at "Tanglewood," the 210-acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline as permanent home for the festival. The dates of the performances are Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. The two Sunday concerts will begin at 4:30 P. M. The others will be at 8:30 P. M.

There will be no postponements because of inclement weather. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000.

Koussevitzky and his party will make their headquarters during the rehearsals and the concerts at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox.

Among those now residing in the town and supporters of the festival are Mrs. Henry White, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Carlos M. Heredia, Giraud Foster and Harris Fahnestock.

Edward Burlingame Hill, chairman of the division of music at Harvard University, whose String Sinfonietta is on the festival program, will be in attendance at the concerts.

Additional patrons include Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Bentley W Warren, Mrs. Mathew John Whittall, Dr. and Mrs. John Bartol, Miss Dorothy Willard, Mrs. R. B. Danielson, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Alan M. Limburg, Mrs. Winthrop M Crane, Jr., Mr. and Mrs Arthur H. Lippincott, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw and Mrs. E. F. Whitney.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 28 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY RETURNS

Will Begin Rehearsals for the Berkshire Music Festival

Serge Koussevitzky, Russian orchestra conductor, returned yesterday on the Ile de France after a two months' vacation in France and Switzerland. Mrs. Koussevitzky accompanied him. The musician said he would go at once to Stockbridge to conduct the Berkshire Musical Festival, which opens on Aug. 5.

He brought back several new compositions which he will try out during the Boston Symphony season opening on Oct. 1, but not at the Berkshire festival.

"The Berkshire audiences are very critical," he said. "They like the old classic music."

After the Berkshire festival is over Mr. Koussevitzky will spend six weeks in getting acquainted with America.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST

Symphony Conductor Home From Abroad

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, arrived in New York yesterday on the Ile de France after two months vacation abroad, according to word received here last night.

Dr. Koussevitzky revealed that he had spent a full week of his vacation trip listening to music in Paris. He planned to leave almost immediately for Stockbridge for the opening of the Berkshire Festival on Aug. 5, and to return to Boston at the close of the festival to begin rehearsals for the opening of the season on Oct. 1.

Dr. Koussevitzky brought back "several interesting scores," but refused to reveal what they are. During the trip, he visited nearly all of the outstanding composers.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

KOUSSEVITZKY BACK WITH MUSIC SCORES

Will Head for Berkshires for Opening Aug. 5 of Festival

NEW YORK, July 27 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned with his wife on the Ile de France today from a two months' vacation abroad.

"I brought back with me," he said, "some very interesting scores, but I cannot say what they are. I saw nearly all the outstanding composers while in Paris and listened for one full week to nothing but music."

He said he would go immediately to Stockbridge, Mass., for the opening Aug. 5 of the Berkshire Festival and, when the festival ends Aug. 15, would begin rehearsals for the opening of the Boston season Oct. 1.

100

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUL 28 1937

ALL AT SEA

Messrs. Koussevitzky, Grzesinski, Projansky Get a By-Liner a Bit Pi-Eyed

By DIXIE TIGHE

After a little experience on the Ile de France yesterday we will never again be embarrassed at not knowing the correct pronunciation of a foreign name. It was eminently satisfying to discover a gentleman who didn't even know his own name when he heard it.

From the advance publicity on the Ile de France we knew we had three names to deal with that were going to give us trouble. There was Serge Koussevitzky, A. Grzesinski and Henri Projansky, all of whom were reported as having something to say.

Patiently (except for tapping our foot and sighing intermittently) we waited to see Mr. Koussevitzky after he had been photographed.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, as you probably know, is the conductor of the Boston Symphony and you can't go around calling him Serge or "Hey, you." Therefore we avoided any salutation and just plunged into the subject of music.

"I know nothing of music—I'm a fur buyer," the gentleman we thought was Mr. Koussevitzky replied to our inquiry on the matter of the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

"But aren't you Mr. Kossevitzky?" we asked, a little baffled by this turn of affairs. "Yes, I am," the bewildered gentleman replied, and there followed a frightful silence.

Of course he wasn't Mr. Koussevitzky, he was Mr. Projansky but our pronunciation was such a jumble that the man just didn't know what we were saying.

* * *

The difficulty by no means became straightened out at this point. A suspicious reporter (not us, for a change), consulted a passenger as to the man's identity and helped things out tremendously by making the following statement:

"Oh, yes, that is Mr. Koussevitzky, the Berlin chief of police."

At once the fur man was charged with being a German chief of police and this was a little too much. The mistake in this instance was that Mr. A. Grzesinski, Berlin's former chief of police, was also on the ship and the passenger having met Mr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Grzesinski was completely muddled.

* * *

As a result of all the name trouble we only had time to get a line or two from each one and hope to goodness we are now attributing the right quotes to the right man.

Conductor Koussevitzky said he met musicians and composers from all over the world while he was visiting the Paris Exposition and has brought a number of interesting compositions with him. What they were he wouldn't say.

From Mr. Grzesinski we learned that life in Switzerland is filled with peace and order and that is what this ex-chief of police loves. He served four years as police chief in Berlin and said he left because his notions were not in accord with those in operation in Berlin.

When Mr. Projansky had satisfactorily convinced every one that he dealt in furs, not music or law and order, he told us that he has been buying furs in Europe and that expensive furs will be expensive.

Best ermine, sable and mink haven't taken any tumble in price, he told us, but assured us that all the little fur-bearing animals outdid themselves in beautiful skins this season.

* * *

Better than any bon voyage or welcoming message was a short radio Herbert Wilcox, film producer, received on the Ile de France yesterday. You may recall that Mr. Wilcox had a difficult time with his production of "Nell Gwynne" two years ago, as the American censors barred it here.

Now he's arrived with "Victoria the Great" and the radio message he received yesterday told him that the film had been given a "universal certificate," which means New York will see it the first week in September.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
STAR-TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1937

Rehearse for Music Festival

Koussevitsky Returns From Abroad; Concert to Be Aug. 5

(Special to The Star-Tribune)

Stockbridge, Mass., July 29.—Serge Kousevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has just returned from abroad, is now in Stockbridge rehearsing for the opening concert, Aug. 5, of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

The full orchestra will give six concerts at "Tanglewood," the 210-acre estate which has been given the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. After the opening concert, the series will continue with programs on Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

The two Sunday concerts will begin at 4:30 p. m. The others will be at 8:30 p. m. No postponements due to inclement weather will be necessary. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL [illegible] 37

WHO'S WHO IN PUBLIC EYE

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky is the leader of the Boson Symphony orchestra. He recently returned from a trip abroad.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

FESTIVAL GROUP HEARS GREETINGS OF KOUSSEVITZKY

Berkshire Chairmen Meet to Conclude Plans; First of Concerts to Be Next Week

PITTSFIELD, July 28—Community chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a radius of 70 miles gathered this afternoon at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will come to Tanglewood soon to make final plans for opening the concerts next week, sent greetings to the chairmen saying:

"We are not playing propaganda music. We are playing the great music of the world. Best luck to you in your final spurt to duplicate the success you achieved last year."

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, opened the branch office on South St., this morning and when she arrived at 9.30 found two women waiting to buy subscriptions.

"The telephone number is 2-0047, and I hope the bell rings all the time," said Mrs. Underwood.

The booth, which has been loaned by the Berkshire Hills Conference, has been painted and scrubbed. It will be operated by volunteers daily from 10 a.m. to 5.30 through the festival for the sale of tickets, distribution of literature and information.

Mrs. Mary Robbins Chantney of Greenfield has been added to the list of community chairmen.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

GREATER FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES SEEN

Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Urge Expansion of Summer Program.

WOULD DOUBLE CONCERTS

Orchestra Also Asks Permanent Quarters for Performances Instead of a Tent.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, have proposed that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at which they took part for the first time last month, be extended next Summer, it was announced yesterday. They have made two conditions for their return as participants in the festival—that there be six concerts instead of three and that a shed be built to replace the tent under which the programs were presented.

Mr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, met with representative business men of the Berkshire area at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, chairman of the festival committee, in Stockbridge, Mass., several days ago. Two major questions were discussed: whether the time was ripe for further development of the festival idea and whether there is sufficient interest among business men to support a plan covering several years.

The festival executive committee agreed with Mr. Koussevitzky that the festival must find a permanent home and that a long range plan must be adopted to achieve the aim of making these programs as outtanding as the great European music festivals.

"In view of the possibilities of the future," Miss Robinson-Smith said in a statement issued yesterday, "obviously the decision of the board of trustees will depend largely on the response of members and patrons. We must give an answer to Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra not later than Nov. 1. With the bigger plan in mind, naturally memberships and patrons become our only capital. We cannot, therefore, give an affirmative answer unless we have a substantial response."

Miss Robinson-Smith pointed out that sustaining members and patrons will be able to buy tickets for series of three concerts at the same price that prevailed last month and that tickets for additional concerts will be available at similar rates.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 29 1937

RADIO PROGRAMS The Listening Post

By Rocky Clark

AIR WAVES COMMENT

Two complete concerts, each lasting two or more hours, are on the WICC-NBC evening schedules for next month—and both will be broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in nearby Stockbridge, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in both programs, Aug. 5 and 12, at 8:30 p. m.

The first, an all-Beethoven program, will consist of the third Leonore Overture, the Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

Tomorrow, at 3:35 p. m., the WJZ network broadcasts an hour and a half of the Salzburg Music Festival performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute," with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

EAGLE

JUL 29 1937

BITS FROM THE MUSIC WORLD.

—o—

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Mass., August 5, with an all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, consisting of the "Leonore" overture, No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the "Fifth" symphony. Several from Cape Vincent will attend the Festival this year.

Nouvelles - Reçues -- a Bord du S.S. Ile-de-France. Sun. July 25/37

A NEW "TANGLEWOOD" T[illegible]E

by Cecilia L. SCHULZ

America is now making for itself a real cultural life and the Continentals are partaking of it, as we have partaken of theirs, and as we always will. One of the greatest triumphs in this new phase of American culture is the founding of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. To say that this organization grew like a mushroom would be a record of understatement It has grown like Jack's magic beanstalk. Organized four years ago, on a very modest scale, it has developed with each season until it now represents the best that the United States offers in summer music-festivals.

Last year more than 15.000 music-lovers, coming from 25 states in the union and from Canada, gathered to hear a series of symphonic concerts, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Neither the conductor nor the orchestra need be introduced to those who follow American musical history; the renown of the director is internationally known, as is the distinction of the artists who play under him. In engaging this eminent conductor and his orchestra, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the President of the Berskhire Symphonic Festival, demonstrated her theory that an American music-festival could survive only if it's standard was the highest possible.

This summer, the Festival will be held on the site which will be it's permanent home. Mrs Gorham Brooks has made a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a large estate which was established by her grandfather, Mr William Tappan, in 1849. "Tanglewood" is situated in an ideal location between Lenox and Stockbridge, and is famed not only for it's formal gardens and natural beauty, but for it's rich historic background as well. Not far from the actual location on which the concerts will be given, is the old Indian fireplace, where Chief Konkapot, "friend of the white man" and his tribe gathered and held counsel, long ago. A generation past, Mrs
Brook's mother, M[illegible]
Dixey, and her aunt, M[illegible] wall Tappan, entertain[illegible] wood" those friends [illegible] make Berkshire social [illegible]
"Tanglewood", Nathan[illegible] wrote his famous "Tangl[illegible] and sketched his pl[illegible] for [illegible] of Seven Gables". Thus, [illegible]
"Tanglewood" ha[illegible] be[illegible] traditional in New E[illegible]gla[illegible]
this lovely place, as [illegible]
Berkshire Symphoni[illegible] Fes[illegible]
the scene of a new tri[illegible]
Berkshires and for Am[illegible]

This summer there [illegible]
certs, over the first [illegible]
August: the 5th, 7th [illegible]
12th, 14th and 15th. [illegible] there will be an all [illegible] gramme (the Fifth and [illegible]
phonies and the [illegible]
Overture); also Mozart's [illegible]
E flat [illegible] Ravel's seco[illegible]
"Daphnis and Chl[illegible]
Fourth Symphony, [illegible]
nished" Symphony, and [illegible] from "Rosamunde"; [illegible]
Suite from "The Fire Bi[illegible]
Symphony in D minor, [illegible]
ments from the S[illegible]
Edward Burlinga[illegible] Hil[illegible]

In the second week th[illegible]
all Wagn[illegible] programm[illegible] excerpts fr[illegible] "[illegible]ienzi" [illegible] ser"; "The Va[illegible]yrie" [illegible] fried"; al[illegible] an [illegible]l-Brahms [illegible] me (the F[illegible] and Third Sym[illegible] and the Academic Festival Ov[illegible]
Haynd's Sympho[illegible] in G major[illegible] the Seventh Symphony of S[illegible] and Rimsky-Korsakov's "S[illegible] zade".

There are excellent oppor[illegible] for the vacationist to enjoy [illegible] ment and pleasure of vari[illegible] according to his taste, in th[illegible] between the Festival concert[illegible] easy motoring distance of [illegible] wood" lie a number of cent[illegible] offer the drama, the dance a[illegible] bermusic. A partial list of the [illegible] ties which may serve to round [illegible] perfect Berkshire holiday inc[illegible]

South Moutain, Chamber Music	Pittsfield.
Ted Shawn Dance Recitals	Jacob's Pillow, West Becket
Berkshire Playhouse	Stockbridge.
Music Moutain, Chamber Music	Falls Village, Conn.
Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Chamber Music .	Cummington.
Bennington School of the Dance	Bennington, Vt.
The Alexander Bloch School of Music ..	Hillsdale, N. Y.
The Mohawk Drama Festival	Union College, Schenectady, N. [illegible]
The Williamstown Summer Theater	Williamstown.

There are also certain specific phases of American life which m[illegible] attract the stranger to the Berkshires, since they are to be found nowhere els[illegible] but in this section of New England. Among these examples of Americana ar[illegible]

Berkshire Museum	Pittsfield.
Berkshire Garden Center	Stockbridge.
Institute of Human Relations	Williamstown.
Pleasant Valley Bird and Will Flower Sanctuary	Lenox.

For further information, write to the Berkshires Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

100

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUL 28 1937

ALL AT SEA

Messrs. Koussevitzky, Grzesinski, Projansky Get a By-Liner a Bit Pi-Eyed

By DIXIE TIGHE

After a little experience on the Ile de France yesterday we will never again be embarrassed at not knowing the correct pronunciation of a foreign name. It was eminently satisfying to discover a gentleman who didn't even know his own name when he heard it.

From the advance publicity on the Ile de France we knew we had three names to deal with that were going to give us trouble. There was Serge Koussevitzky, A. Grzesinski and Henri Projansky, all of whom were reported as having something to say.

Patiently (except for tapping our foot and sighing intermittently) we waited to see Mr. Koussevitzky after he had been photographed.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, as you probably know, is the conductor of the Boston Symphony and you can't go around calling him Serge or "Hey, you." Therefore we avoided any salutation and just plunged into the subject of music.

"I know nothing of music—I'm a fur buyer," the gentleman we thought was Mr. Koussevitzky replied to our inquiry on the matter of the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

"But aren't you Mr. Kossevitzky?" we asked, a little baffled by this turn of affairs. "Yes, I am," the bewildered gentleman replied, and there followed a frightful silence.

Of course he wasn't Mr. Koussevitzky, he was Mr. Projansky but our pronunciation was such a jumble that the man just didn't know what we were saying.

* * *

The difficulty by no means became straightened out at this point. A suspicious reporter (not us, for a change), consulted a passenger as to the man's identity and helped things out tremendously by making the following statement:

"Oh, yes, that is Mr. Koussevitzky, the Berlin chief of police."

At once the fur man was charged with being a German chief of police and this was a little too much. The mistake in this instance was that Mr. A. Grzesinski, Berlin's former chief of police, was also on the ship and the passenger having met Mr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Grzesinski was completely muddled.

* * *

As a result of all the name trouble we only had time to get a line or two from each one and hope to goodness we are now attributing the right quotes to the right man.

Conductor Koussevitzky said he met musicians and composers from all over the world while he was visiting the Paris Exposition and has brough' a number of interesting compositions with him. What they were he wouldn't say.

From Mr. Grzesinski we learned that life in Switzerland is filled with peace and order and that is what this ex-chief of police loves. He served four years as police chief in Berlin and said he left because his notions were not in accord with those in operation in Berlin.

When Mr. Projansky had satisfactorily convinced every one that he dealt in furs, not music or law and order, he told us that he has been buying furs in Europe and that expensive furs will be expensive.

Best ermine, sable and mink haven't taken any tumble in price, he told us, but assured us that all the little fur-bearing animals outdid themselves in beautiful skins this season.

* * *

Better than any bon voyage or welcoming message was a short radio Herbert Wilcox, film producer, received on the Ile de France yesterday. You may recall that Mr. Wilcox had a difficult time with his production of "Nell Gwynne" two years ago, as the American censors barred it here.

Now he's arrived with "Victoria the Great" and the radio message he received yesterday told him that the film had been given a "universal certificate," which means New York will see it the first week in September.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
STAR-TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1937

Rehearse for Music Festival

Koussevitsky Returns From Abroad; Concert to Be Aug. 5

(Special to The Star-Tribune)

Stockbridge, Mass., July 29.—Serge Kousevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has just returned from abroad, is now in Stockbridge rehearsing for the opening concert, Aug. 5, of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

The full orchestra will give six concerts at "Tanglewood," the 210-acre estate which has been given the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. After the opening concert, the series will continue with programs on Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

The two Sunday concerts will begin at 4:30 p. m. The others will be at 8:30 p. m. No postponements due to inclement weather will be necessary. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 29 1937

FESTIVAL GROUP HEARS GREETINGS OF KOUSSEVITZKY

Berkshire Chairmen Meet to Conclude Plans; First of Concerts to Be Next Week

PITTSFIELD, July 28—Community chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a radius of 70 miles gathered this afternoon at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will come to Tanglewood soon to make final plans for opening the concerts next week, sent greetings to the chairmen saying:

"We are not playing propaganda music. We are playing the great music of the world. Best luck to you in your final spurt to duplicate the success you achieved last year."

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, opened the branch office on South St., this morning and when she arrived at 9.30 found two women waiting to buy subscriptions.

"The telephone number is 2-0047, and I hope the bell rings all the time," said Mrs. Underwood.

The booth, which has been loaned by the Berkshire Hills Conference, has been painted and scrubbed. It will be operated by volunteers daily from 10 a.m. to 5.30 through the festival for the sale of tickets, distribution of literature and information.

Mrs. Mary Robbins Chantney of Greenfield has been added to the list of community chairmen.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1937

WHO'S WHO IN PUBLIC EYE

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky is the leader of the Boson Symphony orchestra. He recently returned from a trip abroad.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 29 1936

GREATER FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES SEEN

Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Urge Expansion of Summer Program.

WOULD DOUBLE CONCERTS

Orchestra Also Asks Permanent Quarters for Performances Instead of a Tent.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, have proposed that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at which they took part for the first time last month, be extended next Summer, it was announced yesterday. They have made two conditions for their return as participants in the festival—that there be six concerts instead of three and that a shed be built to replace the tent under which the programs were presented.

Mr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, met with representative business men of the Berkshire area at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, chairman of the festival committee, in Stockbridge, Mass., several days ago. Two major questions were discussed: whether the time was ripe for further development of the festival idea and whether there is sufficient interest among business men to support a plan covering several years.

The festival executive committee agreed with Mr. Koussevitzky that the festival must find a permanent home and that a long range plan must be adopted to achieve the aim of making these programs as outtanding as the great European music festivals.

"In view of the possibilities of the future," Miss Robinson-Smith said in a statement issued yesterday, "obviously the decision of the board of trustees will depend largely on the response of members and patrons. We must give an answer to Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra not later than Nov. 1. With the bigger plan in mind, naturally memberships and patrons become our only capital. We cannot, therefore, give an affirmative answer unless we have a substantial response."

Miss Robinson-Smith pointed out that sustaining members and patrons will be able to buy tickets for series of three concerts at the same price that prevailed last month and that tickets for additional concerts will be available at similar rates.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 29 1937

RADIO PROGRAMS The Listening Post

By Rocky Clark

AIR WAVES COMMENT

Two complete concerts, each lasting two or more hours, are on the WICC-NBC evening schedules for next month—and both will be broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in nearby Stockbridge, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in both programs, Aug. 5 and 12, at 8:30 p. m.

The first, an all-Beethoven program, will consist of the third Leonore Overture, the Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

Tomorrow, at 3:35 p. m., the WJZ network broadcasts an hour and a half of the Salzburg Music Festival performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute," with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

EAGLE

Cape Vincent

JUL 29 1937 N.Y.

BITS FROM THE MUSIC WORLD.

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Mass., August 5, with an all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, consisting of the "Leonore" overture, No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the "Fifth" symphony. Several from Cape Vincent will attend the Festival this year.

Nouvelles Reçues -- à Bord du S.S. Ile-de-France ? - Sun. July 25/37

A NEW "TANGLEWOOD" TALE

by Cecilia L. SCHULZ

America is now making for itself a real cultural life and the Continentals are partaking of it, as we have partaken of theirs, and as we always will. One of the greatest triumphs in this new phase of American culture is the founding of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. To say that this organization grew like a mushroom would be a record of understatement It has grown like Jack's magic beanstalk. Organized four years ago, on a very modest scale, it has developed with each season until it now represents the best that the United States offers in summer music-festivals.

Last year more than 15.000 music-lovers, coming from 25 states in the union and from Canada, gathered to hear a series of symphonic concerts, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Neither the conductor nor the orchestra need be introduced to those who follow American musical history; the renown of the director is internationally known, as is the distinction of the artists who play under him. In engaging this eminent conductor and his orchestra, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the President of the Berskhire Symphonic Festival, demonstrated her theory that an American music-festival could survive only if it's standard was the highest possible.

This summer, the Festival will be held on the site which will be it's permanent home. Mrs Gorham Brooks has made a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a large estate which was established by her grandfather, Mr William Tappan, in 1849. "Tanglewood" is situated in an ideal location between Lenox and Stockbridge, and is famed not only for it's formal gardens and natural beauty, but for it's rich historic background as well. Not far from the actual location on which the concerts will be given, is the old Indian fireplace, where Chief Konkapot, "friend of the white man" and his tribe gathered and held counsel, long ago. A generation past, Mrs Brook's mother, Mrs Richard C. Dixey, and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, entertained at "Tanglewood" those friends whose names make Berkshire social history. At "Tanglewood", Nathanial Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" and sketched his plot for the "House of Seven Gables". Thus, the name of "Tanglewood" has become justly traditional in New England and now this lovely place, as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will be the scene of a new triumph for the Berkshires and for America.

This summer there will be six concerts, over the first two week-ends in August: the 5th, 7th and 8th, and the 12th, 14th and 15th. In the first week there will be an all-Beethoven programme (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Leonore" Overture); also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week there will be an all Wagner programme, including excerpts from "Rienzi"; "Tannhauser"; "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried"; also an all-Brahms programme (the First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture); Haynd's Symphony in G major, N° 88; the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

There are excellent opportunities for the vacationist to enjoy entertainment and pleasure of various kinds, according to his taste, in the intervals between the Festival concerts. Within easy motoring distance of "Tanglewood" lie a number of centres which offer the drama, the dance and chambermusic. A partial list of the activities which may serve to round out the perfect Berkshire holiday includes:

South Moutain, Chamber Music	Pittsfield.
Ted Shawn Dance Recitals	Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.
Berkshire Playhouse	Stockbridge.
Music Moutain, Chamber Music	Falls Village, Conn.
Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Chamber Music	Cummington.
Bennington School of the Dance	Bennington, Vt.
The Alexander Bloch School of Music	Hillsdale, N. Y.
The Mohawk Drama Festival	Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.
The Williamstown Summer Theater	Williamstown.

There are also certain specific phases of American life which may attract the stranger to the Berkshires, since they are to be found nowhere else but in this section of New England. Among these examples of Americana are:

Berkshire Museum	Pittsfield.
Berkshire Garden Center	Stockbridge.
Institute of Human Relations	Williamstown.
Pleasant Valley Bird and Will Flower Sanctuary	Lenox.

For further information, write to the Berkshires Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

• Oven door Heat Indicator
A Sears Mail Order Close-out -- Buy Now

500 Klenzo Tissues

10 Sparklet Bulbs

4 oz. Stokes Expectorant his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival

100

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUL 28 1937

ALL AT SEA

Messrs. Koussevitzky, Grzesinski, Projansky Get a By-Liner a Bit Pi-Eyed

By DIXIE TIGHE

After a little experience on the Ile de France yesterday we will never again be embarrassed at not knowing the correct pronunciation of a foreign name. It was eminently satisfying to discover a gentleman who didn't even know his own name when he heard it.

From the advance publicity on the Ile de France we knew we had three names to deal with that were going to give us trouble. There was Serge Koussevitzky, A. Grzesinski and Henri Projansky, all of whom were reported as having something to say.

Patiently (except for tapping our foot and sighing intermittently) we waited to see Mr. Koussevitzky after he had been photographed.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, as you probably know, is the conductor of the Boston Symphony and you can't go around calling him Serge or "Hey, you." Therefore we avoided any salutation and just plunged into the subject of music.

"I know nothing of music—I'm a fur buyer," the gentleman we thought was Mr. Koussevitzky replied to our inquiry on the matter of the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

"But aren't you Mr. Kossevitzky?" we asked, a little baffled by this turn of affairs. "Yes, I am," the bewildered gentleman replied, and there followed a frightful silence.

Of course he wasn't Mr. Koussevitzky, he was Mr. Projansky but our pronunciation was such a jumble that the man just didn't know what we were saying.

* * *

The difficulty by no means became straightened out at this point. A suspicious reporter (not us, for a change), consulted a passenger as to the man's identity and helped things out tremendously by making the following statement:

"Oh, yes, that is Mr. Koussevitzky, the Berlin chief of police."

At once the fur man was charged with being a German chief of police and this was a little too much. The mistake in this instance was that Mr. A. Grzesinski, Berlin's former chief of police, was also on the ship and the passenger having met Mr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Grzesinski was completely muddled.

* * *

As a result of all the name trouble we only had time to get a line or two from each one and hope to goodness we are now attributing the right quotes to the right man.

Conductor Koussevitzky said he met musicians and composers from all over the world while he was visiting the Paris Exposition and has brought a number of interesting compositions with him. What they were he wouldn't say.

From Mr. Grzesinski we learned that life in Switzerland is filled with peace and order and that is what this ex-chief of police loves. He served four years as police chief in Berlin and said he left because his notions were not in accord with those in operation in Berlin.

When Mr. Projansky had satisfactorily convinced every one that he dealt in furs, not music or law and order, he told us that he has been buying furs in Europe and that expensive furs will be expensive.

Best ermine, sable and mink haven't taken any tumble in price, he told us, but assured us that all the little fur-bearing animals outdid themselves in beautiful skins this season.

* * *

Better than any bon voyage or welcoming message was a short radio Herbert Wilcox, film producer, received on the Ile de France yesterday. You may recall that Mr. Wilcox had a difficult time with his production of "Nell Gwynne" two years ago, as the American censors barred it here.

Now he's arrived with "Victoria the Great" and the radio message he received yesterday told him that the film had been given a "universal certificate," which means New York will see it the first week in September.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
STAR-TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1937

Rehearse for Music Festival

Koussevitsky Returns From Abroad; Concert to Be Aug. 5

(Special to The Star-Tribune)

Stockbridge, Mass., July 29.—Serge Kousevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has just returned from abroad, is now in Stockbridge rehearsing for the opening concert, Aug. 5, of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

The full orchestra will give six concerts at "Tanglewood," the 210-acre estate which has been given the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. After the opening concert, the series will continue with programs on Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

The two Sunday concerts will begin at 4:30 p. m. The others will be at 8:30 p. m. No postponements due to inclement weather will be necessary. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

FESTIVAL GROUP HEARS GREETINGS OF KOUSSEVITZKY

Berkshire Chairmen Meet to Conclude Plans; First of Concerts to Be Next Week

PITTSFIELD, July 28—Community chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a radius of 70 miles gathered this afternoon at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will come to Tanglewood soon to make final plans for opening the concerts next week, sent greetings to the chairmen saying:

"We are not playing propaganda music. We are playing the great music of the world. Best luck to you in your final spurt to duplicate the success you achieved last year."

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, opened the branch office on South St., this morning and when she arrived at 9.30 found two women waiting to buy subscriptions.

"The telephone number is 2-0047, and I hope the bell rings all the time," said Mrs. Underwood.

The booth, which has been loaned by the Berkshire Hills Conference, has been painted and scrubbed. It will be operated by volunteers daily from 10 a.m. to 5.30 through the festival for the sale of tickets, distribution of literature and information.

Mrs. Mary Robbins Chantney of Greenfield has been added to the list of community chairmen.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL [illegible] 1937

WHO'S WHO IN PUBLIC EYE

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky is the leader of the Boson Symphony orchestra. He recently returned from a trip abroad.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

GREATER FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES SEEN

Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Urge Expansion of Summer Program.

WOULD DOUBLE CONCERTS

Orchestra Also Asks Permanent Quarters for Performances Instead of a Tent.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, have proposed that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at which they took part for the first time last month, be extended next Summer, it was announced yesterday. They have made two conditions for their return as participants in the festival—that there be six concerts instead of three and that a shed be built to replace the tent under which the programs were presented.

Mr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, met with representative business men of the Berkshire area at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, chairman of the festival committee, in Stockbridge, Mass., several days ago. Two major questions were discussed: whether the time was ripe for further development of the festival idea and whether there is sufficient interest among business men to support a plan covering several years.

The festival executive committee agreed with Mr. Koussevitzky that the festival must find a permanent home and that a long range plan must be adopted to achieve the aim of making these programs as outtanding as the great European music festivals.

"In view of the possibilities of the future," Miss Robinson-Smith said in a statement issued yesterday, "obviously the decision of the board of trustees will depend largely on the response of members and patrons. We must give an answer to Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra not later than Nov. 1. With the bigger plan in mind, naturally memberships and patrons become our only capital. We cannot, therefore, give an affirmative answer unless we have a substantial response."

Miss Robinson-Smith pointed out that sustaining members and patrons will be able to buy tickets for series of three concerts at the same price that prevailed last month and that tickets for additional concerts will be available at similar rates.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 29 1937

RADIO PROGRAMS The Listening Post

By Rocky Clark

AIR WAVES COMMENT

Two complete concerts, each lasting two or more hours, are on the WICC-NBC evening schedules for next month—and both will be broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in nearby Stockbridge, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in both programs, Aug. 5 and 12, at 8:30 p. m.

The first, an all-Beethoven program, will consist of the third Leonore Overture, the Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

Tomorrow, at 3:35 p. m., the WJZ network broadcasts an hour and a half of the Salzburg Music Festival performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute," with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

EAGLE

[illegible]

JUL 29 1937

BITS FROM THE MUSIC WORLD.

—o—

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Mass., August 5, with an all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, consisting of the "Leonore" overture, No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the "Fifth" symphony. Several from Cape Vincent will attend the Festival this year.

Nouvelles Revues -- A Bord du S.S. Ile-de-France ? Sun. July 25/37

A NEW "TANGLEWOOD" TALE

by Cecilia L. SCHULZ

America is now making for itself a real cultural life and the Continentals are partaking of it, as we have partaken of theirs, and as we always will. One of the greatest triumphs in this new phase of American culture is the founding of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. To say that this organization grew like a mushroom would be a record of understatement It has grown like Jack's magic beanstalk. Organized four years ago, on a very modest scale, it has developed with each season until it now represents the best that the United States offers in summer music-festivals.

Last year more than 15.000 music-lovers, coming from 25 states in the union and from Canada, gathered to hear a series of symphonic concerts, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Neither the conductor nor the orchestra need be introduced to those who follow American musical history; the renown of the director is internationally known, as is the distinction of the artists who play under him. In engaging this eminent conductor and his orchestra, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the President of the Berskhire Symphonic Festival, demonstrated her theory that an American music-festival could survive only if it's standard was the highest possible.

This summer, the Festival will be held on the site which will be it's permanent home. Mrs Gorham Brooks has made a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a large estate which was established by her grandfather, Mr William Tappan, in 1849. "Tanglewood" is situated in an ideal location between Lenox and Stockbridge, and is famed not only for it's formal gardens and natural beauty, but for it's rich historic background as well. Not far from the actual location on which the concerts will be given, is the old Indian fireplace, where Chief Konkapot, "friend of the white man" and his tribe gathered and held counsel, long ago. A generation past, Mrs Brook's mother, Mrs Richard C. Dixey, and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, entertained at "Tanglewood" those friends whose names make Berkshire social history. At "Tanglewood", Nathanial Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" and sketched his plot for the "House of Seven Gables". Thus, the name of "Tanglewood" has become justly traditional in New England and now this lovely place, as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be the scene of a new triumph for the Berkshires and for America.

This summer there will be six concerts, over the first two week-ends in August: the 5th, 7th and 8th, and the 12th, 14th and 15th. In the first week there will be an all-Beethoven programme (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Leonore Overture); also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week there will be an all Wagner programme, including excerpts from "Rienzi"; "Tannhaüser"; "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried"; also an all-Brahms programme (the First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture; Haynd's Symphony in G major, Nº 8; the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

There are excellent opportunities for the vacationist to enjoy entertainment and pleasure of various kinds according to his taste, in the intervals between the Festival concerts. Within easy motoring distance of "Tanglewood" lie a number of centres which offer the drama, the dance and chambermusic. A partial list of the activities which may serve to round out the perfect Berkshire holiday includes:

South Moutain, Chamber Music	Pittsfield.
Ted Shawn Dance Recitals	Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.
Berkshire Playhouse	Stockbridge.
Music Moutain, Chamber Music	Falls Village, Conn.
Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Chamber Music	Cummington.
Bennington School of the Dance	Bennington, Vt.
The Alexander Bloch School of Music	Hillsdale, N. Y.
The Mohawk Drama Festival	Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.
The Williamstown Summer Theater	Williamstown.

There are also certain specific phases of American life which may attract the stranger to the Berkshires, since they are to be found nowhere else but in this section of New England. Among these examples of Americana are:

Berkshire Museum	Pittsfield.
Berkshire Garden Center	Stockbridge.
Institute of Human Relations	Williamstown.
Pleasant Valley Bird and Will Flower Sanctuary	Lenox.

For further information, write to the Berkshires Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

140

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUL 28 1937

ALL AT SEA

Messrs. Koussevitzky, Grzesinski, Projansky Get a By-Liner a Bit Pi-Eyed

By DIXIE TIGHE

After a little experience on the Ile de France yesterday we will never again be embarrassed at not knowing the correct pronunciation of a foreign name. It was eminently satisfying to discover a gentleman who didn't even know his own name when he heard it.

From the advance publicity on the Ile de France we knew we had three names to deal with that were going to give us trouble. There was Serge Koussevitzky, A. Grzesinski and Henri Projansky, all of whom were reported as having something to say.

Patiently (except for tapping our foot and sighing intermittently) we waited to see Mr. Koussevitzky after he had been photographed.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, as you probably know, is the conductor of the Boston Symphony and you can't go around calling him Serge or "Hey, you." Therefore we avoided any salutation and just plunged into the subject of music.

"I know nothing of music—I'm a fur buyer," the gentleman we thought was Mr. Koussevitzky replied to our inquiry on the matter of the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

"But aren't you Mr. Kossevitzky?" we asked, a little baffled by this turn of affairs. "Yes, I am," the bewildered gentleman replied, and there followed a frightful silence.

Of course he wasn't Mr. Koussevitzky, he was Mr. Projansky but our pronunciation was such a jumble that the man just didn't know what we were saying.

* * *

The difficulty by no means became straightened out at this point. A suspicious reporter (not us, for a change), consulted a passenger as to the man's identity and helped things out tremendously by making the following statement:

"Oh, yes, that is Mr. Koussevitzky, the Berlin chief of police."

At once the fur man was charged with being a German chief of police and this was a little too much. The mistake in this instance was that Mr. A. Grzesinski, Berlin's former chief of police, was also on the ship and the passenger having met Mr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Grzesinski was completely muddled.

* * *

As a result of all the name trouble we only had time to get a line or two from each one and hope to goodness we are now attributing the right quotes to the right man.

Conductor Koussevitzky said he met musicians and composers from all over the world while he was visiting the Paris Exposition and has brought a number of interesting compositions with him. What they were he wouldn't say.

From Mr. Grzesinski we learned that life in Switzerland is filled with peace and order and that is what this ex-chief of police loves. He served four years as police chief in Berlin and said he left because his notions were not in accord with those in operation in Berlin.

When Mr. Projansky had satisfactorily convinced every one that he dealt in furs, not music or law and order, he told us that he has been buying furs in Europe and that expensive furs will be expensive.

Best ermine, sable and mink haven't taken any tumble in price, he told us, but assured us that all the little fur-bearing animals outdid themselves in beautiful skins this season.

* * *

Better than any bon voyage or welcoming message was a short radio Herbert Wilcox, film producer, received on the Ile de France yesterday. You may recall that Mr. Wilcox had a difficult time with his production of "Nell Gwynne" two years ago, as the American censors barred it here.

Now he's arrived with "Victoria the Great" and the radio message he received yesterday told him that the film had been given a "universal certificate," which means New York will see it the first week in September.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
STAR-TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1937

Rehearse for Music Festival

Koussevitsky Returns From Abroad; Concert to Be Aug. 5

(Special to The Star-Tribune)

Stockbridge, Mass., July 29.—Serge Kousevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has just returned from abroad, is now in Stockbridge rehearsing for the opening concert, Aug. 5, of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

The full orchestra will give six concerts at "Tanglewood," the 210-acre estate which has been given the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. After the opening concert, the series will continue with programs on Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

The two Sunday concerts will begin at 4:30 p. m. The others will be at 8:30 p. m. No postponements due to inclement weather will be necessary. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 29 1937

FESTIVAL GROUP HEARS GREETINGS OF KOUSSEVITZKY

Berkshire Chairmen Meet to Conclude Plans; First of Concerts to Be Next Week

PITTSFIELD, July 28—Community chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a radius of 70 miles gathered this afternoon at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will come to Tanglewood soon to make final plans for opening the concerts next week, sent greetings to the chairmen saying:

"We are not playing propaganda music. We are playing the great music of the world. Best luck to you in your final spurt to duplicate the success you achieved last year."

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, opened the branch office on South St., this morning and when she arrived at 9.30 found two women waiting to buy subscriptions.

"The telephone number is 2-0047, and I hope the bell rings all the time," said Mrs. Underwood.

The booth, which has been loaned by the Berkshire Hills Conference, has been painted and scrubbed. It will be operated by volunteers daily from 10 a.m. to 5.30 through the festival for the sale of tickets, distribution of literature and information.

Mrs. Mary Robbins Chantney of Greenfield has been added to the list of community chairmen.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1937

WHO'S WHO IN PUBLIC EYE

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky is the leader of the Boson Symphony orchestra. He recently returned from a trip abroad.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 29 1936

GREATER FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES SEEN

Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Urge Expansion of Summer Program.

WOULD DOUBLE CONCERTS

Orchestra Also Asks Permanent Quarters for Performances Instead of a Tent.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, have proposed that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at which they took part for the first time last month, be extended next Summer, it was announced yesterday. They have made two conditions for their return as participants in the festival—that there be six concerts instead of three and that a shed be built to replace the tent under which the programs were presented.

Mr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, met with representative business men of the Berkshire area at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, chairman of the festival committee, in Stockbridge, Mass., several days ago. Two major questions were discussed: whether the time was ripe for further development of the festival idea and whether there is sufficient interest among business men to support a plan covering several years.

The festival executive committee agreed with Mr. Koussevitzky that the festival must find a permanent home and that a long range plan must be adopted to achieve the aim of making these programs as outtanding as the great European music festivals.

"In view of the possibilities of the future," Miss Robinson-Smith said in a statement issued yesterday, "obviously the decision of the board of trustees will depend largely on the response of members and patrons. We must give an answer to Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra not later than Nov. 1. With the bigger plan in mind, naturally memberships and patrons become our only capital. We cannot, therefore, give an affirmative answer unless we have a substantial response."

Miss Robinson-Smith pointed out that sustaining members and patrons will be able to buy tickets for series of three concerts at the same price that prevailed last month and that tickets for additional concerts will be available at similar rates.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 29 1937

RADIO PROGRAMS

The Listening Post

By Rocky Clark

AIR WAVES COMMENT

Two complete concerts, each lasting two or more hours, are on the WICC-NBC evening schedules for next month—and both will be broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in nearby Stockbridge, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in both programs, Aug. 5 and 12, at 8:30 p. m.

The first, an all-Beethoven program, will consist of the third Leonore Overture, the Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

Tomorrow, at 3:35 p. m., the WJZ network broadcasts an hour and a half of the Salzburg Music Festival performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute," with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

EAGLE
Cape Vincent, N. Y.

JUL 29 1937

BITS FROM THE MUSIC WORLD.

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Mass., August 5, with an all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, consisting of the "Leonore" overture, No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the "Fifth" symphony. Several from Cape Vincent will attend the Festival this year.

Nouvelles Reçues - à Bord du S.S. Ile-de-France? Sun. July 25/37

A NEW "TANGLEWOOD" TALE

by Cecilia L. SCHULZ

America is now making for itself a real cultural life and the Continentals are partaking of it, as we have partaken of theirs, and as we always will. One of the greatest triumphs in this new phase of American culture is the founding of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. To say that this organization grew like a mushroom would be a record of understatement It has grown like Jack's magic beanstalk. Organized four years ago, on a very modest scale, it has developed with each season until it now represents the best that the United States offers in summer music-festivals.

Last year more than 15.000 music-lovers, coming from 25 states in the union and from Canada, gathered to hear a series of symphonic concerts, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Neither the conductor nor the orchestra need be introduced to those who follow American musical history; the renown of the director is internationally known, as is the distinction of the artists who play under him. In engaging this eminent conductor and his orchestra, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the President of the Berskhire Symphonic Festival, demonstrated her theory that an American music-festival could survive only if it's standard was the highest possible.

This summer, the Festival will be held on the site which will be it's permanent home. Mrs Gorham Brooks has made a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a large estate which was established by her grandfather, Mr William Tappan, in 1849. "Tanglewood" is situated in an ideal location between Lenox and Stockbridge, and is famed not only for it's formal gardens and natural beauty, but for it's rich historic background as well. Not far from the actual location on which the concerts will be given, is the old Indian fireplace, where Chief Konkapot, "friend of the white man" and his tribe gathered and held counsel, long ago. A generation past, Mrs Brook's mother, Mrs Richard C. Dixey, and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, entertained at "Tanglewood" those friends whose names make Berkshire social history. At "Tanglewood", Nathanial Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" and sketched his plot for the "House of Seven Gables". Thus, the name of "Tanglewood" has become justly traditional in New England and now this lovely place, as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will be the scene of a new triumph for the Berkshires and for America.

This summer there will be six concerts, over the first two week-ends in August: the 5th, 7th and 8th, and the 12th, 14th and 15th. In the first week there will be an all-Beethoven programme (the Fifth and Pastoral Symphonies and the Third "Leonore" Overture); also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"; Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire-Bird"; Franck's Symphony in D minor, and two movements from the String Sinfonietta of Edward Burlingame Hill.

In the second week there will be an all Wagner programme, including excerpts from "Rienzi"; "Tannhauser"; "The Valkyrie" and "Siegfried"; also an all-Brahms programme (the First and Third Symphonies and the Academic Festival Overture); Haynd's Symphony in G major, N° 88; the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

There are excellent opportunities for the vacationist to enjoy entertainment and pleasure of various kinds, according to his taste, in the intervals between the Festival concerts. Within easy motoring distance of "Tanglewood" lie a number of centres which offer the drama, the dance and chambermusic. A partial list of the activities which may serve to round out the perfect Berkshire holiday includes:

South Moutain, Chamber Music	Pittsfield.
Ted Shawn Dance Recitals	Jacob's Pillow, West Becket.
Berkshire Playhouse	Stockbridge.
Music Moutain, Chamber Music	Falls Village, Conn.
Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Chamber Music	Cummington.
Bennington School of the Dance	Bennington, Vt.
The Alexander Bloch School of Music	Hillsdale, N. Y.
The Mohawk Drama Festival	Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.
The Williamstown Summer Theater	Williamstown.

There are also certain specific phases of American life which may attract the stranger to the Berkshires, since they are to be found nowhere else but in this section of New England. Among these examples of Americana are:

Berkshire Museum	Pittsfield.
Berkshire Garden Center	Stockbridge.
Institute of Human Relations	Williamstown.
Pleasant Valley Bird and Will Flower Sanctuary	Lenox.

For further information, write to the Berkshires Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Din of Hammers, Screech of Saws Precede Concerts at Tanglewood

Miles of Fence, Wires, Pipes Are Laid

House Transformed to Convenient Headquarters for Principals and Press

Formal Gardens Receive Careful Grooming for Inspection Festival Week

Joseph Franz of Stockbridge admits, without prompting, there's a great deal to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, of which he is a director, besides the major music anticipated from the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky.

Without detracting from the renown of the orchestra and its leader it may be said, without fear of contradiction, that Mr. Franz is right. For he has complete charge of all the preliminary work being done by the Festival organization at Tanglewood, new permanent scene of the concerts. And that adds up to a vast total.

Statistics Impress

Mr. Franz can tell you how many miles of parking fence have been erected, the miles of electrical wiring strung over the several hundred-acre estate, the board feet of platform material and hundreds of other details of construction, all necessary to the transfer of locale for such a large and important enterprise.

Under the direction of Frank G. Ruesch and force of carpenters have put up two and one-half miles of skeleton fencing to indicate parking lanes. They have erected the orchestra platform, using much of the lumber from that on which the same musicians presented the concerts at Holmwood last year. Already, they have constructed the sounding shell in sections, to be pieced together on the stage when the tent has been pitched. Their saws have fashioned 2400 blocks, which have been fastened to 800 benches,creating tilted seats for the added comfort of the Festival audience. The benches will be placed at comfortable intervals under the huge canvas (280 by 120 feet) for Festival Week.

Confusion at Minimum

Three hundred yards of hurdle fencing, loaned by the owners of Holmwood,has been set up at Tanglewood to mark the area occupied by the tent and house. The box office, loaned by Clarence N. Durant of Lee for last year's Festival, has been moved to the new site and stands at a strategic point near the two main entrances to the Tanglewood grounds.

The miles of parking fence already in place provide accommodations for 3000 automobiles in two areas. All traffic from the north will use the parking area on the north side and traffic from the south will use the area south and east of the house. A separate area has been marked off for patrons.

Conveniences Extraordinary

Alterations to the house, built in 1865, have created admirable facilities for Festival needs. The Festival organiation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will use the room on the ground floor, to the right of the reception hall. On the left, will be the special wires of the Western Union, the newspaper music critics and reporters. The large room on the west, looking toward gardens, will be utilized as a women's rest room. Eight lavatories, wash stands and other conveniences are in another room adjoining the women's parlor.

An entrance to the men's quarters has been provided on the north side of the house. Conveniences, never before provided have been added, enhanced by the availability of water and sewer connections. The conveniences, while not comparable to those of the Ritz, nevertheless will represent a tremendous improvement over those possible in past years. A man and woman will be in constant attendance.

Furniture Provided

Sufficient furniture to meet this season's requirements for the Festival has been loaned by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, who presented the estate to the orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

Two public telephones are being installed, in addition to the other wire services, one in the reception room, the other in the press headquarters.

Hidden in a clump of trees north of the house, is a miniature power station with two transformers, switches and other essentials for lighting the entire grounds and buildings. Henry W. Jones, electrical contractor of Lenox, has strung three miles of wires. Thirty flood lamps will illuminate the parking areas, entrances, tent and gardens.

JOSEPH FRANZ
He Pulls the Strings

Gardens at Best

Every effort is being made to have the formal gardens at their best. Through the interest and cooperation of the Berkshire Garden Center, in Stockbridge, hundreds of annuals have been planted and constant attention is being given to the ompipresent weed.

Walter G. Henry, superintendent of Grenville L. Winthrop's estate, Groton Place, a few hundred yards east of Tanglewood, has inspected many of the important trees on the estate, giving expert advice on their care. Several trees have been pruned; an ash on the front lawn, struck by lightning two years ago and damaged beyond repair, has been removed. Most of the work recommended by Mr. Henry is to be undertaken after the concerts.

Tuning Room, Canopied Walk

Think not that Ward J. Gaston, superintendent of Tanglewood, has been idle.It is doubhtful if he has obtained his full quota of sleep in recent weeks. Scores of truckloads of gravel have been brought in for resurfacing the drives, building roads into the parking area. Under his direction, the glorified garage is being rebuilt into headquarters for the orchestra.

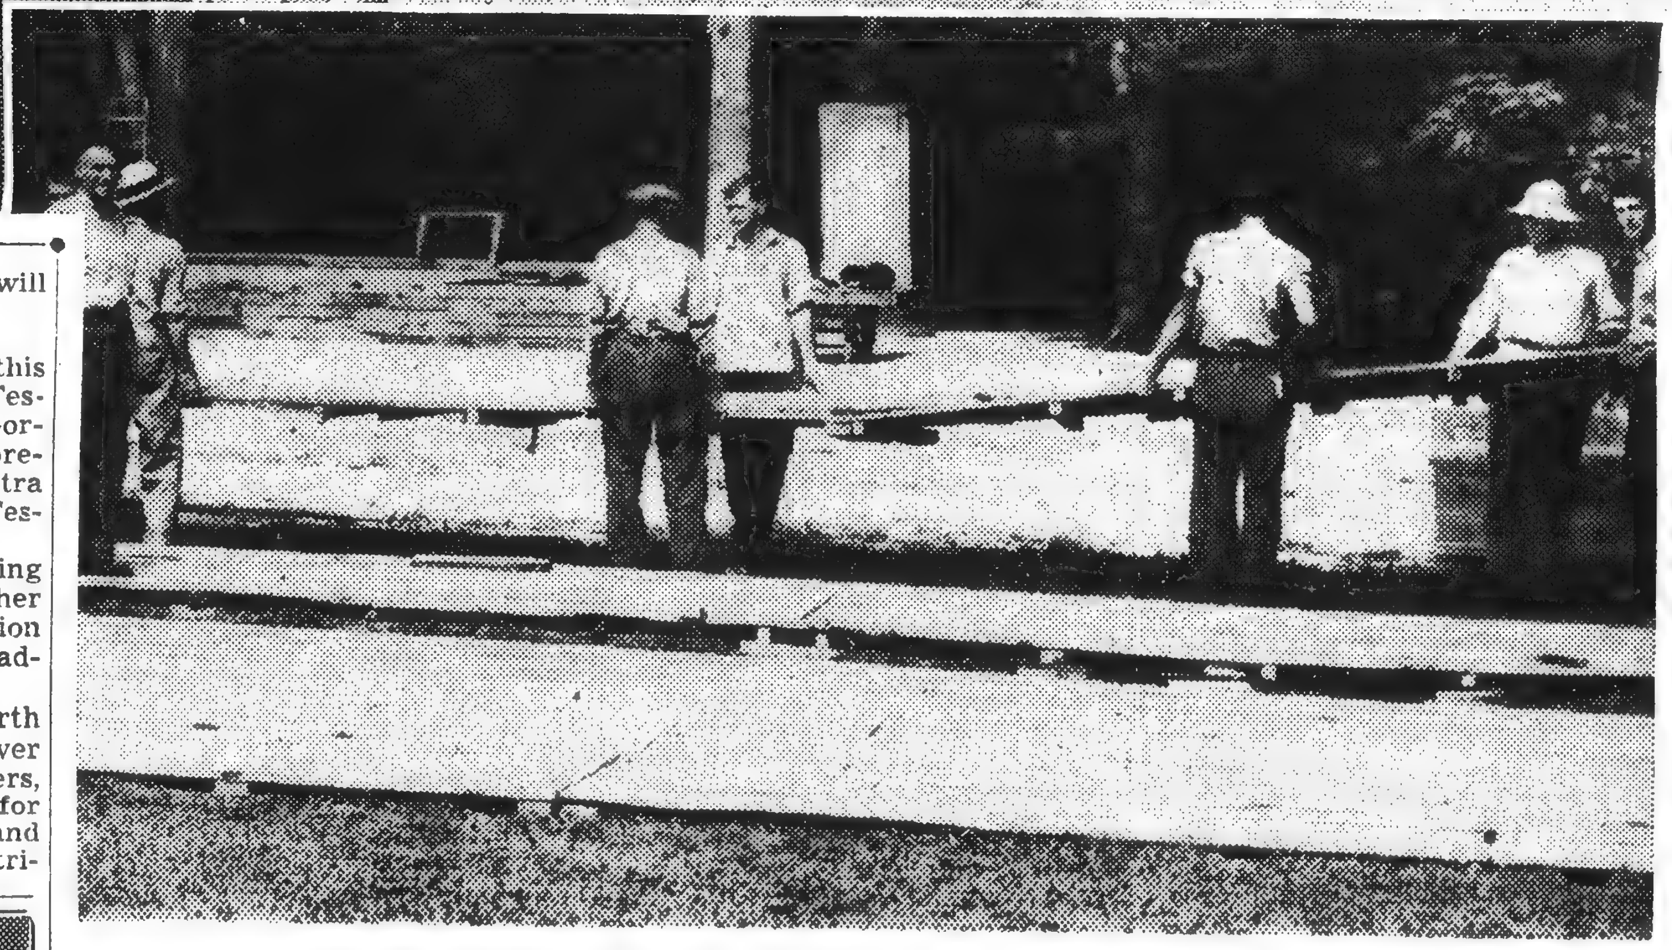
In this building are toilet facilities, a tuning room, quarters for the baggage man of the orchestra and even an apartment for use of Dr. Koussevitoszky at intrmission A board walk with a canopy 250 feet long, is being built from the shell to the garage for the convenience of the orchestra.

Realizing that an increased water supply would be desirable, the orchestra management ordered the small one-inch main from West Street replaced by a three-inch pipe line. Mr. Gaston has supervised this major operation and water was turned on for the first time today.

Something Overlooked? Perhaps, But!

Isn't there something that has been forgotten?

Mr. Franz will admit there are hundreds of details that may have been overlooked, but with an engineer's efficiency he is on the job every day, checking on minute details that would demoralize the average man. So if you go to Tanglewood and find some little thing wrong, don't think of it, but think of all that has been done by Mr. Franz and his crew.



* * * *

Shovel and Crowbar Orchestration

* * *

Long ditch excavated, upper left, assuring increased water supply.

• • •

Plumbers add to conveniences in women's rest quarters, upper right.

• • •

The man in the tree is stringing wire for press communications.

• • •

Gardens are groomed for pleasure of audience at intermissions.

• • •

Platform pieces constructed by carpenters for erection in tent.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

JUL 30 1937

MUSIC MOURNED

Famed Conductor Decries Younger Composers.

BOSTON, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1937

Dr. Koussevitzky Reports On 'Banal' Paris Music

Young Composers 'Have Nothing to Say,' Says Conductor

BOSTON, July 29 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today the present crop of younger European composers was turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the Russian-born conductor on his return to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, starting next Thursday at Stockbridge. "Some of the pieces I heard at the Fifteenth Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group. "Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival.

102

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
EVENING TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1937

JUL 30 1937

Koussevitzky Calls European Composers 'Consistently Bad'

Koussevitzky.

Boston, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said Thursday the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic festival starting next Thursday at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"While there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about 100 or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 30 1937

Koussevitzky Lauds Home Music Talent Deplores Younger European Composers

Boston, July 29.—(AP.)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Beckshire Symphonic Festival starting next Thursday, August 5 and continuing August 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire Festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the Second Symphony of Malipiero, and a new "Concerto For Orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

JUL 30 1937

SAYS EUROPEAN MUSIC IS POOR

Noted Conductor Sees Quality Declining

Boston, July 30 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5, and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky, did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

JUL 3[illegible]

Koussevitzky Turns Up Nose At Music In Europe Today

Boston, July 29 (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the Fifteenth Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Pargy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival.

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire Festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eigh weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival cal for the founding of a school fo training young conductors, "th only requisite for entrance being,' he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained "must consist not only of a impeccable knowledge of th theory of music, composition, an all-around technical equipment but there must be inspiration too."

"For," he continued, "whil there are thousands of conductor all over the world, only abou a hundred or so are capable, an only four or five are truly great.'

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

JUL 30 1937

Koussevitzky Raps Europe's Modern Music

Boston, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music".

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, and continuing August 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15 at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess", at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music," he said. "Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors,

---

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

July 30/37

KOUSSEVITZKY EYES MODERNS

Much of Music Today Is Wretched, Says World Noted Conductor

PRAISES GERSHWIN

Hopes Berkshire Festival Will Some Day Rival Europe's Fetes

BOSTON, July 29 (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5, and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Wretched Music"

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire Festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the Second Symphony of Mallipiero, and a new "Concerto for Orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

PATERSON, N. J.
CALL

JUL 30 1937

Conductor Pans Modern European Music As Banal

Koussevitzky, Of Boston Symphony, Says Americans Have Inspiration

Boston, July 29 (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5 and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training for young conductors. "The only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about 100 or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines — the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the second symphony of Malipiero, and a new "Conderto for Orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

ELYRIA, O.
Chronicle Telegram

JUL 30 1937

Oberlin Professor Will Conduct Boston Symphony

OBERLIN, July 30—Professor Maurice Kessler of the Oberlin Conservatory of Music will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Esplanade Concert this Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Conservatory officials announced today.

According to word received from Kessler, the first half hour of the concert will be broadcast over a national hook-up. Kessler was former concertmeister of the Boston Symphony before coming to Oberlin to teach.

At Oberlin Kessler is Professor of Violin and Director of the Oberlin Conservatory Orchestra. Last summer Kessler conducted the Great Lakes Symphony Orchestra at the Great Lakes Exposition. He has appeared on the air a number of times with Oberlin groups and as a soloist on his ancient musical instruments, on which he is an authority.

OMAHA, NEB.
Evening World-Herald

JUL 30 1937

American Composers Excel European, Says Conductor of Boston Symphony

Serge Koussevitzky

Boston, Mass., July 28 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said Thursday the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday and continuing to August 15, at Stockbridge.

"Positively Wretched"

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event rivaling the great European festivals.

"Few Truly Great"

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "and exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT

JUL 30 1937

Koussevitzky Says Europe's Music 'Banal'

Boston Symphony Conductor Scores Lack of Ideas Among Continentals

Boston, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music-"

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival starting next Thursday,. August 5, and continuing August 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert he sang his country's songs."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL [illegible] 1937

Koussevitzky To Honor Memory Of George Gershwin at Festival

Serge Koussevitzky, telephoning from Boston this noon, announced he would play one of George Gershwin's compositions at the Sunday concert (Aug. 8) of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in memory of the noted American composer. The composition may be something from "Porgy and Bess," or it may be something else, said the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The full orchestra of 100 men, larger by 18 pieces than last year, will arrive in the Berkshires Wednesday afternoon instead of Thursday as originally scheduled, the Boston Symphony management stated today.

The New York Martin Tent Company, which is supplying the huge canvas of 280 by 120 feet for the Festival site at Tanglewood, arrived on the scene last night, two days ahead of schedule and before the crew retired for the night, it had erected the four center poles. The canvas was due to be raised this afternoon.

Through the courtesy and co-operation of Shadowbrook, Jesuit novitiate, there has been electric wiring run from the grounds there to Route 183 where it intersects the Upper Bowl Road (Hawthorne Street). This has made it possible to drop a spotlight that will shine on a state trooper to be stationed at the intersection to direct traffic.

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD

JUL 30 1937

Famous Conductor Scores Europe's Modern Composers

Boston, July 29 — (AP) —Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5 and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at see the Berkshire festival develop ary music in Paris were wretched, postively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony — utterly lacking in any creativeness, The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably .rom "Porgy and Bess", at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festifal develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines — the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 30 1937

Modern Music In Europe Bad, Patron Asserts

Koussevitzky, Conductor of Boston Group, Who Will Direct Berkshire Fete, Laments Content Lack

BOSTON, July 29 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music".

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too", said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, August 5 and continuing August 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers", he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess", at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs".

Has Berkshire Plans

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being", he said, "an exceptional talent".

"This talent", he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

"For", he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the second symphony of Malipiero, and a new "conderto for orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD-DISPATCH

JUL 30 1937

Famed Conductor Says Young Europeans Write Poor Music

[illegible] July 29. (AP)—Serge [illegible] conductor of the [illegible] orchestra, who [illegible] one of the out[illegible] of contemporary [illegible] today the present [illegible] European com[illegible] out "consist[illegible]."

[illegible] which passes on the [illegible] composers to be [illegible]generated, too," said [illegible] Russian-born con[illegible] his return here from [illegible] he left to direct [illegible]hire symphonic festival [illegible] Thursday, August [illegible]tinuing August 7, 8, 12, [illegible] at Stockbridge.

[illegible] the pieces I heard at the [illegible]estival of contemporary [illegible] Paris were wretched, [illegible] wretched. The music [illegible] banality, simply dressed [illegible] maze of modern harmony [illegible] lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUL 30 1937

Composers Rapped By Koussevitzky

BOSTON, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra and recognized as an outstanding patron of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were very wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in his group.

July 30

BURLINGTON, VT.
FREE PRESS

SAYS U. S. COMPOSERS BETTER THAN EUROPE'S

BOSTON, July 29. (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, August 5 and continuing August 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

OMAHA, NEB.
Morning World-Herald

JUL 30 1937

American Composers Excel European, Says Conductor of Boston Symphony

Boston, Mass., July 28 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said Thursday the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday and continuing to August 15, at Stockbridge.

"Positively Wretched"

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Serge Koussevitzky

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event rivaling the great European festivals.

"Few Truly Great"

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "and exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

JUL 30 1937

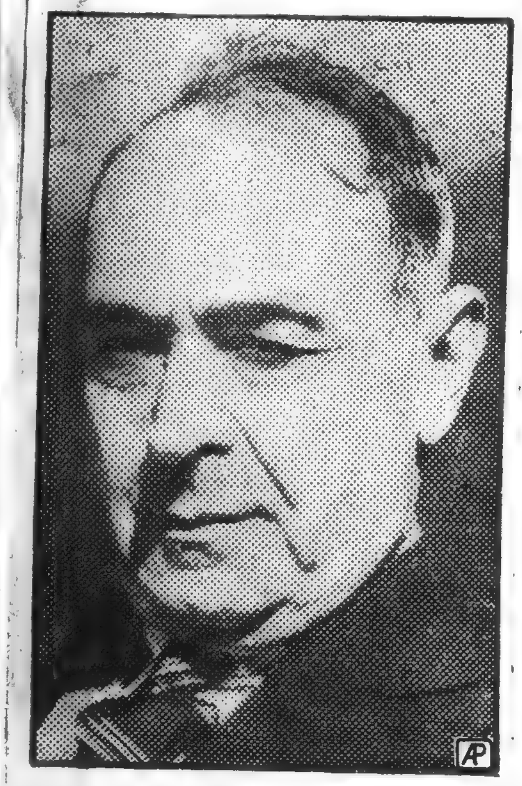
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 30 1937

JUL 30 1937

New Music 'Bad'



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

BOSTON, July 29 (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

The famous Russian-born conductor on his return from Europe, remarked:

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched. The music was utter banality. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

ANDERSON, IND.
HERALD

JUL 30 1937

New Composers Heard In Europe Distress Artist

BOSTON, July 29 (AP) — Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and recognized as an outstanding patron of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

OPENING CONCERT TO START ON TIME

Next Thursday Evening at Tanglewood

MISS SMITH SAYS

Bespeaks Reasonable Time for Parking Because of Hundreds of Automobiles.

The opening concert next Thursday evening, August 5, by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will start promptly at 8.30, said the festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith today.

"Because of the hundreds of motors that will be coming to 'Tanglewood' from all parts of the country, we ask that music lovers make a reasonable allowance of time for parking in the large areas on the estate and the time necessary to reach their seats," said Miss Robinson Smith. "The concerts must start promptly. The opening night will feature a broadcast, so it is readily understood why a rigid schedule must be maintained.

"In addition, many persons wishing to drive home after the concerts do not want to be delayed until an extremely late hour. Prompt openings will be appreciated by everyone. Of that we are certain."

Subscriptions to the Festival concerts are transferable and so priced as to be within the range of almost everyone.

Charles E. Williams, of Pittsfield, district traffic agent of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, has made arrangements for special cars from New York on the morning train from the Grand Central. The return trip will start from Stockbridge shortly before 8 p. m. following the Sunday concerts, August 8 and 15.

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUL 30 1937

COMPOSERS SCORED

BOSTON, July 29 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

Koussevitzky Hopes For Bigger Music Festival

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Would Like in Coming Years to See Berkshire Concerts Develop Into Major Event, Lasting Six to Eight Weeks and Rivaling Great European Festivals—His Plans for Festival Include School for Training Young Conductors of Exceptional Talent—Says European Composers Are Turning Out "Consistently Bad Music."

Boston, July 30 (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said yesterday the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival starting next Thursday and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.
STAR

JUL 30 1937

NOTED CONDUCTOR CALLS EUROPEAN MUSIC BAD

BOSTON, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and recognized as an outstanding patron of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitsky did not include American composers in this group.

WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL

JUL 30 1937

Young European Composers Turning Out "Bad Music" Boston Conductor Asserts

Jury Passing On Music, Koussevitzky Says, Has Degenerated; American Composers Are Excluded

BOSTON, July 29—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too" said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5 and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have great inspiration.'

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent"

"This talent", he explained must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the second symphony of Malipiero, and a new "concerto for orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

JUL 30 1937

European Music Called Bad In Comparison to U.S. Work

BOSTON, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Symphony festival because "his death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

ROC
Demo

Criti

But Orc
Lauds
Co

Boston—(AP
zky, conducto phony Orches
as one of th of contempo
terday the p
European co
"consistently
"The jury
right of th heard has the famous tor on his rope, which,
the Berkshi
starting Th continuing
15 at Stockb
"Some of the fifteent porary mu wretched po music was dressed up harmony—ut creativeness.
have nothin
Doctor Ko
clude Ameri
group.
Am
"Our Am declared, artists. Th
tion."
Doctor would hon late George

NEW EL PLA

Work on $ ington
Start

With a leas between the tr
the Boston El proposed Hunt way will begin learned last n
The WPA,
the $2,044,800
Boylston street
sembling mate and digging sufficient equi
ONLY MINO
With operati received from signing of the ment of mino remained befor
put to work.
The subway
Boylston stree square and run and Huntington of emergence building. It type, 1165 feet
(Continued o

Spend July
THE CL ON THE
NORTH SCITU
Golf—Bathin
Dancing i
Route 3A. Tel.

105

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

JUL 30 1937

Critic Calls New Type Music 'Wretched'

But Orchestra Leader Lauds American Composers

To Honor Gershwin With Selections At Festival

Boston—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who ~~is recognized~~ as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said yesterday the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival starting Thursday, Aug. 5, and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15 at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Doctor Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

Americans Lauded

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he appeared on his return to New York on the Ile de France. INS Photo.

Doctor Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire Festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors. "The only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music. composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

Few Truly Great

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the second symphony of Malipiero, and a new "concerto for orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD

JUL 30 1937

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

BERKSHIRE BROADCASTS

Two complete concerts from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be heard on the air, the first an all-Beethoven program, Thursday, August 5, 8:30 to 10:30 p. m., the second, Thursday, August 12, 8:30 to 10:45, both on the blue network of the N. B. C.

For the opening concert Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony, and the Fifth Symphony.

Olin Downes, music critic for the New York Times, will be intermission commentator in the broadcasts.

Dr. Koussevitzky will make his second appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a unit at the Festival, a summer series which the founders hope to develop into an institution comparable to the great Salzburg and Bayreuth festivals in Europe.

The response last year by thousands of music lovers from New England and the Middle Atlantic States led to doubling of the Festival's program this season.

The Berkshire Festival represents something new in American music. Heretofore the country's summer programs have consisted largely of popular concerts. For the Berkshire Festival, however, the entire personnel of the Boston orchestra is being thoroughly rehearsed under its regular conductor for the six programs of the highest order.

* * *

Site Permanent

The Festival is now permanently installed at Tanglewood, a wooded estate in the Berkshire Hills, near Stockbridge, Mass. This is a 210-acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorman Brooks of Brookline. It was at Tanglewood that Hawthorne lived when in the Berkshires.

Dr Koussevitsky and party, and several trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in nearby Lenox during the Festival weeks. On the grounds of the Club was located Henry Ward Beecher's cottage and there he wrote his famous "Star Papers". Fannie Kemble, the actress, and Edith Wharton, also lived in Lenox.

Residing in the town now, and supporters of the Festival, are Mrs. Henry White, widow of the late ambassador; Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, Giraud Foster, Harris Fahnestock among others, while in Stockbridge are the Festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Norman H. Davis, the United States' ambassador-at-large, Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Owen Johnson, the novelist, Miss Mabel Choate and Carl A. de Gersdorff. Albert Spalding, Festival trustee, resides in Great Barrington.

All the Beethoven works to be heard in opening (broadcast) program represent the composer in his most vigorous creative period. The third Leonore Overture, one of four Beethoven composed for his only opera, has been termed "the greatest of all overtures." Far removed from the stylized overture of his day, the work is in reality a symphonic projection of the opera, now given under its final title of "Fidelio." The Sixth Symphony, which will follow the Leonore Overture No. 3, reveals the composer's delight in the natural beauty of the world. The feelings recorded in the five movements of the symphony are transcriptions of Beethoven's experiences during many visits to the Austrian countryside.

Its companion work, the Fifth Symphony in C minor, stands in sharp contrast to the Sixth. The most popular of all Beethoven's symphonies, it has served to introduce more persons to the enjoyment of symphonic music than any other work. Its four movements are packed with the drama of human experience during the troubled times after the French Revolution had rocked western Europe. Its power is obtained by the use of simple thematic ideas organized in the most rigorously logical structure in all musical literature. Both symphonies were introduced in a concert conducted by Beethoven at the Theater-an-der-Wien, Vienna, in 1808.

* * *

Likes U. S. Music Best

American composers "are consistently better composers" than those of Europe; "they have greater inspiration", said Dr. Koussevitzky yesterday at Boston. The conductor arrived earlier in the week from New York, and left directly for the Berkshires to commence rehearsals.

He claimed, on the other hand, that the present crop of European composers is turning out consistently bad music. "The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated too," he said.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the Fifteenth Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

The conductor indicated he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin at the Berkshire Festival by playing one of his selections—probably from "Porgy and Bess".

An electric organ that is also an automatic player, together with another model from the same manufacturer which is described as the ultimate development of the electric organ's principle, was revealed this week at the five-day Music Trades Convention in New York City.

The organ which was the first instrument to provide music by electric impulses, is now made available for the expression of the operator who cannot himself play a keyboard instrument. The player organ is the result of more than a year's research.

It operates from rolls which depress the keys. For this purpose the player-rolls which were formerly made for pipe organs serve, so an entire library of organ literature is already available.

The selection of tone colors, volume, nuances and control of the complete esthetic province is made available to the operator through the medium of stops, tremulant adjustment, expression pedal manipulation, and other devices simple in themselves to the non-technical performer.

Thus, for the first time music lovers and music creators whose purely technical or digital dexterity does not measure-up or correspond to their natural musical gifts, have available a release and expression of their personal musical talents.

It may be recalled in this connection that virtuosi of the piano, organ, violin and other instruments—and even conductors of symphony orchestras—have historically fallen into two fields: those who are technical masters, and those who are more gifted in the province of making themselves at one and the same spiritual accord with the composer whose work they are performing.

When we get both qualities fully developed and polarized in the one person, we have a Toscanini, Mengelberg, Heifetz.

Richard Wagner was among many composers who could not play the piano or any other instrument; while among latter-day popular composers, Irving Berlin has long been known as a prominent pioneer of the "one-fingered" virtuoso type, whose creative gifts in popular music takes precedence over his technical equipment.

YORK, PA.
GAZETTE DAILY

JUL 30 1937

SAYS EUROPEAN COMPOSERS TURN OUT "BAD MUSIC"

Boston, July 29, (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passed on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, August 5 and continuing August 7, 8, 12, 14 and 16, at Stockbridge.

RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

JUL 30 1937

Symphony Conductor Assails European Composers' Music

BOSTON, Mass., July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and recognized as an outstanding patron of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

NEW EL SUBWAY PLANS READY

Work on $2,044,800 Huntington Ave. Tube to Start Immediately

With a lease finally negotiated between the transit commission and the Boston Elevated, work on the proposed Huntington avenue subway will begin immediately, it was learned last night.

The WPA, which is to construct the $2,044,800 extension of the Boylston street tube, is already assembling material and equipment and digging will start as soon as sufficient equipment is gathered.

ONLY MINOR DETAILS LEFT

With operating authority already received from Washington, only the signing of the lease and the settlement of minor details yesterday remained before laborers could be put to work.

The subway will connect with the Boylston street tube at Copley square and run under Exeter street and Huntington avenue to a point of emergence opposite Mechanics building. It will be of twin-tube type, 1165 feet long, with reinforced

(Continued on Page Seventeen) (p. 17)

Spend July 4th Week End at THE CLIFF HOTEL
ON THE OCEAN FRONT
NORTH SCITUATE BEACH, MASS.
Golf—Bathing—Cocktail Lounge
Dancing in Terrace Room
Route 3A, Tel. Scituate 350. R. N. Summers

7/1/'37 Col 3 [illegible]

"Tanglewood Tales" Festival Edition

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival, will be in attendance at the concerts next week.

* * * * *

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, announces that the Pittsfield office on South Street, will be open Sunday from 10 to 1 for the accommodation of persons wishing information and tickets.

* * * * *

Two famous names were added to the guest book at the Berkshire Museum yesterday. The book lies on the desk used by Hawthorne, when he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." The guests registered were Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, who is giving lectures on the Festival music at the Museum and his host, Owen Johnson of Stockbridge.

* * * * *

Advance sales for the concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon indicate a sellout.

* * * * *

Joseph Franz, Festival trustee, is responsible for the lighting effect which at night transforms the Tanglewood gardens into fairyland.

* * * * *

The Festival management is providing a wheel chair through the courtesy of House of Mercy Hospital, for a cripple from Albany. This accommodation will make it possible for the man to attend the concert tomorrow in comfort.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 30 1937

Koussevitzky Says Europe Is Producing 'Bad Music'

DECLARES COMPOSERS OFFER NOTHING

Considers Americans Better Artists With More Inspiration

Boston, July 29.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5, and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the Fifteenth Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banalty, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

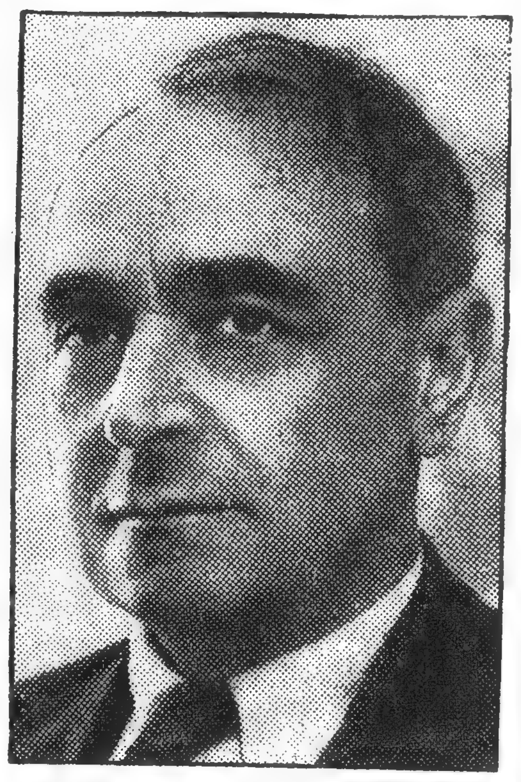
"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivalling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

SERGE A. KOUSSEVITZKY



Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Who Says Modern European Music is Bad.

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the second symphony of Malipiero, and a new "Concerto for Orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

BOISE, IDAHO
STATESMAN

JUL 30 1937

Young Europeans Compose Bad Music, Says Conductor

BOSTON (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said Thursday the present crop of younger Epropean composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched: The music was utter banality simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Doctor Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire symphonic festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
CITIZEN

JUL 30 1937

U. S. CONDUCTOR SAYS EUROPEAN MUSIC IS 'BAD'

BOSTON, July 29. (AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger Eurpean composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire symphonic festival starting next Thursday, Aug. 5, and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 3 1937

Music

Fourth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to Be Held for First Time on Permanent Site.—Koussevitzky to Conduct Orchestra in Fortnight of Classics

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin next Thursday evening. It will last two weeks—twice as long as last year—and will take place for the first time on a permanent site, "Tanglewood," the 210-acre estate between Stockbridge and Lenox given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline.

The orchestra will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, who returned this week from Europe. There will be six concerts, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Most of the music will be from the older classics, with all-Beethoven, all-Brahms and all-Wagner programs. It is possible that a chorus may assist the orchestra or that opera may be given in seasons to come. It is hoped that the Berkshire festivals may eventually rival or surpass the great music festivals of Europe.

Historic Site

"Tanglewood" already is well-supplied with historical and literary traditions. The estate was once part of an Indian council ground. There is still standing an Indian fireplace, with a large tree grown up in the middle of it. Hawthorne lived at "Tanglewood" and there, in a small red cottage razed by fire 36 years ago, he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and first told his "Tanglewood Tales." The estate was established in 1849 by William Tappan, of Boston. It extends from West street in Lenox to Lake Mahkeenac in Stockbridge. The Stockbridge Indians, with their chief, euphoniously named Konkapot, used to gather on the shore of the lake to discuss tribal business.

Hemlock hedges, pines, gardens and lawns beautify the estate. An internationally famous architect, Eliel Saarinen, has been engaged to design a permanent home for the festival. He will not put his work in final shape until he has seen a large gathering on the grounds.

There will be no postponements, it is said; a canvas that will shelter 5000 persons has been provided. We have it on what seems to be very dependable authority that this canvas is no less than 280 feet long and 180 feet wide, that there is a shell to help the acoustics, that three miles of electric wiring have been installed, that there are 30 spot lights, that there are miles of parking fences, and that many other steps have been taken to make the concerts successful.

Downes to Lecture

Olin Downes, famous music critic of the New York Times, will give four lectures on the music. The lectures will be Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 a. m. in the new Ellen Crane Memorial addition of the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

The annual exhibition of the Stockbridge Art Association, usually held shortly after Labor Day, will take place this year at the time of the festival. It will be the 29th exhibition and will begin next Wednesday at the museum, lasting through Aug. 18. Many other activities will be conducted in the vicinity during the Festival season, from summer theatres and chamber music programs to dance recitals.

The two Thursday concerts by the orchestra will be broadcast by the National Broadcasting Company.

The programs for the six concerts follow:

Thursday, Aug. 5 (8:30)
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM:
  Overture to Leonore No. 3
  Symphony No. 6, 'Pastoral"
  Symphony No. 5
Saturday, Aug. 7 (8:30)
MOZART:
  Symphony in E flat
HILL:
  Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra
RAVEL:
  Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe"
TCHAIKOVSKY:
  Symphony No. 4
Sunday, Aug. 8 (4:30)
SCHUBERT:
  Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"
SCHUBERT:
  "Unfinished" Symphony
STRAVINSKY:
  Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu"
FRANCK:
  Symphony in D minor
Thursday, Aug. 12 (8:30)
WAGNER PROGRAM:
  Overture to "Rienzi"
  A Siegfried Idyl
  Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"
  The Ride of the Valkyries
  Waldweben from "Siegfried"
  Prelude to "Parsifal"
  Overture to 'Tannhauser"
Saturday, Aug. 14 (8:30)
HAYDN:
  Symphony No. 13 in G major (No. 88)
SIBELIUS:
  Symphony No. 7
RIMSKY-KORSAKOV:
  'Scheherazade"
Sunday, Aug. 15 (4:30)
BRAHMS PROGRAM:
  Academic Festival Overture
  Symphony No. 3
  Symphony No. 1

◆ ◆ ◆

The second pop concert at the Newport Casino will be given tomorrow night, if the weather is good, by 40 members of the Providence Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Wassili Leps. Emma Beldan, soprano, of Newport, will be soloist. She will sing the aria, "Voi Lo Sapete." G. Y. L.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 31 1937

MUSICAL WEEK IN BERKSHIRES OPENS ON SO. MOUNTAIN

Next week will be an unusually musical one, even for the Berkshires. Sunday at 4 p. m. the South Mountain String Quartet, founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will give its fourth concert of the season, at the Temple of Music in Pittsfield, Mass.

Next Thursday morning, August 5, at 11 o'clock, Olin Downes, eminent music critic, will give a lecture at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the music to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. That evening the Festival will open at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Route 183. The second program of the Festival will be given August 7. The second lecture by Mr. Downes will be at 11 o'clock on August 6.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 31 1937

8:30 P. M., WEBR—The famous Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic festival. An all-Beethoven program will be presented.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 31 1937

The reactionaries score again! Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is back from Europe, having found only two new compositions worth bringing home. One is a Russian work which rejects the proletarian motif of the "Soviet Iron Works" and reverts to classicism.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

Prompt Start Planned for Festival

BROADCAST plans for the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night near Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, make it imperative that it start promptly at 8:30 p. m.

To those who attended the festival series last August, this fact is momentous. The 30 to 45 minutes required to traverse the crowded last mile to the gates of estate brought many patrons into the concert after it had begun.

Although there may be better arrangements to handle the traffic at the gates of Tanglewood, the festival's new quarters, this year, most Capital District persons driving to the scene will give themselves a sufficiently wide margin of time to arrive before the overture.

Estate Has Traditions

Most patrons would plan to do this anyway, if for no other reason than to allow time for an inspection of the new 210 acre estate recently given to the festival with all of its traditions. Chief among the latter is the fact that Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" while stopping there many years ago.

This week finds three of the Boston orchestra's concerts scheduled—Thursday and Friday night and Sunday afternoon. Three more follow next week, constituting the most ambitious program in the Festival's history to date.

Thursday's night cancert is to begin with the Leonore No. 3 overture by Beethoven. It will be followed by the same composer's Sixth Symphony, known as "The Pastoral," followed by his famous Fifth Symphony—best known of the immortal nine.

Second Concert Saturday

The second concert next Saturday night will start with Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, with two movements from a Sinfonetta for string orchestra by Hill to follow. Ravel's second suite, "Daphe and Chloe," is next, whereupon Conductor Serge Koussevitzky will end the night's feast with Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

The first Sunday afternoon concert, beginning at 4:30 p. m., Aug. 7, will embrace ballet music from "Rosamunde" and the "Unfinished" Symphony, both by Schubert; the "Fire Bird" suite of Strawinsky and Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Physical statistics of the preparations for the festival include the presence of the canvas covering for orchestra and audience, measuring 280 by 180 feet, the sounding shell, three miles of electric wiring, 30 spotlights, three miles of parking fence, 800 benches and 900 chairs.

Four Telephones Installed

In addition four telephones have been installed, with four special Western Union loops. Also it was necessary to lay a three inch water main for a fraction of a mile. Fifty-five ushers have volunteered along with 50 men to supervise parking.

All of these arrangements have been in the hands of Joseph Franz, a festival trustee, who remarked today:

"I know darned well I've forgotten something."

The huge canvas spreads protection from any possible rain for a gathering of 5,000. The parking space provides accommodations for thousands of cars.

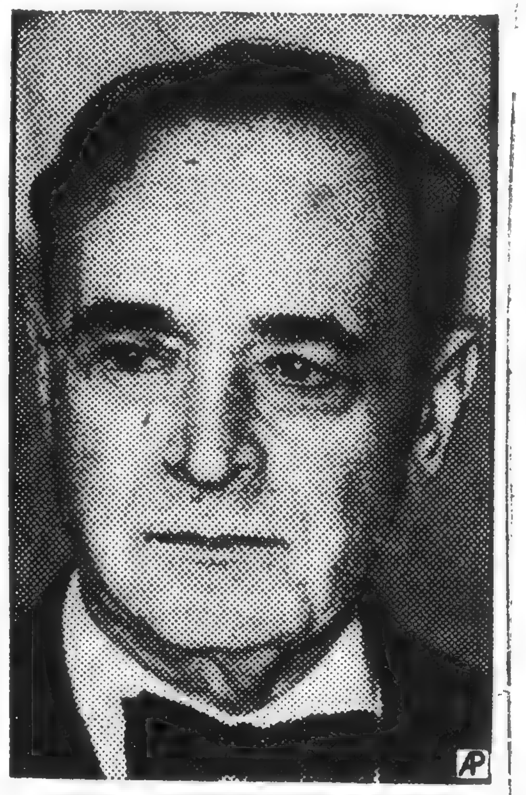
Edward Burlingame Hill, composer of the Sinfonetta which is on next Saturday night's program in part, is chairman of the division of music in Harvard University and will attend the Festival.

Hotels in all nearby communities are booked to capacity, but many private homes are being thrown open for Festival guests. Conductor Koussevitzky and several trustees of the orchestral organization from Boston are making headquarters in the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club at Lenox. The cottage where Henry Ward Beecher wrote his famous Star papers is on the grounds of the club.

PITTSFIELD,

KOUSSEVITZKY DELIGHTED WITH TANGLEWOOD AS SITE FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

"Festivals of Music Grow Up," Says Conductor of Boston Symphony—Orchestra Board Members and Executive Committee Inspect Various Locations for Building



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

". . . Wonderful. We make beautiful music here."

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky and George J. Judd, the manager, returned to Boston this noon after another visit to Tanglewood with members of the orchestra board of trustees and the executive committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Tanglewood is the former Tappen estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

They spent yesterday afternoon and this morning studying possible sites for the building to be erected for the concerts. There are several sites under consideration, including a gentle slope near the formal garden, immediately north of the house, another one in about the center of the 210-acre estate near the east line of the property and even another on the slope toward Stockbridge Bowl.

It was Dr. Koussevitzky's first intimate view of the estate given to trustees of the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen.

Unfolds Some of Plans

Standing on an elevation commanding the panorama to the south, Dr. Koussevitzky gazed today in ecstasy at his surrounding. He could scarcely contain himself as he unfolded some of his plans.

"Wonderful," he exclaimed, as his arms swept out to embrace the vista. "We make beautiful music here."

"Festivals of music grow up," he said, "for various purposes and on a scale commensurate with their surroundings. The success of the Festival last summer was evidence enough that the need had come for music of the finest sort in the heart of the Berkshires, in the summer time. While symphonic music will be largely the basis of the Festival, we may look forward within a year or two to the presentation of other forms of music with the orchestra.

No Commercial Aspects

"An effort will be made to make the Festival fit the interests and desires of American music lovers. The Festival will be free from all commercial aspects."

This last remark of the conductor was a direct answer applying to certain European festivals where artistic considerations have been submerged or threatened by eagerness for tourist money.

As one member of the Boston board interpreted it:

"You won't need a Tyrolean costume to come to the Festival."

Fourth Berkshire Festival to Draw Many Thursday

Crowns Efforts of Gertrude Robinson Smith—'Salzburg of America' No Longer Dream

By Moses Smith

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky opens the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, next Thursday, Gertrude Robinson Smith of the latter town may permit herself a momentary sigh of contentment. Miss Smith is ordinarily not one who pats herself on the back for a job well done. But she may well feel some elation at the realization that in a little more than three years she has seen an idea grow into something that is already beginning to resemble an institution.

It took all of Miss Smith's courage, driving-power and persuasive leadership to insure a miniature festival of three symphonic concerts during a weekend three summers ago. The following summer a similar program was repeated before sizable audiences. An ingenious press-agent—Miss Smith has the faculty of choosing able associates—coined the phrase "American Salzburg," which was perhaps more of a wish than a reasoned prediction at the time. The governors of two States came to pay their respects. One of them, Mr. Curley of Massachusetts, promised substantial subsidy for the festival.

That subsidy was never forthcoming, but Miss Smith and her associates were not disheartened. Instead, they struck boldly;

Continued on Page 2—Column 5

"King of Country Fiddlers" Likes Dr. Koussevitzky, but Suggests Use of Other Hand

Discarding his famous fiddle late this morning to don the robes of criticism, George R. Sweet, self-styled king of country fiddlers, put his stamp of approval on Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"A few more years," George said, "and those boys are going to be good. Because I think that the Festival is a great thing, I am willing to offer my services at any time to help Dr. Koussevitzky with his string section."

Would Use Other Hand

King Sweet has but one complaint to make concerning the orchestra.

"It seems to me," he said, "that Serge misses an opportunity. I don't see no reason why he shouldn't use his other hand. Of course, the baton keeps one hand busy, but he oughta be able to handle at least a piccolo with the other.

"Now that I think of it, there is another thing," he continues. "It seems to me that the Festival people oughta have enough chairs for the orchestra. I saw the other night in the second set there was a 'fella' playing the cornet out behind the tent. Something oughta be done about that.

"None of our players down at the Mayflower dance in Lenox Town Hall next Friday are going to be stuck outside the hall.

"And a word ought to be said for the men at the big bull fiddles who never get a minute to sit down."

Bos. Trans.
July 31/37

SATURDAY, JU

America Cup Races Ready; Wind, Please!

Postponement of Opening Contest Is Threatened by Lack of Breeze

Ranger Expected to Triumph Today

Brenton Cove Is Jammed as Biggest Fleet Gathers to Watch Defense

By Richard P. Waters, Jr.
Yachting Editor of the Transcript

AT THE STARTING LINE, July 31—Flukey weather threatened postponement of the first America's Cup race today as Ranger and Endeavour II waited a favorable wind.

Everything else was perfect but without a decent breeze it was doubtful that even if the race were started either boat could finish the 30-mile windward and leeward run inside the five-and-a-half-hour time limit.

But the race committee, wise in the ways of the wind and water off this port, said they hoped the wind, which came feebly from the northwest, would come through with a prevailing southwest breeze by the time the two huge Cup class yachts got under way at nine miles off Brenton Reef Lightship.

They agreed, however, that today nobody but a damn fool or a Yankee would attempt to predict the weather.

There was everything else, though, a warm sun and a bright blue sky fleeced with soft white clouds as Ranger, with thirteen straight victories behind her and only one defeat and that in a fluky race from Vineyard Haven here on the now disbanded Eastern Yacht cruise, went into the sixteenth classic for the most famous yachting trophy in the world a favorite over the blue boat from England.

The sun glinted on a forest of spars in a fleet gathered in numbers larger than in 1930 and 1934 to see the defense of the 86-year-old trophy.

Fifty-Footers Look Small

The five J boats headed the fleet in Brenton Cove a mile from the New York Yacht Club, and poured into every bit of space in that mile. There were yachts from Canada to Florida.

A fifty-footer looked small in the sailing class, and anything under that length in a power yacht was hardly more than a launch.

The winding streets of Newport were having a field day as cars choked the narrow passages. Thames street on the water front compared to New London over a Harvard-Yale boat race, or the best jam of a Harvard-Yale football game.

No rooms, long waits for food, longer waits for telephones were commonplace. The New York Yacht Club was a center of confusion as crowds milled about inside and outside the building, getting boats, locating friends, and trying to get started for the nine-mile jaunt out to sea.

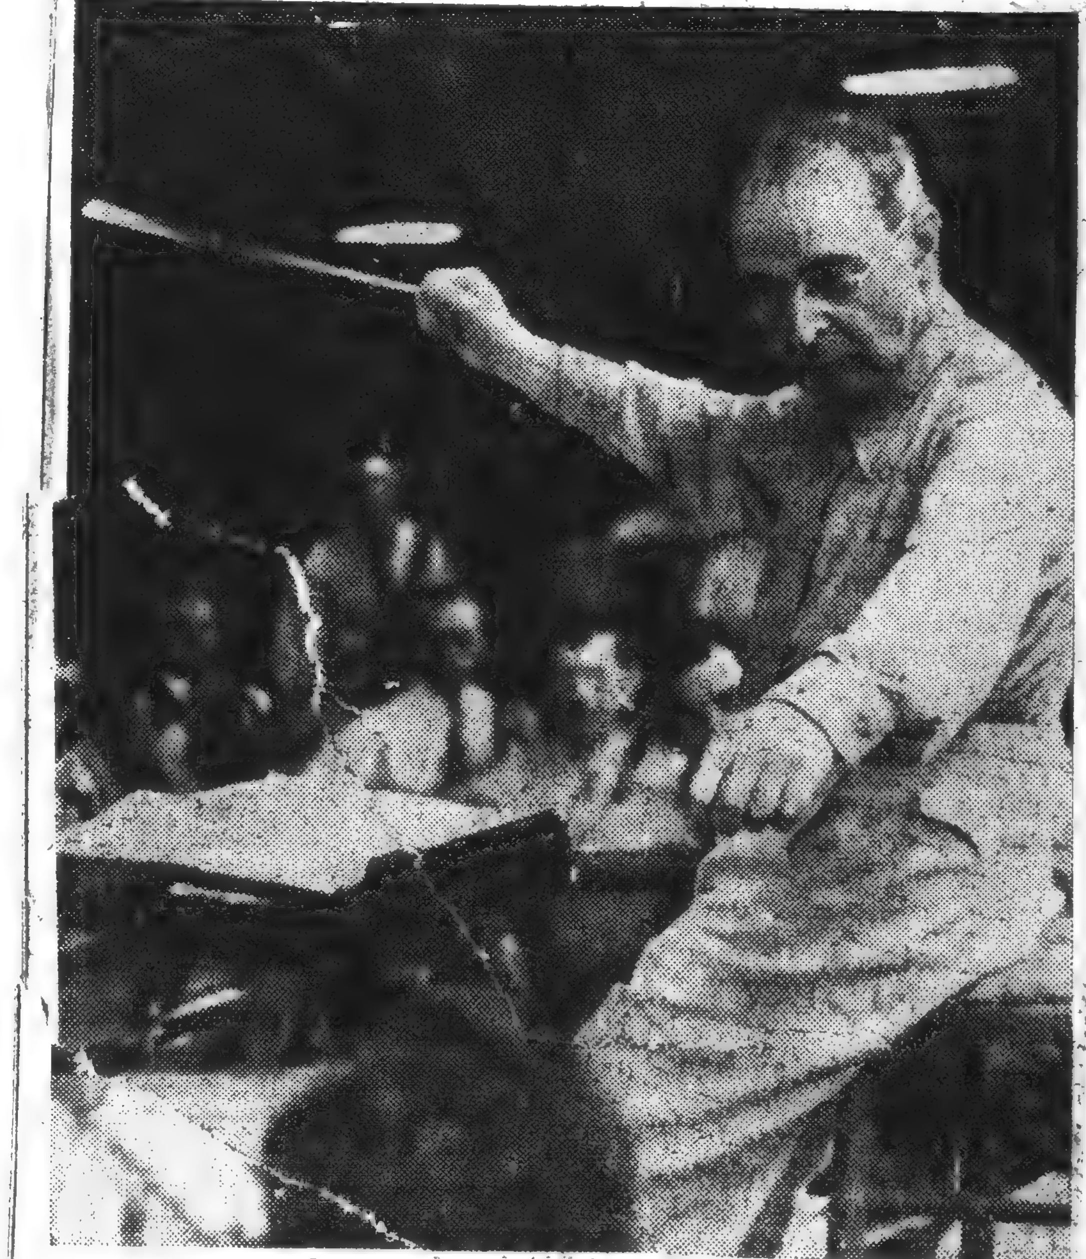
In the harbor a fleet of launches churned up the water

Continued on Page 2—Column 8

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 31 1937

Conducts Berkshire Festival



Serge Koussevitzky at Rehearsal

MUSIC

By Carl E. Lindstrom

AS THESE LINES are written, Serge Koussevitzky is in energetic rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the opening of the Berkshire Festival next Thursday.

Only this week he returned from Europe where he took something of a postman's holiday by talking with all the outstanding composers, examining new scores, some of which he brought back with him, and listening "for one full week to nothing but music." When the Festival is over he will immediately begin rehearsals for the regular Boston season.

The six concerts at "Tanglewood" will begin with an all-Beethoven program, comprising the Leonore Overture No. 3 and the Pastoral and Fifth Symphonies. It will be broadcast, and special arrangements have been made to handle motor traffic so that there may be a prompt start.

Here are the other programs:

Saturday, Aug. 7, Mozart's E flat Symphony, Sinfonietta for Strings by Edward Burlingame Hill, Daphnis et Chloe second suite by Ravel and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

Sunday, Aug. 8. Schubert's Ballet Music from Rosamunde and the Unfinished Symphony, Stravinsky's Suite from L'Oiseau de Feu and Franck's D minor Symphony.

Thursday, Aug. 12. All Wagner—Rienzi Overture, Siegfried Idyl, Prelude and Liebestod from Tristan, Ride of the Valkyries, Waldweben from Siegfried and the overture to Parsifal and Tannhaeuser.

Saturday, Aug. 14. Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 88, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherezade.

Sunday, Aug. 15. All Brahms—Academic Festival Overture and the Third and First Symphonies.

The week-night concerts will begin at 8:30 and those on Sunday afternoon at 4:30.

When the terms an American Salzburg and an American Bayreuth were seized upon by the founders of this Festival they were not idly used, judging by the tremendous drive and enthusiasm which is gathered behind this musical undertaking. It is a non-profit enterprise and all trustees and officers are giving their time, as are also the 55 volunteer ushers and the 50 volunteers in charge of parking. Preparations are being made to receive a capacity crowd of 5,000. The New Haven Road is planning special cars on trains out of New York for Stockbridge.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra members will make their headquarters this year at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox. There will be no postponements of any concerts, which again this year will be under canvas. A new shell has also been provided.

STOCKBRIDGE'S NEED

In view of the high artistic standard of the first two seasons of the Berkshire symphonic festival and the great public interest in the concerts as evidenced by the large audiences, it would be tragic if the enterprise had to be abandoned for lack of a suitable auditorium.

The pitiful inadequacy of the tent during Thursday evening's thunderstorm was almost as apparent to those listening to the concert by radio as to the wet and shivering souls who were present. The noise of the rain on the tent-top simply overwhelmed the orchestra and ended the concert so far as the radio was concerned, although Dr. Koussevitzky and his men managed, after several surrenders to the elements, to perform most of the program.

A large shed, with a roof well insulated against the rays of the summer sun as well as against the beat of rain, is obviously needed. A structure big enough to accommodate an audience of 5000 and designed to harmonize with the natural beauty of Tanglewood, the estate which is now the festival's home, will cost at least $100,000. The raising of such a sum should not, however, be overly difficult. The festival already has many friends in Boston, New York and elsewhere throughout the country who should be glad to help in building it an attractive and comfortable house.

* * *

Taking stock of progress since last year we find that the number of concerts has been doubled and the Festival has a permanent home in "Tanglewood," which was the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline. As this gift was made to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and as it was Dr. Koussevitzky's stipulation that the concerts number not less than six, it can be seen that the Berkshire Festival, whatever it is to become, is now very much a Boston Orchestra affair.

Western Trail Attracts Concert-Goers as the Berkshire Symphonic Festi

New Summer Season for a Great American Orchestra

Mutuality of Purpose and Method Characterize Conductor and Sponsoring Committee

By Moses Smith

Serge Koussevitzky's remarks to Boston newspapermen on his arrival here this week gave considerable evidence that he regards the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to which he and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will direct most of their energies during the next two weeks, as not merely half a dozen symphonic concerts, but also as an institution that may some day have an important place in the musical life of America. By so much he confirmed the ruminations of this department, a few weeks ago, to the effect that by joining the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and staying with it, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has begun a new and significant era in its notable career.

Essentially its task in the past, like that of most American symphonic orchestras, has been to present the finest musical performances to a great number of audiences, at home and afield, during the thirty-week season from October through April. From almost the beginning of its history, it is true, its field has been widened by the Pops concerts, in which most of the same players, under a different group name, reached, by their performances, a somewhat different type of audience as well as extending the musical year in Boston. More recently the Esplanade concerts of Arthur Fiedler, employing about half of the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have carried this tendency even further. Latterly, too, the radio has increased the size of audiences almost immeasurably, and made the Orchestra at the same time an international institution. The phonograph has done the same thing on a smaller scale; in addition, has converted the playing season of the Orchestra, for whoever wills it sufficiently, into all-year-round, morning, noon and night.

Importance of Tanglewood

But the "actual" performances of the official orchestra inside the concert hall, it remains, have hitherto been reserved, for the most part, for the mid-season audiences. Departures from this rule have been exceptions — or were until the Boston Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky threw in their lot with the Berkshire Festival. Their first appearance at the Festival last year was by no means a definite commitment to the new policy. That policy became definite when Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline gave her magnificent Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The importance of Mrs. Brooks's gift in is no danger of being minimized, although it is perhaps not generally known how close the festival came to dissolution last Fall in the face of Dr. Koussevitzky's justifiable dictum that he could not proceed without the assurance of a permanent home for the festival. But orchestra and festival were doubly fortunate in that they have obtained not merely a "home" but, in terms of natural beauty and attendant advantages, a palatial mansion. There are few if any more picturesque sites in the Berkshires; few richer in historical and artistic traditions, only the neighboring Bullard estate being older; none, very likely, more adapted and adaptable to the intended purpose.

Most of these things, no doubt, were in Dr. Koussevitzky's mind this week when he referred to the possibility, perhaps remote for the present, of establishing on the Tanglewood estate some sort of academy connected with the orchestra—a school for players, conductors and perhaps even composers. The "set-up" being what it is, the idea is far from fantastic or, as it seems from this desk, at any rate, impractical.

An American Salzburg

Some such thing has been developing in connection with the Salzburg Festival, with which an inspired press agent two years ago hopefully compared the future status of the Berkshire Festival. His prediction, if he meant it as a prediction, is appreciably nearer its fulfillment. He has on his side now what any soothsayer might well envy, the extraordinary imagination and driving-power of Serge Koussevitzky.

From the beginning it was apparent that Dr. Koussevitzky had no great interest in taking his orchestra to the Berkshires only for a few summer concerts. While we were still in the midst of last season's three concerts some of us heard reports of the conductor's desire for a supplementary chorus, a permanent auditorium or suitable substitute, and so on. Being an imaginative artist, Dr. Koussevitzky could scarcely be expected to be satisfied with such a small affair as the festival was last year. His concern—the eternal concern of the artist—was to build on it.

Amateurs Who Are Professionals

In that respect the people in the Berkshires who have been most active in sponsoring the Festival have also been artists. They have, almost from the start, looked to a bigger and better and more glorious future. And this vision has been accompanied by an artist's understanding of the practical medium in which he works. In the present case that medium was, of course, a carefully planned and (thus far, at least) carefully executed campaign for bringing the desirability and importance of the Festival home to the minds of Berkshirites and others living hundreds and thousands of miles away.

The devious and ingenious methods by which this campaign has been pursued and the resultant attention which the Festival has received first in a somewhat resistant community and later in the country at large would appeal to the imagination of the most passionate press-agent. The amount of free advertising the Festival has been given would make an advertising salesman hot with rage if he ignored the worthiness of the project. Yet there has been no sacrifice of dignity on the part of the Festival entrepreneurs, no degrading of a noble idea with commercialism or cheapness.

It would thus seem not too early to say that Dr. Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival sponsors are admirably suited both to each other and to the mutual promotion of the Festival. The Boston conductor is a professional who, through the years, maintains by some sort of miracle the enthusiasm of the amateur. The Festival sponsors, to the extent that this department has been able to observe them, are enthusiastic amateurs who, by an almost equivalent miracle, have a rare understanding and grasp of procedure usually acquired only after years of professional managerial experience.

There is a temptation to go further now; to indulge in predictions as to the future course of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. But that inviting occupation may better be postponed until the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been completed.

European Notes

The music of Richard Strauss, which had been out of the repertory of the Salzburg Festival a few seasons, made its re-entry there this week under none too favorable circumstances. The performance of "Der Rosenkavalier" followed that of "Falstaff" by a day or two, and the latter had had the advantage of a Toscanini-directed performance of evidently superlative standard, to judge from Herbert F. Peyser's description of it, in the New York Times, as "the greatest the present reviewer has experienced in more than thirty hearings of the work."

To make the handicap greater, according to Mr. Peyser, "Der Rosenkavalier" was given a performance under the direction of Hans Knappertsbusch that was the epitome of pedestrianism. The principal redeeming feature of the presentation was the Princess of Lotte Lehmann.

The piano that Mozart used and that has been housed in the Mozarteum International Foundation in Salzburg has been restored and will be employed at a concert in Salzburg on Aug. 12. The instrument was made by Anton Walter, only four others of whose pianos are known to be in existence.

Surface Coolness, Fires Within

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

onductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Which He Will ad in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Beeen Lenox and Stockbridge, Beginning Next Thursday Evening

---

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG [illegible]

THREE CLASSICAL EVENTS THIS WEEK

Residents of Western Connecticut towns will be in an enviable position during the coming week and next week if they are interested in music, the theater or the dance. Within a short driving distance at Stockbridge, Mass., the Boston symphony orchestra, under the leadership of its famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will begin its two-week festival series at Tanglewood with an all-Beethoven program at 8:30 p.m., Thursday. The Berkshire Players will present a new play, "Many Mansions," featuring Alexander Kirkland, movie star, in a play by Jules Eckert Goodman and his son, at the Berkshire Playhouse, beginning tomorrow evening at 8:45 o'clock. On Friday and Saturday afternoons Ted Shawn and his male troupe of dancers will present two different programs at Shawn's place, Jacobs Pillow, Becket, Mass.

Music and Related Fare That The Berkshires Put Forward

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin next Thursday evening with the first of six concerts, the successive ones to be given on Saturday evening, Aug. 7, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, Thursday evening, Aug. 12, Saturday evening, Aug. 14 and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 15. For the second season the performers will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky. The scene, for the first time, will be Tanglewood, situated between Lenox and Stockbridge, new home of the Festival and the Orchestra, as a result of the munificence of Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

Arrangements for securing tickets and so forth have been stressed in these columns and elsewhere with sufficient regularity as not to warrant re-stating them. For the benefit of those in doubt, however, it may be said that complete information is available either at Symphony Hall in Boston or from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

Thursday, Aug. 5 (8.30)
By Beethoven
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"
Symphony No. 5

Saturday, Aug. 7 (8.30)
Symphony in E-flat.....Mozart
Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra ....Hill
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe" ....Ravel
Symphony No. 4..Tschaikowsky

Sunday, Aug. 8 (4.30)
Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" ....Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony, Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu," Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor..Franck

Thursday, Aug. 12 (8.30)
By Wagner
Overture to "Rienzi"
A Siegfried Idyl
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"
The Ride of the Valkyries
Waldweben from "Siegfried"
Prelude to "Parsifal"
Overture to "Tannhäuser"

Saturday, Aug. 4 (8.30)
Symphony in G major...Haydn
Symphony No. 7........Sibelius
"Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday, Aug. 5 (4.30)
By Brahms
Academic Festival Overture
Symphony No. 3
Symphony No. 1

Partly because the Festival scene is in the heart of a wide area in which numerous artistic colonies are situated, partly because the enterprising Festival committee has stimulated and helped larger activity along these lines, the Festival period will have additional attractions, either in music or in related arts, for the thousands of visitors. Here they are, to the extent that they have been publicized or have been known to this department:

Four lectures on the Festival programs, sponsored by the Festival Association, will be given by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, on the morning of Aug. 5, 6, 12 and 13.

During the week of Aug. 2, "Many Mansions", a play by Eckert and Jules Eckert Goodman, will hold the stage of the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, with Alexander Kirkland in the leading role. For the week of Aug. 9 the bill will be Langdon Mitchell's "Becky Sharp", with Edith Barrett for principal player. Performances during the Festival period will be nightly and on Wednesday matinees.

Beginning on Wednesday, Aug. 4, and continuing through Wednesday, Aug. 18, the twenty-ninth annual exhibition of the Stockbridge Art Association will be held in the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

The current Bennington (Vermont) Dance Festival will end with three performances on Aug. 12, 13 and 14 that will be available, at the end of a modest trip, to those temporarily abiding in the vicinity of Tanglewood. On Aug. 12 Esther Junger, Jose Limon and Anna Sokolow, all Fellows of the Bennington School of the Dance in 1937, will present a program of new dances composed during the present session of the School. On Friday and Saturday evenings, Aug. 13 and 14, Hanya Holm and her New York Concert Group, together with students of the School Workshop, will present a "New Major Composition" prepared during the present session to music by Wallingford Riegger and Edgar Varese.

The third annual Mohawk Drama Festival on Union College Campus, Schenectady, New York, will have, as attraction for the days, Aug. 3 to 7, W. S. Gilbert's "Palace of Truth," with distinguished players in the cast. The Festival will close with Moliere's "Bourgeois Gentleman" from Aug. 10 to 14.

Chamber music programs are usually to be heard at the following places on Sunday afternoons through the summer, although some of the concerts have been cancelled during the festival period: Temple of Music on South Mountain, Pittsfield; Gordon Musical Association's Hall on Music Mountain, Falls Village, Connecticut; Playhouse in the Hills, Cummington.

Ted Shawn and his group of men dancers will perform on Aug. 6, 7, 13 and 14. On Fridays, Aug. 6 and 13, there will be lecture-demonstrations at Mr. Shawn's farm, Jacob's Pillow. On Saturday matinees, Aug. 7 and 14, more formal and varied programs will be presented at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

NEW
HERALD
AUG

Fourth
In the B Begins

Koussevitzky
Concerts
Symphony

The fourth
Symphonic Festival,
with the participation
Symphony Orchestr
Koussevitzky's direct at the Tanglewood
Lenox, Mass., next T
August 5, at 8:30. T third concerts will Saturday night and noon, August 7 and maining three on Saturday nights and noon, August 12, 14
afternoon concerts
4:30.

Dr. Koussevitzky
a Beethoven prog night, including the overture and fifth phonies. Next Satur includes Mozart's flat, two movements
Burlingame Hill's strings. Ravel's seco Chloe" suite and
fourth symphony.
afternoon's concert
bert's ballet music
munde" and Unfin followed by Stravin
Suite and Cesar Fra

The program for August 12, will be ner; that for Satur includes Haydn's
No. 13 (88), Sib
symphony and Rim
"Scheherazade." T on August 15 will offering the Academ
ture and the third phonies.

There will be no p
the concerts will be tent accommodatin
Miss Gertrude Robin
ident of the festival
owing to the concer
traffic that is expec allow sufficient ti parking and reachin
the concerts are to
This is particularly opening night, as be broadcast. Spec added on the morn
Berkshires of the road from the Gra train back to New Stockbridge shortly on the two festival

Olin Downes, mu
New York Times,
the festival progra
shire Museum in mornings of Augus at 11 o'clock.

The Tanglewood
thaniel Hawthorn his best known w
by Mrs. Gorham line, Mass., as a p
the festival. Eliel
Michigan architect building which for future festiva
tate lies on Rou
tance west of reached from N route from Grea
Stockbridge and to its intersection

Several other in this and near-the festival perio
his dance compan
a program of h themes, including ern subjects, nex
at their farm, J
Becket. Their pr afternoon at th house in Stockb
ualization dances
Brahms and Mac
ican Epic," base career, and other
Mountain Quar
Sunday afterno
tain, near Pitts

Information
modations, etc
the Berkshire headquarters

c Festi are That t Forwar

th Edith Barrett fo player. Performance Festival period wil and on Wednesday

g on Wednesday,
continuing through
, Aug. 18, the
th annual exhibi-
Stockbridge Art Asvill be held in the Museum, Pittsfield.
rrent Bennington
Dance Festival wil
three performance
13 and 14 that wi
e, at the end of
, to those tempora
in the vicinity
. On Aug. 12
er. Jose Limon an low, all Fellows
gton School of th
937, will present new dances com
g the present ses
School. On Frida
ay evenings, Aug
anya Holm and he Concert Group, to-students of the kshop, will present ajor Composition"
uring the present
music by Wallinger and Edgar

d annual Mohawk
ival on Union Col-
, Schenectady, New
have, as attraction
, Aug. 3 to 7, W. S.
Palace of Truth," guished players in e Festival will close
's "Bourgeois Gen-
m Aug. 10 to 14.
music programs are e heard at the fol-s on Sunday afterugh the summer,
ne of the concerts
ancelled during the riod: Temple of South Mountain,
ordon Musical As-all on Music Moun-Village, Connecti-use in the Hills,

n and his group of will perform on and 14. On Fri-and 13, there will emonstrations at farm, Jacob's Pil-
turday matinees,
, more formal and ams will be pree Berkshire Play-ckbridge.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1937

Fourth Festival In the Berkshires Begins Thursday

Koussevitzky Conducts 6 Concerts With Boston Symphony Near Lenox

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the second with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will begin at the Tanglewood estate, near Lenox, Mass., next Thursday night, August 5, at 8:30. The second and third concerts will be held next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, August 7 and 8, and the remaining three on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, August 12, 14 and 15. The afternoon concerts will begin at 4:30.

Dr. Koussevitzky will begin with a Beethoven program Thursday night, including the third "Leonore" overture and fifth and sixth symphonies. Next Saturday's program includes Mozart's symphony in E flat, two movements from Edward Burlingame Hill's sinfonietta for strings. Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite and Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony. Next Sunday afternoon's concert begins with Schubert's ballet music from "Rosamunde" and Unfinished Symphony, followed by Stravinsky's Fire Bird Suite and Cesar Franck's symphony.

The program for Thursday night, August 12, will be devoted to Wagner; that for Saturday, August 14, includes Haydn's symphony in G, No. 13 (88), Sibelius's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade." The final program on August 15 will be all-Brahms, offering the Academic Festival Overture and the third and first symphonies.

There will be no postponements, as the concerts will be held in a large tent accommodating 5,000 persons. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, has asked that, owing to the concentration of motor traffic that is expected, patrons will allow sufficient time for arrival, parking and reaching their seats, as the concerts are to begin promptly. This is particularly necessary on the opening night, as the progam will be broadcast. Special cars are to be added on the morning trains to the Berkshires of the New Haven Railroad from the Grand Central, and a train back to New York will leave Stockbridge shortly before 8 o'clock on the two festival Sundays.

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the festival programs at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the mornings of August 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 11 o'clock.

The Tanglewood estate, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote some of his best known works, was presented by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., as a permanent site for the festival. Eliel Saarinen, noted Michigan architect, is designing the building which is to be constructed for future festival seasons. The estate lies on Route 183, a short distance west of Lenox, and can be reached from New York on that route from Great Barrington, or via Stockbridge and Route 102 northwest to its intersection with Route 183.

Several other events will be held in this and near-by regions during the festival period. Ted Shawn and his dance company of men will give a program of historical American themes, including Mexican and Western subjects, next Friday afternoon at their farm, Jacob's Pillow, near Becket. Their program for Saturday afternoon at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge includes visualization dances to music of Bach, Brahms and MacDowell; "An American Epic," based on John Brown's career, and other numbers. The South Mountain Quartet will play on both Sunday afternoons at South Mountain, near Pittsfield.

Information about tickets, accommodations, etc., is obtainable from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival headquarters at Stockbridge.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1937

Pittsfield Is Agog Over Two Music Weeks

PITTSFIELD, MASS. This section will be music-minded for two weeks starting next Thursday with the first concert in the fourth annual Berkshire festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra. There will be four evening entertainments on Aug. 5, 7, 12, and 14 and two in the afternoon at 4:30 o'clock on Sundays, Aug. 8 and 15. All concerts will take place in a marquée tent with seating capacity of 5,000 near the gardens at Taglewood, Stockbridge, a 210 acre estate given to the orchestra by Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan and her niece, Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. Miss Tappan is the daughter of William Aspinwall Tappan who founded the estate eighty-seven years ago.

Among those who have purchased boxes are Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Adolf A. Berle Jr., Mrs. Albert Spalding, Miss Dorothy Willard, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Arnold Whiteridge, Grenville Lindall Winthrop, and Giraud Foster. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky are to be at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox.

• • •

PROF. ALBERT SPRAGUE COOLIDGE of Harvard and Mrs. Coolidge are returning tomorrow from Mexico City and will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Willem Willeke at South Mountain, Pittsfield, for a week. Mr. Willeke is director of the South Mountain music colony, founded by Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, who at present is in California.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Sheridan road, Glencoe, Ill., are leaders in a community enterprise at Tyringham to save the Ashintully oaks from the woodman's axe. The forest is declared by experts to be the finest of its kind in Massachusetts, with trees 250 years old. Mrs. Lawrence Coolidge of Boston sold the property recently to a lumber dealer. The Lenox Garden club is helping the town in its conservation efforts. Mrs. Owen Johnson is president.

Miss Eleanor K. Coonley of Folly farm, Great Barrington, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. John McL. Simpson of 1260 Astor street, Chicago, and at present they are on a Great Lakes motor boat trip. Later Miss Coonley is to be the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Edward L. Hasler, and Miss Gwethalyn Jones in Lake Forest. Mrs. Prentiss L. Coonley was a picnic hostess at Long Pond for her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Milton P. Higgins of Worcester, and in the group were Mme. Giovanni Cardelli of 1448 Lake Shore drive with her son and daughter-in-law, Count and Countess Cardelli, who live in New York.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

Six Concerts To Be Given At Festival

Serge Koussevitzky Will Conduct Berkshire Symphonic Treat.

First Program Scheduled Thursday at Tanglewood Estate.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night.

Six concers will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15 at beautiful Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerst will be at 4:30 p. m. to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8:30 o'clock in the evening. It was at Tanglewood that Hawthorne lived when in the Berkshires.

There will be no postponements A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5,000. There is free parking space on the ground for thousands of cars.

Will Stop at Club.

Koussevitzky and party, and several trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in nearby Lenox during the festival weeks. On the grounds of the club was located Henry Ward Beecher's cottage and there he wrote his famous "Star Papers." Fanny Kemble, brilliant actress of the last century, and Edith Wharton, also lived in Lenox.

Residing in the town now and supporters of the festival are Mrs. Henry White, widow of the late Ambassador; Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Giraud Foster, Harris Fahnestock, while in Stockbridge are the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith; Norman H. Davis, America's Ambassador-at-Large; Representative Allen T. Treadway, Owen Johnson, the novelist, Miss Mabel Choate and Carl A. deGersdorff. Albert Spalding, festival trustee, resides in Great Barrington.

Other Patrons.

Edward Burlingame Hill, chairman of the division of music at Harvard University, whose String Sinfonietta is on the festival program, will be in attendance at the concerts.

Additional patrons include Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Bentley W. Warren, Mrs. Mathew John Whittall, Dr. and Mrs. John Bartol, Miss Dorothy Willard, Mrs. R. B. Danielson, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Alan M. Limburg, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Lippincott, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw and Mrs. E. E. Whitney.

Hotels and inns at Stockbridge, Great Barrington and Lenox are booked to capacity, but there are ample accommodations in private homes, and in nearby Pittsfield, Dalton, Lee and other communities.

DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat & Leader

AUG 1 - 1937

Catching the Beat In Music World Today

By INA WICKHAM.

THE fourth annual symphonic Berkshire festival opens at Tanglewood (its new home, lying between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.) Thursday with an all Beethoven program played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. This is the second appearance of the Boston orchestra at the festival and because of its popularity last year, the season has been lengthened to two weeks this year. There will be six concerts.

On Saturday night Koussevitsky will present music of Mozart, Ravel and Tschaikowsky; on Sunday afternoon Schubert, Stravinsky and Cesar Franck. On the second Thursday an all Wagner program is scheduled, with Sibelius and Rimsky Korsakoff. listed for the second Saturday and the closing concert on Aug. 15 will be an all Brahms program.

THE BERKSHIRE

. . . festival is conducted at direct variance with other festivals. It is not a money making scheme, neither is it a great social gathering nor will there be any large and imposing buildings erected. The architect will not even consider planning his buildings until he has attended a festival and seen the crowds and their reaction.

IT IS THE PLAN

. . . to maintain the magnificent hemlocks and pines of Tanglewood and all architecture will be designed to merge with the country atmosphere and the traditions of the place. Originally the 210-acre tract where Hawthorne worked and first told his "Tanglewood Tales" was a part of an Indian council ground and an Indian fireplace still stands on the lake shore, a large tree having grown up thru the middle of it.

KOUSSEVITSKY'S

. . . plans are in keeping with the general idea of the festival. He is attempting nothing great nor is he duplicating any other festival. This year he will present all symphonic music. Perhaps next year he will include choral works and eventually he hopes to present opera in "finished" form. Here, too, he hopes to establish a school for the advanced study of symphonic literature and conducting.

(Continued from Preceding Page)

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
EXPRESS

MUSIC

Koussevitzky Not Impressed By Europeans

(By Associated Press)

BOSTON, July 29.—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said today the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

Conductor Says Europeans Turn Out Bad Music

BOSTON, Mass., July 31 (AP).—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said Saturday the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has egenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return ere from Europe.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fteenth Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, posi-vely wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a aze of modern harmony—utterly icking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers," he delared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Bershire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

DENVER, COLO.
Rocky Mountain News

AUG 2 - 1937

Europe's Composers Losing World Rank, Says Bostonian

BOSTON, Aug. 1.—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

AMERICANS ARE BETTER

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire Festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

WOULD TRAIN CONDUCTORS

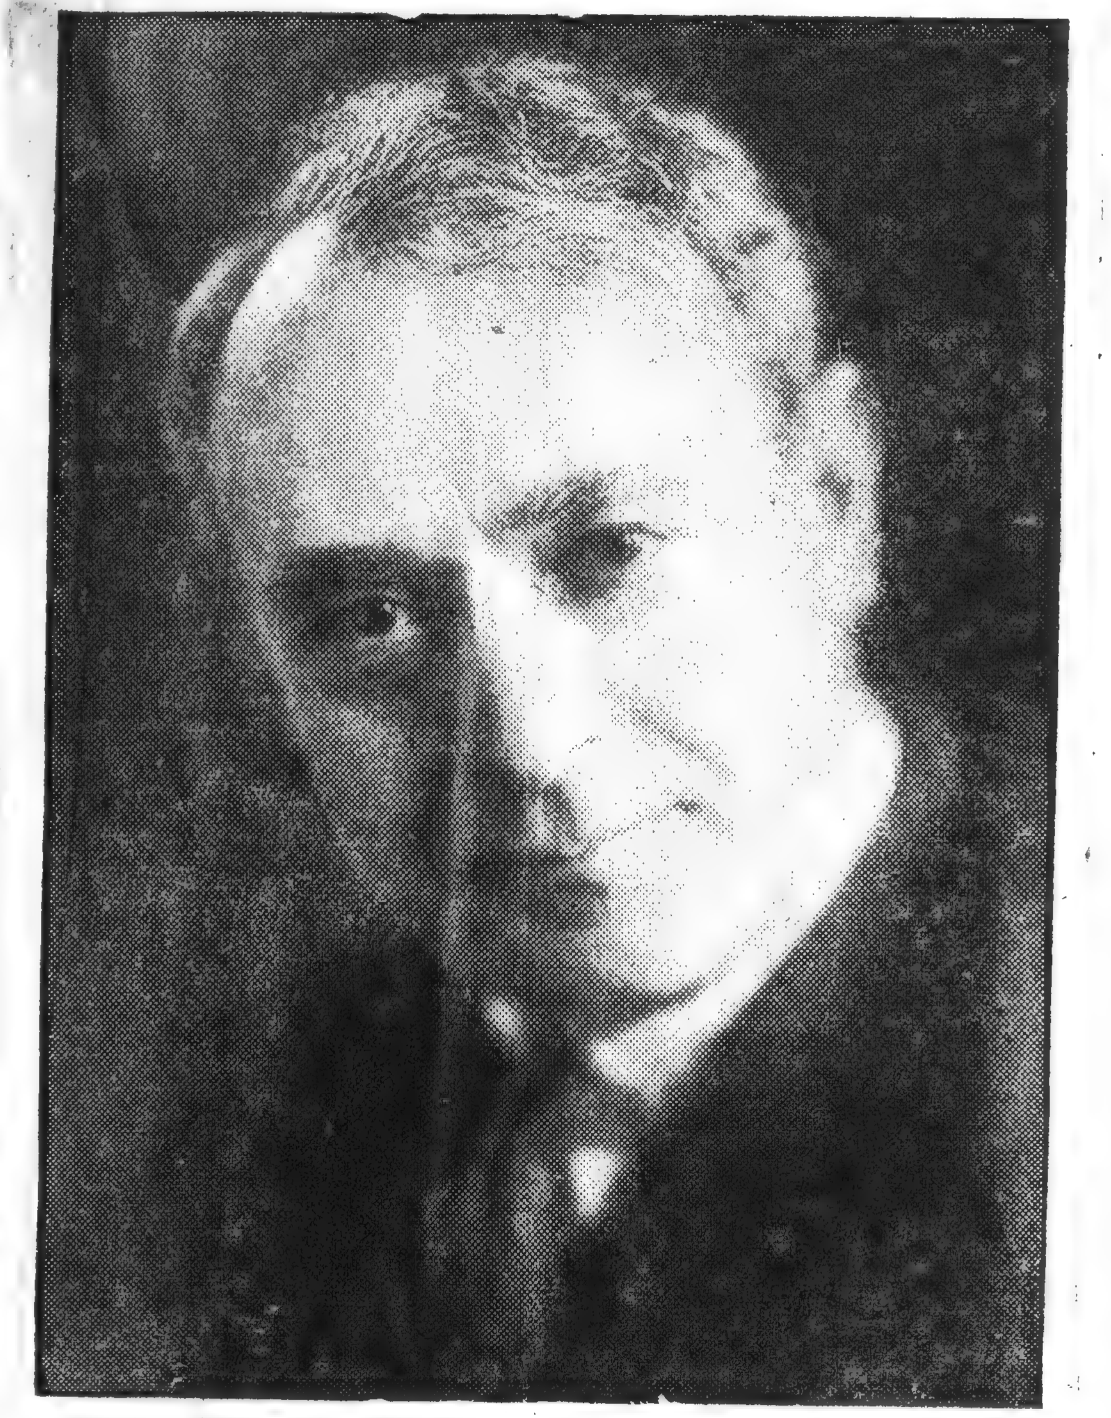
His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

110

AUG 1 - 1937

Festival Director



DR SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the second consecutive year, Dr Koussevitzky will conduct the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge. This series, which has been expanded, will open at "Tanglewood" Thursday night at 8.30.

KOUSSEVITZKY BACK TO LEAD FESTIVAL

Symphonic Series to Open Thursday Night at Tanglewood, Stockbridge

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned from Europe last week aboard the Ile de France and went at once to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, Thursday night.

Six concerts will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of this week and next, at "Tanglewood," 210-acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4.30 p. m., to accomodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8.30 at night. It was at "Tanglewood" that Hawthorne lived when in the Berkshires.

There will be no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5000. There is free parking space on the grounds for thousands of cars.

Dr Koussevitzky and party, and several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club in nearby Lenox during the festival weeks. On the grounds of the club was located Henry Ward Beecher's cottage and there he wrote his famous "Star Papers." Fanny Kemble, brilliant actress of the last century, and Edith Wharton, also lived in Lenox. Residing in the town now, and supporters of the festival are Mrs Henry White, widow of the late embassador; Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs Carlos M. de Hereda, Giraud Foster, Harris Fahnestock among others, while in Stockbridge are the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Norman H. Davis, America's embassador-at-large; Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Owen Johnson, the novelist; Miss Mabel Choate and Carl A. de Gersdorff. Albert Spalding, festival trustee, resides in Great Barrington.

Edward Burlingame Hill, chairman of the division of music at Harvard university, whose "String Sinfoniettа" is on the festival program, will be in attendance at the concerts.

Additional patrons include Mrs Edward S. Harkness, Bentley W. Warren, Mrs Mathew John Whittall, Dr and Mrs John Bartol, Miss Dorothy Willard, Mrs R. B. Danielson, Mrs Charles Summer Bird, Mr and Mrs Alan M. Limburg, Mrs Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mr and Mrs Arthur H. Lippincott, Mr and Mrs John Barry Ryan, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mr and Mrs James Lees Laidlaw and Mrs E. E. Whitney.

Hotels and inns at Stockbridge, Great Barrington and Lenox are booked to capacity, but there are ample accommodations in private homes, and in nearby Pittsfield, Dalton, Lee and other communities. Complete information may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic festival, Stockbridge.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.
Evening News Press

AUG 2 - 1937

Ambitious Program of Bowl Guest Conductor Is Praised

Guest conductor at the Santa Barbara federal symphony concert held at the bowl yesterday afternoon was Russell Ames Cook of Boston, lecturer in modern music at Harvard university and for several years conductor of the symphonic ensemble of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Outstanding on yesterday's program was the suite by Gustave Holst which had its premier performance in Boston in 1923 when Cook was director. The inspiration of the work lies in its simplicity. English folk tunes are used throughout the score. In the first or Gigue movement and the last or Daragason, lively dance tunes, especially Irish themes were used.

The second movement or Ostinato was most interesting because of the continual figured background divided against the melody, especially marked in the violins. The intermezzo has a decided though subdued oriental coloring. Listeners felt that all the rhythm and grace intended in this work went into the director's interpretation.

Grace Omeron, brilliant soprano, who has recently starred in the production of "Carmen" at the Hollywood bowl sang two of Wagner's most beloved arias, "Elsa's Dream" from Lohengrin, and "Dich Teure Halle" from Tannhauser. She was received so enthusiastically by the audience that she came back after continuous applause and sang Brunhilde's song from the Walkure.

Also on the program was Mozart's symphony in E flat major, number 39. It was written in the dark year of 1788 and shows an astounding fluency, melody, and vigor for its composer who was so near death.

Variations on a theme of Haydn, opus 56a, the Andante Chorale "St. Anthony" by Brahms was the ambitious undertaking next presented to the audience. The theme comes from a divertimento for wind instruments by Haydn still in manuscript. Brahms' careful and beautiful variations was one of the highlights of the afternoon.

Also on the program was the "Rosamund" Overture by Schubert which was written to a romantic opera "Rosamund of Cypress." Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien" opus 45, which is replete with varied hued dance rhythms and slow melodies of a haunting charm, completed the program.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG [illegible]

The Berkshire Festival

It may be that something definite and lasting in the way of development of the Berkshire section as a music center has been set up with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the key. There is no better orchestra in the world today than the Boston Symphony. Nor do any European centers boast finer orchestras than may be heard over the radio again and again thru our year. Mrs. Coolidge has done a great piece of work in her South Mountain music festivals during the summers for many years. Her encouragement for American composers has netted much for musical interest thruout the country.

When the Berkshire Music Festival was first set up the interest of Dr. Serge Kousseivtizky was drawn. He undertook the experiment of giving an out-of-door concert amid the beautiful settings of the Berkshires. It was in the depression period. The music event was of great importance. It was made a movement of summer society along with a genuine desire to promote and enjoy music. This year the Boston Symphony is giving concerts covering two weeks.

Because the weather cannot be ordered a great marquee to take care of 5000 people has been provided. It will be filled to standing room. The site for the concerts is one of those beautiful points of nature with which the Berkshires are enriched. The very name, "Tanglewood," strikes the imagination. It means that back in another generation Nathanial Hawthorne lived on the place and from its peace drew upon his spirit for the immortal "Tanglewood Tales."

The occasion also draws attention to the fact that the Berkshire country was selected for the development of estates of the more leisured long ago. Tanglewood House was built in the Civil War period. But back in 1849, William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, bought up several small farms and there created for himself an estate in the English pattern. He had his choice of all the noble views and forest stands that gave accent to sunny open lawns. He was the first to set up Berkshire for the delightful summer life that sits there now.

The swift luxurious trains from Boston and New York, the splendid highways and the modern automobiles have made the Berkshires more accessible to more people. Still their call is to the same kind of people who made that section so lovely years back. Music and art and the drama flourish there. American culture of the 1937 vintage is accepted with as much appreciation in the Berkshires as in any section of the country. It must have been with much consideration of ninety years of Tanglewood that latter day owners have given the beautiful property to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Tappans have done their part in the creation and maintenance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is something personal in the noble gift which is likely in the course of time to make Berkshire have such a place in modern music as for example the great festivals that have made Salsburg the mecca of music lovers for so long.

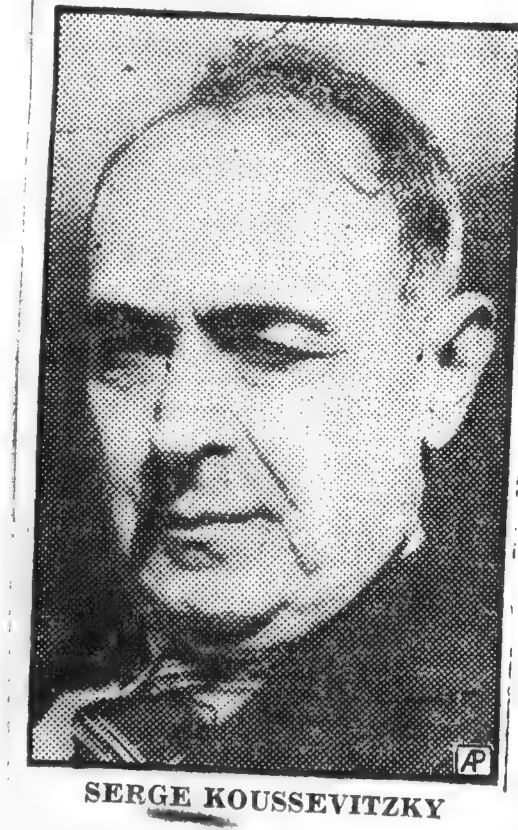
We are ripening some people. We realize it with the steady growth of interest in music and this Berkshire festival is one of the most promising present developments.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 1 - 193[illegible]

MUSIC

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Begins This Week



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is at Stockbridge, Mass., conducting rehearsals for the opening concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Six concerts will be given by the full personnel of the orchestra, Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 at "Tanglewood," the 210 acre estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, as a permanent home for the festival. The two Sunday concerts will be at 4:30 p. m. to accommodate hundreds of music lovers from distant centers, while the other concerts will be at 8:30 p. m. It was at "Tanglewood" that Hawthorne lived when in the Berkshires.

Prepared For Rain.

There will be no postponements. A huge canvas will provide shelter for an audience of 5,000. There is free parking space on the grounds for thousands of cars.

Mr. Koussevitzky and party, and several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt & Country club in nearby Lenox during the festival weeks. On the grounds of the club was located Henry Ward Beecher's cottage and there he wrote his famous "Star Papers."

The festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, is also at Lenox. Albert Spalding, festival trustee, resides in Great Barrington.

Edward Burlingame Hill, chairman of the division of music at Harvard university, whose string sinfonietta is on the festival program, will be in attendance at the concerts.

Additional patrons include Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Bentley W. Warren, Mrs. Mathew John Whittall, Dr. and Mrs. John Bartol, Miss Dorothy Willard, Mrs. R. B. Danielson, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Alan M. Limburg, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Lippincott, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw and Mrs. E. E. Whitney.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 4 - 1937

Boston Symphony to Be Heard from Berkshire

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival over the NBC-Blue Network on Thursday, Aug. 5, from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m. An all-Beethoven program will be presented during this, the first of two special broadcasts from the Berkshire Festival. The second program on Aug. 12, also featuring the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, will be devoted to the works of Richard Wagner.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 2 - 1937

All Beethoven At Berkshire Fete August 5

Renowned Symphonies Will Open Fourth Music Festival at 'Tanglewood' Near Lenox

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has chosen to open the fourth annual Berkshire Symphony Festival Thursday, August 5, at 8:30 p. m., with an all Beethoven program. The orchestra and conductor will arrive in the Berkshires Thursday morning.

With nothing but a canvas overhead, the out-of-door charm of "Tanglewood," the former Mrs. Gorham Brooks estate on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., has been preserved. Within easy reach of the Festival site is the formal garden with its hemlock hedges. Only a dozen steps away is the wide expanse of lawn on a knoll overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains of Southern Berkshire. A rod or two from the south entrance of the estate is the bronze tablet marking the spot where Hawthorne's little red cottage stood.

Opening Program.

The orchestra will open its program with the Overture to Leonore No. 3, followed by Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" and Symphony No. 5.

The first of four lectures on the music to be played at the Festival, will be given by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, Thursday at 11 a. m. Mr. Downes will give his second lecture Friday at 11.

Other Events.

Also at the Mueseum in Pittsfield is the 29th annual Stockbridge art exhibition of which John C. Johansen of Stockbridge is the head.

All this week Alexander Kirkland will appear in "Many Mansions," a new piece at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will give a special matinee Saturday at 3:30 p. m., at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

There are interesting things to do and see at the Pleasant Valley bird and wild flower sanctuary in Lenox and the Berkshire Garden Center, Stockbridge. Miss Mabel Choate's historic Mission House Museum in Stockbridge, memorial to her father and mother, the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Choate. These places are open to the public.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

AUG 4 - 1937

Berkshire Music Festival Attracts Society Tomorrow

Local society will be well represented at the fourth annual Berkshirt Music Festival, which opens tomorrow at Tanglewood, located midway between the villages of Lenox and Stockbridge. An audience of more than 5,000 is expected for each of the six concerts—four evening and two matinee programs—to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The directors plan a permanent auditorium, but this year it will be held again in a marquee north of the Tanglewood Gardens, which were laid out eighty-seven years ago by William Aspinwall Tappan, a [illegible] merchant and banker and the father of Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, who, with her niece, Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, recently presented the 210-acre estate to the orchestra for its summer concerts. Acres of lawn, ancient trees, including the famous hawthorne pines, and a splendid view across Mahkeenac Lake to Monument Mountain and beyond the dome of the Taconics at Sheffield, give the place an atmosphere of distinction.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky, are to occupy the royal suite at the Berkshire Hunt and country club, Lenox, while the festival is in progress.

Miss Getrude Robinson, Smith, president, and Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, vice-president, with many others, plan to entertain house parties.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 1 - 193

Berkshire Music Festival Will Open Thursday Night At Historic Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Orchestra With Dr Serge Koussevitzky Conducting Will Give Fourth Annual Series—Night Concerts Are Listed for August 5, 7, 12 and 14 and Afternoon Concerts Will Be Given Sunday the 8th and 15th—Marquee Tent North of Tanglewood Gardens Will Be Used as in Previous Years—Practically All of 160 Boxes Have Been Sold—29th Annual Stockbridge Art Exhibition at Berkshire Museum Will Open Wednesday—Prizes Are Offered for Best Painting, Piece of Sculpture and Pastel or Drawing — Golf Tournament Ball Held Last Night at Wyantenuck Country Club

Special Dispatch to the Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, July 31—Historic and beautiful Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, will be the scene of the fourth annual Berkshire Music Festival starting next Thursday. An audience of more than 5000 for each of the six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra is expected. There will be four evening and two afternoon entertainments. Those at 8.30 p. m. will be on August 5, 7, 12 and 14. The Sunday concerts on the 8th and 15th will be at 4.30 p. m.

Concert In Tent

For lack of time to build a permanent music shed the entertainments as in previous years will be held in a marquee tent located north of the Tanglewood gardens which were laid out 87 years ago by William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, father of Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, who with her niece, Mrs Gorham Brooks of 375 Warren street, Brookline, recently gave the 210-acre estate to the orchestra for a summer rendezvous. Acres of lawn, ancient trees, including the famous Hawthorne pines, and a marvelous view across Mahkeenac lake to Monument mountain and beyond to the dome of the Taconics at Sheffield, give the place an atmosphere of distinction.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs Koussevitzky, are to occupy the royal suite at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox, for the festival. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, vice-president, with many others are to have house parties. With Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson of Ingleside, Stockbridge, will be Mr and Mrs Olin Downes of New York. Mr Downes is the music critic of the New York Times, who is to give lectures on the concerts at the Berkshire museum.

Pittsfield, at 11 a. m. August 5, 6, 12 and 13.

Among those who have made reservations at Curtis hotel, Lenox for the two weeks are Mrs S. M. Lehman, mother of Gov Lehman of New York; Mr and Mrs Frederick B. Pratt of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs Edward Robinson, Mrs I. Trumbull Wood and son, I. Trumbull of New York city, and Mr and Mrs Henry B. Sawyer of Boston.

Mrs E. Griswold Hollister of Toledo, O., who is at the Curtis for the summer, is having as guests at the hotel her sister, Miss Olive Colton; Mrs S. Cornell Walbridge and Mrs William Gosline of Toledo; Mrs Zorah Bowman and Miss Katherine Geddes of Chappaqua, N. Y., and Mrs Harriet Berry Tyson of Baltimore.

Boxes All Sold

Practically all of the 160 boxes have been sold at $150 each for the entire series of concerts. Buyers include Mrs John Barry Ryan, Mrs Norman H. Davis, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs Albert Spalding, Mrs Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt, Mrs Edward S. Harkness, Mrs Arnold Whitridge, Grenville Lindall Winthrop, Giraud Foster, Mrs John Bartol, Mrs Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs Matthew John Whittall, Mrs R. Jay Flick, Mrs Edward Davis of Philadelphia, Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Mrs Heaton I. Treadway, Mrs Bruce Crane, Mrs James Lawson Karrick, Mrs William Marshal Bullitt, Mrs E. Parmalee Prentice, Miss Dorothy Willard, Mrs Owen Johnson, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mrs W Rockweed Gibbs, Mrs Charles C Griswold, Mrs Percy Musgrave, Mrs Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs Walter Atherton, Mrs John Butler Swann, Mrs Bernard Hoffman, Mrs Leonard Clark Feathers, Mrs Ramsay Hoguet, Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mrs E. E Whitney, Mrs Evelyn W. Adams and Mrs James H. Andrews.

Continued on Page 3C.

In art the leading display for festival visitors will be the 29th annual Stockbridge exhibition at the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield, starting Wednesday with the varnishing day reception and running through the 18th. As a memorial to her father, Frederic Crowningsheild, a founder of the exhibition, Mrs Carl A. de Gersdorff is offering three prizes of $50 each for the best painting, piece of sculpture and pastel or drawing.

Mrs George E. Barstow, Jr., of High Meadows, Sharon, Ct., is giving $50 for th best landscape. On the exhibition committee are Mrs William Marshall Bullitt, Mrs William Penn Cresson, Miss Marie O. Kobbe and Mr and Mrs John C. Johansen.

Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, is the center of a number of important events which revolve this weekend around the men's golf tournament and a mixed doubles tennis tournament. The tournament ball at the club tonight was the largest dance of the summer in southern Berkshire with upward of 300 attending. On the tennis committee with Miss Mary de Windt, chairman, are Miss Elizabeth La Branche, Albert Spalding, Kimball Spahr, Sheldon Collins, Ray Palmer and David Turner.

Tournament Tea Party

A group of leaders in southern Berkshire society was chosen for the tournament tea at the club this afternoon. They were Mrs Denison D. Dana of Tanglewood, N. J., and Laurel Way of Norfolk,, chairmen; Mrs John H. C. Church, Mrs Thomas T. Mackie, who is the former Miss Carolyn B. Van Cortlandt of New York; Mrs George L. Taylor, Mrs Robert K. Wheeler, Mrs Frederick A. Pearson, Mrs Hugh Peters, Mrs Charles Rockhill, Mrs Dwight Partridge, Mrs Ethel Quinn Curtis, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs William A. Berridge, Mrs Ward C. Belcher and Mrs Richard Cobden, Jr.

In drama Alexander Kirkland, former manager of the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, will be seen there next week in the new play, "Many Mansions," by Eckert Goodman and Jules Eckert Goodman, as produced by William Miles, manager of the theater.

Prof Albert Sprague Coolidge of Harvard, and Mrs Coolidge are returning tomorrow from Mexico City and will be the guests for a week of Mr and Mrs William Willeke at Mountain house, Pittsfield. The The South Mountain string quartet, assisted by Gunnar Johansen, pianist, tomorrow at 4 p. m., will play compositions by Schubert, Daniel Gregory Mason, Reger and Faure.

At Music mountain, Falls Village, Ct., the Gordon string quartet with Harry Kaufman, pianist, assisting is giving compositions by Faure, Dohnanyi and Mason.

At the Berkshire Playhouse, Cummington, at 4 p. m., Miss Lonny Epstein is to give a piano recital.

Several large dinners were given tonight in advance of the Wyantenuck club ball. Mr and Mrs Rodney S. Jarvis had a group of 30 at Wheelbarrow Hill farm; Prof Livingston Hall of the Harvard Law school, and Mrs Hall, (Elizabeth Blodgett) entertained 25 of the young set at the club; Mr and Mrs Lansing Wilcox of Buenos Aires had a party of 30 at Pine Rock, Mrs Ulric S. Palmedo's house which they are occupying this summer; Mr and Mrs George M. L. La Branche, Jr., had 15 guests at Green River Farm, North Egremont, for their house guests, Mr and Mrs A. Richard Diebald of New York.

Giving luncheons in the Great Barrington colony were Mrs Denison D. Dana, 14, at the Wyantenuck club; Mrs John B. Beebe for her daughter, Mrs John H. Hamline of Lake Forest, Ill., and Mrs H. Gray Treadwell.

Mr and Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline are motoring down from Dublin, N. H., for a part of the music festival and they will be the guests of Miss Ellen T. Bullard at the Gables, Lenox. Miss Bullard also is having Mrs E. Preble Motley of Beacon street, Boston, for the first concert.

With Mr and Mrs Percy Musgrave at Linwood, Stockbridge, will be Mr and Mrs Hollis Hunnewell of Wellesley. Mr and Mrs John Briggs Potter of Pinckney street, Boston, will entertain at Shadyside, Stockbridge, Miss Rachael Warner of Chestnut street, Boston for the first set of concerts, and her mother, Mrs Roger S. Warner, for the second set.

Mrs Henry Ware Eaton of New York city is giving a luncheon tomorrow at Indian Cave, Monterey, in complimentary to Rev Dr and Mrs William Ewart Dudley of Flatbush, L. I., and Miss Ellen Repp, a contralto singer. Rev Dr Dudley is conducting a special service at the Monterey Congregational church tomorrow morning which is to be a memorial to Mrs Eaton's grandfather, Rev Winthrop H. Phelps, minister of the church from 1856 to 1861.

Mr and Mrs George Church Durant of Clearwater, Fla., have joined his mother, Mrs Clark T. Durant at Shangola, Great Barrington.

Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway of the Crossways, Stockbridge, are spending the weekend with Dr and Mrs William B. Terhune of Little Compton, L. I. The Terhunes formerly lived at Stockbridge.

Mr and Mrs Adolf A. Berle, Jr., of Kenkapot, Great Barrington, are visiting Rev and Mrs Adolf A. Berle at Boscowen, N. H.

Arriving Monday for a month's stay stay with Mrs Edith Parsons Morgan at Bombay Hill, Stockbridge, will be her son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs Frederick Rhinelander King, of Syosset, L. I.

With Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia at Wheatleigh, Lenox, are Rev and Mrs Robert G. McGregor of New Rochelle, N. Y.

Mrs Louis Lombard Coming

Mrs Louis Lombard of Chateau de Trevano, Lugano, Switz., is arriving next week to be the guest of Mrs Francis W. Rockwell at 75 Appleton avenue, Pittsfield. Mrs Lombard is the former Miss Maude Allen, daughter of the late Thomas Allen, capitalist, of Pittsfield and St Louis, Mo. Her first husband was Charles Atwater and some years after his death she married Mr Lombard, an international figure of great wealth, now deceased. He had his own opera house and orchestra at his Swiss castle and entertained visiting Americans on a grand scale. This will be Mrs Lombard's first visit to Pittsfield in a number of years.

Mrs George Johnson of New York is visiting Mr and Mrs Denison D. Dana at Laurel Way, Norfolk.

Mr and Mrs Charles Rockhill of 299 Park avenue, New York city, have Mr and Mrs William L. Austin of Albany as weekend guests at Cranehill, Great Barrington. On Monday Mr and Mrs Rockhill are to visit Mrs Park Mason Wooley at Wood Lea, Long Branch, N. J.

Mrs Harmon Pumpelley Read went to Luzerne, N. Y., following a visit with Mrs Edwards Spencer at Shipton Court, Lenox. She was accompanied by their nieces, Misses Jaumine and Pernette de Viry of Savoie, France.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

[illegible] 37

Music Festival Opens Thursday

Stockbridge, Aug. 2—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has chosen to open the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival Thursday at 8:30 p. m. with an all-Beethoven program. The orchestra and conductor will arrive in the Berkshires Thursday morning.

With nothing but a canvas overhead, the out-of-door charm of beautiful Tanglewood, the former Mrs. Gorham Brooks estate on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, has been reserved. Within easy reach of the festival site is the lovely formal garden with its hemlock hedges, laid out by Mrs. Brooke's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston. Only a dozen steps away is the wide expanse of lawn on a knoll overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains of the Southern Berkshires. A rod or two from the south entrance of the estate is the bronze tablet marking the spot where Hawthorne's little red cottage stood.

In these surroundings the orchestra will open its program with the "Overture to Leonore No. 3, followed by Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" and Symphony No. 5.

Massachusetts state police in charge of Lieut. John P. Sullivan of Northmpton barracks ,and Maj. J. Bruce McIntyre, high sheriff of Berkshire county, have 60 men to handle traffic and parking in the expansive fields on Tanglewood. All parking will be free.

In a final plea Sunday, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival, aked all music lovers planning to come to the Berkshires by motor, to "Allow plenty of time," since the concerts will start promptly.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG [illegible] - 1937

Fair Weather Predicted for Festival's Opening Concert

Brisk Demand for Reserved Tickets, but Plenty of Accommodations Are Available—At Least 35 Newspapers and Half Dozen Magazines Sending Critics—Berkshire Health District, Boy Scouts, Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington Cooperating

Fair weather is promised by the weather man for the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night at 8.30 at "Tanglewood" and only two days remain in which to secure tickets.

Brisk Demand for Seats

The Festival management reports a brisk demand for seats, particularly those in the reserved sections, but there are ample accommodations, for all who wish to attend. At least 35 newspapers and a half dozen magazines will have critics on hand for the concerts from as far distant as Minneapolis, Minn. Others are coming from New York City, Pittsburgh, Pa., Auburn, Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Poughkeepsie, Hudson, several from New Jersey, Connecticut and New England.

Dr. H. W. Stevens, director of the Berkshire Health District has assured the Festival that his organization will be glad to co-operate again this year. There will be a registered nurse in attendance at Tanglewood at all six concerts.

Food Concession

The Thursday Morning Club members are hustling around with their last minute details for the food concession which will be located south of the house and of easy access to those who attend the concerts.

Berkshire County Council, Boy Scouts of America is sending a detail of Scouts to act as runners for the various Festival departments.

The Festival and the orchestra will have a joint office off the reception room in the house at Tanglewood.

Scores of signs have been painted directing traffic in and outside the grounds and under the supervision of Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge, the last ones will be put in place tomorrow.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 4 - 1937

Fair Skies, Big Audience Promised Festival Opening

Fair weather and a brilliant gathering of music lovers are promised for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic festival tomorrow evening when the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky will give the first of its six concerts in the 1937 series at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

The weather man today made the forecast of "Fair" for the opening concert but if he should be wrong there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the beautiful estate Thursday night. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details incidental to the concerts have been attended to. Advance ticket sales have been brisk, but there are plenty left.

Last night the co-ordinating committee had its dress rehearsal for the reception of the crowd. On this committee are: George W. Edman of Pittsfield, chairman; Lieut. John P. Sullivan and Sergt. Warner F. Eaton of Northampton, traffic; Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings, Pittsfield, parking; Willard M. Sistaire, Pittsfield, ushers; Charles E. Williams, Pittsfield, transportation; Lester Roberts, Lenox, housing; George E. Judd, Boston, the orchestra; Henry W. Dwight, Stockbridge, treasurer; and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Stockbridge, president of the festival.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrived last night at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club in Lenox for the duration of the festival. Members of the orchestra are quartered in hotels, inns and rooming houses in several towns near Tanglewood.

A distinguished audience is assured for the opening concert. Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Willeke, Jacques Gordon, Marjorie Edwards, will be among the musicians present. Others in the audience will be Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice and Adolfe A. Berle, Jr.

Other prominent persons having reservations for the opening concerts include Mrs. Jay Fassett, George Sokolsky, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown, Raymond Leslie Buell, Owen Johnson, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. Daniel Chester French, Dr. Herschel Walker, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, and Mrs. John Barry Ryan.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

AUG 4 - 1937

Fair Weather for Music Festival

"Fair Thursday" was the report from the weather man, submitted to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be an event of national importance August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

But should the weather man be wrong, there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the beautiful estate Thursday night. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details incidental to the concerts have been tended to. Advance ticket sales have been brisk, but there are plenty left.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrive tonight at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club in Lenox for the duration of the Festival. Members of the orchestra are quartered in hotels, inns and rooming houses in several towns near Tanglewood.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 4 - 1937

The Berkshire Festival in which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will be featured opens at the Tanglefoot estate at Stockbridge tomorrow evening with a Beethoven program. The subsequent concerts are set for Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. Incidentally there will be many other musical activities in the vicinity. Tomorrow night's program, as well as two others in the series, will be broadcast by the NBC.

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

AUG 4 - 1937

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival over the NBC-Blue Network on Thursday, from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m. and locally over CFCF from 9:00 to 10:00 p.m. only. An all-Beethoven program will be presented during this, the first of two special broadcasts from the Berkshire Festival. The second program on August 12, also featuring the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, will be devoted to the works of Richard Wagner.

* * *

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

AUG [illegible] 1937

MUSIC SERIES OPENING NEAR

Berkshire Festival Begins Tomorrow Night Under Koussevitzky

Lenox, Mass.—Musicians—80 of them—and some the world's greatest in their professional spheres—will be arriving in Lenox tomorrow for the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival series tomorrow night at Tanglewood near here.

With his orchestra, the world-famous Boston Symphony, will be its equally celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, the gifted master of the baton and genius among program builders.

Long before 8:30 p. m. the hour fixed for the beginning of tomorrow night's concert, all roads leading to the Tanglewood estate, new home of the Festival, will be thronged with automobiles bearing the license plates of many states. There is room for 3,000 of them on the big estate. There will be 60 police officers, state and local, to supervise the parking.

Last year, there being only one entrance to the Emerson estate near Stockbridge where the symphony canvas was spread over the Boston orchestra and seating space for 5,000 auditors, hundreds were delayed on the road by the traffic crush.

There are two entrances to Tanglewood, one for those coming from the south and another for those from north, east and west. This should considerably reduce delay but motorist patrons of the Festival have been urged to allow themselves a wide margin in time to reach their seats before 8:30. The program must begin on time to meet broadcasting conditions arranged for the first concert. The program will be a WJZ feature from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m.

Tomorrow's program will be one of six in the Festival series. The second is Saturday night with the third Sunday afternoon. The other three will be next week.

Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen to introduce the series with an all-Beethoven program which will embrace both the Pastoral and the famous Fifth symphonies as well as the Lenore Overture No. 3. The tour de force of Saturday night's program will be Tschaikowsky's Fourth symphony while Franck symphony in D Minor will be the feature Sunday afternoon.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

AUG 4 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLANS SERIES AT STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

In its unique setting far from more commercial centers, the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin tomorrow night at Stockbridge, Mass.

Serge Koussevitzky and his internationally famous orchestra from Boston are arriving tomorrow morning; the first program, entirely of Beethoven's music, will be played that night at "Tanglewood."

This is the estate given the Boston Symphony by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, and intended as the permanent summer home of the orchestra and the permanent site of the Berkshire festival. Patrons will sit under a huge tent, surrounded by trees left over from the primeval forest, by a famous hemlock hedge half a mile long, and by a formal garden recently restored to its old beauty.

A rod or so from the south entrance of "Tanglewood" is a tablet marking the location of Hawthorne's cottage, where his "Tanglewood Tales" were first told.

Sixty policemen will direct traffic, since all the audience will arrive by motor. Many of the 210 acres of the estate have been set aside for motor cars.

Three concerts will be given each week of the festival. These are supplemented by other Berkshire musical and dramatic events; concerts will be added in the future as the demand for them increases. The festival closes a week from Sunday.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1937

MIRIAM HOPKINS, FILM STAR, ARRIVING FRIDAY FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Forty-Seven Newspapers, Magazines and Broadcasting Companies Sending Representatives to Tanglewood Concerts by Boston Symphony—Hotel Managements Report Hostelries Filled for Two-Week Period —Electric Sign in Grand Central

MIRIAM HOPKINS
Film Actress Coming to Berkshire

Miss Miriam Hopkins, film actress, will be among the famous persons in the Berkshires for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening tomorrow night at 8.30 at Tanglewood. Miss Hopkins will arrive Friday to spend the week-end with her mother, Mrs. Ellen D. Hopkins of New York, who is registered at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

Coincidentally Miss Hopkins will be in Southern Berkshire during rehearsal of "Becky Sharp" which will be presented at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, next week with Edith Barrett in the leading role. Miss Hopkins scored one of her greatest screen hits in the title role in Hollywood in 1930.

Curtis Hotel Filled

Lester Roberts, manager of the Curtis, said this morning his hotel is filled for the two weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Reservations have been made by many well known people including Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller of Boston, wife of former Governor Fuller, who will be with Mrs. Franklin Hobbs of Boston; Mrs. Edward Robbins, widow of the late Edward Robbins, curator of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; Henry B. Sawyer, vice-president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Corporation and Mrs. Sawyer; Mrs. S. M. Lehman of New York City, mother of Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who will be with Mrs. Alice Borhman of New York City.

Heaton I. Treadway of Stockbridge says that both the Red Lion Inn and Heaton Hall are filled with guests. The Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox where Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will stay, also will be filled. Many other guests are registered at the Wendell Hotel in Pittsfield, the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington and other hotels, inns and roming houses.

Newspapers Represented

Newspapers to be represented at the Festival include The New York Times, New York Herald Tribune, New York Sun, Boston Herald and Traveler, Associated Press, United Press, St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch, Poughkeepsie Star, Hartford Times, Hartford Courant, Boston Globe, Boston Transcript, Boston American, Boston Advertiser, Boston Post, Worcester Telegram, Springfield Union, Springfield Republican and Daily News, Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press, Washington Post, Auburn (N. Y.) Citizen-Advertiser, Bridgeport Post, Knickerbocker-News, Albany Times-Union, Schenectady Star, Schenectady Gazette, Bergen (N. J.) Evening Record, Waterbury Republican, Hampshire Gazette, Berkshire Eagle, North Adams Transcript, the Daily Saratogian, Christian Science Monitor, the Berkshire Courier, the Chatham Courier, El Courier del Berkshire, the Valatie Rough Notes, Bennington Banner, Providence Journal.

Also Yankee Magazine, Musical Courier, Musical America, National Broadcasting Company and the Trans Radio News Service.

Grand Central Sign

Through the co-operation of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, an electric sign advertising the Festival has been erected on the balcony at Grand Central Station in New York.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

AUG 5 - 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FETE OPENS TONIGHT

Stockbridge, Mass. (INS)—Rhapsody in the Berkshires, the full complement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, tonight opens the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at the 200 acre estate "Tanglewood."

More than 5,000 music lovers were expected to attend the opening concert, first of a series of six scheduled this week and next. A total of more than 30,000 were expected to attend the festival.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 5 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL BEGINS

STOCKBRIDGE Mass. Aug. 5 (UP) —More than 5,000 music lovers from half the states in the union are expected to gather tonight at historic "Tanglewood" for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg."

The concert will be the first of six given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Seorge Koussevitzky on the 200 acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 wrote his famed "Tanglewood Tales."

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

AUG 5 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLANS SERIES AT STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

In its unique setting far from more commercial centers, the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin tonight at Stockbridge, Mass.

Serge Koussevitzky and his internationally famous orchestra from Boston are arriving this morning; the first program, entirely of Beethoven's music, will be played tonight at "Tanglewood."

This is the estate given the Boston Symphony by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, and intended as the permanent summer home of the orchestra and the permanent site of the Berkshire festival. Patrons will sit under a huge tent, surrounded by trees left over from the primeval forest, by a famous hemlock hedge half a mile long, and by a formal garden recently restored to its old beauty.

A rod or so from the south entrance of "Tanglewood" is a tablet marking the location of Hawthorne's cottage, where his "Tanglewood Tales" were first told.

Sixty policemen will direct traffic, since all the audience will arrive by motor. Many of the 210 acres of the estate have been set aside for motor cars.

Three concerts will be given each week of the festival. These are supplemented by other Berkshire musical and dramatic events; concerts will be added in the future as the demand for them increases. The festival closes a week from Sunday.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 3 - 1937

The famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at "Tanglewood", midway between Stockbridge and Lenox, on Thursday evening. Subsequent concerts in this year's program, which is to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzyk, will be given on Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. Olin Downes famous New York music critic, will give a number of lectures during the two week period.

A marquee with seating capacity for 5,000 was set up on Saturday, north of the gardens; a new and larger shell has been built for Dr. Koussevitzky and his 80 musicians; two parking areas have been provided for 3000 cars; and three miles of wire have been strung for illumination, telephone and telegraph. Other requirements for the convenience of the public have included: a canvas 280 by 180 feet, 30 spot lights, 3 miles of parking fence; an eighth of a mile of three-inch water main 800 benches, each seating six; 900 chairs; four telephones and four telegraph wires; 55 ushers! 50 men in charge of parking.

Notables from various parts of the country began arriving early this week to be on hand for the opening concert. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky are to be at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club during the festival.

Dr. Koussevitsky, who recently returned from Europe, has been interviewed on various subjects of late. In one of them he stated that the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music." On the other hand, he believes that "our American composers are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky added that he plans to honor the memory of the late George Gershwin by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess" during the Beyhstic Festival.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG [illegible] 1937

Koussevitzky Will Direct All Beethoven

Berkshire Summer Festival Presents Program Thursday

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has chosen to open the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday at 8:30 p. m., with an all-Beethoven program. The orchestra and conductor will arrive in the Berkshires Thursday morning.

With nothing but a canvas overhead, the out-of-door charm of Tanglewood, the former Mrs. Gorham Brooks estate on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., has been preserved. Within easy reach of the festival site is the lovely formal garden with its hemlock hedges. Only a dozen steps away is the wide expanse of lawn on a knoll overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains. A rod or two from the south entrance of the estate is the bronze tablet marking the spot where Hawthorne's little red cottage stood.

In these surroundings the orchestra will open its program with the Overture to Lenore No. 3, followed by Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral," and Symphony No. 5.

Massachusetts State Police in charge of Lieutenant John P. Sullivan of Northampton Barracks, and Major J. Bruce McIntyre, High Sheriff of Berkshire County, have a crew of 60 men to handle traffic and parking in the expansive fields on Tanglewood. All parking will be free.

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

AUG 4 - 1937

WASHINGTON UNIT SCORES IN CONCERT

Department of Agriculture Orchestra Shows Remarkable Progress

WILLIAM ROBERT ADAM

One of the greatest and most pleasant surprises I have encountered for sometime is the remarkable progress the Department of Agriculture Orchestra has made since first concerts of a very short time ago.

The concert which was given on Monday and Tuesday of this week convinced me that what the orchestra is playing in the revival of fairly forgotten works is an invaluable service to the better music of Washington; and in presenting well known Washington soloists are not only coming up to the requirements of the regular symphony orchestra, but also giving the natives of that city the opportunity of hearing the wealth of talent that is available there.

Last evening's concert opened with Raff's "In Walde" Symphony, a work whose bounds are limitless, whose simplicity is striking, and whose four movements are possessed of an abundance of brilliance and entertainment for the dreamer as well. The "Cavatina" is played by nine-tenths of all who tackle the fiddle; but that short concertsteuck alone is the only surviving work of Raff's in the present day popular reportoire. The possible reason for the great unpopularity of the work is its length; and even its keenest admirer becomes restless after a certain duration of time.

Following a short intermission Dr. Walter Bauer, the conductor, returned with the soloist Irving Ginberg, popular violinist, whom I believe is making preparations to compete for a Julliard scholarship. Mr. Ginberg was heard in the ever too popular Bruch G Minor Concerto which is known to everyone who is familiar with the better known concerti for violin and orchestra. A charming, integrate, meaningful, and certain reading and interpretation was offered by the soloist whose technique enhanced his stage presence which was hindered at times by nervousness; but on a whole he showed remarkable ability and may be compared in part to Totenberg who was heard in Washington last winter. As a refreshing interlude after the concerto, the orchestra offered a medley of the sparkling waltz, themes from the "Cavalier of the Roses" by Richard Strauss. And to bring the program to a close, the orchestra played the stormy finale to the "New England Symphony" of Stillman-Kelley which is a remarkable composition considering the fact that it is from the pen of a modernist. (The Cincinnati Symphony gave the first performance, this year, of his "Gulliver" Symphony.)

On a whole the evening was one of great delight abounding in symphonic novelties.

Boston Symphony to Offer All Beethoven Concert

As a part of the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will offer the first of two concerts to be heard by radio from that point tomorrow evening at 7:30 through WMAL. The concert will include the following numbers:

Overture—"Leonore" No. 3.
Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale").
Symphony No. 5 in C Minor ("Fate")—Beethoven.

The second concert will be given on the evening of the twelfth and will include a program of Wagnerian excerpts drawn from "Tristan und Isolde," "Siegfried." "Rienzi," "Parsifal." and "Tannhauser."

The concerts will be given in their entirety, covering two hours.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1937

Berkshire Festival Will Start Tonight

Stockbridge, Mass. — (UP)—More than 5,000 music lovers from half the States in the Union are expected to gather tonight at historic "Tanglewood" for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival —an "American Salzburg."

The concert will be the first of six given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 wrote his famed "Tanglewood Tales."

The orchestra will play from the shelter of a new shell while a huge tent will protect listeners from possible summer showers.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1937

BERKSHIRES OPEN MUSIC FETE TODAY

Many Entertain Guests for the Initial Performance of Boston Symphony

LUNCHEON PARTY PLANNED

Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia to Be Hostess to Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky Tomorrow

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—The stage is all set at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, for the first Boston Symphony concert tomorrow night at 8:30 in the fourth Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and Mrs. Koussevitzky are at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox.

With pleasant weather as now predicted Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival association, looks for an audience of at least 4,500.

Miss Smith and Miss Miriam K. Oliver are having as festival guests at their Stockbridge home Mrs. Herbert S. Darlington, Miss Sibyl and Joseph H. Darlington, Miss Helen Knox, George and Dana Graves, Malcolm Vaughan of New York and Moses Stevens of Boston.

Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, vice president of the Festival Association, has as guests at Wheatleigh, Lenox, Mrs. Nicholas Brown of Newport, Miss Georgia Williams, niece of Mrs. de Heredia, and Mrs. Talbot Curtin of New York. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky are to be the honor guests at a luncheon given by Mrs. de Heredia on Friday.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. William D. Stevens of Greenwich, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Bradley, Miss Cornelia M. Bradley of New Haven, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Schoonmaker of Montclair, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Sanford Stoddard of Fairfield, Conn.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson had a dinner party tonight at Ingleside, Stockbridge, for their week-end guests, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes. Mr. Downes is to address the Rotary Club at Wendell Hotel, Pittsfield, tomorrow.

Newcomers at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, are Mrs. Edgar M. Williams, Mrs. Paul D. Sexton, who have joined Mrs. Alonzo G. Sexton; Mrs. William H. Crank and son, and James Montgomery Crank of New York.

Miss Mabel Choate has as festival guests at Naumkeag, Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Fife, the latter being president of the Garden Club of America; Miss Mary Putnam Hayden of New York; Mrs. John C. Phillips and Arthur H. Phillips of Wenham, Mass.

With Mrs. J. Frederick Schenck at Valley Head, Lenox, are Mrs. Charles S. Guthrie and Mrs. T. Wayman Porter of New York.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1937

ALL-BEETHOVEN PROGRAM FOR TODAY

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5. (AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic festival which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg", will open with an all-Beethoven program tonight at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks—all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned last week from Europe to conduct here, finished rehearsals in Boston today. The opening program will comprise Beethoven's Leonore Ov-Symphonies. Other concerts will be held Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and the following Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Koussevitzky said he hoped the festival would be able to undertake a six tc eight weeks program next year, "including operas, oratorios, Greek tragedies, as well as symphonic music."

"If all goes well, too," Dr. Koussevitzky added, "I hope to found an academy to train young American conductors.

"All over Europe I heard tavorable comment about the Berkshire festival, and there seems no doubt but that it become world-wide in importance in a few years."

In addition to the symphony concerts, this year's festival will feature dance recitals by Ted Snawn and his group; Chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, the 29th annual Stockbridge Art Exhibition, and dramatic performances by the summer company at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge.

BURLINGTON, VT.
FREE PRESS

AUG 5 - 1937

Berkshire Music Festival To Open At Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4. (AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival, which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg," will open with an all-Beethoven program tomorrow at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks—all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned last week from Europe to conduct here, finished rehearsals in Boston today. The opening program will comprise Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and his Fifth and Sixth Symphonies. Other concerts will be held Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and the following Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Koussevitzky said he hoped the festival would be able to undertake a six to eight weeks' program next year, "including operas, oratorics, Greek tragedies, as well as symphonic music."

"If all goes well, too," Dr. Koussevitzky added, "I hope to found an academy to train young American conductors.

"All over Europe I heard favorable comment about the Berkshire festival, and there seems no doubt but that it will become world-wide in importance in a few years."

In addition to the symphony concerts, this year's festival will feature dance recitals by Ted Shawn and his group; chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, the 29th annual Stockbridge art exhibition, and dramatic performances by the summer company at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 5 - 1937

The fourth annual Berkshire festival opens tonight at "Tanglewood" in Lenox, Mass., with a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Kousevitzky conducting. Berkshire hotels in Great Barrington, Stockbridge, Lenox, Pittsfield and other places are booked to capacity. Dr. and Mrs. Serge Kousevitzky are at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club in Lenox.

It is estimated that an audience of about 4,500 will attend the first concert of the festival this evening. The marquee has a capacity of 5,000. Parking space has been marked off for 3,000 cars.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

AUG 5 - 1937

TO ATTEND CONCERT

Mrs. Wallace Alfred Cook and Miss Genevra Cook, Notre Dame Street, tomorrow will go to Stockbridge, Mass., where they will attend the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1937

Good Weather Is in Store for Music Festival

"Fair Thursday" was the report from the weather man submitted to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be held today, Saturday and Sunday, and August 12, 14 and 15 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

But should the weatherman be wrong, there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the beautiful estate tonight. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details incidental to the concerts have been tended to. Advance ticket sales have been brisk, but there are plenty left.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrived last night at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox for the duration of the festival. Members of the orchestra are quartered in hotels, inns and rooming houses in several towns near Tanglewood.

A distinguished audience is assured for the opening concert. Albert Spalding, Efren Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Willeke, Jacques Gordon, Marjorie Edwards, will be among the musicians present. Others in the audience will be Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Adolf A. Berle jr.

Other prominent persons having reservations for the opening concerts include Mrs. Jay Fassett, George Sokolsky, Philip Marshall Brown, Raymond Leslie Buell, Owen Johnson, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. Daniel Chester French, Dr. Herschel Walker, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgatt and Mrs. John Barry Ryan.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 5 - 1937

FAIR WEATHER FOR FESTIVAL OPENING

"Fair Thursday" was the report from the weather man, submitted to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be an event of national importance, August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

But, should the weatherman be wrong, there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the beautiful estate tonight. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details incidental to the concerts have been attended to. Advance ticket sales have been brisk, but there are plenty left.

Last night the co-ordinating committee had its dress rehearsal for the reception of the crowd.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrived last night at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox for the duration of the Festival. Members of the orchestra are quartered in hotels, inns and rooming houses in several towns near Tanglewood.

A distinguished audience is assured for the opening concert. Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Willeke, Jacques Gordon, Marjorie Edwards, will be among the musicians present. Others in the audience will be Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice and Adolf A. Berle, Jr.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WILL OPEN TONIGHT

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 (INS)——Rhapsody in the Berkshires, the full complement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, tonight opens the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the two-hundred-acre estate "Tanglewood."

More than five thousand music lovers were expected to attend the opening concert, first of a series of six scheduled this week and next. A total of more than thirty thousand is expected to attend the festival.

RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD

AUG 5 - 1937

Koussevitzky to Wield Baton As Berkshire Festival Opens

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4 (AP).—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Smyphony orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg," will open with an all-Beethoven program tomorrow at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks—all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned last week from Europe to conduct here, finished rehearsals in Boston today. The opening program will comprise Beethoven's Leonore overture No. 3 and his fifth and sixth symphonies. Other concerts will be held Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and the following Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. . .

Dr. Koussevitzky said he hoped the festival would be able to undertake a six to eight weeks program next year, "including operas, oratorios, Greek tragedies, as well as symphonic music."

"If all goes well, too," Dr. Koussevitzky added, "I hope to found an academy to train young American conductors.

"All over Europe I heard favorable comment about the Berkshire festival, and there seems no doubt but that it will become world-wide in importance in a few years."

In addition to the symphony concerts, this year's festival will feature dance recitals by Ted Shawn and his group; chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, the 29th annual Stockbridge art exhibition, and dramatic performances by the summer company at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

AUG 5 - 1937

MUSIC SERIES TO OPEN THIS EVENING

Berkshire Festival Begins Tonight Under Koussevitzky

Lenox, Mass.—Musicians—80 of them—and some of the world's greatest in their professional spheres—arrived in Lenox today for the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival series tonight at Tanglewood near here.

With his orchestra, the world-famous Boston Symphony, will be its equally celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, the gifted master of the baton and genius among program builders.

Long before 8:30 p. m. the hour fixed for the beginning of tonight's concert, all roads leading to the Tanglewood estate, new home of the Festival, will be thronged with automobiles bearing the license plates of many states. There is room for 3,000 of them on the big estate. There will be 60 police officers, state and local, to supervise the parking.

Two Entrances

There are two entrances to Tanglewood, one for those coming from the south and another for those from north, east and west. This should considerably reduce delay but motorist patrons of the Festival have been urged to allow themselves a wide margin in time to reach their seats before 8:30. The program must begin on time to meet broadcasting conditions arranged for the first concert. The program will be a WJZ feature from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m.

Tonight's program will be one of six in the Festival series. The second is Saturday afternoon. The other three will be next week.

Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen to introduce the series with an all Beethoven program which will embrace both the Pastoral and the famous Fifth symphonies as well as the Lenore Overture No. 3. The tour de force of Saturday night's program will be Tschaikowsky's Fourth symphony while Franck Symphony in D. Minor will be the feature Sunday afternoon.

TORONTO, CAN.
GLOBE

AUG 5 - 1937

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, with Olin Downes as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival over WJZ and a Blue network from 8.30 to 10.30 tonight. An all-Beethoven program will be presented during this, the first of two broadcasts from the Berkshire Festival. CRCY and a CBC National network will carry the first half of the concert. The second program, on Aug. 12, also featuring the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky, will be devoted to the works of Richard Wagner.

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1937

NEW DRAMATIC SERIAL OVER WBAL TONIGHT

By J. HAMMOND BROWN
Radio Editor of The Baltimore News-Post.

"THE STORY OF CARBONATED BEVERAGES" will be the title of the Our Baltimore broadcast to be carried by WBAL, Friday, at 12.45 P. M. WBAL will bring this broadcast, by remote control, from a bottling plant at Newville, Pa. The products that will be described in the process of being made are Baltimore's own—this city being the focal point of distribution.

Garry Morfit will describe the mixing laboratories and processes involved, the filtering, bottling, labeling, capping and loading on trucks ready for delivery to Baltimore.

The "hard-ridin', fast-shootin'" atmosphere of the old West will be recreated in a new dramatic serial, "Gun-Smoke Law," to be heard every Thursday, starting tonight, from 7 to 7.30 o'clock over WBAL.

The story of "Gun-Smoke Law" is concerned with the adventures of Dave Serviss, a fearless ranger, who is sent into the cattle country to investigate, under sealed orders, suspicious doings.

The plot of the story evolves around cattle-rustling, brigandry, and evil influences exerted over an eighteen-year-old boy and his mother.

THE FAMOUS Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, with Olin Downes, music critic, as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival over WBAL tonight from 8 to 8.30, and from 9 to 9.30 o'clock. An all-Beethoven program will be presented.

On August 12, one week from tonight, WBAL will carry another program by this same orchestra. The program will be devoted to the works of Richard Wagner. Broadcast times will be the same.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

Aug. 5 - 1937

AUG 5 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL.

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5.—(UP)—More than 5000 music lovers from half the States in the union are expected to gather to-night at historic "Tanglewood" for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg." The concert will be the first of six given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 wrote his famed "Tanglewood Tales."

5000 EXPECTED AT SYMPHONY

Herald, Aug 5

Berkshire Festival Opens Tonight at Stockbridge For Six Concerts

(By a Herald Staff Correspondent)

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tomorrow night before the full ensemble of the Boston Symphony orchestra and an anticipated throng of 5000 music lovers at historic "Tanglewood" in the rolling Berkshires—it will mark something more than the beginning of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

To many present, who have labored during the past few years against difficulties and uncertainties, it will mean the fruition of a dream that this 200 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge may be the site for the flowering of a great New England musical heritage.

Already the fame of this festival has spread far beyond the eastern seaboard and the next two weeks will see followers of musical perfection from more than half the states of the union and Canada flock to this old New England cultural center.

SIX CONCERTS PLANNED

Six concerts will be given this season. Four in the evening, tomorrow and Saturday of this week and Thursday and Saturday of next week. Two afternoon concerts will be held on the coming two Sundays. More than 30,000 are expected to attend during the festival, twice as long as last year's season.

The possibility of summer showers

(Continued on Page Six)

5000 EXPECTED AT SYMPHONY

Berkshire Festival Opens Tonight at Stockbridge For Six Concerts

(Continued from First Page)

holds no threat for the full enjoyment of this outdoor musical event as a huge tent has been erected on the grounds capable of sheltering more than 5000. Dr. Koussevitzky and his four score musicians will play from the shelter of a new shell whose curving background has been found to be acoustically near perfection.

The festival itself is the modern re-birth of an artistic tradition that began when Nathaniel Hawthorne journeyed from Salem in 1850 to occupy a red cottage on the site of the present "Tanglewood estate" there to weave his "Tanglewood Tales" and spin the plot of "The House of Seven Gables."

AN 'AMERICAN SALZBURG'

It was through the generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brocks of Brookline, who gave the estate to the Boston Symphony orchestra last February, that the festival now has a permanent home—an "American Salzburg" preserving the continental heritage of a great love for music amid surroundings and an atmosphere with a history and tradition all its own.

It was in 1934 that Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Owen Johnson, wife of the novelist, and others took the first steps toward establishment of this musical center by sponsoring a symphonic festival on the old Dan Hanna farm in Stockbridge. Seven thousand persons came to hear concerts by the New York Philharmonic orchestra. The next year another festival resulted in a deficit but last year the hopes of this small group found enthusiasm and co-operation in the person of Dr. Koussevitzky.

It is hoped that in the future there may be a permanent festival building—perhaps great outdoor operas on the grand style—but tomorrow night's performance will bring satisfaction enough to those who have watched development of this idea.

SURROUNDINGS IDEAL

Perhaps nowhere else in this country do the surroundings for a concert blend so easily with the atmosphere created by the music—broad rolling lawns and great pines against a background of a Berkshire lake. It is a unified pattern—genius, performance and appreciation—in a form of country landscape.

Cont.

During the first week there will be an all-Beethoven program, also Mozart's Symphony in E flat; Ravel's Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe"; Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony; Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, and ballet music from "Rosamunde."

The program for the second week will include an all-Wagner program; an all-Brahms program; and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

This year, special arrangements for the handling of traffic have been rehearsed and a parking space for 3000 cars provided. Inns and hotels throughout the district have been taking reservations throughout the summer and the whole Berkshire area is alive with the spirit of the festival.

OTHER FEATURES SCHEDULED

Dance recitals at Stockbridge, summer drama there and at Lee and Bennington, Vt., an art exibition in Pittsfield and chamber music concerts in neighboring towns during the next two weeks will add their laurels to the cultural richness of the fortnight.

A distinguished list of spectators and patrons is assured for the premiere performance. Among those arriving will be Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Bentley W. Warren, Mrs. Mathew John Whittail, Dr. and Mrs. John Bartol, Miss Dorothy Willard, Mrs. R. B. Danielson, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Alan M. Limburg, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Lippincott, Mr. and Mrs John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw and Mrs. E. R. Whitney.

Supporters of the festival residing in the Berkshires include Mrs. Henry White, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Carlos M. Heredia, Giraud Foster and Harris Fahnestock.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1937

Two Complete Programs From Symphonic Festival

First Concert Will Be Broadcast by Boston Orchestra Under Koussevitzky Tonight—Opera From Salzburg—'Gun-Smoke Law'—Two New Compositions—National Research Council—Variety Shows

Two complete concerts from the Berkshire Symphonic festival with Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra will be heard in exclusive NBC programs tonight and next Thursday night. Tonight's program, devoted entirely to the works of Beethoven, will be heard between 8.30 and 10.30 over WBZa and will include the third "Leonore" overture, and the Fifth and Sixth symphonies. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be intermission commentator.

With Arturo Toscanini as conductor, a portion of Wagner's opera "Die Meistersinger" will be heard at 2.30 this afternoon over WTIC. The cast for the broadcast will be composed principally of outstanding European interpreters of Wagnerian opera. Kerstin Thorborg, familiar to American audiences as one of the leading contraltos of the Metropolitan opera, will be heard in the role of Magdalena.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 5 - 1937

'American Salzburg' Will Open Tonight

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5, (UP)—More than 5,000 music lovers from half the states in the union are expected to gather tonight at historic "Tanglewood" for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg."

The concert will be the first of six given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 wrote his famed "Tanglewood Tales."

The orchestra will play from the shelter of a new shell while a huge tent will protect listeners from possible Summer showers.

Many of the musicians will "rough it" during their 10-day stay, either in trailers or tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

ALL-BEETHOVEN PROGRAM FOR TODAY

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Will Open at Tanglewood

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4. (AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic festival which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg", will open with an all-Beethoven program tomorrow at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks—all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned last week from Europe to conduct here, finished rehearsals in Boston today. The opening program will comprise Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and his Fifth and Sixth Symphonies. Other concerts will be held Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and the following Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Koussevitzky said he hoped the festival would be able to undertake a six to eight weeks program next year, "including operas, oratorios, Greek tragedies, as well as symphonic music."

"If all goes well, too," Dr. Koussevitzky added, "I hope to found an academy to train young American conductors.

"All over Europe I heard favorable comment about the Berkshire festival, and there seems no doubt but that it become world-wide in importance in a few years."

In addition to the symphony concerts, this year's festival will feature dance recitals by Ted Snawn and his group; Chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, the 29th annual Stockbridge Art Exhibition, and dramatic performances by the summer company at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
UNION

AUG 5 - 1937

Beethoven Program Opens Berkshire Festival Today

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4. (AP) — The Berkshire symphonic festival, which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg," will open with an all-Beethoven program tomorrow at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks — all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent summer home.

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

AUG 5 - 1937

Boston Orchestra

The famous Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival over KSO at 6:30 p. m.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1937

HOTELS FILLED FOR FESTIVAL

Stage All Set for Opening of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Tonight—Hundreds Already On Hand

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 4—The stage is all set at Tanglewood midway between Lenox and Stockbridge for the first Boston Symphony concert tomorrow night ~~at 8.30 in~~ the fourth Berkshire music festival. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and Mrs Koussevitzky, are at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox. Groups of musicians are at the Wendell hotel, Pittsfield, and Greenock inn, Lee. South Berkshire hotels are filled to capacity.

With pleasant weather, as now predicted, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival association, looks for an audience of at least 4500. There are seats in the marquee near the garden, for 5000. Wire accommodations have been arranged in Tanglewood house for representatives of 46 newspapers who are expected. The music is to be broadcast by WJZ over a nationwide hookup.

Miss Smith and Miss Miriam K. Oliver are having as festival guests at their Stockbridge summer home, Mrs Herbert S. Darlington, Miss Sibyl and Joseph H. Darlington, Miss Helen Knox, George and Dana Graves, Malcolm Vaughan of New York and Moses Stevens of Boston.

Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, vice-president of the festival association, has as festival guests at Wheatleigh, Lenox, Mrs Nicholas Brown of Newport, Miss Georgia Williams, niece of Mrs de Heredia, and Mrs Talbot Curtin of New York. Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky are to be the honor guests at a luncheon given by Mrs de Heredia on Friday.

At Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, are Mr and Mrs William D. Stevens of Greenwich, Ct., Mr and Mrs Frederick T. Bradley, Miss Cornelia M. Bradley of New Haven, Mr and Mrs William H. Schoonmaker of Montclair, N. J.; Mr and Mrs Sanford Stoddard of Fairfield, Ct.; Mrs M. E. Wormser, Miss Helen Wormser of New York; Mr and Mrs Roger Williams of Wilmington, Del.; Mrs Ralph E. Weber, Miss Helen M. Crane of Summit, N. J.

Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson had a dinner party tonight at Ingleside, Stockbridge, for their weekend guests, Mr and Mrs Olin Downes. Mr Downes is to address the Rotary club at Wendell hotel Pittsfield tomorrow noon.

Mrs Anson Phelps Stokes is at New York to meet Rev Dr Stokes who is arriving tomorrow on the Arcadia following a month's stay at the Oxford conference, England.

Newcomers at Heaton hall, Stockbridge, are Mrs Edgar M. Williams, Mrs Paul D. Sexton, who have joined Mrs Alonzo G. Sexton; Mrs William H. Crank and son, James Montgomery Crank, of New York; Mr and Mrs Albert M. Fox of Pine Plains, N. Y.; Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Joyce of Montclair, N. J.; Misses Florence and Marion Brownell and Marion A. Root of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Miss Mabel Choate has as festival guests at Naumkeag, Stockbridge, Mr and Mrs Robert H. Fife, the latter being president of the Garden Club of America; Miss Mary Putnam Hayden of New York; Mrs John C. Phillips, Arthur H. Phillips of Wenham, and E. Sommier of Paris.

With Mrs J. Frederick Schenck at Valley Head, Lenox, are Mrs Charles S. Guthrie and Mrs T. Wayman Porter of New York.

At Curtis hotel, Lenox, are Miss Miriam Hopkins of New York and Mr and Mrs Henry B. Sawyer of Boston.

Mr and Mrs John C. Greenleaf of Hewlett, L. I., are arriving tomorrow to be weekend guests of Mrs Hayden Channing at The Ledge, Lenox. Her son William Ellery Sedgwick, has returned from an English school for a Lenox holiday.

With Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., at Belvoir terrace, Lenox, are Judge and Mrs John S. Salisbury and Hugh Hilman of Palm beach, and George R. Blodgett of Boston.

Florence Wadhams Buchannan of Hartford, who has an oil painting entitled "Hollyhocks" in the Stockbridge art exhibition at the Berkshire museum, is the former Miss Florence Wadhams of Pittsfield.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1937

Music Festival On Air Tonight

Opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight will be heard over WBZ and the Blue Network of NBC. The concert, from "Tanglewood," estate on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, will be heard from 8.30 to 10.30 o'clock. Other programs in the Festival series will also be broadcast. Olin Downes, New York music critic, will be the radio commentator for the programs.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL BEGINS TONIGHT

'Fair Weather' Is Weatherman's Report for Tonight's Concert—Chamber Music at Pittsfield Sunday

Stockbridge, Aug. 4—"Fair Thursday" was the report from the weatherman, submitted to the Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be held August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

But should the weatherman be wrong, there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the estate Thursday night. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details incidental to the concerts have been tended to. Advance ticket sales have been brisk, but there are plenty left.

Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky arrive tonight at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club in Lenox for the duration of the festival. Members of the orchestra are quartered in hotels, inns and rooming houses in several towns near Tanglewood.

A distinguished audience is assured for the opening concert. Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Willeke, Jacques Gordon, Marjorie Edwards, will be among the musicians present. Others in the audience will be Norman H. Davis, America's embassador-at-large, Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Adolf A. Berle, Jr.

Other prominent persons having reservations for the opening concerts include Mrs Jay Fassett, George Sokolsky, Philip Marshall Brown, Raymond Leslie Buell, Owen Johnson, Mrs William Penn Cresson, Mrs Daniel Chester French, Dr Herschel Walker, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett and Mrs John Barry Ryan.

Music at South Mountain

The South Mountain quartet with Gunnar Johansen at the piano will present its fifth chamber music concert at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Music at Pittsfield, Sunday afternoon at 4.

In the quartet are Willem Willeke, director and cellist; Kathleen Parlow, first violin; Edwin Ideler, second violin; Conrad Held, viola.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1937

FESTIVAL WILL OPEN TONIGHT

Today is the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, with concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Programs will be offered on Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

In the event of rain, there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the beautiful estate tonight. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details incidental to the concerts have been tended to. Advance ticket sales have been brisk, but there are plenty of seats left.

Last night the co-ordinating committee had its dress rehearsal for the reception of the crowd. On this committee are: George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, chairman; Lieut. John P. Sullivan and Sergt. Warner F. Eaton, of Northampton, traffic; Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings, Pitssfield, parking; Willard M. Sistaire, Pittsfield, ushers; Charles E. Williams, Pittsfield, transportation; Lester Roberts, Lenox, housing; George E. Judd, Boston, orchestra; Henry W. Dwight, Stockbridge, treasurer, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Stockbridge, president of the festival.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will stay at the Bershires Hunt and Country club in Lenox for the duration of the festival. Members of the orchestra are quartered in hotels, inns and rooming houses in several towns near Tanglewood.

A distinguished audience is assured for the opening concert. Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Willeke, Jacques Gordon, Marjorie Edwards will be among the musicians present. Others expected to be present will be Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Adolfe A. Berle, Jr.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

AUG [illegible] 1937

Koussevitzky Will Direct Berkshire Music Festival

Beethoven Music Features First of Two Symphonic Broadcasts Scheduled for This Evening

The first of the two complete concerts from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be on the air from 7:30 until 9:30 o'clock tonight over KDKA and the NBC-Blue network. The second will be carried by the same station from 7:30 until 9:45 p. m. Aug. 12.

Koussevitzky

For the opening program of the festival, now in its fourth season, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's third Lenore Overture, the Sixth, or Pastoral Symphony, and the dynamic Fifth Symphony. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be intermission commentator.

Other broadcasts tonight include:

7:00—Frederick Charles Adler will conduct the orchestra in the second of the new "CBS Concert" programs. (WKBN).

KDKA lists the new NBC "Gun Smoke Law" series by Wilbur Hall to be heard at this time for a half-hour each Friday night.

Rudy Vallee's guests will include Eddie Green, Negro comedian; Molly Picon, comedienne of the Yiddish theater, and Tim and Irene, radio team. Green will present his version of "Hamlet."

8:00—Major Bowes' broadcast will honor Tulsa, Okla. (WKBN).

The "Showboat" hour with featured entertainers will be heard over WTAM.

9:00—Constance Bennett will be interviewed, Pat O'Brien will sing, and James Stewart will play the accordion for the "Music Hall" hour over WTAM with Bob Burns as master of ceremonies.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD-STAR

AUG 5 - 1937

Boston Symphony Will Give Two-Hour Beethoven Concert

Koussevitzky to Conduct Orchestra in Program From Berkshire Festival Tonight Over WJZ—European Threat to U. S. Industry Topic

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in an all-Beethoven program in a ~~two-hour~~ broadcast over WJZ tonight, beginning at 8:30 o'clock. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra, playing in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will act as commentator.

Maurice Holland, international research authority and industrial engineer, will discuss "European Research Versus American Research," over WABC at 5:30 o'clock in the first of a series of three broadcasts arranged by the National Research Council on the general question, "New European Industrial Frontiers and How They May Affect American Industry."

Replacing Eddy Duchin, whose wife died this week, Dick Gasparre and his orchestra, which has just completed an engagement at a famed Hollywood nightspot, begins a series of broadcasts over WOR at 11:30 o'clock. The band will be heard several times weekly thereafter.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

Music Festival

The Berkshire Music Festival will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, tonight. Lovers of music will have an opportunity to attend six concerts in two weeks given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a delightful spot. The success of the Festival is assured. Persons who have attended in other years can be counted on to return and those who have not taken advantage of the opportunity to hear music under ideal conditions should do so. Tanglewood is a beautiful place and persons should make it a point to arrive early to get a view of Stockbridge Bowl and the mountains from in front of the house and also to go through the flower gardens.

There is unlimited parking space on the property and nobody should hesitate to attend, fearing there would be trouble in getting in or out of the place with an automobile.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

Social Briefs

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitsky, will be guest of honor at a luncheon to be given tomorrow noon by Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, vice-president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Association, at Wheatleigh, Lenox.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 5 [illegible]

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky, with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, as commentator, will be heard in a concert broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival over WEAN-WBZ at 8:30 p. m. An all-Beethoven program will be presented during this, the first of two special broadcasts from the Berkshire Festival. The second program, Aug. 12, also featuring the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky, will be devoted to the works of Richard Wagner.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN

AUG 5 - 1937

Berkshire Music Festival to Open

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 (INS) — Rhapsody in the Berkshires, the full complement of the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, tonight opens the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at the 200 acre estate "Tanglewood."

More than 5000 music lovers were expected to attend the opening concert, first of a series of six scheduled this week and next. A total of more than 30,000 were expected to attend the festival

---

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

AUG 5 - 1937

Local Residents Plan To Attend Music Festival

Will Hear First Berkshire Concert Tonight By Boston Symphony

Many Fairfield County and Westchester music lovers will be among the audience of 4,500 expected tonight at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., for the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the fourth Berkshire Music Festival. Other concerts will be given Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who will conduct, is at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox, with Mrs. Koussevitsky.

Favorable weather was promised tonight, but should the weatherman be wrong, there is ample accommodation for the thousands of music lovers who will converge on the beautiful estate. A huge canvas has been erected, benches installed, parking areas marked off and many other details attended to.

Last night the co-ordinating committee had its dress rehearsal for the reception of the crowd. On this committee are: George W. Edman of Pittsfield, chairman; Lieut. John P. Sullivan and Sergt. Warner F. Eaton of Northampton, traffic; Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings, Pittsfield, parking; Willard M. Sistaire, Pittsfield, ushers; Charles E. Williams, Pittsfield, transportation; Lester Roberts, Lenox, housing; George E. Judd, Boston, the orchestra; Henry W. Dwight, Stockbridge, treasurer; and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Stockbridge, president of the Festival.

Among Those Present

A distinguished audience is assured for the opening concert. Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Willeke, Jacques Gordon, Marjorie Edwards, will be among the musicians present. Others in the audience will be Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Adolf A. Berle, Jr.

Other prominent persons having reservations for the opening concerts include Mrs. Jay Fassett, George Sokolsky, Philip Marshal Brown, Raymond Leslie Buell, Owen Johnson, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. Daniel Chester French, Dr. Herschel Walker, Miss Mabel Choate and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. William D. Stevens of Greenwich, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Bradley, Miss Cornelia M. Bradley of New Haven, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Schoonmaker of Montclair, N. J., Mr. and Mrs. Sanford Stoddard of Fairfield, Conn.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson had a dinner party last night at Ingleside, Stockbridge, for their week-end guests, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes. Mr. Downes is to address the Rotary Club at Wendell Hotel Pittsfield, today.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 5 - 1937

5000 TO ATTEND BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE—More than 5000 music lovers from half the states in the Union are expected to gather tonight at historic "Tanglewood" for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival — an "American Salzburg."

The concert will be the first of six given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 wrote his famed "Tanglewood Tales."

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 5 - 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL UNDER WAY TODAY

Koussevitzky Hopes to Develop into "American Salzburg" at Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4 (P)—The Berkshire symphonic festival, which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg," will open with an all-Beethoven program tomorrow at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks—all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned last week from Europe to conduct here, finished rehearsals in Boston today. The opening program will comprise Beethoven's Leonore overture No. 3 and his fifth and sixth symphonies. Other concerts will be held Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and the following Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Koussevitzky said he hoped the festival would be able to undertake a six to eight weeks' program next year, "including operas, oratorios, Greek tragedies, as well as symphonic music."

"If all goes well, too," Dr. Koussevitzky added, "I hope to found an academy to train young American conductors.

"All over Europe I heard favorable comment about the Berkshire festival, and there seems no doubt but that it will become world-wide in importance in a few years."

In addition to the symphony concerts, this year's festival will feature dance recitals by Ted Shawn and his group; chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, the 29th annual Stockbridge art exhibition, and dramatic performances by the summer company at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 5 - 1937

THE OWEN JOHNSONS ENTERTAIN ...

Berkshire summer residents are having many house guests and are giving numerous parties during the music festival. Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson gave a party last night at Ingleside in Stockbridge for Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes of New York.

The Johnsons are greatly interested in the festival because back in 1934 Mrs. Johnson was one of the leaders who took the first steps toward establishment of this musical center by sponsoring a symphonic festival on the old Dan Hanna farm in Stockbridge. Seven thousand persons came to hear concerts by the New York Philharmonic orchestra. The next year another festival resulted in a deficit but last year the hopes of this small group found enthusiasm and co-operation in the person of Dr. Koussevitzky.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 5 - 1937

Music lovers who have felt that this was going to be an evening of frustrated longings because they counld't go over to Lenox for the Boston Symphony concert find now that they can have the best of it. All they need do is sit by their radios and hear the Boston Symphony play Beethoven as only Serge Kousseivietzky's men can do it.

RACINE, WIS.
JOURNAL-TIMES

AUG 5 - 1937

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — The conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, will open the fourth ~~annual~~ Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight with an all-Beethoven program. The Boston symphony will present six concerts.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.
Morning News Press

AUG 5 - 1937

SYMPHONY AT BERKSHIRE TO BE BROADCAST

Vallee Has Comedians; Hertz Programs Ravel; Sponsor Burns Guest

Two complete concerts from the nation's finest summer festival of orchestra music, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be heard in programs over the National Broadcasting company. The first, an all-Beethoven program, will be broadcast Thursday, August 5, from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., PST, over the NBC-Blue network. The second program will be broadcast over the same network on August 12 from 4:30 to 6:45 p.m., PST.

For the opening program of the festival, now in its fourth season, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's third Leonore Overture, the Sixth, or Pastoral, Symphony, and the dynamic Fifth Symphony. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be intermission commentator.

* * *

Film Stars Appear

The sponsor, a man about whom the radio audience hears a great deal but seldom meets in person, will join Pat O'Brien and Constance Bennett as guest of Bob Burns on the Music Hall, from 6 to 7 p.m., PST, over an NBC-Red network.

* * *

Research Series

Maurice Holland will be the first of three speakers to be heard over the Columbia network on successive Thursdays, starting today, in a series arranged by the National Research council under the general title of "New European Industrial Frontiers, and How They May Affect American Industry." The talks will be given by members of the council recently returned from European investigations, and each will be heard from 1:30 to 1:45 p.m., PST.

* * *

Vaudeville Team

The comedy mood again features Rudy Vallee's hour, when Molly Picon, Tim and Irene, and Eddie Green are the headlined guest stars.

Molly Picon is the most famous comedienne in the Yiddish theater.

Tim and Irene, the radio comedy team, were scheduled for the show last week but postponed until the current Thursday.

* * *

Varied Program

Whimsical musical humor marks Maurice Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite," which will be a high spot in the Symphony hour concert to be conducted by Alfred Hertz at 8:15 p.m., PST, over a Pacific coast NBC-Red network.

The program for this broadcast opens with the "Phedre" overture, the work of another French musician, Jules Massenet, and continues with Franz Schubert's masterpiece, the "Unfinished Symphony," both movements of which will be played during the hour. Hertz also will conduct the Mendelssohn Scherzo from his incidental music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and Percy Grainger's ever-popular "Molly on the Shore."

* * *

Jupiter Subject

"The Giant Planet Jupiter" is the topic of Henry M. Hyde's talk over a Pacific coast NBC-Red network at 9:15 p.m., PST. Speaking from San Francisco, the well-known amateur astronomer will continue his series of talks on stars and planets visible to the naked eye, and their movements.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

110

The Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, opening its fourth annual series of concerts tonight, finds itself at perhaps the most crucial point in its career. While the response and attendance tonight will not give the whole answer, as the series this year will include six concerts spread out over two week-ends rather than the one week-end stand of the first three years, nonetheless, it will be significant. Unfortunately with the high cost of first rank symphony music, continual packed houses, while connoting an artistic triumph, mean only a small margin of profit, while anything less than smash successes mean dismal deficits. And established symphony orchestras in large cities operating on a many week schedule can only operate with musical philanthropists in the background making up the deficits.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky playing at the Festival last year for the first time, the affair was a glowing success on a three concert basis. Capacity audiences of 5000 people listened to each concert and when the balance sheet was issued, it presented the wholly unusual spectacle of a first rank symphonic event not only paying its way but yielding a slight profit. The first three years had resulted in slight deficits. And so it was the occasion for musical hosannas issuing up from the Berkshire Hills, while some of the more impulsive believed, verily, that the artistic millenium was at hand.

Dr. Koussevitzky, himself, was ecstatic over the possibilities and being a man of boundless enthusiasms and visions immediately suggested that a tremendous pavilion be erected and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with the Boston Symphony, project itself on a national, even an international scale with expanded and varied programs similar in appeal and brilliance to the great summer musical festivals of Europe.

More practical considerations had to prevail, however, and Dr. Koussevitzky was persuaded to give the Festival another trial "under canvass" but with a doubled number of concerts spread out over two week-ends. Such procedure will answer several questions. Will Berkshire audiences, which, of necessity, must form the backlog of the Festival's financial success, support the Festival on an expanded basis? How much of the success of the first year was dependent on the novelty of the enterprise — an orchestra of world eminence appearing for the first time outside the formal confines of large city symphony auditoriums of acoustical excellence? Will the success of the first year and the widespread publicity which it received result in an increased influx of music-lovers from outside the immediate surroundings to make up for defections in the ranks of Berkshire concert-goers, who, through inclination or inability, will not support the Festival as they had the year before? Will an increased number of concerts and attractions in a relatively sparsely populated resort center, in effect, call into play in an artistic endeavor, even as it operates in more prosaic fields, the law of diminishing returns? More specifically, are violin strings any different from the farmer, the wheat fields and the tractor of the elementary economics course?

These are but a few, albeit, important questions which will be answered in the next ten days. Other criteria of success and failure suggest themselves, not the most satanic being the weather. Or one might even project the broad question of why the Berkshire Symphonic Festival should be expected to pay for itself and be the exception to the rule that first-class music must be subsidized as it is, in this country, by private donation or, in Europe, by the state treasury? And the answer to this is, of course, whether it would be possible for the Festival to attain substantial private support to meet the usual deficits of a comprehensive musical program.

Watching the answers to these questions manifest themselves will be intensely interesting within the next ten days. Of course, Berkshire music lovers can only hope and pray that this series will be even more brilliant in its success than last year's and that the truth of the inspired sentence in the Festival brochure, "Here in the Berkshires a great Festival is building!" may be fully justified. At any rate, in the next fortnight concert-goers in the Berkshires have ahead of them a rich musical experience under the baton of the distinguished Dr. Koussevitzky. Nor must those who attend fail to remember the tireless work and Herculean tasks which the board of trustees and the local workers of the Festival have undertaken and accomplished that this great experiment has come to pass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

Serge Koussevitzky

Olin Downes Declares "Sky's the Limit" for Berkshire's Festival

Music Critic of New York Times Says Symphonic Event Holds Promise of Being the First Music Festival of International Importance to America—Gives Lecture at Museum, Talks to Rotarians

Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, varied between a discussion of Beethoven's music to a prediction that "the sky's the limit" for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in two talks given within two hours of each other this morning.

After discussing the three great Beethoven works which will open the Festival series tonight before 150 music lovers at the Berkshire Museum, Mr. Downes went across the street to the Hotel Wendell, where he told the Rotary Club that the Berkshire musical event holds promise of being "the first music festival of international importance in America."

"If the citizens of this neighborhood," he said, "decide in favor, and things are not done too rapidly, the sky's the limit. You will have, among your assets, one of the most sound, idealistic and, I might say, protective institutions possible. America is ripe for it."

Cites Reasons

Mr. Downes justified his belief that the Berkshire festival is of tremendous potential significance on two bases. The first basis, a positive one, is the unprecedented growth in public interest in music as the result of the phonograph and the radio. These two factors, he feels, have made good music familiar to millions of people and, he quoted, "good music is familiar music." The negative causes for the predicted creation of American music centers is to be found in the decadence of European music because of political chaos, and the lowering of standards in the established American festivals. Mr. Downes believes the latter need "new blood and new storm and in the vesper hours after the sky has cleared.

Continued on Second Page

In the symphony Mr. Downes pointed out the composer's musical recording of the soft monotony of nature, keeping the reiteration somnolent and restful without being tiresome. The storm Mr. Downes described as "one of the best storms in music.'

Of the 6th symphony, less is known about its sources as concerned with Beethoven's life than any other of his works, Mr. Downes said, but is "one of his most significant utterances." In it is found "range and furious protests," which appears in the opening motif and is carried throughout the symphony with varying emphasis. The composer, in a marginal note wrote "Thus knocks Fate on the door," and the chaotic and stirring progress of the work seems to bear this sentence out as the fundamental theme.

Mr. Downes was introduced by Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith Festival president. The Pittsfield Junior League is sponsoring the series of lectures, the second of which will be held tomorrow morning at 11.

This belongs to article on back of clipping.

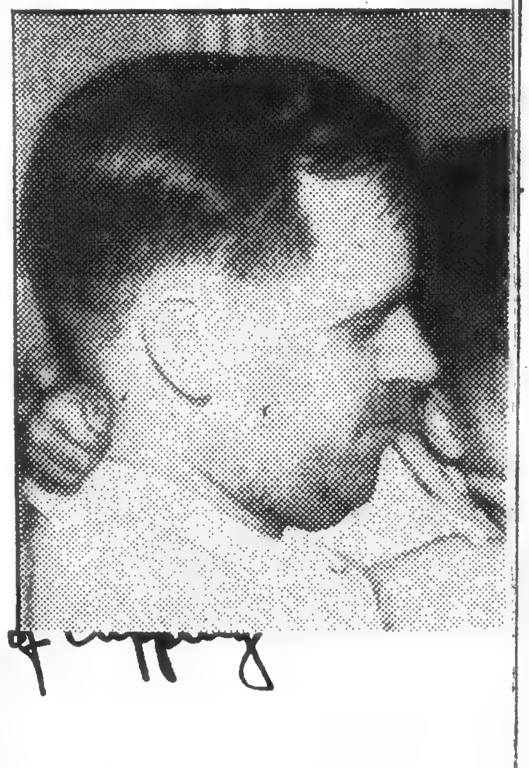
Program

The all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight will be as follows:
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral."
Symphony No. 5.

The program Saturday night at 8.30 will be:
Symphony in E flat . Mozart
Two movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra .... Hill
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe" .... Ravel
Symphony No. 4 . Tckaikovsky

Sunday afternoon at 4.30 the program will be:
Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" .... Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony, Schubert
Suit from "L'Oiseau de Feu" .... Stravinsky
Symphony in D Minor, Franck

Orphanage



of clipping

ORCHESTRA OF 100 MEMBERS READY TO PLAY

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Leads Musicians in Rehearsal

GROUNDS LIGHTED AT TANGLEWOOD

Music Lovers From Wide Area Pour Into Berkshires

From Tanglewood, located between Lenox and Stockbridge, there came this afternoon the strains of Beethoven's overture to "Leonore," a melodrama of what is in store for the thousands of music lovers who will gather tonight at 8.30 o'clock for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 100 men were in rehearsal on the platform at the west end of the huge canopy pitched north of the Tanglewood gardens.

Koussevitzky Pleased

Beaming with pleasure, Dr. Koussevitzky interrupted frequently to express his delight with the surroundings, with all the painstaking work that has been done for months in preparation for the concerts. The orchestra members, too, were pleased to be back, this year, for the first time at a permanent summer home, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky motored from Boston last night, and the conductor came immediately to Tanglewood to watch the light rehearsal. The evening was one to dream about, and, with inimitable gestures, Dr. Koussevitzky dreamed out loud, gazing with wonder and delight at the trees, the stars, the canopy, the gardens and all of the other beautiful things to be found at Tanglewood.

Grounds Lighted

The grounds were brilliantly lighted last night with 30 or more floodlights, with hundreds of electric lights in and outside the canopy. Several floodlights focused on the formal gardens made this particular spot a fairyland.

Public interest outside of Berkshire never has been so aroused over a Berkshire event. Hundreds of visitors began arriving this noon to fill hotels in Stockbridge, Lenox and Great Barrington. Other visitors registered in Pittsfield, Dalton, Richmond, Sheffield, Egremont, Lee and near by towns. A party of three from Washington drove into Tanglewood yesterday afternoon to look over parking arrangements for tonight. They are only one group in many here for the occasion. Practically every state in the Union and Canada will be represented tonight.

Wires Installed

For the benefit of the newspaper and magazine writers, The Festival management has arranged for a room at Tanglewood equipped with typewriters. It has also arranged with Western Union for four special wires right to the house for sending newspaper copy and for the acommodation of the public. Fifty newspapers and magazines will be represented tonight.

The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington has a tent 60 by 30 feet for its refreshment concession. Sandwiches, soft drinks and cigarettes will be on sale before and after the concerts and at intermissions. The intermissions will be of 25 minutes duration.

Books Available

On the porch of the house, the Hampshire Book Shop and the Music House of Northampton will be located with books on music, recordings of music to be played at the Festival and scores. Yankee magazine which contributed its back cover to the Festival will also have a small booth on the porch.

The concert tonight will start promptly at 8.30.

NEW BEDF
MERC

AU

Music F
To O

Beethoven
Given in Be Koussevitz

STOCKBRID
The Berkshire which Conduct
zky of the Bo chestra hopes
American Salzb
an all-Beethove
at Tanglewoo
thorne's former
Six concerts
cians are sche
ing two weeks
the Berkshire
thorne wrote
wood tales. Th
the festival by of Boston as a
home.
Dr. Koussev
last week fror
here, finished
today. The o comprise Beeth
ture No. 3 and Symphonies. G held Saturday afternoon, and day, Saturday
Dr. Kousse
the festival w
take a six to next year, "
torics, Greek
symphonic m
"If all goes sevitzky adde academy to conductors.
"All over
able commen
Festival, and but that it w in importanc
In addition certs, this ye ture dance
and his grou
certs in Pitt
Stockbridge dramatic per mer compa
Playhouse in

T
NE
AU

Bos
In

WITH the air it seem that th
WSPD because from 7:
will be the two are list that, ex
Lenore
phony.

A Ber

Tw of orch
Kousse
in excl first, a
p. m. networ be bro work o
p. m.
For festival
Dr. Ko thoven'
the Si
and th
Olin D
New Y mission progra

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

110

The Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, opening its fourth annual series of concerts tonight, finds itself at perhaps the most crucial point in its career. While the response and attendance tonight will not give the whole answer, as the series this year will include six concerts spread out over two week-ends rather than the one week-end stand of the first three years, nonetheless, it will be significant. Unfortunately with the high cost of first rank symphony music, continual packed houses, while connoting an artistic triumph, mean only a small margin of profit, while anything less than smash successes mean dismal deficits. And established symphony orchestras in large cities operating on a many week schedule can only operate with musical philanthropists in the background making up the deficits.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky playing at the Festival last year for the first time, the affair was a glowing success on a three concert basis. Capacity audiences of 5000 people listened to each concert and when the balance sheet was issued, it presented the wholly unusual spectacle of a first rank symphonic event not only paying its way but yielding a slight profit. The first three years had resulted in slight deficits. And so it was the occasion for musical hosannas issuing up from the Berkshire Hills, while some of the more impulsive believed, verily, that the artistic millenium was at hand.

Dr. Koussevitzky, himself, was ecstatic over the possibilities and being a man of boundless enthusiasms and visions immediately suggested that a tremendous pavilion be erected and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with the Boston Symphony, project itself on a national, even an international scale with expanded and varied programs similar in appeal and brilliance to the great summer musical festivals of Europe.

More practical considerations had to prevail, however, and Dr. Koussevitzky was persuaded to give the Festival another trial "under canvass" but with a doubled number of concerts spread out over two week-ends. Such procedure will answer several questions. Will Berkshire audiences, which, of necessity, must form the backlog of the Festival's financial success, support the Festival on an expanded basis? How much of the success of the first year was dependent on the novelty of the enterprise — an orchestra of world eminence appearing for the first time outside the formal confines of large city symphony auditoriums of acoustical excellence? Will the success of the first year and the widespread publicity which it received result in an increased influx of music-lovers from outside the immediate surroundings to make up for defections in the ranks of Berkshire concert-goers, who, through inclination or inability, will not support the Festival as they had the year before? Will an increased number of concerts and attractions in a relatively sparsely populated resort center, in effect, call into play in an artistic endeavor, even as it operates in more prosaic fields, the law of diminishing returns? More specifically, are violin strings any different from the farmer, the wheat fields and the tractor of the elementary economics course?

These are but a few, albeit, important questions which will be answered in the next ten days. Other criteria of success and failure suggest themselves, not the most satanic being the weather. Or one might even project the broad question of why the Berkshire Symphonic Festival should be expected to pay for itself and be the exception to the rule that first-class music must be subsidized as it is, in this country, by private donation or, in Europe, by the state treasury? And the answer to this is, of course, whether it would be possible for the Festival to attain substantial private support to meet the usual deficits of a comprehensive musical program.

Watching the answers to these questions manifest themselves will be intensely interesting within the next ten days. Of course, Berkshire music lovers can only hope and pray that this series will be even more brilliant in its success than last year's and that the truth of the inspired sentence in the Festival brochure, "Here in the Berkshires a great Festival is building!" may be fully justified. At any rate, in the next fortnight concert-goers in the Berkshires have ahead of them a rich musical experience under the baton of the distinguished Dr. Koussevitzky. Nor must those who attend fail to remember the tireless work and Herculean tasks which the board of trustees and the local workers of the Festival have undertaken and accomplished that this great experiment has come to pass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1937

Serge Koussevitzky

Olin Downes Declares "Sky's the Limit" for Berkshire's Festival

Music Critic of New York Times Says Symphonic Event Holds Promise of Being the First Music Festival of International Importance to America—Gives Lecture at Museum, Talks to Rotarians

Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, varied between a discussion of Beethoven's music to a prediction that "the sky's the limit" for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in two talks given within two hours of each other this morning.

After discussing the three great Beethoven works which will open the Festival series tonight before 150 music lovers at the Berkshire Museum, Mr. Downes went across the street to the Hotel Wendell, where he told the Rotary Club that the Berkshire musical event holds promise of being "the first music festival of international importance in America."

OLIN DOWNES DISCUSSES GREAT BEETHOVEN WORK

Continued From First Page

standards of performance."

First in America

Because of these factors, plus the "beauty of the region, the high ideals of the project and the quality of the people," the Berkshire Symphonic Festival can become he said, "the first festival in America of international importance."

Praises Koussevitzky

Mr. Downes considers the Boston Symphony one of the greatest in the world and Conductor Serge

cont. on back of clipping of American music centers is to be found in the decadence of European music because of political chaos, and the lowering of standards in the established American festivals. Mr. Downes believes the latter need "new blood and new

Continued on Second Page

Program

The all-Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight will be as follows:
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral."
Symphony No. 5.

The program Saturday night at 8.30 will be:
Symphony in E flat . Mozart
Two movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra .... Hill
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe" .... Ravel
Symphony No. 4 . Tckaikovsky

Sunday afternoon at 4.30 the program will be:
Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" .... Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony, Schubert
Suit from "L'Oiseau de Feu" .... Stravinsky
Symphony in D Minor, Franck

---

storm and in the vesper hours after the sky has cleared.

In the symphony Mr. Downes pointed out the composer's musical recording of the soft monotony of nature, keeping the reiteration somnolent and restful without being tiresome. The storm Mr. Downes described as "one of the best storms in music."

Of the 6th symphony, less is known about its sources as concerned with Beethoven's life than any other of his works, Mr. Downes said, but is "one of his most significant utterances." In it is found "range and furious protests," which appears in the opening motif and is carried throughout the symphony with varying emphasis. The composer, in a marginal note wrote "Thus knocks Fate on the door," and the chaotic and stirring progress of the work seems to bear this sentence out as the fundamental theme.

Mr. Downes was introduced by Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith Festival president. The Pittsfield Junior League is sponsoring the series of lectures, the second of which will be held tomorrow morning at 11.

This belongs to article on back of clipping

ORCHESTRA OF 100 MEMBERS READY TO PLAY

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Leads Musicians in Rehearsal

GROUNDS LIGHTED AT TANGLEWOOD

Music Lovers From Wide Area Pour Into Berkshires

From Tanglewood, located between Lenox and Stockbridge, there came this afternoon the strains of Beethoven's overture to "Leonore," a melodrama of what is in store for the thousands of music lovers who will gather tonight at 8.30 o'clock for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 100 men were in rehearsal on the platform at the west end of the huge canopy pitched north of the Tanglewood gardens.

Koussevitzky Pleased

Beaming with pleasure, Dr. Koussevitzky interrupted frequently to express his delight with the surroundings, with all the painstaking work that has been done for months in preparation for the concerts. The orchestra members, too, were pleased to be back, this year, for the first time at a permanent summer home, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky motored from Boston last night, and the conductor came immediately to Tanglewood to watch the light rehearsal. The evening was one to dream about, and, with inimitable gestures, Dr. Koussevitzky dreamed out loud, gazing with wonder and delight at the trees, the stars, the canopy, the gardens and all of the other beautiful things to be found at Tanglewood.

Grounds Lighted

The grounds were brilliantly lighted last night with 30 or more floodlights, with hundreds of electric lights in and outside the canopy. Several floodlights focused on the formal gardens made this particular spot a fairyland.

Public interest outside of Berkshire never has been so aroused over a Berkshire event. Hundreds of visitors began arriving this noon to fill hotels in Stockbridge, Lenox and Great Barrington. Other visitors registered in Pittsfield, Dalton, Richmond, Sheffield, Egremont, Lee and near by towns. A party of three from Washington drove into Tanglewood yesterday afternoon to look over parking arrangements for tonight. They are only one group in many here for the occasion. Practically every state in the Union and Canada will be represented tonight.

Wires Installed

For the benefit of the newspaper and magazine writers, The Festival management has arranged for a room at Tanglewood equipped with typewriters. It has also arranged with Western Union for four special wires right to the house for sending newspaper copy and for the acommodation of the public. Fifty newspapers and magazines will be represented tonight.

The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington has a tent 60 by 30 feet for its refreshment concession. Sandwiches, soft drinks and cigarettes will be on sale before and after the concerts and at intermissions. The intermissions will be of 25 minutes duration.

Books Available

On the porch of the house, the Hampshire Book Shop and the Music House of Northampton will be located with books on music, recordings of music to be played at the Festival and scores. Yankee magazine which contributed its back cover to the Festival will also have a small booth on the porch.

The concert tonight will start promptly at 8.30.

NEW BEDF
MERC
AU

Music F
To O

Beethoven
Given in Be Koussevitz

STOCKBRID
The Berkshire
which Conduct zky of the B
chestra hopes
American Salz
an all-Beethove
at Tanglewoo
thorne's former Six concerts
cians are sched
ing two weeks
the Berkshire
thorne wrote
wood tales. Th
the festival by of Boston as a
home.
Dr. Koussev
last week fro
here, finished
today. The o comprise Beeth
ture No. 3 and Symphonies. C
held Saturday afternoon, and day, Saturday
Dr. Koussev
the festival w
take a six to next year, "
torics, Greek
symphonic m
"If all goes sevitzky adde academy to conductors.
"All over
able commen
Festival, and but that it w in importanc
In addition certs, this ye
ture dance
and his grou
certs in Pitt
Stockbridge dramatic per mer compa
Playhouse in

NE
AU

Bos
In

WITH the air it seems that th
WSPD because from 7:3
will be the two are liste that, ex
Lenore
phony.

Ber

Two of orch
Koussev
in excl first, a
p. m. network
be bro
work o
p. m.
For t festival
Dr. Ko thoven's
the Si
and th
Olin D
New Y mission program

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 5 - 1937

Music Festival To Open Today

Beethoven Program to Be Given in Berkshires Under Koussevitzky's Direction

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4 (AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra hopes to develop into "an American Salzburg," will open with an all-Beethoven program tomorrow at Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne's former estate.

Six concerts by the Boston musicians are scheduled during the coming two weeks—all under canvas on the Berkshire knoll where Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood tales. The estate was given to the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent Summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned last week from Europe to conduct here finished rehearsals in Boston today. The opening program will comprise Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and his Fifth and Sixth Symphonies. Other concerts will be held Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and the following Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Koussevitzky said he hoped the festival would be able to undertake a six to eight weeks program next year, "including operas, oratorios, Greek tragedies, as well as symphonic music."

"If all goes well, too," Dr. Koussevitzky added, "I hope to found an academy to train young American conductors.

All over Europe I heard favorable comment about the Berkshire Festival, and there seems no doubt but that it will become world-wide in importance in a few years."

In addition to the sypmhony concerts, this year's festival will feature dance recitals by Ted Shawn and his group; chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, the 29th annual Stockbridge art exhibition, and dramatic performances by the Summer company at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1937

RADIO TODAY

Two Complete Programs From Symphonic Festival

First Concert Will Be Broadcast by Boston Orchestra Under Koussevitzky Tonight—Opera From Salzburg—'Gun-Smoke Law'—Two New Compositions—National Research Council—Variety Shows

Two complete concerts from the Berkshire Symphonic festival with Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra will be heard in exclusive NBC programs tonight and next Thursday night. Tonight's program, devoted entirely to the works of Beethoven, will be heard between 8.30 and 10.30 over WBZa and will include the third "Leonore" overture, and the Fifth and Sixth symphonies. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be intermission commentator.

With Arturo Toscanini as conductor, a portion of Wagner's opera "Die Meistersinger" will be heard at 2.30 this afternoon over WTIC. The cast for the broadcast will be composed principally of outstanding European interpreters of Wagnerian opera. Kerstin Thorborg, familiar to American audiences as one of the leading contraltos of the Metropolitan opera, will be heard in the role of Magdalena.

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 6 -

Music Festival In Massachusetts

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5. (U.P.)—More than 5,000 music-lovers gathered under the huge tent at historic "Tanglewood" for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg."

Fair skies prevailed as the concert, first of six given by the Boston symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened with an all-Beethoven program on the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" in 1850.

The orchestra played from the shelter of a new shell. First number was the Leonore Overture, No. 3, at the close of which the members rose to receive the thunderous applause of the audience, representing more than half the states in the Union.

FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES THURSDAY

The News of the World of Music

Aug 7 + Post

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

TIME was when the arrival of Dr. Koussevitzky from Europe was scheduled for some time between the middle and the last of September. Now, however, the Berkshire Festival returns the conductor to us in mid-summer. Last Tuesday, to be specific, the conductor arrived at New York aboard what is said to be his favorite liner, the Ile de France, and from thence he went immediately to the Berkshires to begin rehearsals for the festival which opens on Thursday evening. While in the Berkshires, we are informed, the conductor and his entourage and certain members of the Symphony Orchestra's board of trustees will make their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox.

This will be the fourth annual festival and the second in which the Symphony Orchestra has participated. As already announced in these columns the new and permanent home of the festival will be Tanglewood, near Lenox, an estate sacred to the memory of Nathaniel Hawthorne and generously donated to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline. By next year, no doubt, the contemplated wooden building will have been erected, to the great advantage of all concerned. This year, as last, the orchestra will play in the wooden shell and the audience will be protected by a tent large enough to cover 5000 persons. There will, therefore, be no postponement on account of rain.

Last year there were three concerts; this year there will be six. Again the programmes will be drawn from the regular repertory of the orchestra, although to lend the appropriate festive note, three of the impending programmes will be of the one-composer variety. That for the opening concert, for example, features the music of Beethoven and includes the Third Overture to "Leonore" and the Fifth and Sixth Symphonies. The concert for the following Thursday evening, the fourth of the series, will run to the music of Wagner. In detail the programme includes the Overture or Prelude, as the case may be, to "Rienzi," "Parsifal" and "Tannhauser," the "Siegfried Idyl," the Prelude and "Love Death" from "Tristan," the "Ride of Valkyries" and the "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried." The final concert, that of Sunday afternoon, Aug. 15, will be devoted to Brahms, from whose works Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the "Academic Festival" Overture and the First and Third Symphonies.

Decidedly miscellaneous are the programmes for the three remaining concerts: those of Saturday evening, Aug. 7; Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8. and Saturday evening, Aug. 14. The first of these traverses, Mozart's Symphony in E-flat, two movements from Edward Burlingham Hill's Sinfonietta for Strings, the Second Suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" and the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. The list selected for the first Sunday matinee begins with Schubert (the ballet music from "Rosamunde" and the "Unfinished" Symphony), continues with Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite and concludes with the Symphony of Franck. Finally, the concert of Saturday evening, Aug. 14, will offer a Symphony in G Major of Haydn, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherezade."

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OFFERS RADIO TREAT

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Be Heard Today Over N.B.C. at 4:30 p.m.

BY CARROLL NYE

A musical feast is to be served KECA dialers at 4:30 p.m., when the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is aired over N.B.C.

Compositions to be interpreted are Beethoven's third "Lenore" overture, the Sixth, or Pastoral, Symphony, and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

The broadcast will last two hours, and Olin Downs will be intermission commentator.

SALZBURG FESTIVAL

Austria's famous Salzburg Festival is to be the scene of Arturo Toscanini's presentation of two acts of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," the second act of which will be broadcast over N.B.C. and KFI at 10 a.m.

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS-BEE

AUG 5 - 1937

Boston Symphony In 2-Hour Concert

Windsor, Detroit Stations Carrying First, WSPD Second Hour of Broadcast; 'Canada Welcome' Interesting

By MARIE COCHRAN

WITH ONE OF THE world's finest symphony orchestras on the air in a two-hour concert tonight—from 7:30 to 9:30—it seems a good idea to inform Toledo symphony enthusiasts that they can hear the concert easily despite the fact that WSPD will carry only the second hour of the broadcast, because of a transcribed program and "The Green Hornet" from 7:30 to 8:30. The first hour of the program, beginning at 7:30, will be carried by both CRCW in Windsor, and WXYZ, Detroit. Of the two, CRCW at 600 kilocycles is heard more clearly in Toledo. Both are listed on this page today under "Other Stations." . . . And that's that, except that program will be all-Beethoven, selections being the Lenore Overture, the Sixth or Pastoral Symphony, and the Fifth Symphony. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1937

Good Radio Music

By JAMES THRASHER

The greatest potential American "threat" to European summer music prestige is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its fourth season. Boston's excellent symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the helm, is making its second annual appearance at the festival, and may be heard in a two-hour broadcast beginning at 6:30 o'clock tonight on the NBC-Blue network.

An all-Bethoven program has been chosen for tonight's opening concert. The "Leonore" No. 3 Overture, and the Fifth and Sixth Symphonies will be heard. Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, will be the intermission commentator.

It goes without saying that here is one of the summer's most promising programs; music and performance that can be depended upon for an evening of rich entertainment.

The overture, leagues ahead of the stylized overtures of Beethoven's contemporaries, offers a dramatic symphonic synthesis of the composer's one opera, "Fidelio." The Sixth, or "Pastoral" Symphony will be heard next, since any but the Ninth Symphony would come as an anticlimax after the mighty Fifth

---

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD

AUG

5,000 Music Lovers Open U. S. Salzburg

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5 (U.P.).—More than 5,000 music-lovers tonight gathered under the huge tent at historic Tanglewood for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg." The concert, first of six given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened with an all-Beethoven program on the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" in 1850.

DULUTH, MINN.
HERALD

AUG 5 - 1937

Berkshire Festival Gives Beethoven-Only Program

Two complete concerts from the nation's finest summer festival of orchestral music, the Berkshire Symphonic festival, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be heard in exclusive programs over National Broadcasting Co. networks. The first, an all-Beethoven program, will be broadcast from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. tonight over the NBC-Blue network. The second program will be broadcast over the same network on Aug. 12, from 6:30 to 8:45 p. m.

For the opening program of the festival, now in its fourth season, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Third Leonore overture, the Sixth, or Pastoral, symphony, and the dynamic Fifth symphony. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be intermission commentator for the NBC programs.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 6 - 1937

Mrs. William S. Nichols of Barrington and her sister, Miss Laura E. Bowers of Scotland, Conn., are at Stockbridge, Mass., for the Music Festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD

AUG

* * *

Mrs. James R. Mann has closed her apartment at 2400 Sixteenth St., and is at Stockbridge, Mass., for the remainder of the season. A lover of music, Mrs. Mann is attending the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra being given this week at the annual Berkshire music festival.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 6 - 1937

OVER 5000 ATTEND BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE—More than 5000 music lovers gathered under a huge tent at historic "Tanglewood" last night for the opening of the fourth annual Birkshire Symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg."

The concert was the first of six by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Scene was the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" in 1850.

Farmers Enjoy Third Leonora in Berkshires

Trans

Famous Trumpet Calls Sound Better Out of Doors

Aug 6/37

By Redfern Mason

SPECIAL TO THE TRANSCRIPT

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6—Geographically speaking, Stockbridge, scene of the current Berkshire music festival, is in western Massachusetts; spiritually it is allied closely to Kendal in the English lake country, the town beloved of Wordsworth and John Ruskin, while socially it is a suburb of Crawford. In other words, it is an entirely adorable little place, where time ambles along and folk can indulge illusions and youth see visions.

We woke up in a chintzy little room, such as you have seen in Barrie's "Quality Street," with glimpses of wide green lawns and trees with leaves of a definiteness that would have delighted the eyes of the pre-Raphaelites. Through the window I see a church, with the door open, although it is Friday, and my fancy pictures pious Episcopalians attending divine service.

We are guests of a lady who used to live on a farm, a quiet typical New Englander, who wondered aloud whether last night's concert would be attended by the folk who gain their livelihood from Mother Earth, or whether it would be thronged with tourists. "You see, farmers have to work so hard at this time of the year, and they must be up by cockcrow in the morning. That hardly makes them eager for concerts which end at half-past ten at night, does it?"

Concerts Broadcast

So I scanned last night's audience curiously. For your tourist is usually a city person on vacation, and, if I understand the objects of the sponsors of the festival, it is to provide the best music in the world for aesthetically starved country folk. Still, as my hostess reminded me, they would be able to hear the concert over the radio, and, of course, appetite comes from what it feeds upon.

The stage, driven by an eager-eyed young Irishman from Cork, who wants to see all Ireland united under Irish rule, takes us to Pittsfield. There we listen to Olin Downes, who tells the audience what to look for in the three Beethoven numbers which constituted the evening's program. They were the Leonora Overture, No. 3; the C minor and the "Pastoral" Symphonies. Mr. Downes knows the lore of this music about as well as it can be known. Even more important, he can play it in such a way as to bring out the emotion which makes it Beethoven "pure and undefiled." Downes is an unashamed enthusiast; he has no share in that latter-day iconoclasm which affects to make allowance for the great master, but gladly hails him as a world seer, a prophet in terms of music, a patriot and a lover of liberty.

After the Downes lecture, I visited the Pittsfield Public Library, just to inquire whether the city fathers provide citizens and the stranger within the gate with such books and scores as people who attend the festival would like to consult. The result is hardly encouraging; there are piano versions of the Beethoven symphonies, but apparently not so much as a single page of the symphonic music of Brahms. Surely, if the library committee is hard pressed for funds, the music lovers of Pittsfield might at least tax themselves a dollar apiece in order to provide essential scores. In books about the composers, I gladly admit, the Pittsfielders are not so badly off. That is a beginning anyhow.

Regular Cloudburst

In the middle of the afternoon came a surprise, such a storm that it seemed as if Master Hendrik Hudson and his Dutchmen had moved from the Hudson Valley and were playing bowls on the Berkshire Hills. There was a regular cloudburst; but fortunately after an hour's deluge, the end came and we had a fine evening.

The storm served an aesthetic purpose. It was an ideal preparation of the "Pastoral" Symphony, and we were able to compare the realism of nature with Beethoven's interpretation of nature. No farmer—and there were several hundreds of them in that audience, which seemed to fill about four-fifths of the canopied auditorium—could fail to understand that. I am sure, indeed, in my heart, that they understood the whole symphony even if they had never heard it before. Those dreamy pastoral sounds are part of their daily life. The music is ruminative, full of rustic charm and it found an echo in every heart, notably the scene of the brook with its music monotony that never tires. People probably endowed those bucolic fancies with a New England tang. That robust dance was a cornhusking; that half-drunken bassoonist, pictured in Beethoven's score, is no alien in these United States.

Famous Trumpet Calls

The first number on the program was the third "Leonora" Overture and a magnificent reading of it Mr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony gave. Those famous trumpet calls, which signalize the coming of redemption to Florestan, sounded better out of doors than they do in Symphony Hall—and that is no reflection on the acoustics of the Symphony's chosen habitat. Never, indeed, was it more vividly brought home to me what a glorious tonal overture the third Leonora Overture is than it was last night, and that feeling, I am sure, was shared by the whole audience.

The C minor Symphony brought the concert to a conclusion. It was a classic reading, ever keeping the just mean, strong, nay Olympian, but with never a moment of rodomontade. Koussevitzky took that "fate" motive slowly, ponderously, as old Hans Richter used to do. In those rhythmic shocks, though still avoiding excess, he gave the effect of titanic power. The slow movement, that love idyll broken with passages of sinister import, was a joy to hear. People who had never heard the C minor before were delighted, and music lovers who are familiar with its every phrase, felt their old delight in it renewed.

Nearness of Outdoor World

The great marquee, almost Japanese in its effect, proved ideally suited to the purpose for which it was used, and the nearness of the outdoor world gave the music a charm which you will seek in vain in any indoor performance. The canvas does not reach to the ground and while the "Pastoral" was being played, we could watch the play of light on the grass and see the gnats flashing in the electric rays as if they were glowworms. Al fresco music under such conditions is a pleasure to awaken enthusiasm in the most sophisticated concert-goer.

If a plebiscite could have been taken of the audience after the performance I believe that they would have voted that not only the Berkshires should hear the Boston Symphony, but that the State of Massachusetts should subsidize the orchestra to give performances in every important city. Of course, a few timorous music lovers would dread the entry of politics into music. But if all the women's clubs would join hands; if the music teachers would co-operate, and if the general public would lend their aid, our Symphony, the finest aesthetic asset we possess, would become a prime educational force, not only for Boston and the Berkshires, but the population of the whole State.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 6 - 1937

Attending Music Festival

Mrs. Frank C. Smith, Jr., of 32 Cedar street, left yesterday for Pittsfield where she will remain until Sunday attending the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," Lenox. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitsky, will play six concerts.

HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER
AUG 6 - 1937

Mayor and Mrs. Joseph Stilz, Prof. and Mrs. Louis Bader and Mr. and Mrs. Dominick Leone, of West New York, attended the opening of the Berkshire Musical Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Kussevitsky, director, at Stockbridge, Mass., last night. The local party will remain for this evening's and Sunday afternoon's concerts of the outdoor festival.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 6 - 1937

5,000 in Tent At Opening of Music Festival

Boston Symphony in First of Six Concerts at Stockbridge, Mass.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival began last night an expanded career at its new permanent home here, the beautiful 200-acre estate known as Tanglewood. An audience of 5,000 sat under a great canvas tent and listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Sarge Kousselvitzky in a program devoted entirely to the supreme symphonist—Beethoven.

Last night's concert was the first of a series of six, with three scheduled for this week-end and an equal number for next.

In last night's audience were representatives from virtually every State in the Union and from Canada as well. Prominent figures in the social, political, business and artistic worlds were in attendance.

This year's programs are to be purely symphonic. In their second year of participation, Mr. Koussevitsky and his Boston symphony are the entire show. The festival sponsors wish to determine whether there is a public here for music as music. There are no extraneous attractions—and no world-knowing virtuosos as soloists.

In succeeding years there may be soloists and even opera. But the sponsors wish to be shown, for this is meant to be a self-sustaining festival. Last year the three concerts netted a profit of $1,800. This year's budget is $40,000, and the advance ticket sale brought in about $30,000. The demand at the gate in the next few days will determine the fate of what may become one of America's finest adventures in music.

The concerts are being presented under an enormous tent, 280 feet long and 120 feet wide. It accommodates 5,000 persons and there is space for another thousand or more beyond the confines of the tent. The brilliant lights inside the tent gave it the atmosphere of a brilliantly illuminated circus.

The band shell has been constructed under the tent. It is all wood and provides fine accoustics. For the musicians there is a covered path leading to an old stable which has been converted into a rest room. The old stalls remain as they were, but now they house, instead of livestock, the cases of the bull fiddles.

Tanglewood has been given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., for use as a festival center. The terms of the gift are so drawn as to assure faithful cooperation between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival, Inc. If the orchestra does not use the grounds for a festival, then they revert to the festival corporation. If the latter group does not do its share, the Boston Orchestra has sole rights to the enterprise.

Permanent Structure Planned

Eliel Saarinen, architect, has been engaged to devise plans for a permanent structure. What shape it will take depends on what form the festival will assume.

A heavy thundershower two hours before concert time did not keep many people away. Those who came were compensated by an incomparable poetic setting—the pink, purple sunset deepening into twilight as the first chords of the stirring "Leonore" sounded through Tanglewood.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, AUGUST 6, 1937

Fourth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER W. WILLIAMS

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5—The second Berkshire festival at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has assisted promises on this, the opening night, to be just as successful as it was last year. Moreover it has been far more efficiently managed. The traffic jam has been nothing like the snarl that so interfered with the opening last summer. Then, it will be recalled, Dr. Koussevitzky simply could not emerge onto the platform until easily a half hour after the concert was scheduled to begin. This year, on the contrary, the concert began exactly on time, and the number of late-comers was distinctly small.

The setting for the concert, as has been amply indicated in the advance notices, is unusually lovely, and the deluge of rain, fortunately several hours before the concert, both cleared the air and freshened the landscape. Altogether the occasion could hardly have been more propitious, as it turned out.

Beethoven's works fittingly introduced the first concert this evening. The program began with the splendid third Leonore overture, continued through the pastoral symphony in F major and concluded with the most famous of all, the fifth symphony in C minor. It was a program, perhaps, that had nothing of novelty to recommend it, but was nevertheless a suitably triumphant and festive section of music.

Nothing could have been more appropriate than the pastoral symphony in these charming surroundings. This work, whose rustic naivete is sometimes consciously felt in the concert hall, sounded with a perfection of detail and ensemble that was realized in part because of the setting and in part, of course, because of the beauty of the orchestral playing. Dr. Koussevitzky seemed to sense the essential spirit of the symphony and to inspire an interpretation that was exceptionally fine. The wood winds sounded with exquisite clarity and were played by the musicians of the orchestra with perfect finish.

If the pastoral symphony appealed particularly in that it so admirably suited the occasion, the dramatic intensity of the Leonore overture and the grandeur of the fifth symphony were scarcely less in keeping. It is true that the off-stage trumpet in the former was not as effective as in Symphony or Carnegie halls. It came from one side of the wooden shell which houses the orchestra and for some reason had less of the suddenness which it ought to have. We may also offer the suggestion that the kettle drums were not perfectly placed as far as their sound in the vast tent was concerned.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra received after each symphony an ovation of the sincerest sort. Previously the huge audience listened with the greatest attention and did not interrupt with applause at the conclusion of each symphonic movement. There is evidently a real festival spirit, akin in its enthusiasm to the European centers, here in the Berkshires. That spirit was dignified by the excellent performances offered by the Boston Symphony of this Beethoven program and will be undoubtedly continued in the succeeding concerts of the festival.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
AUG 6 - 1937

Symphonic Festival Opens in Berkshires

The fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival began last night in its new permanent home, Stockbridge, the beautiful 200 acre estate known as Tanglewood. An audience of about 5,000 persons sat under a great canvas tent and listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, a program devoted entirely to Beethoven.

Last night's concert was the first of a series of six, with three scheduled for this weekend and an equal number for the next. Previous festivals have been confined to one week, but the sponsors of the enterprise and the Boston Symphony officials have agreed that there is room in America for a Summer festival on a broad national scale and this year's expansion is designed as a natural step in the development of an American Salzburg. This year's programs are to be purely symphonic. In their second year of participation, Mr. Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony are the entire show.

FESTIVAL OPENS IN BERKSHIRE

Great Response Hailed as Spur to Development of American Salzburg

(Continued from First Page)

apart from Salzburg, besides the more extended program of the latter, was the fact that the people of the surrounding communities came to the concert in large numbers. They are expected to compose the backbone of the audience.

This year's programs are to be purely symphonic. In their second year of participation, Mr. Koussevitzky and his Boston symphony are the entire show. The festival sponsors wish to determine whether there is a public here for music as music. There are no extraneous attractions—and no world known virtuosos as soloists.

OPERA POSSIBLE LATER

In succeeding years there may be soloists and even opera. But the sponsors wish to be shown. For this is meant to be a self sustaining festival. Last year the three concerts netted a profit of $1800. This year's budget is $40,000 and the advance ticket sale brought in about $30,000. The demand at the gate in the next few days will determine the fate of what may become one of America's finest adventures in music.

The concerts are being preesnted under an enormous tent 280 feet long and 120 feet wide. It accommodates 5000 persons and there is space for another 1000 or more beyond the confines of the tent. The brilliant lights inside the tent gave it tonight the atmosphere of a brilliantly illuminated circus

---

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
AUG 6 - 1937

Dr. Koussevitzky hopes that the symphonic festival which opened in the Berkshires yesterday may develop into "an American Salzburg." There's nothing fantastic in that idea. Similar dreams based on far less impressive promises have come to fulfilment. The picturesque setting of the festival at Salzburg has been as attractive to many tourists as the music. But while Stockbridge may not have the Old-World atmosphere and the historical associations that add to the charm of the Austrian resort, the scene of the Berkshire festival is one of remarkable beauty. There, too, will be enjoyment and recreation aside from the music. Musically, there is no reason why there should not be a great development there. Our great symphony orchestras, of which the Boston Symphony is in the front rank, compare more than favorably with the best in Europe. We can command the best of talent, native and foreign. Interest in symphonic music has been steadily increasing, due in part to the radio which has created a vastly greater audience for it. One believes that there is a field in New England for a summer festival. It is noticed that Dr. Koussevitzky hopes that in time there will be opportunity for something in the nature of a school for the encouragement of creative musical talent. The two objectives he has in mind are interrelated. Each would supplement the other. And profit by it.

HEN
UNIC
AU

ton
In Be Musica

Koussevitz
Beethove
at O

The fourth annu phonic Festival o
last night at T
bridge, to an audi
Boston Symphony
made its second Festival this year,
tage of playing in Tanglewood has b orchestra as a per
the Berkshire Sym
The inclusion of phony in the all-B was an especially fe out-door charm of phasizing vividly th joyous serenity of program opened wit
Leonore, No. 3, and tion to the Pastora
Fifth Symphony in latter was, of cours musically, given a ception which reflec degree the forceful
thoven's bold and s
Serge Koussevitky
tra received voci
Among distinguishe
Festival yesterday w ing, Efrem Zimbal
Willem Welleke,
Marjorie Edwards,
America's Ambassad
Calvin Coolidge, Ben
Mrs. Alta Rockefel
Adolf A. Berle jr.
The second progr
Saturday at 8:30
include the Symp
Major of Mozart;
String Orchestra,
"Daphnis et Chloe," tral Excerpts, Rave
sky Symphony No
Schenectadians atte advantageous to arr formal gardens are form an inherent charm of the Festi grams open prompt is adequate but the considerable time.

BRIDGEPORT
POST
AUG 6 -

MUSIC FES
OPENS

Boston Sympho
First Berkshire
New Tent

STOCKBRIDGE,
(AP) The hardest
on its opening nigh untried home, faile disorganize the Berk
festival.
The festival is beg season, but its f
wood, the 210-acre
Boston symphony
Mrs. Gorham Broo
Mass. Five concert row night and S and Thursday, Fri
of next week.
In addition to th
Boston symphony
midst of a district
as the summer ho
America's great, o nected through ma
thaniel Hawthorne, fact that the festi
circus tent.
This huge buff wide, and 280 feet tra is stationed specially designed audience sits on of which seats
chairs.
Dr. Serge Kouss returned early fro vacation especially festival, opened la
all Beethoven prog
a week from Sunda entirely of Brahm between he has ar
sortment, from E
Hill, the American ged Jean Sibelius.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 6 - 1937

Boston Group In Berkshire Musical Fete

Koussevitzky Conducts Beethoven Program at Opening

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened auspiciously last night at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, to an audience of 5,000. The Boston Symphony Orchestra of 100 made its second appearance at the Festival this year, with the advantage of playing in its own home, for Tanglewood has been given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The inclusion of the Pastoral Symphony in the all-Beethoven program was an especially felicitous choice ,the out-door charm of Tanglewood emphasizing vividly the rustic vigor that joyous serenity of the theme. The program opened with the Overture to Leonore, No. 3, and included in addition to the Pastoral Symphony, the Fifth Symphony in G Minor. The latter was, of course, most satisfying musically, given a grandeur of conception which reflected to a masterly degree the forceful challenge of Beethoven's bold and striking theme.

Serge Koussevitky and the orchestra received vociferous applause. Among distinguished visitors to the Festival yesterday were Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, Willem Wellcke, Jacques Grodon, Marjorie Edwards, Norman H. Davis, America's Ambassador-at-Large, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice and Adolf A. Berle jr.

The second program will be given Saturday at 8:30 p. m., and will include the Symphony in E-Flat Major of Mozart; Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, Op. 40a, Hill; "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet; Orchestral Excerpts, Ravel, and Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4 in F minor. Schenectadians attending will find it advantageous to arrive early, for the formal gardens are floodlighted and form an inherent factor in the charm of the Festival and the programs open promptly. Parking space is adequate but the process consumes considerable time.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 6 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS IN RAIN

Boston Symphony Plays First Berkshire Concert in New Tent Home.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6—(AP) The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahms music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 6 - 1937

Koussevitzky Opens Festival In Berkshires

Capacity 5,000 Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in First of Six Concerts

Many From New York

Tanglewood Estate Becomes PermanentHome of Event

By Francis D. Perkins

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—Making its debut in its new permanent home on the Tanglewood estate, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its fourth season this evening when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Beethoven program including the third Leonore overture and the Pastoral and Fifth symphonies before a large audience including many visitors from New York, Vermont, Connecticut and other states in addition to summer residents in this region.

This was the second festival to be given with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its noted regular conductor. For two years, the concerts had been held at the Hanna Farm near Stockbridge, while last year's three concerts were held at the Holmwood estate in the same neighborhood. Use of the Tanglewood estate, with its artistic associations with Nathaniel Hawthorne, was given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony for this festival last winter, and this should assure the future of an institution which has already become a major feature of summer musical activities in the Northeastern United States during its short career.

The 1937 festival schedule, doubling last year's, offers six concerts. As they were last August, the concerts are held in a huge tent accomodating 5,000 persons, but a building to be designed by Eliel Saarinen is expected to be ready by next summer.

The attendance of virtually capacity size was estimated at 5,000 persons, most of whom had heeded the advice of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival committee, and arrived on time, in spite of a heavy series of showers, which fortunately halted an hour before the concert began. The tent is pitched about fifty yards from the house on the estate, which is on one of the most attractive sights of the Berkshires, overlooking Stockbridge bowl. The original owner, William Aspinwall Tappan, of Boston, who gave the estate its name, was a friend of Hawthorne and other prominent authors of his time. The literary traditions of Tanglewood were continued by Mr. Tappan's daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey. Their daughter, Mrs. Brooks, has made it possible for Tanglewood to begin a new phase of its history as a cultural center of the region.

It was a remarkable pleasure to hear the Boston Symphony again, especially as its playing observed the high standard of its work in the regular Boston season; there was the familiar but always admirable excellence of its various choirs and individual members; the memorable singing quality of the string tone, preserved in spite of the dampness of the air, and the thorough clarity of medium and detail. The Pastoral symphony has been deprecated from time to time as not among the strongest members of Beethoven's mighty nine, but Dr. Koussevitzky's unaffected and eloquent interpretation set forth convincingly the features which make this work permanently beloved, especially its infectious and vernal freshness and melodic charm. It was called an especially happy choice for a performance among the trees and under the stars.

Acoustics under canvas are usually unpredictable, but in this case they proved entirely satisfactory; the orchestral tone carried unexpectedly well, so that there was no loss of the fine points of the music at the far end of the tent and fine dynamic nuances were readily realized. The tendency of the brass choir to dominate seemed to be eliminated this time, with the possible exception of the overture, and this promises well for the remaining concerts of the festival. The second concert Saturday night will include Mozart's symphony in E flat, Edward B. Hill's string sinfonetta, ~~Ravel's second~~ Daphnis and Chloe suite and Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony. Schubert's Rosamunde ballet music and unfinished symphony, Stravinsky's Firebird suite and Cesar Franck's symphony will be played Sunday afternoon. The second series of festival concerts will take place Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, August 12, 14 and 15.

MUSIC FESTIVAL BEGINS IN LENOX

~~Herald~~, Aug. 6

Great Response Hailed as Spur to Development of American Salzburg

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS BEETHOVEN

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

LENOX, Aug. 5—The ~~fourth~~ annual Berkshire symphonic festival began tonight an expanded career at its new permanent home here, the beautiful 200-acre estate known as Tanglewood. An audience of about 5000 persons sat under a great canvas tent and listened to the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in a program devoted entirely to the supreme symphonist—Beethoven.

Tonight's concert was the first of a series of six, with three scheduled for this week-end and an equal number for next. Previous festivals have been confined to one week, but the sponsors of the enterprise and the Boston Symphony officials have agreed that there is room in America for a summer festival on a broad national scale and this year's expansion is designed as a natural step in the development of an American Salzburg.

The magic name, Salzburg, has been whispered among the friends of the festival as a comparable goal. The setting can bear comparison with the ancient Austrian town. At Tanglewood, where Hawthorne lived and wrote some of his memorable tales, there is a delightful vista of lakes and what the novelist called "the breezy mountains of Berkshire."

ALL HOTELS FILLED

The pre-festival fever may also be compared with that which prevails at Salzburg. Reservations for rooms in the neighborhood began pouring in last May and the hostelries within a 20-mile radius report capacity. In the restaurants tonight there was the rush and excitement of eager throngs.

In tonight's audience were representatives from virtually every state in the union and from Canada as well. Prominent figures in the social, political, business and artistic worlds were in attendance.

What made this festival stand

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

FESTIVAL OPENS IN BERKSHIRE

Great Response Hailed as Spur to Development of American Salzburg

(Continued from First Page)

apart from Salzburg, besides the more extended program of the latter, was the fact that the people of the surrounding communities came to the concert in large numbers. They are expected to compose the backbone of the audience.

This year's programs are to be purely symphonic. In their second year of participation, Mr. Koussevitzky and his Boston symphony are the entire show. The festival sponsors wish to determine whether there is a public here for music as music. There are no extraneous attractions—and no world known virtuosos as soloists.

OPERA POSSIBLE LATER

In succeeding years there may be soloists and even opera. But the sponsors wish to be shown. For this is meant to be a self sustaining festival. Last year the three concerts netted a profit of $1800. This year's budget is $40,000 and the advance ticket sale brought in about $30,000. The demand at the gate in the next few days will determine the fate of what may become one of America's finest adventures in music.

The concerts are being preesnted under an enormous tent 280 feet long and 120 feet wide. It accommodates 5000 persons and there is space for another 1000 or more beyond the confines of the tent. The brilliant lights inside the tent gave it tonight the atmosphere of a brilliantly illuminated circus.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 6 - 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL SURVIVES TEST OF RAIN ON FIRST NIGHT

Expected 25,000 Persons Will Hear Conductor Koussevitsky and His Musicians

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6, (AP)—The hardest posible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home ,failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire Smyphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorman Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday o: next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is hel din a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide and 280 fet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglewood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious, feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the etsate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned ~~from his~~ European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahms music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and his men, in their six concerts.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1937

Symphony Plays in Tent At Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6 (AP)—The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglewood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected an equal length of wire installed 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahm's music, and in beteween he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and his men, in their six concerts.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1937

19

Berkshire Music Festival Opens Smoothly, Effectively

Nothing Mars Inaugural Program at Tanglewood Where Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony in Beethoven Program

By RAY A. MOWERS

It was thundering on the distant left as thousands of motorists were being escorted to parking space by 60 Massachusetts police. But there the threat ended.

Nothing transpired to mar the most auspicious opening ever experienced by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival near Lenox, Mass. The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in ~~its new~~ summer "home," the Tanglewood of Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," was a stunning success, musically and socially.

Rarely has Beethoven been accorded the sympathetic treatment that was his last night. It was easy to imagine the immortal Ludwig's astral self smiling down upon the proceedings. For, if the master's shade ever had occasion to smile approval, it was on the fine reading of his works bestowed upon the ear by Serge Koussevitzky and his skillful men.

Three Masterpieces Given

The inaugural festival program included three of Beethoven's best known masterpieces, the "Lenore" overture, No. 3, and both the Fifth and Sixth Symphonies.

The performance of the great Boston organization was on the high artistic plane which has come to be expected of it. To analyze critically its presentations, especially those of last night, would be comparable to an attempt to dissect the lily in a misdirected desire to reveal the origin of its perfume.

So much for the artistry on display. Aside from that there was much to attract the admiring attention of the thousands assembled for the Festival. The huge canvas erected over the outdoor concert hall and its acoustical stage formed only one of these. There, also, was the huge estate which will be the permanent abode of the Festival, with its lake and wooded terraine that last night lay in a haze of fog.

Grounds Enjoyed

Before the concert began and during a long intermission, hundreds took the opportunity to stroll through the formal gardens and the less formal groves or to visit the home of the former owner and occupant, converted now into a business and social headquarters for Festival guests as well as for newspapermen assigned to "cover" it.

After the final salvo of applause had died away, giving the perspiring Dr. Koussevitzky a well-earned opportunity to retire and relax, the thousands pouring from the big tent found the parking plans had been worked out on a most satisfactory basis. There was little or no delay in getting underway for the homeward ride which in many instances meant upward of 50 miles through the night.

The second concert of the Festival is scheduled tomorrow night and only wild horses could keep away those who were present at the opening. A third program will be heard Sunday afternoon and three more late next week.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 6 - 1937

Music: With Superb Beethoven Concert Koussetvitzky Launches Berkshire Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times

Stockbridge, Mass. — The fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night was a sort of dedication of the grounds for Tanglewood, the estate which was donated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

The occasion carried over from last year all the distinction which the Boston Orchestra then gave to the Festival with its first appearance in Stockbridge and added new brilliance on its own account. The air was musically infectious and with last night's rousing performance the Festival without question established itself.

Promptly at 8:30 a familiar gnome-like figure trod deliberately upon the stage, with an air at once sacerdotal and magisterial. The orchestra as one man arose and gave the traditional greeting to its chief, even before the roll of applause had finished sweeping over the audience to those last rows which must have nearly filled the count of 5,000.

Koussevitzky's Festival

Then at a quarter of eleven when the last potent strains of Beethoven's Fifth finished the first of these six concerts, the audience just as spontaneously came to its feet. No one left. An ovation of handclapping and cheering burst forth that would not be stilled until the conductor again and again had received his mead of acclaim. Serge Koussevitzky was the hero of the evening. It begins to look like Serge Koussevitzky's festival.

Considering that it was the first time on new grounds, arrangements came off with extraordinary smoothness and precision. The traffic problem was handled with skill and so little loss of time that practically everyone was seated when the concert started. Disturbing noises had been virtually eliminated—the refreshment tent having been set up at a considerable distance farther away than was the case last year.

Many people who came early enough availed themselves of the opportunity to inspect the beautiful grounds with its formal gardens, pools, hemlock hedges, the pine groves and the view across Lake Mahkeenac into the hills beyond.

Again Under Canvas

The auditorium, as before, was a canvas shelter and it is presumed that the acoustic shell is a temporary one, although it proved highly efficient. Along the entire length of the tent is a walk under the pine trees which afforded a natural promenade during the long intermission. From the stage leading to the barn at a considerable distance away is a marquee so that the musicians can pass to and from their quarters protected against the kind of weather which it is hoped will not mar the Festival.

A greater variety of dress would be difficult to imagine. Men were to be seen in tail coats, tuxedos, white jackets, palm beach, sport coats and even dark business suits. Women reached corresponding extremes of formality and informality though this observer is not equal to any description beyond mention of trailing gowns sweeping the wet grass during the intermissoin.

All Beethoven

The program was all Beethoven's, two symphonies and the Leonore No. 3 Overture. The orchestra was in fine fettle and not only made a one-composer program tolerable but absorbing through every page of it. There was virtuosity, color, spirit and above all a dramatic force which was so intelligible and so right that one was carried along as with the enchantment of a narrative.

Koussevitzky's interpretation of the mighty Fifth Symphony is known to Bushnell audiences. The memory of that performance was revived with all its power and splendor. It was a volcanic thing as he conducted it fairly bursting its own granitic universe in fragments. The brasses were dazzling almost to the point of giving pain with their keen-edged beauty; and the same quality in their respective timbres characterized the other choirs of this orchestra. The woodwinds had a way of piercing the tonal fabric and the strings a crackle and vibrancy that made one marvel at the sensitive balance which is the tie that binds them.

Bucolic Music

All circumstances considered, the Pastoral Symphony was a particularly apt choice. Beethoven's inscription of the four movements will bear repeating: "Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country," "Scene by the brookside," "Jolly gathering of country folk— Thunder storm," "Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm."

There were a good many who experienced "gladsome and thankful feelings" that the Berkshire storm passed along at about 6 p. m., although there was not immediately apparent any relief from the extreme humidity which resulted in snapping fiddle strings during the concert.

Twice Told Tales

The F major Symphony was made just as transparent and delightful as Beethoven intended its ingenuous program to be. The incomparable way in which the pleasantries of the third movement came out leads one to believe that it is only in music that the same quip will draw smiles after the first time told, especially when so skilfully savored as they were last night.

One incident must be recorded. Just before the transition passage which bridges the third and fourth movements of the Fifth Symphony, a string snapped on the violin of that peerless concertmaster, Richard Burgin. With a lightning routine that would make any efficiency expert curl up with envy, he traded instruments with the player who shared the first desk without missing a bar. The second player opened his pocket kit, restrung the fiddle, tuned it while the rest of the orchestra was pouring forth its thunder and had resumed playing before it was time for him to turn the page for Burgin.

On Saturday evening will be heard Mozart's E flat Symphony, Tschaikowsky's Fourth, Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe excerpts and Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta for Strings.

All U. S. Joins Support Of Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass. — (AP) — The audience which gathered here for the Berkshire Festival was representative of the United States very literally.

There were many from the west coast in the tent, and one party in particular started east from Alameda, Calif., by motor ten days ago expressly to attend Dr. Koussevitsky's six concerts.

Louisiana, the Carolinas, Minnesota, Michigan, Ohio and all the neighboring states were represented, and more than 50 newspapers had their men under the big tent.

These found an artictic standard far beyond that of the usual summer undertaking, thanks to the fact that the Boston Orchestra was present as a unit, and playing under its regular conductor.

Dr. Koussevitsky was conducting, for one thing, in a huge buff colored tent capable of seating at capacity, 4,800 music lovers. The stage is at one end of the long tent, a row of boxes across the middle separates two huge blocks of seats.

But this canvas symphony hall, looking at a little distance like Barnum and Bailey gone highbrow is set down in an old and famous estate. This was laid out nearly a century ago by William Tappan, Boston banker, and given last winter to the Boston Orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire Festival.

A circus tent dispensing symphonies in the midst of a formal garden is perhaps not more unusual than some things out of Dr. Koussevitsky's past. For it was he who once loaded an entire symphony orchestra on a steamboat and took Beethoven to hamlets in Russia which never before had heard of symphony music.

Many visited the estate in the afternoon to walk under the pires which once sheltered Nathanel Hawthorne, to see the place where the little red cottage stood in which Tanglewood Tales first were told, and to stroll down across the wide lawns of the estate to Lake Mahkeenae, upon whose shores Stockbridge Indians burned council fires.

The festival group, of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is president and George W. Edman, secretary, plans a permanent building to house the festival soon. So far, the audience seems to like the tent just as well.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1937

MUSICIANS STAY AT GREENOCK INN

LEE, Aug. 6.—Several musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which held its opening concert at Tanglewood last night are staying at Greenock Inn. The men will remain at the inn for the duration of the Festival.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 6 - 1937

Huge Tent Is 'Symphony Hall' For the Berkshire Music Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 (AP)— About 4,000 persons from every quarter of America converged tonight upon this Berkshire village for the first of the six concerts comprising the Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

They found the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra under its famed Winter Conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. But they found these in rather strange surroundings.

Dr. Koussevitsky was conducting, for one thing, in a huge buff colored tent capable of seating at capacity, 4,800 music lovers. The stage is at one end of the long tent, a row of boxes across the middle separates two huge blocks of seats, each capable of seating an entire village.

This canvas symphony hall, looking at a little distance like Barnum and Bailey gone highbrow, is set down in an old and famous estate, laid out nearly a century ago by William Tappan, Boston banker, and given last Winter to the Boston orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire Festival.

A circus tent dispensing symphonies in the midst of a formal garden is perhaps not more unusual than some things out of Dr. Koussevitsky's past. For it was he who once loaded an entire symphony orchestra on a steamboat and took Beethoven to hamlets which never before had heard of symphony music.

Tonight's program, duly broadcast and duly commented upon by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, was entirely of Beethoven's music. Dr. Koussevitsky directed the overture to "Leonore" No. 3; the "Pastoral" Symphony and the Fifth Symphony, all with small interference from the heavy showers which began shortly before dinner. These made walking to the festival tent bad business, however.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 6 - 1937

HEAR SYMPHONY IN OPEN

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6.—(UP)—More than 5,000 music lovers gathered under a huge tent at historic "Tanglewood" last night for the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival—an "American Salzburg."

The concert was the first of six by the Boston symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Scene was the 200-acre estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales" in 1850.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 6 - 1937

Throng of 5000 Attends Berkshire Music Festival

Fashionable Audience Gathers for Opening Concert Of Annual Symphonic Series; Koussevitzky Leads Superb Orchestra Under Brown Canvas Big-Top

By George Y. Loveridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—Under a brown canvas big-top, a fashionable audience of approximately 5000 persons tonight attended the opening of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The concert was the first on the festival's permanent site, Tanglewood, a 210-acre estate given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks, of Brookline.

The festival is one of the most significant musical events in the country, and is likely to equal Europe's most noted festivals.

The superb orchestra was led by Serge Koussevitzky, recently returned from Europe. The tent is equipped with a wooden shell, and the acoustic properties of the "hall" are unexpectedly good.

A late afternoon storm gave the sponsors some misgivings, but the rain stopped long before the concert was to begin. Mist continued to cling to the surrounding Berkshire Hills, and thunder rumbled now and then across Lake Mahkeenac, but this did not deter the music lovers. Some of them arrived in evening dress, with automobiles averaging about two to a mile in length; others came in sports clothes and roadsters.

All Ages Attend Event

There were all ages, there were the famous and the unknown, all walking across the wide, rain-fresh lawns of Tanglewood toward the big top. The atmosphere was that of a musical county fair. Refreshments were sold in a tent overlooking the lake. Boy Scouts, policemen and volunteers from surrounding towns directed guests. Young ladies trundled bright yellow push carts over the grounds, selling music books, and other young ladies sold cigarettes from trays suspended from their shoulders.

Some distance from the music tent is a large building, formerly a carriage house or garage, that has been made into a dressing quarters for the musicians. There they were, the familiar Boston Symphony faces, some of them walking about in the courtyard fiddling to the country air or tooting on oboes and flutes, others gossiping over their 'cellos or with horns tucked under their arms. A long covered way has been built from the dressing quarters to the music tent, so that the instruments can be carried without danger from rain.

The audience began to take its places more than two hours before the concert was to start. Among the listeners were Senator Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island, John Shepard, Jr., Efrem Zimbalist and his wife, Alma Gluck; Albert Sprague Coolidge, son of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge; Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis; Willem Willeke, Albert Spaulding and many others prominent in governmental, musical and social circles. There were also groups of youngsters from camps as far away as Connecticut and hundreds of persons who live permanently or for the summer in surrounding towns.

Tent Fills Quickly

As the time for the concert drew near, the tent filled quickly with people, conversation and a few cultured moths and other winger visitors from the neighboring woods.

The orchestra filed in, and began the pleasantly chaotic process of tuning up. Dr. Koussevitzky stepped in through a small door at the side of the shell and instantly there was hearty applause.

The orchestra joined in, rising and tapping its bows against its fiddles. Dr. Koussevitzky bowed, shook hands with Henri Burgin the concert-master, and turned to the orchestra. The strings of lights above the audience went out, there was a sudden silence. The opening phrases of the Leonore Overture No. 3 swelled from the tent out over the broad dark grounds.

All tonight's music was Beethoven. The overture was followed by the pastoral symphony with its musical thunderstorm, so much more agreeable in certain respects than the real thing. The Fifth Symphony was played after intermission, and, as though the press doesn't get enough music in the tent, a phonograph outside the press room now gives forth the "Liebestod" to an obbligato of typewriter keys and telegraph "bugs."

Dr. Koussevitzky seemed to perform the music precisely as he would in the usual hall. There was no sense of forcing tone, the famous strings were heard in all their refinement and clarity.

The brass was brilliant and emphatic, the voices of oboe, clarinet and flute were beautifully distinct and of finest texture. There was also the closest co-operation of the audience, which sat motionless, attentive to every note, every nuance. At the end of each work, the applause was long and sincere. Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled time and again. He shared the applause with his orchestra.

It is difficult to imagine music in more pleasant surroundings. The quiet lake, the nearby hills, the dignified pines and elms give to this estate, already laden with traditions of the arts, the natural beauty that man seeks so often to interpret or to explore in music.

The festival will include five other concerts; Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and the next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon.

A permanent hall will be built for the festival before next season.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN

AUG 6 - 1937

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6 (INS)—The same Berkshire hill pines that lilted in the phrases of the poet swayed in the echo of symphonic reverie following the opening of the third annual summer music festival by the Boston symphony orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, at the 200-acre estate "Tanglewood."

More than 5000 music-lovers, among them vacationists from all over the United States and Canada, sat under an 800-foot canvas tent surrounded by trees and heard the first of a series of six concerts played by the orchestra, housed in an acoustic shell banked by foliage. The concerts continue for two weeks.

RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD

AUG 6 - 1937

Summer music has only recently begun to assume its proper place in American life. One of its happiest developments is the festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, which commenced yesterday with a Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky. It is hard to think of anthing more pleasant than listening to such music in the midst of the lovely Berkshires, and it makes one hopeful that Vermont will one day be able to offer its summer visitors more and better music than is now available. Although what we have now in the way of musical events represents great progress over five or 10 years ago, there is nothing yet to indicate that we can support anything as ambitious as the Stockbridge program. However, the outstanding success of Manchester's annual art exhibition suggests that a similar accomplishment in the field of music is not too remote a possibility.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 6 - 1937

Festival's Permanent Home Has Brilliant Opening

Five Thousand At Tanglewood For First Concert of 1937 Season

Thrilling Performance of Beethoven Program by America's Premier Orchestra Under Koussevitzky's Magic Baton Rewards Those Who Throng to Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opening Despite Storm and Heat—Forty-Two States and Canada Said to Have Been Represented—People of Wealth and Prominence Lend Interest to Spectacle But Foundation of Great Gathering Was Laid by Berkshire's Own Music Lovers.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival at "Tanglewood" on the Stockbridge-Lenox road, last evening was the mecca of 5,000 music lovers from all over the country as its fourth season was opened by Dr. Serge Koussevitkzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra in the auspicious setting afforded by the picturesque estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks for its permanent home.

The great audience, sheltered in a huge tent which provided ample and reasonably comfortable accommodations gave Dr. Koussevitzky a hearty welcome as he appeared ,on the platform at the stroke of 8.30 o'clock. Simultaneously, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York times, took his place at the microphone to introduce the concert to the world through the facilities provided by a hook-up of the National Broadcasting company.

Storm Fails to Spoil Affair

A heavy storm had drenched the grounds a few hours before the opening of the concert but it did not deter nor greatly inconvenience the thousands of patrons who in spite of wet grounds parked their cars in areas provided for the purpose and walked the short distance to the tent unmindful of damp shoes or trailing garments. In the tent the seats had been sectioned off according to the ticket demand. There were over 160 boxes occupied by prominent representatives of the aristorcracy of the Berkshire hills, and patrons of the festival as well as world renowned artists among whom were Alma Gluck, former Metropolitan opera star, and her equally famous husband, Ephrem Zimbalist, concert violinist. In reserved sections subscribed for months ago, in the unreserved seats, and in the standing room, everywhere music lovers filled the available space.

During the concert a hushed and reverent silence was broken only by an occasional rumble of vanishing thunder or a flash of spent lightning.

Concert is First of Six

Last evening's concert was the first of a series of six, with the second scheduled for tomorrow evening and the third Sunday afternoon. Previous festivals have been confined to one week but the sponsors decided this year on a longer period and their destination was a happy one.

At Tanglewood, where Hawthorne lived and wrote some of his memorable tales, the festival has found an ideal permanent home. Its delightfull vistas of the lake, its spacious. old gardens with rare trees and shrubbery, the large expanse of open ground providing adequate parking areas not too far removed from the center of activities, the lanes and avenues of close-cropped lawn providing pleasant walks during the intermissions and before the performance, where friends met to chat—all of these supplied a fitting background. Here Hawthorne might have found last night the material for many more delightful romances aided by the music, now whispering soft and low, now powerful and turbulent as the conductor, through the genius of his own rare understanding and the immortal creations of Beethoven, wrought an unforgettable spell.

Beethoven Works Played

For last night's program, Dr. Koussevitzky chose two of Beethoven's symphonies, his familiar Pastoral, No. 6, in F major, and one of th lesser known, the Fifth in C and made them the framework for a thrilling contrast of sweet and stormy beauty. The superb "Leonora" overture opened the program and was played with crisp brilliance and a magnificent quality of tone, while the Pastoral was vibrant with sympathetic appreciation of all that the name implies. At the conclusion of the concert Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times and each time was given an extraordinary ovation as everybody stood and applauded and cheered.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival organization, was most gratified at the audience and the spontaneous enthusiasm displayed. Equally enthusiastic comments were heard on all sides, from the thousands of people, representing all walks of life, who came to Tanglewood for the pure enjoyment of superlative music in an environment of unique interest and charm. People of wealth and prominence came from everywhere—somebody said that 42 states and Canada were represented last night—but Berkshire itself supplied the foundation for the great gathering.

Traffic Well Handled

Parking facilities and traffic were handled in an admirable manner under the direction of Lieut. John P. Sullivan and Sergt. Warner F. Eaton of the state police barracks of Northampton. Unlike last year, the long tedious waits, caused by traffic tangles were avoided this year, while steady streams of cars coming and going were guided to and from the highway by a force of 10 officers from various Western Massachusetts barracks and a large corps of officers selected from the police departments of Lenox, Stockbridge and surrounding communities. It was estimated that there were 3000 cars in the two vast parking areas.

Many of the concert attendants explored the villa which has been the summer home of Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Marlboro street, Boston, for more than 70 years. Of special interest were the mural decorations painted in the house by Miss Tappen's sister, the late Mrs. Richard Dixey of Boston. Her daughter, the present Mrs. Gorham Brooks, gave the 210 acre estate to the orchestra. On this marvelous place a shrine of music is now being built. Eliel Saarinen, internationally famous architect of Michigan, has been asked to prepare drawings for the proposed development on the borders of Lake Mahkeenac, where great things are contemplated, making Tanglewood the summer musical capitol of this continent, hoping someday to have it attain the heights reached by Salzburg on the banks of the Salzach in Austria.

For the present six-concert series members of the orchestra are being accommodated as comfortably as possible in five large tents that have been erected on a suitable site across Hawthorne avenue from the villa and its immediate surroundings.

As Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opened Fourth Season

Scenes snapped last evening at Tanglewood, new permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, as the Boston Symphony orchestra started its fourth season. Left above, the maestro, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, satisfaction written on his face, dons hat and coat to speed by automobile to a nearby estate for a 25-minute rest in the intermission between the two parts of the program. Right above, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival organization, and Mme. Koussevitsky, wife of the conductor, listen to the concert in Miss Smith's box. Left below, Olin Downes, distinguished music critic of the New York Times, shown at the microphone delivering his comments on the concert which were broadcast from an improvised studio just off the stage during the intermission. With him are shown Miss Lisa Sergio, NBC guest commentator from Italy, who also took part in the radio broadcast which featured the concert program, and John McNamara, announcer, of Station WBZ, Boston. Below, right, Joseph Bentonelli, noted violinist, calls the attention of Mrs. Zephine Fahnestock of Dorset, Vt., to significant program notes before the concert.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1937

MUSICIANS LIVE IN TENTS ON LAKE MAHKEENAC SHORE

Ten Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra Go Into Camp for Duration of Festival—Use Boat Club for Swimming, Fishing, Other Recreation.

Following rehearsal yesterday afternoon 10 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra went to the northeast shore of Lake Mahkeenac and pitched five tents in which they will live during their two weeks' stay here.

Platforms left by campers from last year are being used. Some are the exact size while others are too large, but with threatening weather and cracks of lightning and thunder in the west, the tents were thrown up in a hurry. Finishing touches will be applied today.

New Experience for Some

Some of the musicians are camping for the first time. They seemed to enjoy the outdoor life in spite of fun making remarks from other musicians who visited the "tent colony."

If newspapermen, searching for human interest angles in the colony, hadn't happened along the shore, Robert Humphrey, acting director of publicity for the orchestra, still would be trying to pitch his tent. It collapsed while he was inside just as visitors arrived on the scene. Mr. Humphrey purchased all new camp equipment before coming to the Berkshires. He has never pitched a tent, yet knows now that it takes more than reading instructions to do the job.

Next to the Humphrey tent are Rene Jacob, first violinist and Jean Cauhape, viola player while S. W. Gerhedt, viola player and Henry H. Stanislaus, oboist, are their neighbors.

The Lenox Brotherhood Boat Club, adjacent to the pine grove on the Tanglewood property near the shore, is being used by the orchestra members for swimming, boating, fishing and other types of recreation.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

AUG 6 - 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL UNDER WAY

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 6 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL UNHURT BY RAIN

Stockbridge Event Meets Test—Expected 25,000 Will Hear Orchestra

By John Selby

Stockbridge, Aug. 6—AP—The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglewood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahms music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and his men, in their six concerts.

ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

AUG 6 - 1937

SYMPHONY HAS RAINY OPENING

Tent Concerts of Boston Symphony Expected to Draw 25,000

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6—(AP)—The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglewood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahms music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and his men, in their six concerts.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1937

4000 HEAR FIRST FESTIVAL CONCERT

Koussevitsky Directs Boston Symphony Orchestra at Berkshire Estate

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5. (AP)—About 4,000 persons from every quarter of America converged tonight upon this Berkshire village for the first of the six concerts comprising the Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

They found the entire Boston Symphony orchestra under its famed winter conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. But they found these in rather strange surroundings.

Dr. Koussevitsky was conducting for one thing, in a huge buff colored tent capable of seating at capacity, 4,800 music lovers. The stage is at one end of the long tent, a row of boxes across the middle separates two huge blocks of seats, each capable of seating an entire village.

This canvas Symphony Hall, looking at a little distance like Barnum and Bailey gone highbrow, is set down in an old and famous estate, laid out nearly a century ago by William Tappan, Boston banker, and given last winter to the Boston orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire Festival.

A circus tent dispensing symphonies in the midst of a formal garden is perhaps not more unusual than some things out of Dr. Koussevitsky's past. For it was he who once loaded an entire symphony orchestra on a steamboat and took Beethoven to hamlets which never before had heard of symphony music.

Tonight's program, duly broadcast and duly commented upon by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, was entirely of Beethoven's music. Dr. Kaussevitsky directed the overture to "Leonore" No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the fifth symphony, all wiith small interference from the heavy showers which began shortly before dinner. These made walking to the festival tent bad business, however.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 6 - 1937

AT STOCKBRIDGE

Boston Herald

For the next two weeks, Stockbridge in the Berkshires will be the nation's musical capital. At "Tanglewood," the famous estate which was recently made the festival's permanent home, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in six concerts. If last year's experience is a safe guide, the audiences will be extremely large, and those who wish to hear the entire program will do well to arrive early and find places to park their cars. The site is so beautiful that a short wait before the concert begins should pass most enjoyably.

The sponsors are so far cautiously restricting the programs to familiar works. This evening, for example, will be an all-Beethoven program, and the following Thursday will be all-Wagner. The only new work to be presented—and this has already been heard many times in Boston—is Sibelius' seventh symphony.

Probably this policy is the wisest when the festival is young and when it must make friends among a constituency which is based more on geographical lines than anything else. But if it is to become distinctive and an annual gathering-place for followers of music from all over the country and possibly from abroad, it must eventually concentrate on some special field of music, and do that surpassingly well. In short, the festival should be encouraged to develop a definite character and an artistic personality.

Meantime, while this purpose is in the formative stage, Stockbridge and the Boston orchestra provide an impressive combination for the performance of great music from many sources. Possibly audiences by their reaction to it will indicate the specialization which the festival should cultivate in the future.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1937

4000 HEAR FIRST FESTIVAL CONCERT

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5. (AP)—About 4,000 persons from every quarter of America converged tonight upon this Berkshire village for the first of the six concerts comprising the Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

They found the entire Boston Symphony orchestra under its famed winter conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. But they found these in rather strange surroundings.

Dr. Koussevitsky was conducting for one thing, in a huge buff colored tent capable of seating at capacity, 4,800 music lovers. The stage is at one end of the long tent, a row of boxes across the middle separates two huge blocks of seats, each capable of seating an entire village

This canvas Symphony Hall, looking at a little distance like Barnum and Bailey gone highbrow, is set down in an old and famous estate, laid out nearly a century ago by William Tappan, Boston banker, and given last winter to the Boston orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire Festival.

A circus tent dispensing symphonies in the midst of a formal garden is perhaps not more unusual than some things out of Dr. Koussevitsky's past. For it was he who once loaded an entire symphony orchestra on a steamboat and took Beethoven to hamlets which never before had heard of symphony music.

Tonight's program, duly broadcast and duly commented upon by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, was entirely of Beethoven's music. Dr. Kaussevitsky directed the overture to "Leonore" No. 3; the "Pastoral" symphony and the fifth symphony, all wiith small interference from the heavy showers which began shortly before dinner. These made walking to the festival tent bad business, however.

BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER

AUG 6 - 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL HAILED IN RAIN

Berkshire Symphonic Concert Succeeds in Hard Test—Opens in New 210-Acre Home.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6 (AP)—The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglewood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 6 - 1937

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6—The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is underway at "Tanglewood" near Lenox, where an audience of 5000 last night heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in a Beethoven concert.

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 6 - 1937

BERKSHIRE'S MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS IN STORM

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass, (AP)—Hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mr Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent. To handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going Press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

AUG 6 - 1937

Beethoven Program Opens Concert Series

Stockbridge, Aug. ..—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, held under canvas at Tanglewood, near Lenox and the Stockbridge bowl, opened last night with an inspiring performance of a Beethoven program by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The arrangements were even more satisfactory than last year, when, in spite of elaborate planning, there was some blocking of roads on the way out. High praise must be given to the skill and care with which all the details of this great and difficult enterprise have been worked out.

It is one thing to provide for a stadium concert in Manhattan, with many lines of transportation converging on the spot from points miles or scores or hundreds of miles distant, and a very different thing to care for a large gathering deep in the country, with the automobile the sole means of conveyance. Everything possible was done to make things easy and pleasant for visitors, and patrons from a distance who started in good season and were not unduly anxious to head the homeward procession found it all very simple. The weather cleared after showers in the early evening which did not keep many people away.

This interesting annual festival took a definite and excellent pattern last summer with the engagement of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and this year's concerts follow much the same lines. Plans for construction of a "music shed" to replace the huge tent have been deferred, but a great orchestra has plenty of reserve power, and even a tent would hardly be needed if the New England weather were a less uncertain factor. Last year the tent proved fairly weatherproof in at least one smart shower, but music will seem more at home in the country when a stout roof has been provided. A new acoustic shell behind and over the musicians has been constructed which is believed to add to the power and brilliance of the music, which carried well to the remotest listeners.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 6 - 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DRAWS GOOD CROWD

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard in First of Six Concert Series

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5, (AP).—About 4000 persons from every quarter of America converged tonight upon this Berkshire village for the first of the six concerts comprising the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

They found the entire Boston Symphony orchestra under its famed winter conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. But they found these in rather strange surroundings.

Dr. Koussevitsky was conducting, for one thing, in a huge buff-colored tent capable of seating, at capacity 4800 music lovers. The stage is at one end of the long tent, a row of boxes across the middle separates two huge blocks of seats, each capable of seating an entire village.

This canvas symphony hall, looking at a little distance like Barnum & Bailey gone highbrow, is set down in an old and famous estate, laid out nearly a century ago by William Tappan, Boston banker, and given last winter to the Boston orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire Festival.

A circus tent dispensing symphonies in the midst of a formal garden is perhaps not more unusual than some things out of Dr. Koussevitsky's past. For it was he who once loaded an entire symphony orchestra on a steamboat and took Beethoven to hamlets which never before had heard of symphony music.

Tonight's program, duly broadcast and duly commented upon by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, was entirely of Beethoven's music. Dr. Koussevitsky directed the overture to "Leonore" No. 3, the "Pastoral" symphony and the Fifth symphony, all with small interference from the heavy showers which began shortly before dinner. These made walking to the festival tent bad business, however.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1937

5000 AT FESTIVAL

Overflow Crowd Greets Dr. Serge Koussevitzky At Tanglewood Estate

Sharp Thunder Storm Early in Evening Fails To Deter Music Lovers From Turning Out for Opening Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra — All-Beethoven Program Given Enthusiastic Reception

LENOX, Aug. 6.—An unscheduled overture of rumbling thunder in the hills to the south could not deter some 5000 music lovers from greeting Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra as they opened the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here last evening.

The trees were still dripping, the flowers in the lighted gardens still glistening from the shower that paused late in the afternoon over the Festival's new home at Tanglewood, when Dr. Koussevitzky raised his baton to open the series of six concerts.

Cosmopolitan Gathering

Under the huge tent and overflowing on to the lawn outside were the great and the near great of music, business, politics and society, the rich and poor, the young and old. From Berkshire's famed estates, from summer camps, from artists' colonies and from modest homes, near and far, came thousands for a single purpose—to listen to one of the world's great orchestras play the works of one of the world's great composers.

The all-Beethoven program, consisting of the overture to "Leonore," the 5th and 6th symphonies, brought waves of applause and, at the end, an ovation as resoundingly vocal as it was manual.

The tent began to fill more than an hour before the scheduled concert time of 8.30, and by 8.15 the boundary benches placed backwards around the outside ropes were being commandeered by the overflow crowd. Towering thunderheads, masking their ominous intent behind the coral tint of the afterglow, hung in the sky above. Their beauty was remarked upon by a large number of people, not including Festival officials.

Control Room Busiest

Busiest spot just before the concert started was the control "room" next to the orchestra shell where the National Broadcasting Company crew of announcers, commentators and technicians were preparing for the network broadcast. On the end of the platform around a table on which stood the microphone were John McNamara, announcer, and Liza Sergio, Italian commentator. Only hitch in the broadcast came when Miss Sergio started commentating. At this moment, one of the cornetists in the orchestra decided to practice outside the tent flap some four feet behind Miss Sergio. He was persuaded to rehearse elsewhere.

Oownes Talks

During the 25-minute intermission, Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, talked to the radio audience on the Beethoven works being played. Assisting the NBC crew in the transmission of the broadcast were John Aldrich of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company office in Pittsfield and Thomas Tierney of the Pittsfield Western Union office.

Before the concert began and during intermissions, news photographers from papers and services all over the East furnished a barrage of flashlights around the boxes, at the entrance to the tent and around the platform. In the house nearby, the four telegraph operators and the half-dozen typewriters in the press room were busy throughout the evening. There was some doubt in the minds of the correspondents, however, as to what to do about the wedding and birthday blanks furnished by the telegraph companies, who apparently believes in preparedness.

2000 Cars Parked

The traffic problem, eased considerably this year by the large number of possible exits and entrances to the estate, was handled with remarkable efficiency by a detail of State Police and a group of American Legion mem-

(OVER)

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 6 - 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens In Its New Home On Estate At Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6 (AP)--The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and unried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire symphonic estival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried o change the appearance of Tangleood as little as possible. But to andle the crowd, which arrives alogether by motor, three miles of ence had to be erected, an equal ength of wire installed, 30 spotghts set up and even four special ires laid to care for out-going ress dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature f the entire plant is a long walk, overed with brown canvas and onnecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage rom the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved ts use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Bhrams music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and h men, in their six concerts.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 7 - 1937

Mrs. de Heredia Is Hostess in Lenox To Koussevitzkys

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Musgrave Entertain Festival Guests in Stockbridge

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 6.—Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia was a luncheon hostess today at Wheatleigh, Lenox, in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, who are at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club. Among the other guests were Mrs. Nicholas Brown, who is visiting Mrs. de Heredia; Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Herbert S. Darlington, Miss Sibyl M. Darlington, Miss Helen Knox, Messrs. Giraud Foster and Gardner S. Morse.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Musgrave gave a dinner tonight at Linwood, Stockbridge, in honor of their festival guests, Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell, of Wellesley. The others present were Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick, Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Spurr Morse, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Lee Higginson jr., and Miss Ethel L. Haven.

Curtis Hotel newcomers at Lenox include Princess Natalie Palvy, Mrs. Schuyler S. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Benjamin, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Evans, all of New York; Mrs. Horace Binney, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hunt, of Boston.

Arrivals at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox, include Mr. and Mrs. William F. Healy, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick F. Gormley, Mr. and Mrs. J. Paul Sinnott, Mr. and Mrs. William G. Lauer, of New York. Dinners were given at the club by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Blumenthal, of New York, for Mr. and Mrs. Daniel England, of Pittsfield, and by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyful, of Boston.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mrs. William Usher Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. George Bradford, Mr. and Mrs. Allison Wright Post, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Burgess, of New York; Mrs. Jaffrey de Hauteville, Mrs. Roland Nickerson, of Boston.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 6 - 1937

4,000 PERSONS AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC EVENT

First Of Six Concerts In Symphonic Festival Well Received

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—(AP)—About 4,000 persons from every quarter of America converged tonight upon this Berkshire village for the first of the six concerts comprising the fourth Berkshire symphonic festival.

They found the entire Boston symphony orchestra under its famed winter conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. But they found these in rather strange surroundings.

Dr. Koussevitsky was conducting, for one thing, in a huge buff colored tent capable of seating, at capacity, 4,800 music lovers. The stage is at one end of the long tent, a row of boxes across the middle separates two huge blocks of seats, each capable of seating an entire village.

But this canvas symphony hall, looking at a little distance like Barnum and Bailey gone highbrow, is set down in an old and famous estate. This was laid out nearly a century ago by William Tappan, Boston banker, and given last winter to the Boston orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire festival.

A circus tent dispensing symphonies in the midst of a formal garden is perhaps not more unusual than some thing out of Dr. Koussevitsky's past. For it was he who once loaded an entire symphony orchestra on a steamboat and took Beethoven to hamlets which never before had heard of symphony music.

Tonight's program, duly broadcast and duly commented upon by Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, was entirely Beethoven's music. Dr. Koussevitsky directed the overture to "Lenore No. 3"; the "pastoral" symphony and the fifth symphony, all with small interference from the heavy showers which began shortly before dinner. These made walking to the festival tent bad business, however.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 6 - 1937

MANY PEOPLE HERE ARE INTERESTED IN FESTIVAL

Large Number from Northampton Attend Musical Event at Stockbridge

Interest in the fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival among Northampton people is revealed in the large number who have secured reservations for one or several of the series of six concerts being conducted this year at Tanglewood, Lenox, on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of this week and next. Last night's audience, according to reports, attracted about 5,000 persons, who sat under a great canvas tent and listened to the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in a program comprising three Beethoven symphonies. Those present comprised representatives of virtually every state in the Union and from Canada as well.

Those from Northampton and vicinity who attended last night or who have purchased tickets for coming concerts are the following: Miss Vinetta Larson of South street, Miss Carolyn M. Burpee of Franklin street, Miss Dorothy S. Ainsworth of Barrett place, Miss Susan M. Rambo of Barrett place, the Misses May and Maud Hammond of Elm street, Robert Patch, son of Prof. and Mrs. Howard Patch of Barrett place, Prof. and Mrs. H. Edward Wells of Pomeroy terrace, Mrs. Thomas J. Hammond of Elm street, Mrs. Guy K. Dustin of Dryads green, Mrs. Erna Dunmeyer of Cedar street, Miss Miriam Curtis of Dickinson hospital, Mrs. Frederick S. Allis of Lincoln avenue, Amherst; R. C. McGoun of Amity street, Amherst; Miss Mildred Pierpont of Lincoln avenue, Amherst; Clark L. Thayer of Mt. Pleasant street, Amherst; Mrs. Franklin King of College Lane, Miss Jane Bigelow of Phillips Place, Jonathan Shiller of Amherst, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Wedler of Easthampton and Miss Ruth Wood of Swift River.

Groups will also leave from the Smith College Summer School of Social Work, from the Birchwood camp in Huntington, and from the French Summer school at the Northampton School for Girls, where faculty and students, as well as the Misses Dorothy M. Bement and Sarah B. Whitaker, have indicated their intentions to leave this week-end.

Miss Jane Bowker and Miss Hester R. Hoffman of the Hampshire Bookshop will represent the local book store at Tanglewood. A booth has also been set up by Bernard M. O'Shea, of the local Music House, who has arranged a display on the grounds near the scene of the festival.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 6 - 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC SURVIVES STORM

Koussevitsky Directs Opening Concert at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6 (AP) — The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire symphonic festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglewood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special Western Union wires laid to care for outgoing press dispatches.

Shelter For Orchestra

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instuments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahms music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and his men, in their six concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1937

124

FIRST CONCERT IS PRAISED BY MUSIC CRITIC

Declares Opening Is More Glamorous Than in Previous Years

By JAY ROSENFELD

WITH a glamor surpassing even the initial concerts of the three preceding years the Berkshire Symphonic Festival got under way last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an all-Beethoven program at Tanglewood in Lenox, the new site of the Festival.

Four springs ago when a group of far-seeing and energetic music-lovers, captained by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Glendale, broached the subject of a series of orchestral concerts in the Berkshires, the general response was doubting, cynical and hardly encouraging. This writer claims no oracular powers nor does he wish to be an "I-told-you-so," but he does claim to have said, after having observed the prime-moving crew in action, that "It surely will go over." The history of the first three years is well known. The successes were sufficient to warrant the extension of plans so that this, the fourth year, instead of a series of three concerts, there are to be six over two week-ends.

What undoubtedly established the Festival on its present solid basis was the artistic success of the Boston Symphony which appeared last year for the first time in a Berkshire Festival under its renowned leader, Serge Koussevitzky. Indeed the growth of the undertaking is mainly due to the plans and ambitions of that eminent conductor, whose standards of performance are so lofty that he deserves every encouragement and support in whatever artistic paths his judgment on the future of the Festival decides him to venture. On his first appearance of the evening last night he was greeted with impressive cordiality and as the program progressed the enthusiasm mounted until, at the conclusion of the final movement, the ovation he was accorded must have touched one as accustomed to triumphs as is he. But it was with the men of the orchestra that he shared each wave of applause. He obliged them to stand and themselves accept the plaudits of the tremendous audience which filled the immense expanse of seats.

Third and Best Locale

The new locale of the Festival is the third property which has been used and it is in every way the best. The whole enormous estate has been donated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and no doubt now will be the permanent home of the annual event, which it is bruited will increase both in scope and importance as the years go by. With equally easy approaches from two directions, Lenox and Stockbridge, with parking much less intricate, better planned, better executed, and nearer to the center of activities, with the seats set out in concentric curves on a moderately sloping terrain so that vision in all sections is unobstructed, with the shell before which the orchestra plays now cohesively annexed to the great sheltering spread of canvas, the stage was indeed set for an historic event.

Heavens Growl—Crowd Happy

An audience as distinguished as has ever assembled for any similar occasion started to arrive long before the hour, 8.30, set for the beginning of the concert. Growls and grumblings in the heavens may have given a bit of concern, although fortunately, except for a few drops of rain, there was no inconvenience from the weather. The sky presented a glorious spectacle as its color-rimmed storm clouds, as if in anticipation of the Storm in the Pastoral Symphony which was to come, glowered ominously in the west. At intermission an eddying crowd of more than 5000 strolled or stood in groups. Women in colorful evening gowns, the accumulation of hundreds of soft-spoken conversations, the presence of celebrities from the fields of the theatre, society, statesmanship, business and music, all these things contributed to the extravagance of the atmospheric excitement.

There are no walls to the huge tent under which the audience was seated, yet the acoustics, all things considered, were good. Plans for a permanent wooden shed and enclosure may come to fruition in coming years, but until then those responsible for the Festival need have no qualms, for very little of the effects and of the meticulously prepared program Dr. Koussevitzky presented evaporated in its traject from the instruments to the eager ears of the audience.

All-Beethoven Program

The program was completely devoted to the works of Ludwig Van Beethoven. There was the Leonore overture, No. 3, the Sixth symphony, in F major, opus 68, and the Fifth in C minor, opus 67.

Precedent for the inclusion of these two symphonies on the same program goes back to the premier performance of both of them which took place in the identical concert in Vienna in 1808. There is such a difference in spirit of the two symphonies that it seems inconceivable that Beethoven worked on them simultaneously, dropping one for the moment to take up the other. In fact, the whole program was the product of one short stretch in the great master's life, for his only opera "Fidelio" dates from this same period. It was not a great success and as a concession to public tastes he wrote a new and different overture each time it was revived, hoping to gain favor. The name of the opera was changed os well. The Leonore, No. 3, with which Koussevitzky opened the festival is an example of Beethoven's most intensive application.

Sensitive-Impeccable

The performance was electrifying. We can't remember hearing an orchestra playing more sensitively nor more impeccably. The brilliance and eclat of the rendition was the result of the concurrence of a matchless performance on the part of the men of the orchestra and a conception on the part of its conductor, which for proportion and perspective, tone color, and polish of even the most seemingly unobtrusive details, must remain as a landmark in the memory of the most experienced music-lovers in the audience. If Beethoven could have heard his overture played as Koussevitzky directed it last night! If Beethoven could have heard the entrance of the bass viols in the famous passage of the scherzo of the Fifth Symphony!

Pastoral "Enrapturing"

From the vigor and brilliance of the overture, Koussevitzky subsided into one of the most enrapturing performances of the Pastoral Symphony imaginable. He held the audience spell bound with the simplicity and relaxation of his interpretation. The orchestra responded to his baton with the precision and delicacy one might more readily expect of a chamber music group than from an ensemble of 100 men. Until the episode of the rustic dance in the third movement, the orchestra stayed within the narrowest of limits and yet never once did the interest of the audience waver.

Beethoven had been working much earlier on his Fifth symphony in which the spirit was of dramatic grandeur and tragedy, so that he must have found compensating relief in the Sixth which came to be known as the Pastoral because in this he sought to express emotions engendered by nature in his frequent excursions in the lovely woods in the vicinity of Vienna. There is peace and contentment, except for the fury of the elements in the fourth movement.

Tempo Lacks Force

But the Fifth is another story. He himself explained the awesome introductory phrases as "Fate knocking on the door."

Koussevitzky chose a tempo in this first movement which we found lacked the proper assaulting force with which we associate this music, and it wasn't until the magnificent breadth of the opening C major chords of the last movement that we were again stirred and raised to the heights to which we had been transported by the first half of the program.

If the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was an amusement for dilettantes at its inception, today, due to the superb orchestra and its great conductor, it towers on its own artistic feet. If, as is reasonable to believe, the same standards of performance are maintained at the concerts tomorrow night, Sunday afternoon and on the corresponding three days of next week, it will not only mark an achievement in musical history but will justify the application of added and renewed efforts for the future.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 7 - 1937

Berkshire Hills Society to Attend Musical Tonight

Visitors Are Entertained at All Country Places, Hotels and Inns.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 7.—Most of the important Berkshire society events this week end are associated with the music festival at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, where the Boston Symphony orchestra is giving tonight the second concert of the first series.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and Mrs. Koussevitzky are at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club.

Many visitors are being entertained during the festival both at country places and hotels. Alfred I. Barton, president of the Surf Club, Miami Beach, and Ted Shawn the dancer, are having supper parties tonight at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, where the arrivals include Mr. and Mrs. Hiram C. Todd of New York and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick B. Pratt of Brooklyn.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle Jr. are having a dinner party tomorrow night at Konkapot, Great Barrington, in compliment to their week-end guests, Mr. and Mrs. Cassius Clay of Alexandria, Va.

Albert Spalding, the violinist, and Mrs. Spalding are to have Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Fisher Jr. of Westover, Va., and Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes as their box guests tonight.

Plans a Box Party.

With Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs as box guests will be Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz of Fernbrook, Lenox, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfielld. Tomorrow afternoon Mrs. Gibbs is having Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Russell of Winter Haven, Fla., David Donald and Matthew Rockwell.

Miss Eleanor K. Coonley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss L. Coonley of Folly Farm, Great Barrington, is on a Great Lakes cruise as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John McL. Simpson of Chicago.

Prof. Albert Sprague Coolidge of Harvard is to play the viola as assisting artist tomorrow afternoon to the South Mountain String Quartet in a program of compositions. He and Mrs. Coolidge are the guests of Willem Willeke, director of the South Mountain Music Colony.

Frank Sheridan to Play.

Frank Sheridan, pianist, is assisting the Gordon String Quartet tomorrow afternoon in a program of compositions at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn.

For drama William Miles is producing next week at the Berkshire Playhoue, Stockbridge, Langdon Mitchell's "Becky Sharp." Miss Edith Barrett will appear in the title role. She was at the Playhouse in "Trelawney of the Wells" in 1935.

Next week is to be an important one at the Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, where the annual New England women's tennis tournament in doubles and singles will be held for four days, starting Thursday.

AUBURN, N. Y.
Citizen-Advertiser

AUG 7 - 1937

Mayor and Mrs. Charles D. Osborne have gone to Dalton, Mass., to spend the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, formerly of Auburn. They will attend the Berkshire Musical Festival Saturday and Sunday, at which the full Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert. This orchestra will give two more concerts next Saturday and Sunday, August 14 and 15.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 7 - 1937

FETE IN BERKSHIRES ATTRACTS VISITORS

Koussevitzky to Lead Boston Symphony in Second of Concerts Tonight

PLANS DIVERSE PROGRAM

Works by Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Edward Hill and Ravel Will Be Performed

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which paused for rest today, will resume tomorrow night here at Tanglewood. At that second concert Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a diverse program, embracing Mozart and Tchaikovsky symphonies, two movements from Edward Burlingam Hill's string sinfonietta and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite.

Visitors are continuing to invade the South Berkshire countryside for the remaining two concerts this week-end and interest remains high for next week's trio. Exemplifying those who sought reservations at the festival office today was a group which had heard Thursday night's opening program on the radio several hundred miles away and decided to come up for the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts.

In the meantime those who were at Tanglewood last night were discussing today the performances that Dr. Koussevitzky and his men gave to Beethoven's "Leonore" overture and to the Fifth and Sixth symphonies. The Boston orchestra has seldom given a more eloquent account of its powers, nor has its leader.

Performance Stirs Imagination

Perhaps Beethoven's symphonies need to be heard in surroundings as close to nature as was their creator. Or it may be that Dr. Koussevitzky shaped his interpretations so they would fill the vast enclosure under the canvas tent and penetrate beyond to those who sat on benches and on the grass under the stars.

In any event, the performances had a breadth of conception, an intensity of feeling and a spaciousness of utterance that stirred the imagination. There were some who, sated by too many hearings of the Fifth, sat back as this work began, expecting the worst, but Mr. Koussevitzky brought them to life with as galvanic, expansive and audacious a performance as they had heard in years of concert-going.

The orchestra gave notice of its mettle and preparation with a performance of the "Leonore" that was resplendent tonally and that captured the essence of its concentrated pages. The "Pastorale" was played with a blend of delicacy and trength. The gifted solo players the wind choir achieved some -grained, accurate playing.

Real Lightning Obliges

The quality of this orchestra was best instanced by the ominous bite of the 'cellos bringing rumors of the impending storm. The tempest had glare and wildness. And was it a gesture from a kindly dispensation that brought the flashes of lightning just before the tonal storm broke?

There was a solidity, an earthiness and at the same time a broad, classic line in Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment of the Fifth symphony. He called for more body and volume of tone than he might have in Symphony or Carnegie Halls, and rightly, for the walls of the night did not cause the sound to become strident or heavy. The conception was big, yet the slightest details were clearly etched in.

The closing allegro may be cited as an indication of the grandeur of this performance. The movement went with a titanic energy, but there was always a feeling that it was under absolute control. The tributes of cheers and applause at the end was only proper.

If Mr. Koussevitzky and his men maintain a comparable level in the succeeding concerts, this will be a memorable festival.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

AUG 7 - 1937

Previews in Music

News of summer festivals and outdoor symphony concerts in other parts of the country makes Washington's concert-less summer seem even more musically bleak. Meanwhile we have only the radio to turn to, with occasional tantalizing snatches from far-off music festival programs.

Next week looks particularly promising, with a generous offering of good music over the National Broadcasting Co.'s network. Here are some of the highlights:

Sunday, 10:30 a. m., Walberg Brown String Ensemble playing Schubert's G major string quartet; 12:30 to 1:30 p. m., Mozart's Quintet for two violins, two violas and cello, and Saint-Saens' Septet for strings; 3 p. m., Chautauqua Symphony concert under Albert Stoessel.

Monday, 8:30 p. m., vocal ensemble and orchestra, directed by Alfred Wallenstein.

Tuesday, 2:30 p. m., Faure's Quartet for piano and strings played by the Brenner piano quartet; 10:30 p. m., music for four harpsichords.

Wednesday, 2:05 to 2:45 p. m., from Salzburg, "Marriage of Figaro," conducted by Bruno Walter with Lotte Lehmann.

Thursday, 8:30 p. m. to 10:45 p. m., all-Wagner program by Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, from Berkshire Music Festival.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 7 - 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OFF TO FINE START; CONCERT TONIGHT

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is off to a fine start in its new home on the beautiful estate "Tanglewood" in the Berkshire Hills over looking the Stockbridge Bowl.

An audience of 5,000 music lovers was present to welcome Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 100 men in this, its second appearance at the festival. The audience included governors of nearby states, men high in the financial world and women socially prominent, who for the moment rubbed elbows with the music student, score in hand, who was in many cases hearing his first major symphony orchestra under ideal conditions.

Mr. Koussevitzky's appearance on the podium was the signal for prolonged applause. The audience then sat back and proceeded to enjoy a performance of the immortal Beethoven's music by a group of seasoned players under the inspired baton of one of the world's great conductors.

The program started promptly at 8:30 p. m. as the performance was broadcast on a coast to coast hookup. Opening with the gay "Leonora Overture" No. 3, Mr. Koussevitzky painted his musical canvas with brilliant colors, bringing new beauties to this familiar show piece.

The sixth or "Pastorale" symphony followed and concluded with a magnificent performance of the fifth symphony, sometimes called "Fate Knocking at the Door". All the beauty of the strings, the perfection of the woodwinds and the vigor of the percussion instruments which go to make up a truly great orchestra were present last evening and a grateful audience left the enclosure with the unanimous opinion that they had for a few moments sat in the lap of the musical gods. A perspiring but happy maestro was forced to acknowledge the vociferous applause for himself and his group of artists.

The next concert of this week's series will be held tonight at 8:30 p. m.

GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1937

Serge A. Koussevitzky says, "While there are thousands of conductors (music) all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four of five are truly great."

These Are the Hands That Play the Notes That Make the Music at Tanglewood

[illegible] Eve. Eagle
Aug 7/37

DAYTIME CONCERT IS HELD AT LENOX

Audience of 5,000 on Hand for Third Program of Berkshire Festival

CONDUCTOR IS PRAISED

Koussevitzky Leads the Boston Orchestra in Rendition of Schubert Compositions

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—This afternoon's concert at Tanglewood rounded out the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. More than 5,00 were in the audience. The weather ran true to form; there was a shower before the concert for the third successive time. During the Berceuse of Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" a brief rainfall pattering on the top of the enormous canvas tent added a soothing note to the music.

It was a humid afternoon and Serge Koussevitzky asked the indulgence of the audience to permit his men to divest themselves of their coats. The audience laughed and applauded to signify its assent, and as the instrumentalists began removing their jackets and vests, men in the audience followed suit.

Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra topped the first half of the festival with another program of established classics, giving them performances of sweep and vitality. The admirers of this magnificent ensemble have not often heard it played as superbly as it has been at these concerts. The performances have been a revelation to the most venerable followers of the orchestra and its fortunes.

The secret is probably twofold; Mr. Koussevitzky has returned from a two-month vacation, rested and reinvigorated, and the audience has been as receptive and as responsive as some of the gatherings in Salzburg when Arturo Toscanini conducts.

Schubert Music Played

Today's program illustrated Mr. Koussevitzky's gift for encompassing a wide emotional gamut within the framework of a group of standard works. Two Schubert compositions—the "Rosamunde" ballet music and the B minor symphony, the "unfinished"—opened the proceedings with delicacy and depth of feeling. The unashamed sentiment and simplicity of Schubert's music were realized with graciousness of tinting and subtlety of accent.

Then came the brazen, scintillating "Fire Bird" suite, wherein Mr. Koussevitzky was able to unleash the full might of his minions. Here was virtuoso playing from a virtuoso band, equaled only by last night's gorgeously colored interpretation of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" suite. The audience rose to the Stravinsky performance, as it did in the Ravel, with an outburst of applause.

Cesar Franck's lone symphony, noble and probing in its search for one man's truth, was played with loftiness and emotional rapport.

It was well to close the week's programs with an afternoon concert. Visitors were enabled to view Tanglewood by daylight, to see the glorious southern panorama of Lake Makheenac nestling below monument Mountain. They were able to stroll through the meticulously kept formal gardens. They could feel the spirit of what Hawthorne, who lived at Tanglewood, called "rough, broken, rugged, headlong "Berkshire."

The charm of the vernal setting was also manifest last night at the second concert. As the murmorous voices of the dawn emanated from Raven's instrumentation in the exordium of the "Daphnis et Chloe" suite ,the crickets chirped in the grass on the rim of the enormous canvas tent. If the sounds of the evening were a distraction for some, they intensified, for others, their receptivity to the music.

Last night's concert began with Mozart's affecting E flat major symphony, played with enamoring warmth and with careful regard for proportion. It was a tribute to the natural acoustics of the spot as well as to the craftsmanship of the local carpenters who built the wooden band stand that the music could be heard clearly, with all its gentle nuance and ornament, hundreds of feet beyond the rear of the tent.

Composer Hill Applauded

Two movements from Edward Burlingame Hill's delightful sinfonietta for string orchestra, op. 40 A, gave the strings an opportunity to display their talents. The work went well. The audience was not satisfied until the composer, who was seated in a box, walked down the center aisle and shook hands with the conductor. The tribute was a signal honor for the only American composer represented in the festival programs. It indicated that this audience was eager to hear and appreciate music off the beaten path.

The Ravel suite, with its matchless orchestration, was a tour de force of ensemble work. It showed how Mr. Koussevitzky has trained this band to shade tone with matchless precision. Climaxes were built up irresistibly, and in the building there was a constant flux and interplay of iridescent color. The sudden decrescendo of the solo horn, achieved with breath-taking speed and yet without the slightest tonal flaw, was one of innumerable felicities of detail.

Tchaikovsky Symphony Applauded

If the Ravel interpretation produced a storm of applause, the Tchaikovsky fourth symphony evoked even a more intensive display of enthusiasm. Mr. Koussevitzky played this work as if he believed in its meaningfulness. The approach had the understanding that only a Russian could bring to Tchaikovsky., The great, crashing climaxes were done with enormous vigor.

The festival weeks in the Berkshires are providing Summer and permanent residents with fresh excitements. The visits of famous personages have added spice to the surroundings. The week-end stay of Miriam Hopkins, the filf star, at the Curtis Hotel here, not only set the halp agog but brought to the doors of the venerable inn gaping sightseers who would not know a symphony from a square dance but who know Miriam Hopkins when they see her. What is more, they meant to see her.

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIME

Second Concert Presented

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—Another audience of about 5,000 persons turned out for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tonight. It would have been larger but for a rainstorm that broke three hours before concert time. On the opening night Thursday there was a storm two hours before the start.

Serge Koussevitzky directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program that brought forth nothing new but that had, at the same time a wealth of contrast. There was the Mozart E flat major symphony, brimming over in its lyricism and charm,and Tchaikovsky's Fourth with its seething turmoil, its conflict and even its theatricalism.

Between these major offerings were set the soundly, soberly wrought sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill and the dazzling second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite by Ravel.

The first half of the festival will end tomorrow afternoon with a program devoted to Schubert's "Rosamunde" overture and "Unfinished" symphony, Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" and Cesar Franck's D minor symphony.

Experiments Avoided

It will be seen that this festival is adhering closely to standard symphonic fare. The theory is that the majority in the audience consists of people who have few opportunities to hear the master works performed by a first rank ensemble. They are not interested in experiments or recondite tonal patterns. The festival authorities are seeking to establish the good-will and enthusiasm of these people. Most of the experienced concert-goers, it should be added, seem satisfied with conservative programs.

The men and women who are developing this festival have chosen to make haste slowly. Their primary job, they feel, is to establish the fact that the festival exists. They wish to drive this point home to the people in the immediate communities and to the nation at large. Once a permanent following is achieved, variety and novelty on the programs will follow naturally.

The effect of the festival on the Berkshire towns and cities is already evident. Business in the hotels and restaurants is at a peak. A woman who runs a little antique shop near by reported a lively trade from festival visitors. Some people who have never been to the Berkshires before have begun to look around for Summer homes here.

Musicians Camping Out

A festival of this magnitude inevitably produces interesting sidelights. Here are a few culled at random:

The group of men in the Boston orchestra who are roughing it in small tents on the edge of Lake Makheenac near here. They have set up their own tents and are preparing their own meals. They expect to make the lakeside their home until the festival ends.

The sightseers who are invading Tanglewood during the day to see the site of the concerts. Some of them plan to attend; others do not. There is the usual quota of amateur photographers.

The cooperation of persons of various communities in beautifying Tanglewood, the Berkshire garden center, made up of clubs from local towns and villages, has planted colorful flower beds in the formal garden that flanks the audience tent on the south.

The useful work done by the various committees functioning during the festival. A veteran of artistic campaigns observes that he has never seen committees who labored so zealously.

The long intermissions at concerts giving the audience an opportunity to promenade through the grounds, to see the gardens with their lovely high hedges of hemlock and pine that are said to have no peers in the Berkshires. H. H. T.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL
AUG 7 - 1937

Calls Modern Music Of Europe Wretched

Boston Conductor Back From Abroad Finds Nothing Creative Among Foreign Composers

BOSTON, Aug. 6—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, said the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian born conductor on his return from Europe, which he left to direct the Berkshire Symphonic festival starting last Thursday, Aug. 5, and continuing Aug. 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15, at Stockbridge,

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were wreched, positively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

AMERICANS PRAISED.

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died recently, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said,, "an exceptional talent."

INSPIRATION NEEDED.

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too."

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all Beethoven and all Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the second symphony of Mailpiero, and a new concerto for orchestra by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
AUG 7 - 1937

RAIN FAILS TO HURT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

FIRST OF CONCERTS IS GIVEN AT TANGLEWOOD, SYMPHONY'S NEW HOME

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6-AP-The hardest possible test, rain on its opening night in its new and untried home, failed last night to disorganize the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival is beginning its fourth season, but its first at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate given the Boston Symphony last winter by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Five concerts remain, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, and Thursday, Friday and Sunday of next week.

In addition to the fact that the Boston Symphony plays in the midst of a district known for years as the summer home of many of America's great, on an estate connected through many years with Nathaniel Hawthorne, there is the odd fact that the festival is held in a circus tent.

This huge buff canvas is 180 feet wide, and 280 feet long. The orchestra is stationed at one end, in a specially designed wooden shell. The audience sits on 800 benches, each of which seats six, and on 900 chairs.

The festival directors have tried to change the appearance of Tanglwood as little as possible. But to handle the crowd, which arrives altogether by motor, three miles of fence had to be erected, an equal length of wire installed, 30 spotlights set up and even four special wires laid to care for out-going press dispatches.

Perhaps the most curious feature of the entire plant is a long walk, covered with brown canvas and connecting one of the estate barns with the music tent. This was installed to make sure that the orchestra men might reach the stage from the tuning room without getting their instruments wet. It proved its use in last night's downpour.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who has returned early from his European vacation especially to conduct the festival, opened last night with an all Beethoven program. He will close a week from Sunday with a program entirely of Brahms music, and in between he has arranged a wide assortment, from Edwin Burlingame Hill, the American, to Finland's rugged Jean Sibelius.

It is expected that 25,000 persons at least will hear Koussevitsky and his men, in their six concerts.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 7 - 1937

Party Honors Orchestra Conductor

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, who is directing the Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival, and Mrs. Koussevitsky were guests of honor at a luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia at Wheatleigh, Lenox.

Other guests were Mrs. Nicholas Brown, who is visiting Mrs. deHeredia, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Herbert S. Darlington, Miss Sibyl Darlington, Miss Helen Knox, Giraud Foster and Gardner S. Morse.

Another party in connection with the Festival was the dinner, given last night, at Linwood, Stockbridge, by Mr. and Mrs. Percy Musgrave for Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell of Wellseley, Mr. and Mrs. Ellery Sedgewick, Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Spurr Morse Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Francis Lee Higginson Jr. and Miss Ethel L. Haven.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1937

Youngest Member of Orchestra and Father Play Trumpets Under Koussevitsky's Baton

Rene Voisin, left, is fourth trumpet in the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his son, Roger, right, third trumpet and assistant first trumpet.

Among the 100 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, are a father and son, both trumpeters.

The father is Rene Voisin, 42 fourth trumpet, and the son is Roger Voisin, 19, third trumpet and asistant first trumpet in the orchestra.

Youngest Member

The son is the youngest member of the orchestra and probably the youngest man in any major orchestra in the world.

Both natives of Angerx, France, where Quantro is distilled, the father and son came to America 10 years ago. The father immediately joined the Boston Orchestra, then as now conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The son attended schools in Boston, returned to France for a year, and two years ago had an audition with Dr. Koussevitzky and was accepted as a member of the orchestra when he was only 17 years old. Since then he has continued his study of the trumpet with his father and Georges Mager, first trumpeter of the orchestra.

The father, the mother and the son have taken a cottage in Lenox for the duration of the Festival, and Roger says he is now studying the double bass as "a spare tire." He will have a qualified critic in the latter instrument in Dr. Koussevitzky, who achieved international fame as a double bass player.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 7 - 1937

TESTING HARTFORD's LOVE OF MUSIC

There is no comparison between the WPA Symphony orchestra in Hartford and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The WPAers have had a most annoying time in getting folks to pay money to hear their dulcet harmonies; and attention in the Hartford press hasn't been anything overwhelming. But the Boston Symphony—that's different.

Mr. Koussevitsky this week started the fourth Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., and it was an event such as the WPA orchestra might well envy. One writer remarked, after the first concert, that it was Mr. Koussevitsky's festival. Probably that's what ails the WPA—it hasn't Mr. Koussevitsky.

Just for fun, and to stir up a rumpus, we should like to see and hear the WPA orchestra swap conductors with the Bostonians. The state of symphonic music being what it is, we'll wager a bar of Beethoven's Fifth against a bar of chocolate that the WPAers would then draw the bigger crowd.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
AUG 7 - 1937

Second Festival Concert In Berkshires Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a program including Mozart and Tchaikovsky symphonies, two movements from Edward Burlingam Hill's string sinfonietta and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Lenox, Mass., which resumes tonight.

The opening concert was played on Thursday evening, with the program broadcast over the radio. Visitors are continuing to invade the South Berkshire countryside for the two remaining concerts over the weekend.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 7 - 1937

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT TONIGHT

Mozart and Tchaikowsky Works on Program

THIRD TOMORROW

Series A Will End With Exposition of Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck by Koussevitzky.

The second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's fourth season will be given at 8.30 o'clock this evening at Tanglewood, the permanent home on the Lenox-Stockbridge road which the festival is this year occupying for the first time.

There on Thursday evening the 1937 season opened with a triumphant appearance of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of its celebrated director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in an all-Beethoven concert.

On Sunday afternoon at 4.30 o'clock the third concert of the season will be given, concluding Series A, and then there will be an interval until next Thursday evening when Series B will start with its first concert, followed by the second in the series a week from tonight and the third on the following afternoon.

For this evening's concert, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen a program which opens with Mozart's Symphony in E flat, will continue with two movements from Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta for string orchestras and the second suite of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," and concludes with Tchaikowsky's great Fourth Symphony.

Tomorrow afternoon's concert will be devoted to Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck. It opens with the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde," then goes to his Unfinished symphony, continues with a suite from Stravinsky's "L'Oiseau de Feu," and concludes with the Franck Symphony in D minor.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 7 - 1937

Koussevitzky Acclaimed at Music Festival

Unusual Ovation Greets Boston Symphony Director When the Berkshire Event Draws 5,000

Nearly 5,000 persons, in a great tent, greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening concert Thursday night of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the first held at Tanglewood, near Lenox, the estate recently given to the festival organization.

Serge Koussevitzky, the director, received an ovation unusual even for him in the acclaim the audience tendered when he appeared and after the concert when he was recalled again and again. It was largely because of his interest in the festival and his apparent willingness to continue in this musical project in the Berkshires that Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave her beautiful estate for the permanent establishment of the festival.

Arboral Setting

The tent, as large as the "big top" of a circus, is set in the midst of the trees and on the concert night a thunderstorm hovered over the lake, which may be seen from the grounds, but it seemed to the members of the audience as if the storm took itself off as soon as Koussevitzky stepped to the podium, and left the musical storm of the Pasotral symphony ot demonstrate its thunders and lightenings.

The tent proved a perfect concert hall and every note was clearly and pleasantly heard. The musicians had said in the afternoon, after their rehearsal, that the stage arrangement with its sounding board was perfectly arranged for the orchestra. The director seemed happy to appear in the Tanglewood concert and the program went off as smoothly as any of his concerts in the home town hall.

Perhaps the dampness hampered the sound of the strings a little, but it was almost indiscernable. The program had been happily chosen for the Tanglewood opening. The "Leonore" overture No. 3 was the introductory composition and, with its beautiful structure and varied treatment of the opera subjects, proved a gratifying reintroduction of the Boston musicians to the festival audience. The audience was as happy throughout the evening as the man imagined by Beethoven in the first movement of the "Pastoral" symphony, which pictures the "awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country."

The thousands of persons were as quiet through the playing of the music as if there had been 10 in a small room. There is a passage in the second movement of Symphony No. 5 where the "Fate" theme comes back in, sounding as gentle and far away as a chorus of crickets, and that vast audience was as still as the hills outside, brooding over the songs of the real crickets.

Those who have heard the Boston orchestra and Koussevitzky many times said that never had the great "Fifth" been more magnificently played by them. It is sometimes spoken of as an expression of revolution and surely it has a message for a troubled time. In the midst of the quiet hills in a countryside which has memories of Nathaniel Hawthorne and Herman Melville, where the Berkshire festival is establishing a new feature of American culture, the magnificent music of Beethoven, played as this director plays it, gave again on Thursday night, its great enunciation of the fact that the human spirit is greater than any of the obstacles which it has to overcome.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 8 - 1937

It should not escape notice that on the day that the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitsky, opened the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at "Tanglewood" in Lenox, the Boston Red Sox, for the first time in 18 years so late in the season, rose to second place in the American baseball league. Thus was the Massachusetts tradition of culture simultaneously upheld at the opposite ends of the state.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 7 - 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL HAD A GALA OPENING

It was thundering on the distant left as thousands of motorists were being escorted to parking space by 60 Massachusetts police Thursday evening. But there the threat ended.

Nothing transpired to mar the most auspicious opening ever experienced by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival near Lenox, Mass. The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its new summer "home," the Tanglewood of Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," was a stunning success, musically and socially.

Rarely has Beethoven been accorded the sympathetic treatment that was his Thursday night. It was easy to imagine the immortal Ludwig's astral self smiling down upon the proceedings. For, if the master's shade ever had occasion to smile approval, it was on the fine reading of his works bestowed upon the ear by Serge Koussevitzky and his skillful men.

The inaugural festival program included three of Beethoven's best known masterpieces, the "Lenore" overture, No. 3, and both the Fifth and Sixth Symphonies.

The second concert of the Festival is scheduled tonight and only wild horses could keep away those who were present at the opening. A third program will be heard Sunday afternoon and three more late next week.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 7 - 1937

MUSIC DIRECTOR TO PLAY TUESDAY

Charles L. Safford Will Give Another Lecture-Recital on Festival Music in Chapin Hall.

Charles L. Safford, director of music at William college, will give another lecture-recital on the music that is being offered 'at the current Berkshire Symphonic festival on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in Chapin hall. He will play and comment on selections from the works that Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra are to play during Concert Series B at Lenox next week.

Several Williamstown patrons of music were among the 5,000 that witnessed the opening of the 1937 festival on Thursday, at Tanglewood, Lenox, its new and permanent home. Others will motor down there tonight and again tomorrow afternoon for the second and third programs of Series A

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 8 1937

THURSDAY

American Music Cycle, by Frances Blaisdell, flutist, and a string quartet: WEAF, 2 P. M.

Theme; Variations (flute and strings).Beach
Village Festival (flute, two violins, cello) Foster
"Old Folks" Quadrilles (flute, violins, cello) ....Foster

Orchestral Concert under the baton of Philip James, guest conductor: WABC, 8-9 P. M.

Overture, "Die Fledermus".........Strauss
Berceuse ....Jarnefeldt
Symphony No. 95 in C Minor........Haydn
Dance Before the Ark, "King David" Honegger
The Moldau ....Smetana

Berkshire Festival Concert, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the concluding broadcast from Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass. Works by Richard Wagner comprise the two-and-a-quarter-hour concert: Overture to "Rienzi"; Siegfried Idyll; Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde," Ride of the Valkyries, "Die Walkure"; Waldweben from "Siegfried"; Prelude to "Parsifal," and Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, is program annotator: WJZ, 8:30 P. M.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1937

Larger Crowd Expected Tonight at Tanglewood Than at First Concert

Sellout of Rear Section Predicted by Festival Directors—Concert Will Start Promptly at 8.30—Slight Changes Made in Physical Arrangements To Handle Throngs Tonight and Tomorrow Afternoon—Orchestra Rehearses

Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge will be the mecca of music lovers again tonight when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton will give the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. An audience larger than the one at the opening Thursday night is indicated. The concert will start promptly at 8.30. Tomorrow's concert will start at 4.30 P. M. A sellout of the rear section at least is expected for tonight and tomorrow.

Tonight's program will be:

Tonight's Program

Symphony in E flat .... Mozart
Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra .... Hill
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe" Ravel
Symphony No. 4 .... Tchaikovsky

Sunday's Program

Tomorrow's program follows:
Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony .... Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu" Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor .... Franck

This morning, the 100 members of the orchestra converged from many points for a rehearsal in the huge canopy at Tanglewood.

Slight Changes

Since Thursday night, the Festival staff has been busy making minor changes in physical arrangements for handling the large crowds expected tonight and tomorrow. The changes have been slight, but they are intended to add to the convenience of the public.

A walk is to be provided for pedestrains from the north parking area. The auxiliary entrance on Hawthorne Street has been improved to prevent skidding in case of wet weather. The light over the podium has been shielded to prevent its glaring in the eyes of the audience. More benches have been added to the rear section.

Many Visitors

Tanglewood has been visited by hundreds of music lovers since Thursday. There was one constant stream of travel into the grounds yesterday and this morning. Many came to familiarize themselves with the parking facilities, others to see the canopy, many others to inspect the lovely gardens and have another glimpse of the view across Lake Mahkeenac.

Several trustees of the orchestra have been at the scene. Edward A. Taft and Mrs. Taft were among the visitors yesterday. Mr. Taft expressed himself as pleased with the opening concerts, the way the crowd was handled and the entire set-up at Tanglewood.

Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston trustees, was among the several guests at a luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, first vice president of the Festival in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. Others at the luncheon included Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival president; Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge and Gardner S. Morse of Pittsfield.

Down From Toronto

George Mazzoleni, brother-in-law of Sir Ernest MacMillan of Toronto and party are in the Berkshires in preference to going abroad. Sir Ernest is conducting the British Broadcasting Orchestra this summer.

Montreal Represented

Thomas Archer, music critic of the Montreal Gazette telegraphed yesterday that he was on his way to cover the Festival for his newspaper. He swells the total of newspapers and magazines represented at the Festival to 50.

Broadcast Heard

Many favorable reports have been heard from the NBC broadcast of the Thursday concert over the blue network. Exceptionally good reception was reported from distant points including Boston, New York, Chicago and New Hampshire. The only other concert to be broadcast will be next Thursday.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN
AUG 8 - 1937

2 Music Events To Go on Air

Two important musical events will be broadcast by WJZ during the coming week

On Wednesday from the quaint old town of Salzburg, where the annual festival is being held, will come a portion of "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart. Conducted by Bruno Walter and starring Lotte Lehmann, the broadcast will be heard over WJZ and the NBC-Blue Network from 2:05 to 2:45 p. m.

The following day an all-Wagner concert will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, from Tanglewood, a beautifully-wooded 210-acre estate in the Berkshires. The concert will be broadcast over the WJZ-Blue Network from 8:30 to 10:45 p. m.

"Tanglewood Tales" Festival Edition

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival, will be in attendance at the concerts next week.

* * * * *

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, announces that the Pittsfield office on South Street, will be open Sunday from 10 to 1 for the accommodation of persons wishing information and tickets.

* * * * *

Two famous names were added to the guest book at the Berkshire Museum yesterday. The book lies on the desk used by Hawthorne, when he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." The guests registered were Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, who is giving lectures on the Festival music at the Museum and his host, Owen Johnson of Stockbridge.

* * * * *

Advance sales for the concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon indicate a sellout.

* * * * *

Joseph Franz, Festival trustee, is responsible for the lighting effect which at night transforms the Tanglewood gardens into fairyland.

* * * * *

The Festival management is providing a wheel chair through the courtesy of House of Mercy Hospital, for a cripple from Albany. This accommodation will make it possible for the man to attend the concert tomorrow in comfort.

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1937

Society Divides Its Enthusiastic Attention Between Local Opera and Berkshire Festival

THE month of August will be an active period from the musical standpoint, both here and in the east.

One of the greatest treats in years in store for Toledoans will be three open-air operas, which will be held out-of-doors in the amphitheater at Walbridge park.

Many parties are being formed to attend the opening this evening of "Aida" by the Cincinnati Summer Opera company.

All is activity at Tanglewood, Mass., midway between Lennox and Stockbridge, where the fourth annual Berkshire music festival opened last week.

Six concerts comprise the festival, three last week and the last three to be given next Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. S. Cornell Walbridge and Mrs. William A. Gosline, Jr., are leaving tomorrow to motor east, where they will be guests of Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister in her box.

Mrs. Hollister, who is one of the sponsors of the festival, also will entertain her sister, Miss Olive S. Colton; Miss Katherine Geddes and Mrs. Zorah Bowman, Toledoans who are at their summer home at Chappaqua, N. Y., and Mrs. Harriet Berry Tyson, of Baltimore.

The Toledoans will all be guests at the Curtis House, at Lennox.

FOR the Berkshire music festival, a marquee with seating capacity of 5,000, was set up north of the gardens; a new and larger shell has been built for Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, and his eighty musicians; two parking areas have been provided for three thousand cars, and several miles of wire strung for illumination and telegraph.

Typical of the Civil War period, Tanglewood House was completed in 1865. The ornate formal garden is surrounded by a hemlock hedge.

The former tennis court is now a rose garden. Entrance to the garden is through an ornamental iron gate, which came from Florence, Italy.

For eighty-eight years, Tanglewood was the summer home of the Tappan family. Miss Mary Aspinwall, of Brookline, who with her niece Mrs. Gorham Brooks, last February gave the property to the Boston Symphony orchestra, is a daughter of the founder of the orchestra.

From 1851 to 1853, Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in a little red cottage on the place, and there he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." A bronze tablet marks the site of the cottage, which was burned June 22, 1890. Hawthorne avenue, flanked by rows of Hawthorne pines, runs through the 210-acre estate.

EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER
AUG 8 - 1937

Notes of Music

BY MARY M'CORMICK

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, cond[illegible] the Boston Symphon[illegible] who has recently returned from abroad, says the present crop of young European composers is turning out consistently bad music.

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festival of contemporary music in Paris were positively wretched," he stated. "The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky is directing the Berkshire Symphonic festival which opened Thursday at Stockbridge, Connecticut, and will continue through August 15. The programs, most of which are of a classic nature, will include several all-Beethoven and all-Wagner performances.

* * * *

The Federal Theater's summer program of operettas will open tonight in Burnet Woods, Cincinnati, with a presentation of the "Prince of Pilsen." Other productions will include "Chocolate Soldier," "The Mikado," "Pirates of Penzance," and possibly "Hiawatha."

A new stage has been built and 5,000 seats have been assembled for the season.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 8 - 1937

U. S. COMPOSER TRIUMPHS IN MUSIC FESTIVAL

Notable Program Is Presented At Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7.—(AP—Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight drew a second capacity audience of 5,000 to the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival. This was the second program of the second season of the Boston orchestra's participation.

An American composer triumphed in tonight's concert. He was Edward Burlinghame Hill, member of the faculty of the department of music at Harvard university. Four times he was called to his feet by tumultuous applause, and then was summoned to the stage by the urgent gestures of Koussevitzky.

His composition was "Sinfonia" for string orchestra. This he had transcribed from his "String Quartet Opus 40." The short work, in two movements, was tinged with acid harmonies, yet displayed a strong vein of melody.

Prof. Hill's inclusion in tonight's program was especially noteworthy in view of Koussevitzky's recent statement, after a vacation in Europe, that in contemporary European composition he had heard almost wholly "music of the seventh class," but that America's contemporary composers were the most serious in the world today.

The "Sinfonietta" of Hill was given the distinction of being placed after the great classic symphony of Mozart, that in E flat major, and before Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," which Koussevitzky recently named as one of the works of living composers which has taken rank as a classic.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1937

"King of Country Fiddlers" Likes Dr. Koussevitzky, but Suggests Use of Other Hand

Discarding his famous fiddle late this morning to don the robes of criticism, George R. Sweet, self-styled king of country fiddlers, put his stamp of approval on Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"A few more years," George said, "and those boys are going to be good. Because I think that the Festival is a great thing, I am willing to offer my services at any time to help Dr. Koussevitzky with his string section."

Would Use Other Hand

King Sweet has but one complaint to make concerning the orchestra.

"It seems to me," he said, "that Serge misses an opportunity. I don't see no reason why he shouldn't use his other hand. Of [illegible] handle at least a piccolo with the other.

"Now that I think of it, there is another thing," he continues. "It seems to me that the Festival people oughta have enough chairs for the orchestra. I saw the other night in the second set there was a 'fella' playing the cornet out behind the tent. Something oughta be done about that.

"None of our players down at the Mayflower dance in Lenox Town Hall next Friday are going to be stuck outside the hall.

"And a word ought to be said for the men at the big bull fiddles who never get a minute to sit down."

Symphony in the Berkshires

Group all your superlatives together and even then you'll fall far short of truly describing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival being held at Stockbridge.

In the beautiful surroundings of "Tanglewood," peerless Boston Symphony Orchestra is presenting a half dozen concerts of familiar works.

It is the outstanding summer musical event in America. Just as Salzburg in Austria is famed for its festivals, so have the Berkshire concerts made Stockbridge a musical mecca.

Music lovers from all over the country, Canada and local communities are enjoying Beethoven, Wagner and other great composers as interpreted by the Boston orchestra.

But let there be no mistake. The Berkshire festival is not just another Salzburg. In four seasons it has achieved the distinction of being a truly fine festival in its own right.

Before long it is entirely possible that the Berkshire festival will take unto itself a character, a personality distinctively in harmony with its locale.

New England is happy to have within its borders such an impressive cultural venture.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1937

Larger Crowd Expected Tonight at Tanglewood Than at First Concert

Sellout of Rear Section Predicted by Festival Directors—Concert Will Start Promptly at 8.30—Slight Changes Made in Physical Arrangements To Handle Throngs Tonight and Tomorrow Afternoon—Orchestra Rehearses

Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge will be the mecca of music lovers again tonight when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton will give the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. An audience larger than the one at the opening Thursday night is indicated. The concert will start promptly at 8.30. Tomorrow's concert will start at 4.30 P. M. A sellout of the rear section at least is expected for tonight and tomorrow.

Tonight's program will be:

Tonight's Program

Symphony in E flat	Mozart
Two Movements from the Sinfonietta for String Orchestra	Hill
Second Suite, "Daphnis and Chloe"	Ravel
Symphony No. 4	Tchaikovsky

Sunday's Program

Tomorrow's program follows:

Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"	Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony	Schubert
Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu"	Stravinsky
Symphony in D minor	Franck

This morning, the 100 members of the orchestra converged from many points for a rehearsal in the huge canopy at Tanglewood.

Slight Changes

Since Thursday night, the Festival staff has been busy making minor changes in physical arrangements for handling the large crowds expected tonight and tomorrow. The changes have been slight, but they are intended to add to the convenience of the public.

A walk is to be provided for pedestrains from the north parking area. The auxiliary entrance on Hawthorne Street has been improved to prevent skidding in case of wet weather. The light over the podium has been shielded to prevent its glaring in the eyes of the audience. More benches have been added to the rear section.

Many Visitors

Tanglewood has been visited by hundreds of music lovers since Thursday. There was one constant stream of travel into the grounds yesterday and this morning. Many came to familiarize themselves with the parking facilities, others to see the canopy, many others to inspect the lovely gardens and have another glimpse of the view across Lake Mahkeenac.

Several trustees of the orchestra have been at the scene. Edward A. Taft and Mrs. Taft were among the visitors yesterday. Mr. Taft expressed himself as pleased with the opening concerts, the way the crowd was handled and the entire set-up at Tanglewood.

Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston trustees, was among the several guests at a luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, first vice president of the Festival in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. Others at the luncheon included Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival president; Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge and Gardner S. Morse of Pittsfield.

Down From Toronto

George Mazzoleni, brother-in-law of Sir Ernest MacMillan of Toronto and party are in the Berkshires in preference to going abroad. Sir Ernest is conducting the British Broadcasting Orchestra this summer.

Montreal Represented

Thomas Archer, music critic of the Montreal Gazette telegraphed yesterday that he was on his way to cover the Festival for his newspaper. He swells the total of newspapers and magazines represented at the Festival to 50.

Broadcast Heard

Many favorable reports have been heard from the NBC broadcast of the Thursday concert over the blue network. Exceptionally good reception was reported from distant points including Boston, New York, Chicago and New Hampshire. The only other concert to be broadcast will be next Thursday.

"Tanglewood Tales" Festival Edition

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival, will be in attendance at the concerts next week.

* * * * *

Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, announces that the Pittsfield office on South Street, will be open Sunday from 10 to 1 for the accommodation of persons wishing information and tickets.

* * * * *

Two famous names were added to the guest book at the Berkshire Museum yesterday. The book lies on the desk used by Hawthorne, when he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." The guests registered were Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, who is giving lectures on the Festival music at the Museum and his host, Owen Johnson of Stockbridge.

* * * * *

Advance sales for the concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon indicate a sellout.

* * * * *

Joseph Franz, Festival trustee, is responsible for the lighting effect which at night transforms the Tanglewood gardens into fairyland.

* * * * *

The Festival management is providing a wheel chair through the courtesy of House of Mercy Hospital, for a cripple from Albany. This accommodation will make it possible for the man to attend the concert tomorrow in comfort.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN
AUG 8 - 1937

2 Music Events To Go on Air

Two important musical events will be broadcast by WJZ during the coming week

On Wednesday from the quaint old town of Salzburg, where the annual festival is being held, will come a portion of "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart. Conducted by Bruno Walter and starring Lotte Lehmann, the broadcast will be heard over WJZ and the NBC-Blue Network from 2:05 to 2:45 p. m.

The following day an all-Wagner concert will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, from Tanglewood, a beautifully-wooded 210-acre estate in the Berkshires. The concert will be broadcast over the WJZ-Blue Network from 8:30 to 10:45 p. m.

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1937

Society Divides Its Enthusiastic Attention Between Local Opera and Berkshire Festival

THE month of August will be an active period from the musical standpoint, both here and in the east.

One of the greatest treats in years in store for Toledoans will be three open-air operas, which will be held out-of-doors in the amphitheater at Walbridge park.

Many parties are being formed to attend the opening this evening of "Aida" by the Cincinnati Summer Opera company.

All is activity at Tanglewood, Mass., midway between Lennox and Stockbridge, where the fourth annual Berkshire music festival opened last week.

Six concerts comprise the festival, three last week and the last three to be given next Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. S. Cornell Walbridge and Mrs. William A. Gosline, Jr., are leaving tomorrow to motor east, where they will be guests of Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister in her box.

Mrs. Hollister, who is one of the sponsors of the festival, also will entertain her sister, Miss Olive S. Colton; Miss Katherine Geddes and Mrs. Zorah Bowman, Toledoans who are at their summer home at Chappaqua, N. Y., and Mrs. Harriet Berry Tyson, of Baltimore.

The Toledoans will all be guests at the Curtis House, at Lennox.

FOR the Berkshire music festival, a marquee with seating capacity of 5,000, was set up north of the gardens; a new and larger shell has been built for Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, and his eighty musicians; two parking areas have been provided for three thousand cars, and several miles of wire strung for illumination and telegraph.

Typical of the Civil War period, Tanglewood House was completed in 1865. The ornate formal garden is surrounded by a hemlock hedge.

The former tennis court is now a rose garden. Entrance to the garden is through an ornamental iron gate, which came from Florence, Italy.

For eighty-eight years, Tanglewood was the summer home of the Tappan family. Miss Mary Aspinwall, of Brookline, who with her niece Mrs. Gorham Brooks, last February gave the property to the Boston Symphony orchestra, is a daughter of the founder of the orchestra.

From 1851 to 1853, Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in a little red cottage on the place, and there he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." A bronze tablet marks the site of the cottage, which was burned June 22, 1890. Hawthorne avenue, flanked by rows of Hawthorne pines, runs through the 210-acre estate.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1937

"King of Country Fiddlers" Likes Dr. Koussevitzky, but Suggests Use of Other Hand

Discarding his famous fiddle late this morning to don the robes of criticism, George R. Sweet, self-styled king of country fiddlers, put his stamp of approval on Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"A few more years," George said, "and those boys are going to be good. Because I think that the Festival is a great thing, I am willing to offer my services at any time to help Dr. Koussevitzky with his string section."

Would Use Other Hand

King Sweet has but one complaint to make concerning the orchestra.

"It seems to me," he said, "that Serge misses an opportunity. I don't see no reason why he shouldn't use his other hand. Of course, the baton keeps one hand busy, but he oughta be able to handle at least a piccolo with the other.

"Now that I think of it, there is another thing," he continues. "It seems to me that the Festival people oughta have enough chairs for the orchestra. I saw the other night in the second set there was a 'fella' playing the cornet out behind the tent. Something oughta be done about that.

"None of our players down at the Mayflower dance in Lenox Town Hall next Friday are going to be stuck outside the hall.

"And a word ought to be said for the men at the big bull fiddles who never get a minute to sit down."

---

ny in the Berkshires

your superlatives together and even then you'll ar short of truly describing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival being held at Stockbridge.

In the beautiful surroundings of "Tanglewood," peerless Boston Symphony Orchestra is presenting a half dozen concerts of familiar works.

It is the outstanding summer musical event in America. Just as Salzburg in Austria is famed for its festivals, so have the Berkshire concerts made Stockbridge a musical mecca.

Music lovers from all over the country, Canada and local communities are enjoying Beethoven, Wagner and other great composers as interpreted by the Boston orchestra.

But let there be no mistake. The Berkshire festival is not just another Salzburg. In four seasons it has achieved the distinction of being a truly fine festival in its own right.

Before long it is entirely possible that the Berkshire festival will take unto itself a character, a personality distinctively in harmony with its locale.

New England is happy to have within its borders such an impressive cultural venture.

EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER
AUG 8 - 1937

Notes of Music

BY MARY M'CORMICK

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, cond[illegible] the Boston Symphon[illegible] who has recently ret[illegible] abroad, says the pres[illegible] young European compos[illegible] turning out consistently bad [illegible]

"Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth festi[illegible] of contemporary music in [illegible] were positively wretched," he stated. "The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say.

"Our American composers are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky is directing the Berkshire Symphonic festival which opened Thursday at Stockbridge, Connecticut, and will continue through August 15. The programs, most of which are of a classic nature, will include several all-Beethoven and all-Wagner performances.

* * * *

The Federal Theater's summer program of operettas will open tonight in Burnet Woods, Cincinnati, with a presentation of the "Prince of Pilsen." Other productions will include "Chocolate Soldier," "The Mikado," "Pirates of Penzance," and possibly "Hiawatha."

A new stage has been built and 5,000 seats have been assembled for the season.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 8 - 1937

U. S. COMPOSER TRIUMPHS IN MUSIC FESTIVAL

Notable Program Is Presented At Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7.—(AP—Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight drew a second capacity audience of 5,000 to the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival. This was the second program of the second season of the Boston orchestra's participation.

An American composer triumphed in tonight's concert. He was Edward Burlinghame Hill, member of the faculty of the department of music at Harvard university. Four times he was called to his feet by tumultuous applause, and then was summoned to the stage by the urgent gestures of Koussevitzky.

His composition was "Sinfonia" for string orchestra. This he had transcribed from his "String Quartet Opus 40." The short work, in two movements, was tinged with acid harmonies, yet displayed a strong vein of melody.

Prof. Hill's inclusion in tonight's program was especially noteworthy in view of Koussevitzky's recent statement, after a vacation in Europe, that in contemporary European composition he had heard almost wholly "music of the seventh class," but that America's contemporary composers were the most serious in the world today.

The "Sinfonietta" of Hill was given the distinction of being placed after the great classic symphony of Mozart, that in E flat major, and before Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," which Koussevitzky recently named as one of the works of living composers which has taken rank as a classic.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

AUG 8 - 1937

Festival to Go on Chain

Boston Symphony at Berkshire Fete.

TWO complete concerts from the nation's finest summer festival of orchestral music, the Berkshire Symphonic festival, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be heard over NBC. The first, an all-Beethoven program, will be broadcast Thursday from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m. over the NBC-Blue network. The second program will be broadcast over the same network on Aug. 12.

Working to Match Bayreuth, Salzburg

For the opening program of the festival, now in its fourth season, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Third Leonore Overture, the Sixth, or Pastoral, Symphony, and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky will make his second appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra as a unit at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, a summer series which its founders hope to develop into an institution comparable to the great Salzburg and Bayreuth festivals in Europe.

The response last year by thousands of music lovers from New England and the Middle Atlantic states led to doubling of the festival program this season. It is now permanently installed at Tanglewood, a beautifully wooded estate in the Berkshire hills, near Stockbridge, Mass.

Regular Symphony Will Be Heard

The Berkshire festival represents something new in American music. Heretofore, the country's summer programs have consisted largely of series of popular concerts.

For the Berkshire festival, however, the entire personnel of the Boston Symphony orchestra is being thoroughly rehearsed under its regular conductor for six programs of the highest order.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1937

Big Orchestra Gives Concert in Berkshires

Music dominates the scene this week-end in the Berkshire hills. Before a great audience in a marquee with seating capacity of 5,000 the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight gave its second concert of the first series at historic and beautiful Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" for children. There the author lived in a little red cottage, since burned, from 1851 to 1853.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Mr. and Mrs. James Ransom Walker of the Hotel Ambassador East had as their box guests tonight at the concert Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Loesch of the Drake hotel and Mr. and Mrs. Holmes Forsythe [F. Marion Smith] of Princeton, N. J. The Loesches motored over from Cooperstown, N. Y., where they have a summer home.

Mrs. David Shields Cook Jr., sister of Mrs. Walker, who was their guest, has departed for Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. Felix Lamond of Rome, Italy, from whom Mr. and Mrs. Walker bought Fair Acres on Prospect hill about twenty years ago, were at Stockbridge this week as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet.

- - -

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC IS HEARD BY 5,000

Rain Holds Down Attendance at Second Concert of the Symphonic Festival

FIRST HALF TO END TODAY

Afternoon Bill to Consist of Works by Schubert, Franck and Stravinsky

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—Another audience of about 5,000 persons turned out for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tonight. It would have been larger but for a rainstorm that broke three hours before concert time. On the opening night Thursday there was a storm two hours before the start.

Serge Koussevitzky directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a pr[redacted]hat brought forth nothing new but that had, at the same time a wealth of contrast. There was the Mozart E flat major symphony, brimming over in its lyricism and charm, and Tchaikovsky's Fourth with its seething turmoil, its conflict and even its theatricalism.

Between these major offerings were set the soundly, soberly wrought sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill and the dazzling second "Da[redacted]Chloe" suite by Ravel.

The first half of the festival will end tomorrow afternoon with a program devoted to Schubert's "Rosamunde" overture and "Unfinished" symphony, Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" and Cesar Franck's D minor symphony.

Experiments Avoided

It will be seen that this festival is adhering closely to standard symphonic fare. The theory is that the majority in the audience consists of people who have few opportunities to hear the master works performed by a first rank ensemble. They are not interested in experiments or recondite tonal patterns. The festival authorities are seeking to establish the good-will and enthusiasm of these people. Most of the experienced concertgoers, it should be added, seem satisfied with conservative programs.

The men and women who are developing this festival have chosen to make haste slowly. Their primary job, they feel, is to establish the fact that the festival exists. They wish to drive this point home to the people in the immediate communities and to the nation at large. Once a permanent following is achieved, variety and novelty on the programs will follow naturally.

The effect of the festival on the Berkshire towns and cities is already evident. Business in the hotels and restaurants is at a peak. A woman who runs a little antique shop near by reported a lively trade from festival visitors. Some people who have never been to the Berkshires before have begun to look around for Summer homes here.

Musicians Camping Out

A festival of this magnitude inevitably produces interesting sidelights. Here are a few culled at random:

The group of men in the Boston orchestra who are roughing it in small tents on the edge of Lake Makheenac near here. They have set up their own tents and are preparing their own meals. They expect to make the lakeside their home until the festival ends.

The sightseers who are invading Tanglewood during the day to see the site of the concerts. Some of them plan to attend; others do not. There is the usual quota of amateur photographers.

The cooperation of persons of various communities in beautifying Tanglewood, the Berkshire garden center, made up of clubs from local towns and villages, has planted colorful flower beds in the formal garden that flanks the audience tent on the south.

The useful work done by the various committees functioning during the festival. A veteran of artistic campaigns observes that he has never seen committees who labored so zealously.

The long intermissions at concerts giving the audience an opportunity to promenade through the grounds, to see the gardens with their lovely high hedges of hemlock and pine that are said to have no peers in the Berkshires.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1937

Koussevitzky Heard by 5,000 In 2d Concert

Admirers Travel Hundreds of Miles for Program at Berkshire Festival

Tent at Lenox Is Used

He Conducts Boston Group in a Variety of Works

By Francis D. Perkins

TANGLEWOOD-IN-THE-BERKSHIRES, Lenox, Aug. 7.—Long lines of cars again wound their way up the driveways and clustered thickly in the parking fields this evening on the Tanglewood estate, bringing more than 5,000 patrons to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the second concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The opening program on Thursday had been entirely devoted to Beethoven's music, but Dr. Koussevitzky's choices for tonight ranged more widely in time and space, beginning with a work composed in 1788, Mozart's Symphony in E Flat Number 543 in the Koechel Catalogue and two movements from a work of this decade, a sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill, of Harvard University. Ravel's second suite of music from his Ballet Daphnis et Chloe completed the first half of the concert and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony followed the intermission.

Except for the American work, all the works on the program were thoroughly familiar to habitual or casual concert goers. Mozart's music is one of the mediums in which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony are likely to be at their best, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony and the Ravel suite, both works of vivid instrumental hues, represent types of music which display most advantageously the seldom paralleled skill and virtuosity of the orchestra and the interpretative talents of its director.

Professor Hill's sinfonietta numbered Op. Forty A is a transcription of a string quartet composed two summers ago. The present orchestral version, made at Dr. Koussevitzky's suggestion, was played by the Boston Symphony in New York last season.

The weather continued to favor the festival. As on Thursday, there was a series of showers early in the evening, but it began to clear up during the hour before the concert. Rain indeed would not have caused a postponement, as the water-tight qualities of the vast tent housing the orchestra and the audience had been fully tested.

As it was, the attendance was well over the 4,300 figure of Thursday night, and the prospect at the start of the program was that every seat would be sold. It was said that the broadcasting of Thursday's concert had induced several music lovers to travel for long distances, in some cases hundreds of miles, to the Berkshires to hear tonight's program.

The first part of the festival closed this afternoon with a program including Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Cesar Franck's Symphony. The last three concerts will be given next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, August 12, 14 and 15. The orchestra will not be idle, however, during the first three days ow this week, as Dr. Koussevitzky will hold intensive rehearsals every morning in the tent at Tanglewood.

Professor Hill's music gave its hearers exceptional pleasure, judging by the ovation bestowed upon the composer at the close. Dr. Koussevitzky signaled to him to rise from his seat in the middle of the house, but after he had bowed several times, the demonstration continued, and he was finally summoned to the stage for more plaudits as he shook hands with the conductor.

The applause was well deserved, as the two movements performed, a meditative moderato and a graceful scherzo, are the work of a composer who is not only a thorough and experienced craftsman but one gifted with imagination and poetic sensitiveness. His melodies in this movement have form, line and profile, his harmonic medium is individual and cannot properly be described by any of the conventional descriptive tickets. The flavor is not for the most part distonic, but is not modernistic in the sense in which one is want to regard this term as a synonym for harmonic acridity. It suggests rather that the modes of a far earlier day as well as harmonies of the present have been fused in an entirely homogenous and personal style.

The moderato is based on a memorably plangent theme and a solemn march in the lower strings. In the light-footed scherzo the middle section is masterly in use of subtly changing harmonic hues. Dr. Koussevitzky is to be congratulated on his choice for the American contribution to the festival.

The performance, like its predecessor, was marked by the usual high executive and interpretative standards of this orchestra. In the Mozart symphony there were a few moments in a mainly laudable performance when the interpretation did not penetrate much beyond the surface, and acoustic conditions made the brass choir stand out unduly at times, rather than blending with the general orchestral tone. Otherwise, acoustic conditions were excellent. The Hill work received a performance of notable richness, sonority and persuasive eloquence, and the Ravel suite, as in Carnegie and Symphony halls, had a brilliant and memorably inspiriting performance that evoked arde and fully deserved applause.

CONCERT DRAWS CROWD OF 5300

Biggest of Series Hears Symphony

LENOX, Aug. 8—The first series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting ended tonight at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the largest crowd of any of this week-end's three concerts in attendance.

It is estimated that the 5300 people crowded under the huge tent to hear compositions by Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck. The total attendance for the three concerts was approximately 16,500. Next week's concerts, which will open Thursday night with an all Wagner programme, are expected to exceed all past attendance records.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

TANGLEWOOD IN THE BERKSHIRES, Aug. 8—The first week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end with this afternoon's concert. The connection of the Boston Symphony orchestra with the festival has proved a distinct success, though that was evident last year. Doubtless the weather, which threatened rain at all three concerts and was in addition oppressively warm this afternoon, has interfered with the presence of a capacity audience for each concert. Nevertheless each day has seen more inside the tent, though it was possible to notice that a few reserved seats were empty.

Schubert's "Rosamunde" music was delightful to hear and was played with infinite delicacy and grace. It is hard to imagine that these of all qualities can be effectively heard in the open air, yet there could be no questioning the fact that they did succeed in reaching the large audience, some 5000 strong. After this introductory piece Dr. Koussevitzky asked the audience's permission for the musicians to take off their coats. This was granted with applause.

The Unfinished Symphony was, it seemed to us, somewhat labored in the interpretation. The second movement, in particular, was dragged. No doubt Dr. Koussevitzky feels the necessity to dramatize to some extent the music that might otherwise be lost in space. Still the treatment was not completely successful with Schubert's Unfinished.

On the other hand Stravinsky's Firebird suite sounded extremely well. The music is by now familiar enough to the public so that the action on the stage is not essential. At any rate the playing was superb, and was unquestionably appreciated by the audience.

For a conclusion Franck's symphony, which is known and loved far and wide, was probably the most thoroughly appreciated. In the concert hall it has sometimes been suggested that the symphony has been played too much, but these objections disappear in a festival and with a crowd imbued by the festival spirit.

The same number of concerts will be given at Tanglewood next week and indications are that there will be no falling off in enthusiasm or attendance. This is as it should be and augurs well for the future of the festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1937

Boston Symphony Plays in Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Conducts Today, Thursday Night, Saturday and Sunday

The first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., closes this afternoon at 4:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schubert's ballet music from "Rosamunde" and Unfinished Symphony, Stravinsky's suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu" and Cesar Franck's symphony.

The three remaining concerts of the festival will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4:30. On Thursday night Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a Wagner program including the "Rienzi" overture, Siegfried Idyll, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Ride of the Valkyries, Waldweben from "Siegfried," prelude to "Parsifal" and overture to "Tannhäuser." Saturday night's program consists of Haydn's symphony in G, No. 13 (88), Sibelius's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade." Dr. Koussevitzky's closing program next Sunday afternoon consists of Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture and Brahms's third and first symphonies.

Thursday's program will be broadcast over the NBC blue network. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield next Thursday and Friday mornings at 11 o'clock.

Several other musical and dramatic events, including the daily theatrical performances at Stockbridge, will be presented in the region during the festival period. Today at 4 o'clock there will be chamber music programs by the South Mountain Quartet at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, and the Gordon Quartet at Music Mountain Falls Village, Conn., and a performance by the dramatic department of the Cummington School at Cummington.

Ted Shawn and his men's dance group will give a lecture demonstration Friday afternoon at their farm, Jacob's Pillow, near Becket, Mass., and a recital Saturday afternoon at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

Information about tickets, lodging, etc., is obtainable from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

SYMPHONY PLAYS IN SHIRT SLEEVES

Third in Berkshire Series Presented at Stockbridge; Mozart Program

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—The third program of the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival was put thru this afternoon with a success all the more gratifying because of the anxious suspense due to the uncertain weather. A semi-outdoor festival in New England lives dangerously, and each concert is an exciting adventure, but yesterday's violent thunderstorm had used up the surplus atmospheric energy, and conditions this afternoon were not unfavorable except for humidity which led Dr. Koussevitzky to ask the auditnce if ~~he~~ and the orchestra might take off their coats.

Permission was rapturously granted, and perhaps the emancipation added to the efficiency as well as to the comfort of the musicians; there was audible speculation as to whether it was not a new record for the Boston Symphony orchestra. It might very well be a precedent for to musicians having to dress up is the worst of summer concert giving; in shirtsleeves they can practice stoically no matter how hot it gets.

The sultry air perhaps did reduce somewhat the resonance of the instruments, impairing slightly that soft luscious brilliance which comes from the free emission of overtones, but there was no lack of power, and the performance was kept up to the high standard set by the Beethoven program, and by the Mozart and Tschaikowsky symphonies presented last night.

The audience, of well over 5000 people, was said to be the largest in the festival's history, and the arrangements for extricating cars from the ample parking space had a satisfactory test.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

128

AUG 8 - 1937

Festival to Go on Chain

Boston Symphony at Berkshire Fete.

TWO complete concerts from the nation's finest summer festival of orchestral music, the Berkshire Symphonic festival, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be heard over NBC. The first, an all-Beethoven program, will be broadcast Thursday from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m. over the NBC-Blue network. The second program will be broadcast over the same network on Aug. 12.

Working to Match Bayreuth, Salzburg

For the opening program of the festival, now in its fourth season, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Third Leonore Overture, the Sixth, or Pastoral, Symphony, and the dynamic Fifth Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky will make his second appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra as a unit at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, a summer series which its founders hope to develop into an institution comparable to the great Salzburg and Bayreuth festivals in Europe.

The response last year by thousands of music lovers from New England and the Middle Atlantic states led to doubling of the festival program this season. It is now permanently installed at Tanglewood, a beautifully wooded estate in the Berkshire hills, near Stockbridge, Mass.

Regular Symphony Will Be Heard

The Berkshire festival represents something new in American music. Heretofore, the country's summer programs have consisted largely of series of popular concerts.

For the Berkshire festival, however, the entire personnel of the Boston Symphony orchestra is being thoroughly rehearsed under its regular conductor for six programs of the highest order.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1937

Big Orchestra Gives Concert in Berkshires

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Music dominates the scene this week-end in the Berkshire hills. Before a great audience in a marquee with seating capacity of 5,000 the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight gave its second concert of the first series at historic and beautiful Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" for children. There the author lived in a little red cottage, since burned, from 1851 to 1853.

Mr. and Mrs. James Ransom Walker of the Hotel Ambassador East had as their box guests tonight at the concert Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Loesch of the Drake hotel and Mr. and Mrs. Holmes Forsythe [F. Marion Smith] of Princeton, N. J. The Loeschcs motored over from Cooperstown, N. Y., where they have a summer home.

Mrs. David Shields Cook Jr., sister of Mrs. Walker, who was their guest, has departed for Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. Felix Lamond of Rome, Italy, from whom Mr. and Mrs. Walker bought Fair Acres on Prospect hill about twenty years ago, were at Stockbridge this week as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSIC IS HEARD BY 5,000

Rain Holds Down Attendance at Second Concert of the Symphonic Festival

FIRST HALF TO END TODAY

Afternoon Bill to Consist of Works by Schubert, Franck and Stravinsky

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—Another audience of about 5,000 persons turned out for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tonight. It would have been larger but for a rainstorm that broke three hours before concert time. On the opening night Thursday there was a storm two hours before the start.

Serge Koussevitzky directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a pr[redacted]hat brought forth nothing new but that had, at the same time a wealth of contrast. There was the Mozart E flat major symphony, brimming over in its lyricism and charm, and Tchaikovsky's Fourth with its seething turmoil, its conflict and even its theatricalism.

Between these major offerings were set the soundly, soberly wrought sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill and the dazzling second "D[redacted]Chloe" suite by Ravel.

The first half of the festival will end tomorrow afternoon with a program devoted to Schubert's "Rosamunde" overture and "Unfinished" symphony, Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" and Cesar Franck's D minor symphony.

Experiments Avoided

It will be seen that this festival is adhering closely to standard symphonic fare. The theory is that the majority in the audience consists of people who have few opportunities to hear the master works performed by a first rank ensemble. They are not interested in experiments or recondite tonal patterns. The festival authorities are seeking to establish the good-will and enthusiasm of these people. Most of the experienced concert-goers, it should be added, seem satisfied with conservative programs.

The men and women who are developing this festival have chosen to make haste slowly. Their primary job, they feel, is to establish the fact that the festival exists. They wish to drive this point home to the people in the immediate communities and to the nation at large. Once a permanent following is achieved, variety and novelty on the programs will follow naturally.

The effect of the festival on the Berkshire towns and cities is already evident. Business in the hotels and restaurants is at a peak. A woman who runs a little antique shop near by reported a lively trade from festival visitors. Some people who have never been to the Berkshires before have begun to look around for Summer homes here.

Musicians Camping Out

A festival of this magnitude inevitably produces interesting sidelights. Here are a few culled at random:

The group of men in the Boston orchestra who are roughing it in small tents on the edge of Lake Makheenac near here. They have set up their own tents and are preparing their own meals. They expect to make the lakeside their home until the festival ends.

The sightseers who are invading Tanglewood during the day to see the site of the concerts. Some of them plan to attend; others do not. There is the usual quota of amateur photographers.

The cooperation of persons of various communities in beautifying Tanglewood, the Berkshire garden center, made up of clubs from local towns and villages, has planted colorful flower beds in the formal garden that flanks the audience tent on the south.

The useful work done by the various committees functioning during the festival. A veteran of artistic campaigns observes that he has never seen committees who labored so zealously.

The long intermissions at concerts giving the audience an opportunity to promenade through the grounds, to see the gardens with their lovely high hedges of hemlock and pine that are said to have no peers in the Berkshires.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1937

Koussevitzky Heard by 5,000 In 2d Concert

Admirers Travel Hundreds of Miles for Program at Berkshire Festival

Tent at Lenox Is Used

He Conducts Boston Group in a Variety of Works

By Francis D. Perkins

TANGLEWOOD-IN-THE-BERKSHIRES, Lenox, Aug. 7.—Long lines of cars again wound their way up the driveways and clustered thickly in the parking fields this evening on the Tanglewood estate, bringing more than 5,000 patrons to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the second concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The opening program on Thursday had been entirely devoted to Beethoven's music, but Dr. Koussevitzky's choices for tonight ranged more widely in time and space, beginning with a work composed in 1788, Mozart's Symphony in E Flat Number 543 in the Koechel Catalogue and two movements from a work of this decade, a sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill, of Harvard [redacted] second suite of music from his Ballet Daphnis et Chloe completed the first half of the concert and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony followed the intermission.

Except for the American work, all the works on the program were thoroughly familiar to habitual or casual concert goers. Mozart's music is one of the mediums in which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony are likely to be at their best, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony and the Ravel suite, both works of vivid instrumental hues, represent types of music which display most advantageously the seldom paralleled skill and virtuosity of the orchestra and the interpretative talents of its director.

Professor Hill's sinfonietta numbered Op. Forty A is a transcription of a string quartet composed two summers ago. The present orchestral version, made at Dr. Koussevitzky's suggestion, was played by the Boston Symphony in New York last season.

The weather continued to favor the festival. As on Thursday, there was a series of showers early in the evening, but it began to clear up during the hour before the concert. Rain indeed would not have caused a postponement, as the water-tight qualities of the vast tent housing the orchestra and the audience had been fully tested.

As it was, the attendance was well over the 4,300 figure of Thursday night, and the prospect at the start of the program was that every seat would be sold. It was said that the broadcasting of Thursday's concert had induced several music lovers to travel for long distances, in some cases hundreds of miles, to the Berkshires to hear tonight's program.

The first part of the festival closed this afternoon with a program including Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Cesar Franck's Symphony. The last three concerts will be given next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, August 12, 14 and 15. The orchestra will not be idle, however, during the first three days ow this week, as Dr. Koussevitzky will hold intensive rehearsals every morning in the tent at Tanglewood.

Professor Hill's music gave its hearers exceptional pleasure, judging by the ovation bestowed upon the composer at the close. Dr. Koussevitzky signaled to him to rise from his seat in the middle of the house, but after he had bowed several times, the demonstration continued, and he was finally summoned to the stage for more plaudits as he shook hands with the conductor.

The applause was well deserved, as the two movements performed, a meditative moderato and a graceful scherzo, are the work of a composer who is not only a thorough and experienced craftsman but one gifted with imagination and poetic sensitiveness. His melodies in this movement have form, line and profile, his harmonic medium is individual and cannot properly be described by any of the conventional descriptive tickets. The flavor is not for the most part distonic, but is not modernistic in the sense in which one is want to regard this term as a synonym for harmonic acridity. It suggests rather that the modes of a far earlier day as well as harmonies of the present have been fused in an entirely homogenous and personal style.

The moderato is based on a memorably plangent theme and a solemn march in the lower strings. In the light-footed scherzo the middle section is masterly in use of subtly changing harmonic hues. Dr. Koussevitzky is to be congratulated on his choice for the American contribution to the festival.

The performance, like its predecessor, was marked by the usual high executive and interpretative standards of this orchestra. In the Mozart symphony there were a few moments in a mainly laudable performance when the interpretation did not penetrate much beyond the surface, and acoustic conditions made the brass choir stand out unduly at times, rather than blending with the general orchestral tone. Otherwise, acoustic conditions were excellent. The Hill work received a performance of notable richness, sonority and persuasive eloquence, and tha Ravel suite, as in Carnegie and Symphony halls, had a brilliant and memorably inspiriting performance that evoked arde and fully deserved applause.

CONCERT DRAWS CROWD OF 5300

Post Aug 9. 37

Biggest of Series Hears Symphony

LENOX, Aug. 8—The first series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting ended tonight at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the largest crowd of any of this week-end's three concerts in attendance.

It is estimated that the 5300 people crowded under the huge tent to hear compositions by Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck. The total attendance for the three concerts was approximately 16,500. Next week's concerts, which will open Thursday night with an all Wagner programme, are expected to exceed all past attendance records.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

TANGLEWOOD IN THE BERKSHIRES, Aug. 8—The first week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end with this afternoon's concert. The connection of the Boston Symphony orchestra with the festival has proved a distinct success, though that was evident last year. Doubtless the weather, which threatened rain at all three concerts and was in addition oppressively warm this afternoon, has interfered with the presence of a capacity audience for each concert. Nevertheless each day has seen more inside the tent, though it was possible to notice that a few reserved seats were empty.

Schubert's "Rosamunde" music was delightful to hear and was played with infinite delicacy and grace. It is hard to imagine that these of all qualities can be effectively heard in the open air, yet there could be no questioning the fact that they did succeed in reaching the large audience, some 5000 strong. After this introductory piece Dr. Koussevitzky asked the audience's permission for the musicians to take off their coats. This was granted with applause.

The Unfinished Symphony was, it seemed to us, somewhat labored in the interpretation. The second movement, in particular, was dragged. No doubt Dr. Koussevitzky feels the necessity to dramatize to some extent the music that might otherwise be lost in space. Still the treatment was not completely successful with Schubert's Unfinished.

On the other hand Stravinsky's Firebird suite sounded extremely well. The music is by now familiar enough to the public so that the action on the stage is not essential. At any rate the playing was superb, and was unquestionably appreciated by the audience.

For a conclusion Franck's symphony, which is known and loved far and wide, was probably the most thoroughly appreciated. In the concert hall it has sometimes been suggested that the symphony has been played too much, but these objections disappear in a festival and with a crowd imbued by the festival spirit.

The same number of concerts will be given at Tanglewood next week and indications are that there will be no falling off in enthusiasm or attendance. This is as it should be and augurs well for the future of the festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1937

Boston Symphony Plays in Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Conducts Today, Thursday Night, Saturday and Sunday

The first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., closes this afternoon at 4:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schubert's ballet music from "Rosamunde" and Unfinished Symphony, Stravinsky's suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu" and Cesar Franck's symphony.

The three remaining concerts of the festival will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 4:30. On Thursday night Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a Wagner program including the "Rienzi" overture, Siegfried Idyll, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Ride of the Valkyries, Waldweben from "Siegfried," prelude to "Parsifal" and overture to "Tannhäuser." Saturday night's program consists of Haydn's symphony in G, No. 13 (88), Sibelius's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade." Dr. Koussevitzky's closing program next Sunday afternoon consists of Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture and Brahms's third and first symphonies.

Thursday's program will be broadcast over the NBC blue network. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield next Thursday and Friday mornings at 11 o'clock.

Several other musical and dramatic events, including the daily theatrical performances at Stockbridge, will be presented in the region during the festival period. Today at 4 o'clock there will be chamber music programs by the South Mountain Quartet at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, and the Gordon Quartet at Music Mountain Falls Village, Conn., and a performance by the dramatic department of the Cummington School at Cummington.

Ted Shawn and his men's dance group will give a lecture demonstration Friday afternoon at their farm, Jacob's Pillow, near Becket, Mass., and a recital Saturday afternoon at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

Information about tickets, lodging, etc., is obtainable from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

SYMPHONY PLAYS IN SHIRT SLEEVES

Third in Berkshire Series Presented at Stockbridge;

Mozart Program

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—The third program of the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival was put thru this afternoon with a success all the more gratifying because of the anxious suspense due to the uncertain weather. A semi-outdoor festival in New England lives dangerously, and each concert is an exciting adventure, but yesterday's violent thunderstorm had used up the surplus atmospheric energy, and conditions this afternoon were not unfavorable except for humidity which led Dr. Koussevitzky to ask the auditnce if he and the orchestra might take off their coats.

Permission was rapturously granted, and perhaps the emancipation added to the efficiency as well as to the comfort of the musicians; there was audible speculation as to whether it was not a new record for the Boston Symphony orchestra. It might very well be a precedent for to musicians having to dress up is the worst of summer concert giving; in shirtsleeves they can practice stoically no matter how hot it gets.

The sultry air perhaps did reduce somewhat the resonance of the instruments, impairing slightly that soft luscious brilliance which comes from the free emission of overtones, but there was no lack of power, and the performance was kept up to the high standard set by the Beethoven program, and by the Mozart and Tschaikowsky symphonies presented last night.

The audience, of well over 5000 people, was said to be the largest in the festival's history, and the arrangements for extricating cars from the ample parking space had a satisfactory test.

Boston Evening Transcript
Reg. U.S. Pat. Office
Today's Truth — Tomorrow's Trend
MONDAY, AUGUST 9, 1937 C

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 9 - 1937

BERKSHIRE FETE AT HALFWAY MARK

5000 Hear Third Concert —Musicians Doff Coats.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9. The fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival passed the halfway mark with an afternoon concert at Tanglewood, near here, yesterday. Though the weather again was far from ideal, the largest audience of the series was present, nearly 5,000 persons gathering under the huge tent. Probably for the first time in its history the staid Boston orchestra played publicly in shirtsleeves, Director Koussevitzky explaining after the opening performance that it was "very warm." Crackling applause was his assurance that the liberty was not an unwarranted one.

Though the earlier programs of the week had been revelatory for those who came prepared to make allowances for the surroundings, yesterday's performances indicated that there are some circumstances over which even the virtuosity of the Bostonians could not triumph. The wood winds and brasses suffered particularly from the enveloping dampness, in Stravinsky's "Firebird" suite and the Schubert "Unfinished," nor did Mr. Koussevitzky's way with these works seem as magical as it has in the past. Nevertheless, there was abundant enthusiasm through the afternoon. Regrettably the scheduled tribute to the late George Gershwin did not materialize, as the desired music (from "Porgy and Bess") was not available.

Of the three concerts played thus far, that of Saturday evening stands alone for the magnificence of its orchestral performance and the unremitting enthusiasm of the director. It offered those perennial Koussevitzky specialties, the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" and the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, delivered with superb tone and irresistible impetus. It seemed scarcely credible that this orchestra had assembled only a few days before after a two months' separation from each other and from the conductor—another and mighty argument in favor of a single, continuing conductor for an orchestra, especially if he be of Mr. Koussevitzky's quality.

Yesterday's audience included Eliel Saarinen of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., who has been commissioned to prepare plans for the festival's permanent pavilion. He was present to observe the project under actual working conditions, to familiarize himself with both the musical and physical problems involved. It is hoped that next summer will see the festival more substantially housed.

The concerts will be resumed on Thursday with an all-Wagner program; a miscellaneous bill follows on Saturday, with a concluding Brahms concert on Sunday afternoon.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

Orchestra Leader Gains Concession

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9. —(AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

Berkshire Rehearsals Are Worth More than $3

Koussevitzky's Morning Exercises at Times Exceed Regular Concert—Festival Under Canvas

By Chester L. Morrison

If you go up to Lenox early enough and swing past a plot of made-to-order flower beds through a lane of trees to Tanglewood, then move unobtrusively toward Mrs. Gorham Brooks's sweeping lawn, sometimes you may hear a concert even more interesting than the one that would cost you $3 in the evening.

It is in the morning that the members of Dr. Koussevitsky's orchestra stroll up from their tents beside Lake Makheenac and go to work on the music of the Berkshire Festival. All of it is familiar to them but none of them, Dr. Koussevitsky least of all, ever will grant that they know it well enough to scamp a rehearsal.

Only a few ever hear those rehearsals except as the music rides the breeze to eavesdroppers, but hardly less than 5000 have attended any of the three concerts of the first half of the festival, just concluded.

At one end of the huge tent at Tanglewood is the shell for the orchestra. At the foot of the platform spreads an area of benches, behind which are railed off several tiers of boxes. And behind the boxes is another acre of benches, empty through the day and packed every concert evening.

Behind a grove of trees and packed as closely as the audience in the tent are row upon row of parked cars. It is easy to drive in and follow the pantomime of parking guards to a berth in that shoal of automobiles. It is not so easy to get out when the concert is over.

The Festival itself is a garden party with embellishments. The music of this first series has been familiar, for those who are responsible for the series reason that their principal concern this summer is to establish the fact that the Festival is under way.

Later may come musical experiments, but until then the programs are likely to be of a piece with those most popular among the audiences which fill Symphony Hall in the winter.

The orchestra and its sponsors and the audiences which flock to Tanglewood are not the only ones enjoying this first season. The hotel at Lenox hasn't a room unoccupied. Every little "Tourist Taken In" cottage within an hour's drive is filled. Restaurants in the vicinity never have done better business, and antique shops are thriving.

Continued on Page 2—Column 3

Rehearsals Rich in Music Lure

Continued from Page One

Sightseers wander toward Tanglewood all day long, some there for the music, others just window-shopping. Real estate men have discovered that these concerts have drawn people who never have seen the Berkshires before, but who now are promising prospects for the purchase of summer homes.

Names That Make News

The names that make news also make the list of boxholders in Dr. Koussevitsky's circus tent. During the long intermission between halves of an evening program it is possible to wander through the tent, to see familiar faces and to believe that the North Shore must be deserted.

The intermission of twenty-five minutes was so arranged to give the audience the opportunity to walk through the Tanglewood gardens, where co-operative residents of Lenox and the vicinity have transplanted their own flower beds for the duration of the festival.

Dr. Koussevitsky himself, it is said, is delighted with the manner in which the Festival has begun. And it is not only the physical audience which pleases him. He thinks also of the multitude who are hearing his orchestra broadcast. The next program on the air—all Wagner—will be on Thursday night.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1937

Koussevitzky Scraps Orchestra Tradition.

By the United Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—Traditional Boston Symphony Orchestra decorum was tossed overboard yesterday by Serge Koussevitzky as the leader and orchestra members, to the cheers of the audience, played in shirt-sleeves for the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival.

When Dr. Koussevitzky interrupted the program to inform the audience that the acoustic shell was infernally hot to work in, and asked the audience to pardon him and the players for removing their coats, hearty applause and cheers answered him. Every player, save a few die-hards, doffed his coat.

The concert attested the fame of Koussevitzky as a program builder. Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck were placed on the same program, but the care of his choice of selections raised no thought of incompatibility as the music was played.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1937

Personalities

ORCHESTRA COOLS OFF

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians. Interrupting a program of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats. Hearty applause followed and the orchestra played in shirt-sleeves.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1937

DAYTIME CONCERT IS HELD AT LENOX

Audience of 5,000 on Hand for Third Program of Berkshire Festival

CONDUCTOR IS PRAISED

Koussevitzky Leads the Boston Orchestra in Rendition of Schubert Compositions

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—This afternoon's concert at Tanglewood rounded out the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. More than 5,000 were in the audience. The weather ran true to form; there was a shower before the concert for the third successive time. During the Berceuse of Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" a brief rainfall pattering on the top of the enormous canvas tent added a soothing note to the music.

It was a humid afternoon and Serge Koussevitzky asked the indulgence of the audience to permit his men to divest themselves of their coats. The audience laughed and applauded to signify its assent, and as the instrumentalists began removing their jackets and vests, men in the audience followed suit.

Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra topped the first half of the festival with another program of established classics, giving them performances of sweep and vitality. The admirers of this magnificent ensemble have not often heard it play as superbly as it has at these concerts. The performances have been a revelation to the most venerable followers of the orchestra and its fortunes.

The secret is probably twofold: Mr. Koussevitzky has returned from a two-month vacation, rested and reinvigorated, and the audience has been as receptive and as responsive as some of the gatherings in Salzburg when Arturo Toscanini conducts.

Schubert Music Played

Today's program illustrated Mr. Koussevitzky's gift for encompassing a wide emotional gamut within the framework of a group of standard works. Two Schubert compositions—the "Rosamunde" ballet music and the B minor symphony, the "unfinished"—opened the proceedings with delicacy and depth of feeling. The unashamed sentiment and simplicity of Schubert's music were realized with graciousness of tinting and subtlety of accent.

Then came the brazen, scintillating "Fire Bird" suite, wherein Mr. Koussevitzky was able to unleash the full might of his minions. Here was virtuoso playing from a virtuoso band, equaled only by last night's gorgeously colored interpretation of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" suite. The audience rose to the Stravinsky performance, as it did to the Ravel, with an outburst of applause.

César Franck's lone symphony, noble and probing in its search for one man's truth, was played with loftiness and emotional rapport.

It was well to close the week's programs with an afternoon concert. Visitors were enabled to view Tanglewood by daylight, to see the glorious southern panorama of Lake Makheenac nestling below Monument Mountain. They were able to stroll through the meticulously kept formal gardens. They could feel the spirit of what Hawthorne, who lived at Tanglewood, called "rough, broken, rugged, headlong Berkshire."

The charm of the vernal setting was also manifest last night at the second concert. As the murmurous voices of the dawn emanated from Ravel's instrumentation in the exordium of the "Daphnis et Chloe" suite, the crickets chirped in the grass on the rim of the enormous canvas tent. If the sounds of the evening were a distraction for some, they intensified, for others, their receptivity to the music.

Tribute to Acoustics

Last night's concert began with Mozart's affecting E flat major symphony, played with enamoring warmth and with careful regard for proportion. It was a tribute to the natural acoustics of the spot as well as to the craftsmanship of the local carpenters who built the wooden band stand that the music could be heard clearly, with all its gentle nuance and ornament, hundreds of feet beyond the rear of the tent.

Two movements from Edward Burlingame Hill's delightful sinfonietta for string orchestra, op. 40A, gave the strings an opportunity to display their talents. The work went well. The audience was not satisfied until the composer, who was seated in a box, walked down the center aisle and shook hands with the conductor. The tribute was a signal honor for the only American composer represented in the festival programs. It indicated that this audience was eager to hear and appreciate music off the beaten path.

The Ravel suite, with its matchless orchestration, was a tour de force of ensemble work. It showed how Mr. Koussevitzky has trained this band to shade tone with matchless precision. Climaxes were built up irresistibly, and in the building there was a constant flux and interplay of iridescent color.

If the Ravel interpretation produced a storm of applause, the Tchaikovsky fourth symphony evoked even a more intensive display of enthusiasm. Mr. Koussevitzky played this work as if he believed in its meaningfulness. The approach had the understanding that only a Russian could bring to Tchaikovsky. The great, crashing climaxes were done with enormous vigor.

The festival weeks in the Berkshires are providing Summer and permanent residents with fresh excitements. The visits of famous personages have added spice to the surroundings. The week-end stay of Miriam Hopkins, the film star, at the Curtis Hotel here, not only set the help agog but brought to the doors of the venerable inn gaping sightseers who would not know a symphony from a square dance but who know Miriam Hopkins when they see her. What is more, they meant to see her.

LONG BEACH, CAL.
PRESS TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1937

Orchestra Breaks Formality Rule by Removal of Coats

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.
RECORD
AUG 9 - 1937

Perspiring Musician Asks And Gets Leave For Men To Doff Coats

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9. (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 9 - 1937

130

Who's News Today

The Only Great Virtuoso of the Bull Fiddle —Koussevitsky.

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

Serge Koussevitsky, conducting the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is the only great virtuoso of the bull fiddle; the only artist to make it a solo instrument. Nineteen years ago, he and all the players in his orchestra on the frozen Volga wore mittens. The mittens had holes in them, so the musicians could finger the strings. Kerensky, with the first flare of the revolution, had ordered the boys to "keep up with their music." So they did.

And, in the meantime, Mr. Koussevitsky has become the distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His program of six concerts on the Tanglewood estate, where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales," is one of the great musical events of America. There is in prospect there an "American Salzburg."

Before his fingers were completely thawed out, he landed in Paris to start an orchestra. He hired a big room, filled it with empty chairs and conducted an imaginary orchestra, just to get warm and limber again. Then he hired an orchestra and a manager. From then on he was steadily in the ascendant. He rebuilt the Boston Symphony after Dr. Karl Muck went to Fort Oglethorpe. He is 63 years old.

Herbert Wilcox, an engaging Irishman who made himself over into a "leading British film producer," is in this country with the print of his new film, "Victoria the Great"—also scouting talent and letting it be known that he's going in for a big splash of color in his forthcoming films. England has fallen hard for the technicolor process.

Mr. Wilcox—possibly because he is Irish—is a lively and adventurous picture-monger and doesn't pull his punch when he tells how stuffy the British are and how hidebound in their exclusion of foreign talent.

"Where would Hollywood be if it had the same idea?" asks Mr. Wilcox. He says the picture business will be booming over there if they don't mess it up with tariff and immigration laws.

He was a newspaper man, first selling moving pictures and then starting as a shoestring producer in 1919. He worked up small interests to the important "British and Dominion Productions." He says his success has been largely due to his early discovery that thirteen is his lucky number. He'll lay a bet on anything in which that number is anywhere lurking.

Copyright 1937. All Rights Reserved.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 9 - 1937

Third Berkshire Concert Is Attended by 5500

Showers and Heat Fail to Lessen Enthusiasm of Audience—Players Remove Their Coats While Audience Applauds

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 9—An audience estimated at 5500 attended the third and last concert of the first seriest of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday afternoon. Intermittent showers caused no diminution of enthusiasm or numbers.

It was hot but everyone was good natured about it and when, after the first number, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky asked the audience if the players might remove their coats, there was great applause and a number of men in the audience removed their coats also.

"Tanglewood," the new site of the festival, grows upon one. It is indeed an ideal spot. The spacious formal gardens offer a delightful promenade and the views are magnificent. The acoustics are exceptionally good and one can hear quite as well in the garden as under the tent.

Dr. Koussevitzky is keeping to the classisc this year. Yesterday afternoon he opened the program with a charming interpretation of the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde" and followed this with a marvelous reading of the same composer's "Unfinished Symphony in B Minor." The superb string section of the orchestra has never sounded more beautiful than today.

After a brief breathing spell the orchestra launched into the introduction to the Suite from "The Fire Bird" by Stravinsky. Dr. Koussevitzky has an especial flair for the music of the Russians and he has made "The Fire Bird" particularly his own. He glories in its barbaric splendor and brings all his dynamic personality to its interpretation.

Intermission period at "Tanglewood" lasts from 30 to 45 minutes and becomes a highly enjoyable occasion, for friends meet at the refreshment stand and then stroll through the gardens eating their sandwiches or ice cream and many carry their liquid refreshments back into the tent.

The second part of the program today was devoted to a remarkable reading of Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor." Here again the men played as inspired and the result was a manifestation of ideal beauty, sanely vital and ever joyous.

The first concert of the second series will be given Thursday night with the other concerts coming Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The concert on Thursday will be devoted entirely to the works of Richard Wagner.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1937

Among the Festival's Distinguished Patrons

Top, Miss Miriam Hopkins of Broadway and Hollywood fame, was among the famous people who heard Koussevitsky direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week-end. With Miss Hopkins are Mrs. J. T. Clark and Mrs. Ellen D. Hopkins, the star's mother, both of New York. The party were guests in the box of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts of Lenox. In the lower picture, Eriel Saarinen smiles for the cameraman. Mr. Saarinen, a noted architect and director of the Cranbrook Academy of Arts at Bloomfield Hills, Mich., has been requested by the Festival committee to prepare plans for the future development of Tanglewood, the Lenox estate where the concerts are held.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD
AUG 9 - 1937

Heat and Music Fail To Mix So Symphony Band Sheds Coats

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday. Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated approval.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

MOBILE ALA.
PRESS
AUG 9 - 1937

Symphony Orchestra Members Doff Coats

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday. Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1937

The Times In Names

ADVISER—Possible return to England of the DUKE OF WINDSOR and his bride was seen in the visit of SIR WALTER T. MONCKTON, financial adviser of the former King Edward VIII, at Wasserleonburg Castle in Austria.

MUSICIAN—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra found the "acoustic shell" in the 5000-seat tent in which they played at the Berkshire Symphonic festival too hot, Conductor SERGI KOUSSEVITZKY asked and received permission from the audience for all of them to remove their coats.

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 9 - 1937

Symphony Orchestra Gets Hot, Sheds Coats

Leader Halts Program, Asks O. K. Of Audience To Play In Shirt Sleeves

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 9 - 1937

ATTENDED BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Despite heavy downpours in most sections of the Berkshires Saturday afternoon, clearing weather took place about two hours before the time scheduled for Saturday night's concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," in Stockbridge, Mass., and when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky raised his baton for the first number on the program, the Symphony in E-flat major of Mozart, there was practically not a vacant seat in the huge tent under which the concerts are being held. There were fully 5,000 persons present, and their enthusiasm, especially at the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's magnificent rendition of the gorgeous and wildly stirring "Daphne et Chloe": Ballet of Ravel, was unbounded. Cries of "Brava," "Brava," burst from the assemblage, and such applause rang out as has never been heard before in the years of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's existence. The Fourth Symphony in F minor of Tchaiksky also brought out tumultuous applause, but it was Ravel's "Daphne et Chloe" that was the high point of the evening. Incidentally, this music was originally intended for Diaghileff's Ballet Russe, the great Nijinsky and Karsavina dancing the title parts in its production in Paris in 1912. The last concert in the first series took place yesterday afternoon and included Schubert's Ballet Music from "Rosamunde," Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony," the Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu," by Stravinsky, and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Among those from this vicinity who attended Saturday evening's concert were Mr and Mrs Charles P. Hermance, their house guest, Mrs. Albert Meyer of New Haven, Conn., Mrs. Dora Hermance, Miss Anna Hermance, Miss Jane Herrick, Carl Relyea of Claverack, Mr and Mrs Edward Frick of Schenectady, former Hudsonians, Dr. and Mrs. Harry A. Pattison of Livingston, Mr and Mrs Alfred T. Ogden, Mrs. Thomas Hastings, Mrs. Marion H. Johnson of Kinderhook, Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, and Gerald S. Bliss, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Mrs. Charles S. Benson and George Savitsky of this city.

Mr and Mrs John Bross Lloyd of Lee, Mass., former residents of Kinderhook, had as their guests in their box the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Lewis and Mrs. Lewis of Kinderhook. James E. Leath of Kinderhook, had as box guests Mrs. Henry Whitney Munroe of Lenox, Mass., Mr and Mrs Philip Means of Boston, Mass., and Pomfret, Conn., and Miss Julie Pruyn of Kinderhook and New York City.

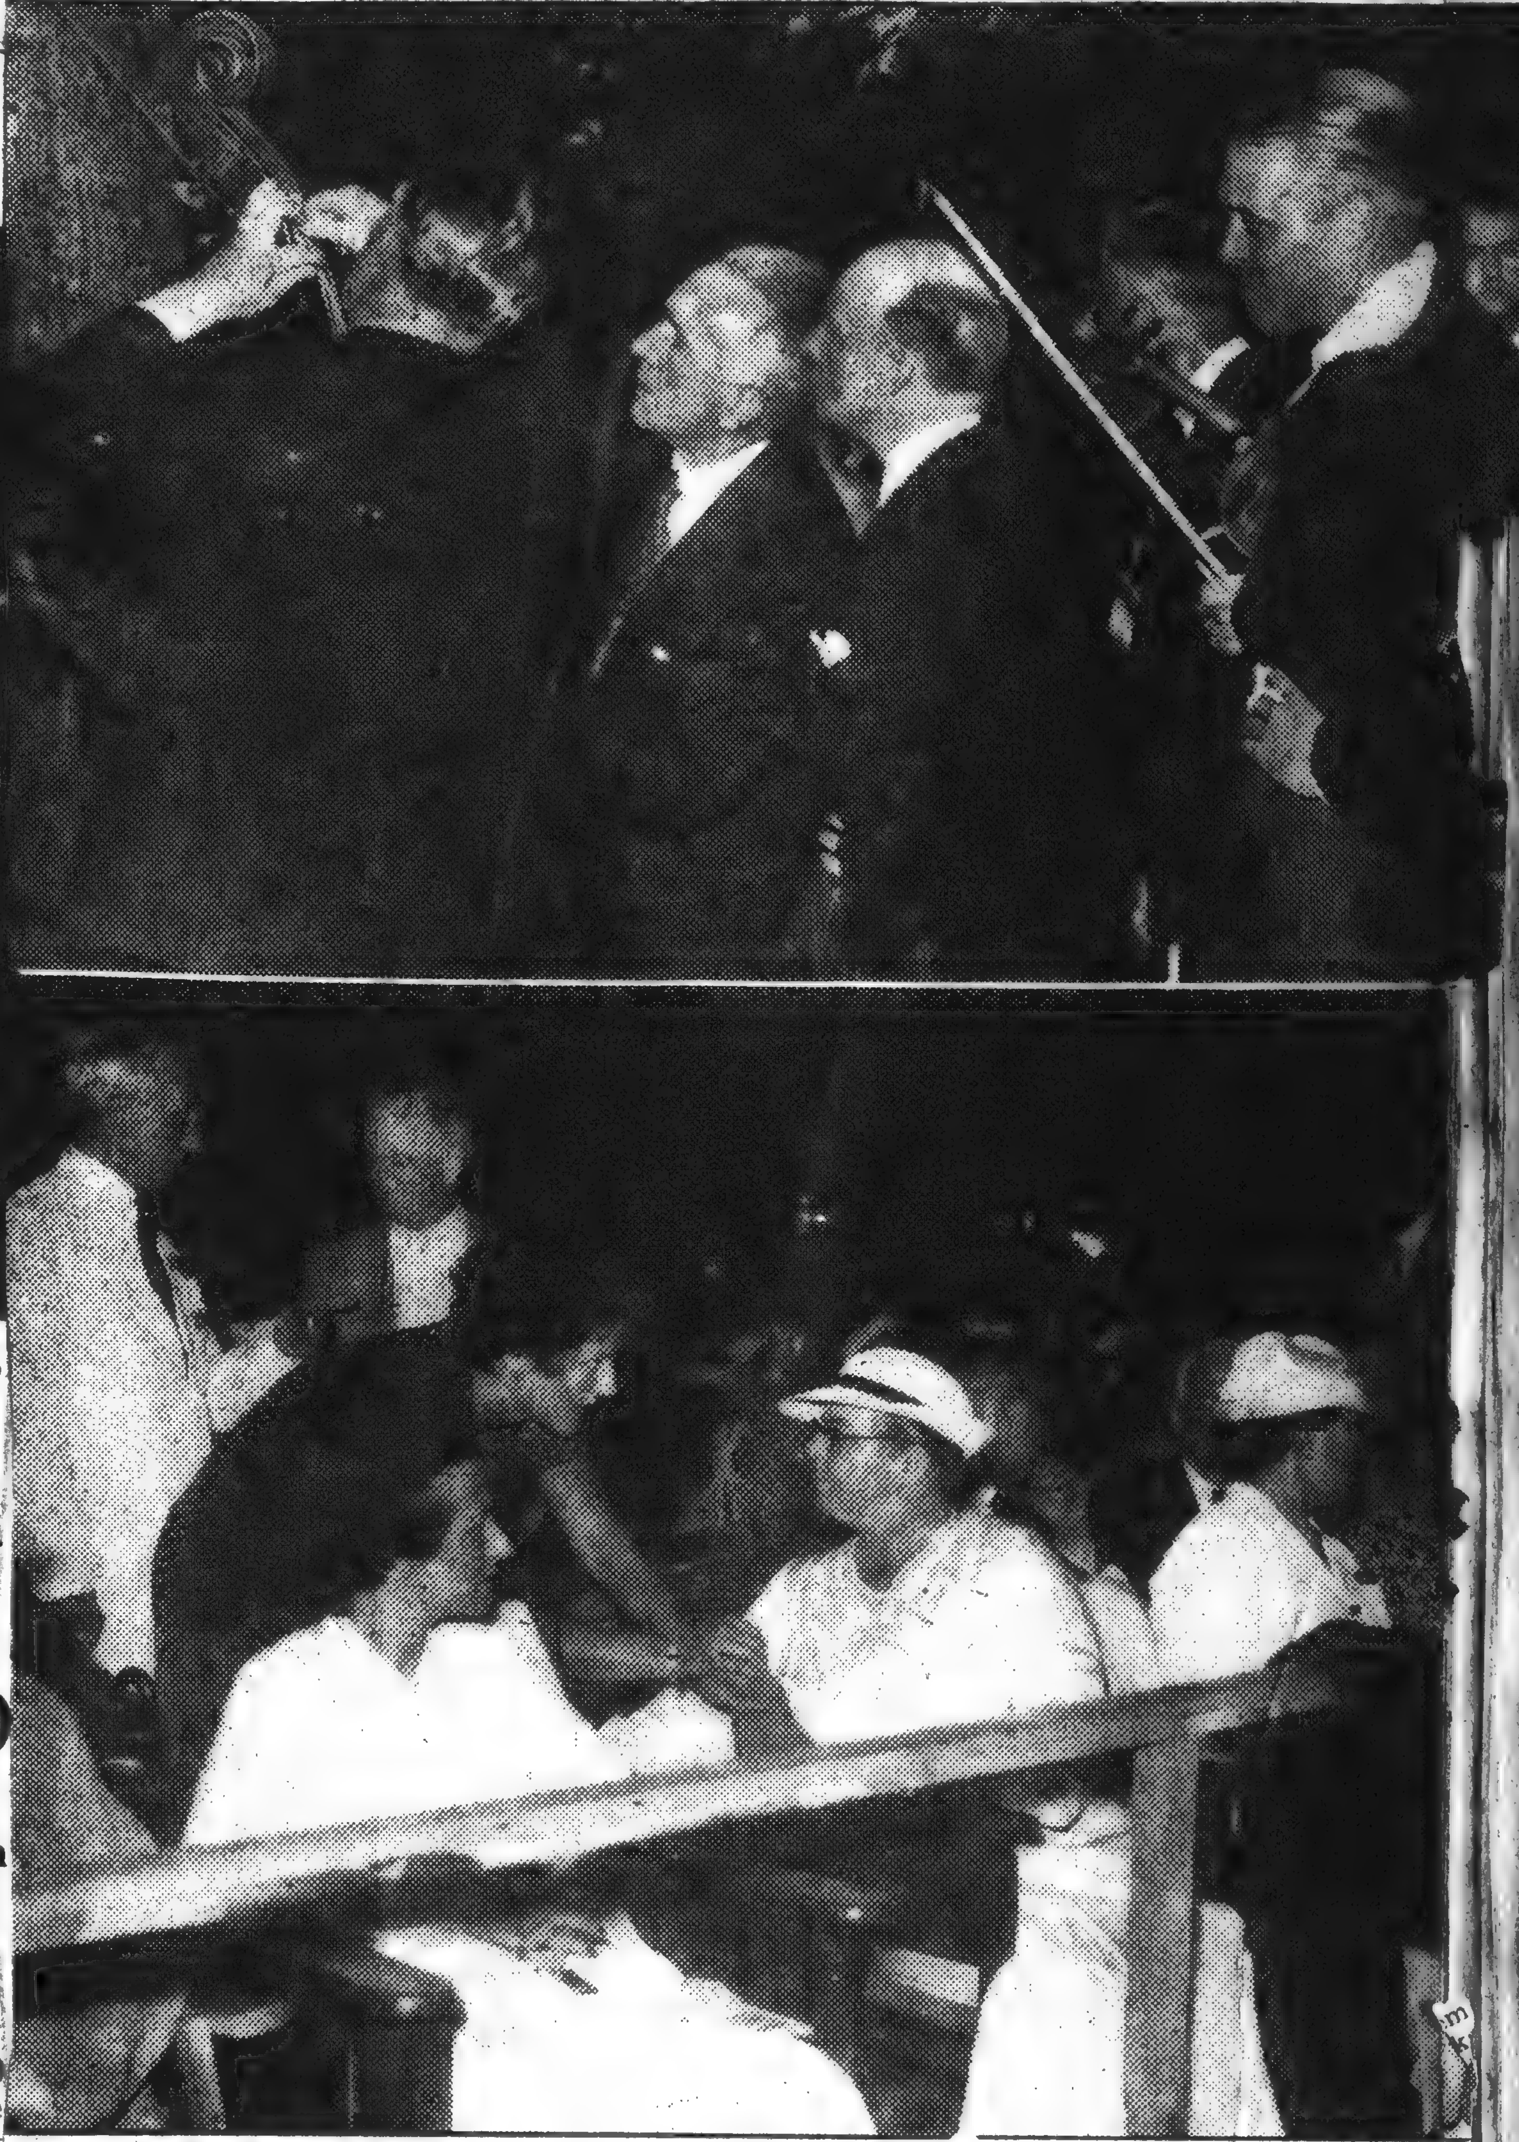
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 9 - 1937

Norman Davis at Music Festival

Don Jose Browning Photo

In attendence at the third concert of the Symphonic festival at Stockbridge yesterday was Ambassador-at-large Norman Davis, who like many other music lovers braved the rain which for a time threatened the afternoon concert. Photo shows from left to right: Mrs. Luke of New York, Mrs. Marshall Bullit, Mrs. Davis and Mr. Davis.

Scenes at Berkshire Music Festival



Upper: Dismay grips the hearts of those who play stringed instruments when excessive dampne vails, and members of the famed Boston Symphony playing during the fourth annual Berkshire are among those who dislike having strings snap at the wrong time. Photo shows one of the players trying to adjust his instrument after replacing a string. Interested fellow players wa also keep their violins covered. Lower, a very busy personality whose advice was often soug ing the afternoon concert yesterday was Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the B Festival. Photo shows Miss Smith, center, as she talks with an acquaintance during the inter Among those in the official box with Miss Smith are Mme. Koussevitzky, wife of the Maes Frances Rich, daughter of Irene Rich.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO.
POST-TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1937

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN SHIRT SLEEVES

Serge Konssevitsky Establishes a Precedent

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience it was "infernally" hot, and would the audience mind if musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

Third Berkshire Concert Is Attended by 5500

Showers and Heat Fail to Lessen Enthusiasm of Audience; "Tanglewood" Proves Ideal Setting for Symphonic Festival

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—An audience estimated at 5500 attended the third and last concert of the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon. Intermittent showers caused no diminution of enthusiasm or numbers.

It was hot but everyone was good natured about it and when, after the first number, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky asked the audience if the players might remove their coats, there was great applause and a number of men in the audience removed their coats also.

"Tanglewood," the new site of the festival, grows upon one. It is in [illegible] ideal spot. The spacious formal gardens offer a delightful promenade and the views are magnificent. The acoustics are exceptionally good and one can hear quite as well in the garden as under the tent.

Dr. Koussevitzky is keeping to the classics this year. This afternoon he opened the program with a charming interpretation of the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde" and followed this with a marvelous reading of the same composer's "Unfinished Symphony in B Minor." The

---

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 9 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS MINUS COATS

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitzky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats. Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 9 - 1937

Musicians Strip To Shirt Sleeves

Stockbridge, Mass.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

NORWICH, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 9 - 1937

Lenox, Mass. — The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival reached its half-way point Sunday when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its third concert in the vast tent on the Tanglewood estate. The audience again numbered nearly 5,000.

Third Berkshire Festival Concert Heard by 5500

Continued From First Page

superb string section of the orchestra has never sounded more beautiful than today.

After a brief breathing spell the orchestra launched into the introduction to the Suite from "The Fire Bird" by Stravinsky. Dr. Koussevitzky has an especial flair for the music of the Russians and he has made "The Fire Bird" particularly his own. He glories in its barbaric splendor and brings all his dynamic personality to its interpretation.

Intermission period at "Tanglewood" lasts from 30 to 45 minutes and becomes a highly enjoyable occasion, for friends meet at the refreshment stand and then stroll through the gardens eating their sandwiches or ice cream and many carry their liquid refreshments back into the tent.

The second part of the program today was devoted to a remarkable reading of Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor." Here again the men played as inspired and the result was a manifestation of ideal beauty, sanely vital and ever joyous.

The first concert of the second series will be given Thursday night with the other concerts coming Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The concert on Thursday will be devoted entirely to the works of Richard Wagner.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 9 - 1937

Attend Concerts At Tanglewood

Among those who attended the Saturday evening concert of the Boston Symphonic orchestra in the second performance of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, were Mrs. Bertrand Peck, Mrs. B. B. Lillibridge, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley B. Jennings, Mrs. Alma Jennings, H. Blake Fuessenich, Dr. and Mrs. Allen Craig, Arthur Covey, Sydney French, Miss Josephine Farley, Mr. and Mrs. Kirk D. Sheldon

Among those attending the Sunday presentation were Mr. and Mrs. Stuart W. Cleaveland, Sydney French, Mrs. Paul Peckham, Miss Ruth Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Paul H. Hawley, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Crosson, John D. Sullo, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Tunick and family.

The second series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the festival will be presented next Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 9 - 1937

Koussevitsky Makes History by Request

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1937

MUSICIANS REMOVE COATS AT CONCERT

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has esta[illegible] precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD

AUG 9 - 1937

132

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Tanglewood-in-the-Berkshires, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 9—The 5,000 capacity seats under an enormous canvas—the second largest tent in the world—were filled little short of that figure here yesterday afternoon at the third concert of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the second season for the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The audience Saturday night was almost as large.

Patrons from as far west as Arizona and south as Florida are here.

The sky was overcast yesterday and a light rain fell for a few minutes during the playing of Stravinsky's Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu", and the weather was sultry. After the opening number, the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde", Dr. Koussevitsky addressed the audience for the first time:

"Ladies and gentlemen, it is very hot. Will you excuse us if we play without our coats?"

Applause and laughter was the answer, and so the sedate Bostonians—maestro and musicians, removed their jackets before playing Schubert's "Unfinished" and tackling Stravinsky. The second half was Franck's "D Minor".

* * *

One has to be here to appreciate the peculiar fitness of the word "festival" in connection with this American Salzburg. A setting in truer tone for inspiring performances of the exalted works of the symphonic masters can hardly be imagined.

The outdoor charm of the beautiful Tanglewood, the former Mrs. Gorham Brooks estate on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, has been preserved. Near the festival site is the lovely formal garden with its hemlock hedges, laid out by Mrs. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston. Only a dozen steps away is the wide expanse of lawn on a knoll overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains of Southern Berkshire. A rod or two from the south entrance of the estate is the bronze tablet marking the spot where Hawthorne's little red cottage stood. And nearby are the famous Hawthorne pines, part of the primeval forest.

* * *

Under the inimitable Koussevitzky who—within the compass heard by this writer—is to be compared only with Toscanini (not unmindful of their different styles), these Berkshire concerts are of the highest artistic standards. Given by an orchestra which I have good reason to believe is superior to any in Europe, and equal to any in this country, it is thoroughly rehearsed to meet the demands of what Dr. Koussevitsky declared to be a most exacting audience.

The responsiveness of the audience is something well worth noting. Applause following the numbers, Saturday night especially, was of ovation proportions. It is stimulating to behold music lovers so enthusiastic. The founders and backers of the Festival hope to develop it into an institution comparable to the Salzburg and Bayreuth festivals in Europe.

Patronage last year, the first in which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra took part, was so heavy that the orchestra is to be housed in a permanent building at Tanglewood.

Plans are being made to add choral works and opera for the fifth season in 1938.

* * *

Frankly, I am so pleased with the acoustics here under the tent that I would hate to see it changed. I think the tent, also, is in keeping with the summery atmosphere. This expanse of canvas is 280 feet long.

The orchestra plays from within a wood paneled shell, the two sides and top of which are flared outward, like a huge phonograph soundbox. The resonant tone of the orchestra is not only a joy, but to me, under the circumstances, meaning the tent, it was a surprise.

At both concerts this week-end the air was damp, and one was prepared to make excuses for the strings. But it's hardly necessary. Tone quality and ensemble were substantial virtues to begin with. Expression, which ideally is all the conductor should need be concerned with, seemed unhampered in Dr. Koussévitzky's hands.

The carrying qualities were also remarkable. Even on the grounds far beyond the rear of the tent one could hear the program plainly.

* * *

Saturday night's program opened with Mozart's Symphony of E flat major (Kochel No. 543). Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, by George Burlingame Hill of Boston, in two movements, and three excerpts from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe" completed part one. Part two was Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

The opening symphony would have impressed, I believe, the famed native composer of Salzburg himself. It seemed formed as naturally and graceful as nature's rainbows, crystals, and the uplifted arms of elms.

Mr. Hill was in the audience, and when the conductor drew attention to this the composer was applauded vigorously. After making two bows he finally was persuaded to go to the front, and he shooks hands with Dr. Koussevitsky.

The Sinfonietta was composed between July and September, 1935, and dedicated to Yves Chardon and the Chardon Quartet. The Quartet was performed for the first time by this group in Cambridge, January 23, 1936. The orchestral version was made at the suggestion of Dr. Koussevitzky. Mr. Hill was born in Cambridge September 9, 1872.

The work was interesting all the way through, but on the one hearing the first movement proved most attractive.

Another highlight was found in the Ravel work, weirdly beautiful, full of forlorn solos. The interweaving patterns of the woodwinds in the "Lever du Jour" (first part of the suite) was particularly engrossing. And of course the extravagant finale, "Danse Generale", is very fine.

The Tschaikowsky symphony had more than its usual share of expression, contrast, and color. Many conductors just "shoot" this off, and know very well that it will be applauded, but Dr. Koussevitsky, went a little further under the surface.

* * *

Yesterday's program reached its aesthetic peak in the Franck Symphony. Stravinsky's "Fire-Bird" was undoubtedly given a fine performance, but the audience's preference for the works of the older schools was pronounced.

* * *

While it was impossible to make a thorough check of Bergen County residents here, among those seen were Mr. Henry P. Cross of Ridgefield Park, music supervisor and director of the Ridgefield Park Choral Club; Mrs. Cross; Guiseppe Amato, flutist, of Ridgefield Park; Mrs. Jennie MacCulloch of Cliffside Park, and George D. Bisset of Englewood.

* * *

Larger and more attractive printed programs were prepared this year, including historical and descriptive notes on the music by John N. Burke, photographs, and sketches about interesting spots in the Tanglewood area.

* * *

The fourth program will be an all-Wagner one, Thursday night of this week. The first part will be the overture to "Rienzi", the "Seigfried Idyl" and the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde;" part two will be "The Ride of the Valkyries" from "Die Walkure", Waldweben from "Siegfried", Prelude to "Parsifal", and Overture at "Tannhauser".

This program will be broadcast. The last two programs will be Saturday and Sunday.

DAYTIME CONCERT IS HELD AT LENOX

Audience of 5,000 on Hand for Third Program of Berkshire Festival

CONDUCTOR IS PRAISED

Koussevitzky Leads the Bostor Orchestra in Rendition of Schubert Compositions

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—This afternoon's concert at Tanglewood rounded out the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. More than 5,00 were in the audience. The weather ran true to form; there was a shower before the concert for the third successive time. During the Berceuse of Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" a brief rainfall pattering on the top of the enormous canvas tent added a soothing note to the music.

It was a humid afternoon and Serge Koussevitzky asked the indulgence of the audience to permit his men to divest themselves of their coats. The audience laughed and applauded to signify its assent, and as the instrumentalists began removing their jackets and vests, men in the audience followed suit.

Mr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra topped the first half of the festival with another program of established classics, giving them performances of sweep and vitality. The admirers of this magnificent ensemble have not often heard it played as superbly as it has been at these concerts. The performances have been a revelation to the most venerable followers of the orchestra and its fortunes.

The secret is probably twofold; Mr. Koussevitzky has returned from a two-month vacation, rested and reinvigorated, and the audience has been as receptive and as responsive as some of the gatherings in Salzburg when Arturo Toscanini conducts.

Schubert Music Played

Today's program illustrated Mr Koussevitzky's gift for encompassing a wide emotional gamut within the framework of a group of standard works. Two Schubert compositions—the "Rosamunde" ballet music and the B minor symphony, the "unfinished"—opened the proceedings with delicacy and depth of feeling. The unashamed sentiment and simplicity of Schubert's music were realized with graciousness of tinting and subtlety of accent.

Then came the brazen, scintillating "Fire Bird" suite, wherein Mr. Koussevitzky was able to unleash the full might of his minions. Here was virtuoso playing from a virtuoso band, equaled only by last night's gorgeously colored interpretation of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" suite. The audience rose to the Stravinsky performance, as it did in the Ravel, with an outburst of applause.

Cesar Franck's lone symphony, noble and probing in its search for one man's truth, was played with loftiness and emotional rapport.

It was well to close the week's programs with an afternoon concert. Visitors were enabled to view Tanglewood by daylight, to see the glorious southern panorama of Lake Makheenac nestling below monument Mountain. They were able to stroll through the meticulously kept formal gardens. They could feel the spirit of what Hawthorne, who lived at Tanglewood, called "rough, broken, rugged, headlong "Berkshire."

The charm of the vernal setting was also manifest last night at the second concert. As the murmorous voices of the dawn emanated from Raven's instrumentation in the exordium of the "Daphnis et Chloe" suite ,the crickets chirped in the grass on the rim of the enormous canvas tent. If the sounds of the evening were a distraction for some, they intensified, for others, their receptivity to the music.

Last night's concert began with Mozart's affecting E flat major symphony, played with enamoring warmth and with careful regard for proportion. It was a tribute to the natural acoustics of the spot as well as to the craftsmanship of the local carpenters who built the wooden band stand that the music could be heard clearly, with all its gentle nuance and ornament, hundreds of feet beyond the rear of the tent.

Composer Hill Applauded

Two movements from Edward Burlingame Hill's delightful sinfonietta for string orchestra, op. 40 A, gave the strings an opportunity to display their talents. The work went well. The audience was not satisfied until the composer, who was seated in a box, walked down the center aisle and shook hands with the conductor. The tribute was a signal honor for the only American composer represented in the festival programs. It indicated that this audience was eager to hear and appreciate music off the beaten path.

The Ravel suite, with its matchless orchestration, was a tour de force of ensemble work. It showed how Mr. Koussevitzky has trained this band to shade tone with matchless precision. Climaxes were built up irresistibly, and in the building there was a constant flux and interplay of iridescent color. The sudden decrescendo of the solo horn, achieved with breath-taking speed and yet without the slightest tonal flaw, was one of innumerable felicities of detail.

Tchaikovsky Symphony Applauded

If the Ravel interpretation produced a storm of applause, the Tchaikovsky fourth symphony evoked even a more intensive display of enthusiasm. Mr. Koussevitzky played this work as if he believed in its meaningfulness. The approach had the understanding that only a Russian could bring to Tchaikovsky. The great, crashing climaxes were done with enormous vigor.

The festival weeks in the Berkshires are providing Summer and permanent residents with fresh excitements. The visits of famous personages have added spice to the surroundings. The week-end stay of Miriam Hopkins, the filf star, at the Curtis Hotel here, not only set the halp agog but brought to the doors of the venerable inn gaping sightseers who would not know a symphony from a square dance but who know Miriam Hopkins when they see her. What is more, they meant to see her.

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES.]

Second Concert Presented

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—Another audience of about 5,000 persons turned out for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tonight. It would have been larger but for a rainstorm that broke three hours before concert time. On the opening night Thursday there was a storm two hours before the start.

Serge Koussevitzky directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program that brought forth nothing new but that had, at the same time a wealth of contrast. There was the Mozart E flat major symphony, brimming over in its lyricism and charm,and Tchaikovsky's Fourth with its seething turmoil, its conflict and even its theatricalism.

Between these major offerings were set the soundly, soberly wrought sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill and the dazzling second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite by Ravel.

The first half of the festival will end tomorrow afternoon with a program devoted to Schubert's "Rosamunde" overture and "Unfinished" symphony, Stravinsky's "Fire Bird Suite" and Cesar Franck's D minor symphony.

Experiments Avoided

It will be seen that this festival is adhering closely to standard symphonic fare. The theory is that the majority in the audience consists of people who have few opportunities to hear the master works performed by a first rank ensemble. They are not interested in experiments or recondite tonal patterns. The festival authorities are seeking to establish the good-will and enthusiasm of these people. Most of the experienced concertgoers, it should be added, seem satisfied with conservative programs.

The men and women who are developing this festival have chosen to make haste slowly. Their primary job, they feel, is to establish the fact that the festival exists. They wish to drive this point home to the people in the immediate communities and to the nation at large. Once a permanent following is achieved, variety and novelty on the programs will follow naturally.

The effect of the festival on the Berkshire towns and cities is already evident. Business in the hotels and restaurants is at a peak. A woman who runs a little antique shop near by reported a lively trade from festival visitors. Some people who have never been to the Berkshires before have begun to look around for Summer homes here.

Musicians Camping Out

A festival of this magnitude inevitably produces interesting sidelights. Here are a few culled at random:

The group of men in the Boston orchestra who are roughing it in small tents on the edge of Lake Makheenac near here. They have set up their own tents and are preparing their own meals. They expect to make the lakeside their home until the festival ends.

The sightseers who are invading Tanglewood during the day to see the site of the concerts. Some of them plan to attend; others do not. There is the usual quota of amateur photographers.

The cooperation of persons of various communities in beautifying Tanglewood, the Berkshire garden center, made up of clubs from local towns and villages, has planted colorful flower beds in the formal garden that flanks the audience tent on the south.

The useful work done by the various committees functioning during the festival. A veteran of artistic campaigns observes that he has never seen committees who labored so zealously.

The long intermissions at concerts giving the audience an opportunity to promenade through the grounds, to see the gardens with their lovely high hedges of hemlock and pine that are said to have no peers in the Berkshires. H. H. T.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony Plays in Shirt Sleeves

STOCKBRIDGE (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an oldtimer said, wrote orchestral history.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 9 - 1937

Koussevitsky, Orchestra Play in Shirt Sleeves

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the accoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG [illegible] 1937

When A Symphony Orchestra Gets Hot—

(By The Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated it would not, so they did.

ALBAN
NE
AU

Bravos! At Ber

5,000 in Au
sentation
Giving U

Since the News, the huge has been filled t
Usually staid have stood on thei yelled bravos that glewood welkin rin
have been the seco
certs in the Festi
Boston Symphon organization know
among its fellow world but seldo
feeling itself cal
such magnificent its undeniable su
The opening co
Thursday night
terial of which made. It faded distance of mem
the orchestra's day night had only served to u
gone before.
The cries of puncture the Saturday night had ended the R and Chloe." F effects and col
technics, it was
However, the th dwarfed almost sensational pres kowsky's Fourth ended a brea great power stunning effect.
As prelude to which occupied more, two mov ern Sinfonietta
the Harvard with its accom compliments b and the condu audience in ra dentally, the strings alone fective work and execute
The Mozart which began ceedings was for the red still to come.
The 5,000
assembled

...ong distinguished persons in yesterday [illegible] above were Bentley W. Warren, president of Boston Symphony orchestra and senior member of Board of Trustees of Williams college, Mrs. Harry A. Garfield and Dr. Harry A. Garfield, president emeritus of Williams college. (Gravelle Pictorial News Service)

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

Bravos! Welcome Performance At Berkshire Music Festival

5,000 in Audience Cheer Superb Outdoor Presentation of Boston Symphony Orchestra Giving Unusual Programs Over Weekend

By RAY A. MOWERS

Since the last preceding issue of The Knickerbocker News, the huge Symphonic Festival tent in the Berkshires has been filled twice with 5,000 amazed and jubilant persons.

Usually staid men and women have stood on their feet thrice and yelled bravos that made the Tanglewood welkin ring. The occasions have been the second and third concerts in the Festival series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—an organization known to be top-flight among its fellows of the civilized world but seldom if ever before feeling itself called upon to give such magnificent demonstrations of its undeniable superiority.

The opening concert of the series Thursday night was woven of material of which musical dreams are made. It faded into the middle distance of memory, however, when the orchestra's performance Saturday night had ended. Yesterday only served to underscore what had gone before.

The cries of "bravo" began to puncture the storms of applause Saturday night when the orchestra had ended the Ravel suite, "Daphne and Chloe." Filled with dynamic effects and colorful musical pyrotechnics, it was an exciting thing. However, the thrill it brought was dwarfed almost immediately by a sensational presentation of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. This ended a breathless program of great power and overwhelmingly stunning effect.

As prelude to the growing climax which occupied the last hour or more, two movements from a modern Sinfonietta by a professor in the Harvard music department, with its accompanying exchange of compliments between the composer and the conductor, had put the big audience in rare good humor. Incidentally, the Sinfonietta for strings alone proved to be an effective work, well-knit technically and executed with understanding.

The Mozart Symphony in E Flat which began Saturday night's proceedings was a suitable hors d'oeuvre for the red meat of the entire still to come.

The 5,000 patrons of the Festival assembled yesterday for the first afternoon concert while casting anxious glances at the lowering skies which have threatened each of the concerts so far staged.

Dark and gloomy as it was outside, under the big tent there was a glow of mellow light although no illumination was used until the orchestra was seated. The texture of the tent structure itself appeared to gather and concentrate upon the crowd below the light from the hidden sun.

The ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde," although exquisitely done, was a feeble forecast of things to come. At its end, Dr. Koussevitzky asked and obtained enthusiastic permission of his audience for the orchestra members to doff their coats.

Formality having been tossed to the winds, many men in the audience joined the musicians in shirt-sleeved freedom. Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony was given a most sympathetic reading, its serenity building up a background for the fury of Stravinsky's "Fire Bird."

Not since Dr. Koussevitzky led the orchestra through "Till Eulenspiegle" in Schenectady several seasons ago, has he been watched through a more difficult feat of conducting by a Capital District audience.

Wild and bizarre were the effects obtained by the eminent contemporary Russian who conceived "The Fire Bird" and every phase of its florid tempestuousness was stressed at the hands of Koussevitzky and his men. It seemed at times they were achieving the impossible.

Then, bringing the shouting audience back to earth from regions of fantasy, the Franck symphony was begun. This can only be described as another major triumph. English adjectives are too weak; they cannot be trusted adequately to picture results. Let us hope the spirit of Cesar Franck was listening. He would have been pleased.

The Festival concerts resume with an all-Wagner program next Thursday night.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 9 - 1937

'Concerts At Tanglewood Draw Big Attendances

Those of Saturday Night and Yesterday Afternoon Round Out First Series of 1937 Berkshire Symphonic Festival—Fourth Concert, Opening Series B, Will Come Thursday Evening — Orchestra Establishes Precedent When Oppressive Heat Causes Members to Shed Coats—Miriam Hopkins Attracts Attention.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival rounded out the first series of its 1937 season on Saturday evening and yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky gave its second and ~~third~~ concerts.

The fourth concert, opening Series B of the 1937 season, will come on Thursday evening of this week and will be broadcast over an NBC hook-up which will also put on the air the intermission comments on the program of Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. The fifth concert will come on Saturday evening and the sixth and last on next Sunday afternoon.

Both last Saturday night and yesterday the attendance approximately matched that at the season's opening concert last Thursday evening when a brilliant and colorful gathering estimated at 5,000 crowded beneath the big concert tent at Tanglewood, the festival's permanent home on the Stockbridge-Lenox road. And at each the enthusiasm of the audience rivaled that of Thursday evening as the distinguished conductor and his musicians duplicated their triumph of the first concert.

On Saturday evening they shared their triumph and the tributes of the audience with one of the composers whose works they played. He is Edward Burlingame Hill from whose sinfonietta for string orchestra, transcribed by the composer from his Opus 40 string quartet, Dr. Koussevitzky had taken two movements for interpretation. Mr. Hill was called four times to his feet by the tumultuous applause that followed the performance of his work and he finally yielded to the insistence of the audience and to Dr. Koussevitzky's vigorous gesturing and mounted the platform to receive a real ovation.

One other living composer found a place on the Saturday evening program as the orchestra played also the second suite of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," recently named by Dr. Koussevitzky himself as one of the few works of present day composers which have taken rank as classics. But the principal offerings were Mozart's classically great symphony in E flat and Tschaikowsky's grandly impressive fourth symphony.

The solid program performed yesterday afternoon had as its principal selections Schubert's magnificent Unfinished symphony and Cesar Franck's vital symphony in D minor. With these Dr. Koussevitzky also included the lovely ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde" and a suite from Stravinsky's "L'Oiseau de Feu," which was performed with all the extraordinary appreciation and understanding that Dr. Koussevitzky seems to have for the works of his fellow Russians.

The orchestra established a precedent yesterday with the full consent of its audience. With a blazing sun beating down on the festival grounds and with the humidity oppressive indeed beneath the vast stretch of canvas of the tent, the conductor turned to his audience after the opening selection and, observing that "It's infernally hot" under the orchestra shell, asked if there was any objection to the removal of their coats by the musicians. Not only prompt applause and cheers but the equally prompt doffing of coats by a number of men in the audience indicated that the request was approved and Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra completed the concert program in their shirt sleeves.

A center of attraction at yesterday afternoon's concert was Miriam Hopkins, moving picture star, who occupied a box. Most of the audience, during intermission, found an excuse to walk by her box and look her over. Miss Hopkins is a guest this week at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

Attendants at the two concerts over the week-end found that physical arrangements at Tanglewood, which at Thursday evening's concert were agreed to be more satisfactory than the best that could be provided last year at Holmwood, had been still further improved. A walk had been provided for pedestrians from the north parking area to the concert tent, the entrance on Hawthorne street, an auxiliary entrance used largely by people familiar with the neighborhood, had been bettered, additional benches had been installed at the rear and, to the satisfaction of those whose seats are toward the front, the light over the podium had been shaded so that it would not shine in the eyes of the audience.

On Saturday evening as on Thursday, many members of the audience spent the intermission about the grounds and spacious gardens of Tanglewood, but yesterday intermittent showers discouraged most of the audience from leaving the

---

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

Shirt-Sleeved Symphony Played

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION
AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony Doff Coats In Heat

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. (AP).—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER
AUG 9 - 1937

Perspiring Symphony Plays in Shirt Sleeves

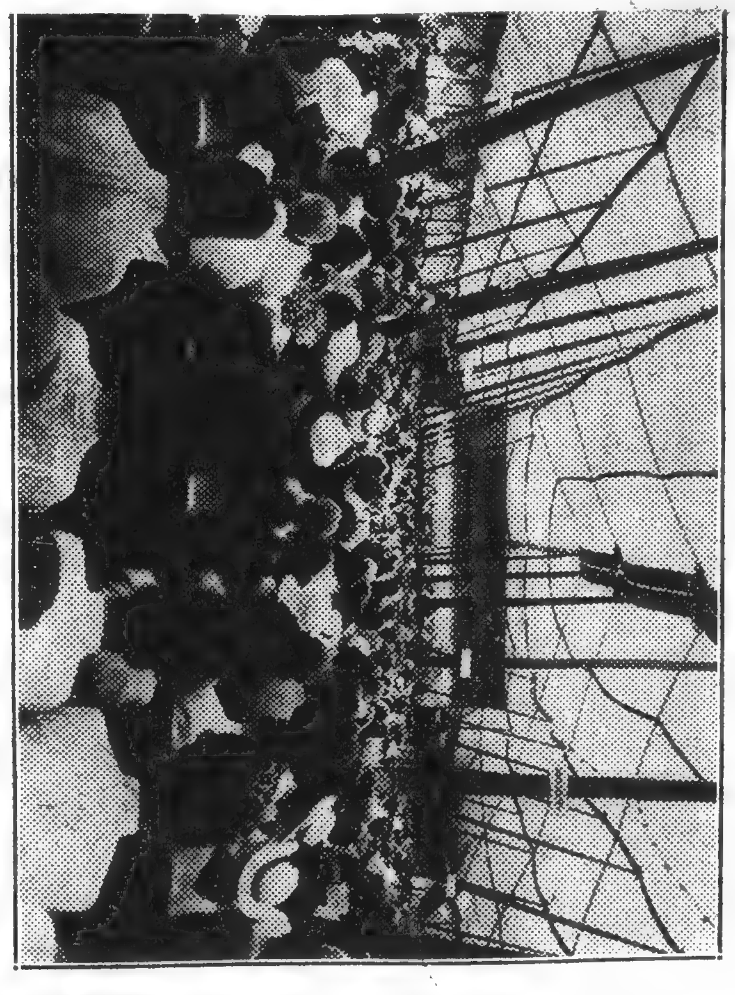
Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and his musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

At Berkshire Music Fete



ortion of large audience that filled the concert tent yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood.

nong distinguished persons in yesterday afternoon's audience shown above, were Bentley W. Warren, president of Boston Symphony orchestra and senior member of Board of Trustees of Williams college, Mrs. Harry A. Garfield and Dr. Harry A. Garfield, president emeritus of Williams college. (Gravelle Pictorial News Service)

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony Plays Coatless at Stockbridge Fete

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1937

Coatless Boston Orchestra Battles Berkshire Humidity

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Stockbridge, Mass.—Serge Koussevitzky addressed his audience here yesterday afternoon and in ever so few words set the pitch for the third concert of the Berkshire Festival.

It was very warm, he said, and if the listeners didn't mind the players would take their coats off. The audience clapped its approval, the conductor thereupon peeled his dark jacket and the rest of the concert had a shirt-sleeve informality that didn't do it any harm.

This followed an exquisitely-wrought opening number, Schubert's Rosamunde music, which for subdued lyrical elegance was as fine as anything heard here so far this year. More of that same rarefied inspiration, and in larger measure though quite as nicely chiselled, came close upon it in the Unfinished B minor Symphony.

A Long Program

The program was a long one for in addition to Franck's Symphony there was also Stravinsky's Firebird Suite and a twenty-minute intermission making a total spread between the concert's start and finish of two hours and 25 minutes. The Festival managers, who this year seem to have overlooked nothing, shrewdly timed the Sunday afternoon concert at 4:30, so it was all over by 7, a circumstance which is best appreciated when it is borne in mind that the Stockbridge Festival probably holds the high mark for average motor distance traveled by its patrons.

But to get back to the music, Franck's Symphony was probably the news of the afternoon. A particular friend of the writer can expatiate at great length about the difference between the Toscanini manner and the Stokowski manner of beginning the second subject of this chromatic and magnificently conceived work. To get at the Koussevitzky manner it is best to ignore analysis entirely. That approach would lead to the conclusion that the Boston leader rather closely punctuated his text. It could have seemed discursive if you listened too literally, and with too much concern for such minutiae as the over-deliberate emphasis on the imitative figures in the brass near the end of the first movement.

An Objective Reading

To worry about these matters was to miss the Koussevitzky interpretation as a whole which was a healthy and objective reading and removed Cesar Franck from the philosophical mustiness with which he is sometimes infused. It was grand Sunday afternoon music, devotional as well as stimulating.

The quality of the Firebird music is best explained by Koussevitzky's own fondness for this score. He played it in Hartford within a season or so. He does not miss a single effect or permit a page to pass unelucidated. In has glitter and the Bostonians know where to find every shining thread of its lustrous fabric.

A strict report of the day's proceedings would include a number of technical errors in the wind section but allowances must be made for weather conditions. In fact the most serious enemy of the Festival so far has been the Berkshire humidity.

* * *

SATURDAY'S CONCERT

If the program of Saturday evening is described as wanting in finish and elevation, the statement is not to be taken too greatly in derogation, since all things are relative.

There were the pyrotechnics of Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe second Suite and of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony both of which exemplified Koussevitzky's virtuosity with the brasses. He seems to have become very partial to them and expects valiant things from their direction.

The Mozart E flat Symphony began with a fuzziness on the opening tone at what in Mozart's day was called le premier coup d'arc and the thing as a whole was somewhat casual. The final movement was taken at a terrific tempo and one got the impression that Koussevitzky, for the evening at least, was intent upon display effects.

Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta, which had the distinction of being the only American composition of the Festival, proved an engaging and thoroughly musical work. The composer was in the audience and was repeatedly waved up front by the conductor. He finally acceded and took his ovation just before the intermission. The audience liked his Sinfonietta and told him so emphatically.

Although atmospheric conditions seemed more tolerable than on Thursday night, the odds against the strings were so unfair that there was doubtless a disturbing effect on morale. The situation is best exampled by the remark of a tall blonde who averred: "I was so engrossed in watching the harp player repairing his broken strings that I forgot to listen to Ravel."

The first harp suffered six broken strings during the playing of the Daphnis Suite. "It was like taking the harp out of a bath-tub," he said afterwards, and for his important passages in the Franck Symphony on Sunday he had a second instrument drawn up beside his chair.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

Koussevitsky Scores Hit With Ravel Presentation

4800 Music Lovers In Giant Ampitheatre For Second Concert

(Special to The Eagle-News)

TANGLEWOOD. Berkshire Hills, Aug. 8—A celebrity-studded audience of approximately 4,800 music lovers form all sections of the country sat in rapt silence here last night as Serge Koussevitzky, premier American conductor led the Boston Symphony orchestra through the second concert program of the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The setting was the new and permanent home of the Boston orchestra on a wooded knoll overlooking beautiful Stockbridge Bowl high in the Berkshires between the towns of Lenox and Stockbridge.

Threatening weather during the day materialized in the form of a heavy thundershower late in the afternoon but failed to keep the huge canvas amphitheatre from filling to near capacity. The audience overflowed into the aisles and outside the tent long before the conductor made his way to the platform.

Mr. Koussevitsky was greeted with a rousing applause as he appeared. Then, as the lights in the big tent large enough to hold a complete three-ring circus went out, there was a hushed silence, broken only by the faint patter of raindrops overhead.

The conductor, who has been an outstanding success with this orchestra, both in Boston and on concert tour, exhibited great genius in making the popular program appeal to the audience. It was full of spirit and excitement throughout, beginning with Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major and reaching a splendid climax in Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

The well-known but nevertheless charming Mozart was particularly well done. The jig at the end gave pleasant impetus to the program and was followed by Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta far string orchestra. Mr. Hill's not too familiar work was of special interest and gave a pleasing balance to the program.

The composer, a contemporary Boston musician was brought to the stand by Mr. Koussevitsky and was called back four times before the enthusiastic audience allowed him to return to his box.

The audience, pleased by the Hill music, was totally unprepared for the masterful rendition of Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe suite which followed. The unexpected popping of harp strings, caused by the heavy dampness in the air only served to accentuate the beautiful diminuendos from climaxes of the three excerpts given—Lever du Jour, Pantomime and Danse Generale.

Tschaikovsky's 4th symphony was familiar to many fans of the Boston orchestra but not too familiar. It served as a fine ending to the second concert. A gradual acceleration of interest was noted with beautiful performances by the string section in the third movement pizzicato.

It was brought to a stunning and breath-taking climax with a beautiful theme by the brass section. The conductor was kept on the platform for several minutes as the audience paid tribute to his clever programming and conducting of the difficult, yet popular Tschaikovsky work.

His dramatic sense was well to the fore in the presentation of the contrasts in this movement.

Celebrities from all walks of life were present. Among them were Miriam Hopkins, blonde star of the screen, Alma Gluck, Metropolitan opera star and her husband, Efren Zimbalist, well-known violinist of New York and Europe, Dr. Allen Craig, head of the Charlotte Hungerford hospital in Torrington, Conn., Albert Spalding, concert violinist of New York and Great Barrington, Massachusetts Congressman Allen T. Treadway and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Herald-Tribune, author and music lecturer.

Baroness Serge Korff of Washington was in the audience. Also Mrs. Hunting Otis of Millbrook, a member of the festival advisory committee from the valley area.

This afternoon's program consisted of works by Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck's Symphony in D minor. The fourth concert, to be presented next Thursday evening will be an all-Wagner program. On Saturday evening the orchestra will play works by Hayden, Jan Sibelius and the Russian composer Rimsky-Korsakov. The sixth and concluding concert next Sunday will be an all-Brahms concert.

K. V. B. H.
C. W. K.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 9 - 1937

PRECEDENT SET FOR PERSPIRING MUSICIAN

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
WEST VIRGINIAN
AUG 9 - 1937

MUSICIANS REMOVE COATS FOR RELIEF FROM HEAT

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers incated they would not.

DENVER, COLO.
POST
AUG

BOSTON SYMPHONY BOWS TO HEAT AND PLAYERS SHED COATS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(A. P.)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN

Symphony Maestro, Players Give 'Shirt Sleeve' Concert

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY
Shirt-Sleeved Maestro

Coats Are Doffed in Withering Heat At Boston

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphony festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot.

He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony Sets Precedent, Musicians Play in Shirt-Sleeves

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Traditional Boston Symphony Orchestra decorum was tossed overboard today by Serge Koussevitzky as the leader and orchestra members—to the cheers of the audience—played in shirt-sleeves for the concluding program of the first half of the Kerkshire Symphonic Festival.

While the acoustic shell in which the musicians perform at these outdoor concerts has won fame for its phenomenal projectoin of even the lightest musical passage, Koussevitzky interruted the program to inform the audience of another peculiar quality of the shell: that it is infernally hot to work in.

Hence, he asked, would the audience pardon him and the players for removing their coats. Hearty applause and cheers came as the answer, and every player, save a few die-hards who declined to reveal their suspenders, doffed their coats.

Except for the final bow, Kouusevitzky remained coatless, an act, as one old-timer recalled, of orchestral history.

On the artistic side, the program attested the fame of Koussevitzky as a program builder. Schubert, Stravinsky and Franck were placed on the same program, but the care of his choice of selections raised no thought of incompatability as the music was played.

First came the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde" and his "unfinished" symphony. Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" ballet music followed. The entire second half of the program was devoted to Franck's symphony in D minor.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST
AUG 9 - 1937

Hub Symphony Orchestra Plays in Shirt Sleeves

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

History Made As Musicians Shed Coats At Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — (AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 9 - 1937

Berkshires Scene Of Many Concerts

The third concert of the Berkshire Music Festival was held yesterday with Sergei Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in the huge tent on Tanglewood estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. The audience numbered nearly five thousand, guests attending from all parts of New England and elsewhere. Private homes and the hotels between Great Barrington and Pittsfield were filled to capacity over the week end. Due to the excessive humidity, as was the case Friday and Saturday the players appeared without their coats.

The concert began with two Schubert works, the overture to Rosamonde and the Unfinished Symphony. Then followed a suite from Stravinsky's Ballet, "The Firebird." Following the intermission they played Cesar Franck's Symphony. The acoustics were excellent despite the heavy air.

It is expected that the three concerts this week will have a record attendance. Thursday will be featured by a Wagner program, and Saturday's program will include Sibelius' Seventh Symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scherazade," Sunday there will be a Brahms' program.

PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS

AUG 9 - 1937

COOL MUSIC

Famous Orchestra Plays Sunday In Shirt Sleeves

(By The Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphony festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

AU

Musicians Shed Coats; Set New Precedent

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

AUG

Boston Symphony Really Gets Hot

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9. (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

AUG 9 - 1937

Symphony Audience Hails Coat-Doffing

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
DAILY CHIEF

AUG 9 - 1937

Extra! Boston Symphony Orchestra Defies Heat; Play in Shirt- Sleeves

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP) Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1937

INTERRUPTS SYMPHONY TO TAKE OFF COATS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—AP—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA.
JOURNAL

AUG 9 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS MINUS COATS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 9 - 1937

BRILLIANT CONCERTS AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Miss Miriam Hopkins and Other Notables in Audience Saturday Night

Audiences of near capacity size were present for both of the week-end concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, 200-acre estate recently purchased by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival board, which concluded the first half of the series of six summer concerts near Stockbridge. An audience of notables not only in music, but in many academic, social and business stratas enhanced the festive occasion, particularly on Saturday evening, when numerous vacationists at the neighboring summer colonies appeared in evening attire.

Miriam Hopkins in Audience

Albert Spaulding, distinguished violinist, who has appeared at Smith college in previous winters and who, it is understood, is a resident at Stockbridge, was seen in Saturday evening's audience and was rivalled in his popularity with press photographers only by Miss Miriam Hopkins, cinema star, who sat two rows behind the reviewer. Edward Burlingame Hill, music professor at Harvard university, whose Sinfonietta for String orchestra was performed in Saturday evening's concert, was present to share honors with Director Serge Koussevitzky and was likewise besieged with photographers during the short intermission which followed the playing of his composition.

Weather conditions on both days were uncertain, but managed to remain comparatively favorable during the two hours of the actual performances. Following a hard storm Saturday afternoon the evening concert which featured Mozart's exquisite Symphony in E flat major and Tschaikovsky's tumultuous Symphony No. 4 in F minor, was performed under ideal conditions, and many under the large tent found it necessary to wear wraps. Sunday afternoon proved more sultry and, diverging from stoical custom, Dr. Koussevitzky requested the permission of his audience to remove "the garb" owing to the excessively uncomfortable heat. An enthusiastic "bravo" from one feminine listener, followed by rapturous applause, greeted the musician's request, and the informally attired orchestra played, probably for the first time in their lives in shirt sleeves.

Variety and popular appeal marked both programs and although most of the numbers had probably been heard on several previous occasions by members in the audience, the response was grateful and enthusiastic, so fresh and altogether exhilarating was each interpretation. Following the Mozart symphony and the specially transcribed Sinfonietta of Mr. Hill, the wildly ecstatic second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" was played with brilliance and purity of intonation that was truly astounding in the semi-open air quarters in which the orchestra gave its performance.

The Tschaikovsky symphony with its resounding play of brasses was particularly effective in the broad tent and the extraordinary musicianship invested in its composition made this theatrical, almost barbariously splendid symphony a fitting choice for the concluding offering.

Sunday's program included two composers of the Romantic school, Schubert and Cesar Franck, and one of the modern school, Igor Fedorovitch Stravinsky, whose name is closely associated with the Russian ballet. From Schubert's prolific writings were selected the delicate, Mozartian ballet music from "Rosamunde" and the two movements of the familiar Symphony in B minor, popularly known as the "Unfinished." It is unfortunate that the latter has received the attention of so many unskilled musicians as the natural tendency to over-sentimentalize the melodious Allegro has prejudiced many listeners against this composition. The dignified restraint of the Boston Symphony orchestra in its interpretation of the "Unfinished" symphony, however, outlined the fresh inspiration and pure expressiveness of this composition, reinstating it in the graces of many.

The boldly colorful Suite from "L'Oiseau de Feu" of Stravinsky, which so admirably complements the exotic idea upon which the ballet is constructed, provided an abrupt contrast following the Schubert. The solidly beautiful Franck D minor symphony with its emotionally ingratiating central theme pervading the entire composition, concluded the afternoon concert.—H. E. W.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1937

Festival Audience Cheers Coatless Boston Symphony

Koussevitzky Discards Decorum In "Infernally" Hot Stockbridge Shell

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8 — (AP)—Traditional Boston Symphony orchestra decorum was tossed overboard today by Serge Koussevitzky as the leader and orchestra members—to the cheers of the audience—played in shirt-sleeves for the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

While the acoustic shell in which the musicians perform at these outdoor concerts has won fame for its phenomenal projection of even the lightest musical passages, Koussevitzky interrupted the program to inform the audience of another peculiar quality of the shell: That it is infernally hot to work in.

Asks Permission.

Hence, he asked, would the audience pardon him and the players for removing their coats. Hearty applause and cheers came as the answer, and every player, save a few die-hards who declined to reveal their suspenders, doffed coats.

Except for the final bow, Koussevitzky remained coatless, an act, as one old-timer remarked, of orchestral history.

On the artistic side, the program attested the fame of Koussevitzky as a program builder. Schubert, Stravinsky, and Franck were played on the same program, but the care of his choice of selections raised no thought of incompatibility as the music was played.

First came the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosemunde" and his "Unfinished" symphony. Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" ballet music followed. The entire second half of the program was devoted to Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

OMAHA, NEB.
Evening World-Herald

Precedent

Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding number of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the accoustic shell in which the orchestra was playing was "infernally hot." He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated the listeners would not. The concert went on in shirt sleeves.

HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
CITIZEN-NEWS

Program Halted While Symphonists Shed Coats in Heat

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9. (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience that the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, members of the audience said, then outdid itself.

MORGANTOWN, W. VA.
POST

AUG 9 - 1937

Perspiring Players Make Precedent

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE

AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony Makes History By Taking Off Coats

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot." He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 9 - 1937

COMFORTABLE MUSICIANS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday. Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1937

136

Broadcast of Berkshire Festival Is Scheduled

AN ENTIRE concert of excerpts from the operatic works of Richard Wagner, to be given at the Berkshire Symphonic festival by the famous Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be heard in an exclusive NBC program of more than two hours' duration Thursday.

Wagnerian Works

For this concert, to be broadcast from 8:30 to 10:45 p. m., EST., over the NBC - Red network, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen a varied and representative list of Wagnerian works. The program will open with an early composition, the overture to "Rienzi," followed by the Prelude and Liebestod, from "Tristan and Isolde," and the dynamic "Ride of the Valkyries," from "Die Walkuere," the second opera in the Ring cycle.

The second group will consist of Waldweben, from "Siegfried," the prelude to "Parsifal," and the popular oveture to "Tannhauser." Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will again be intermission commentator.

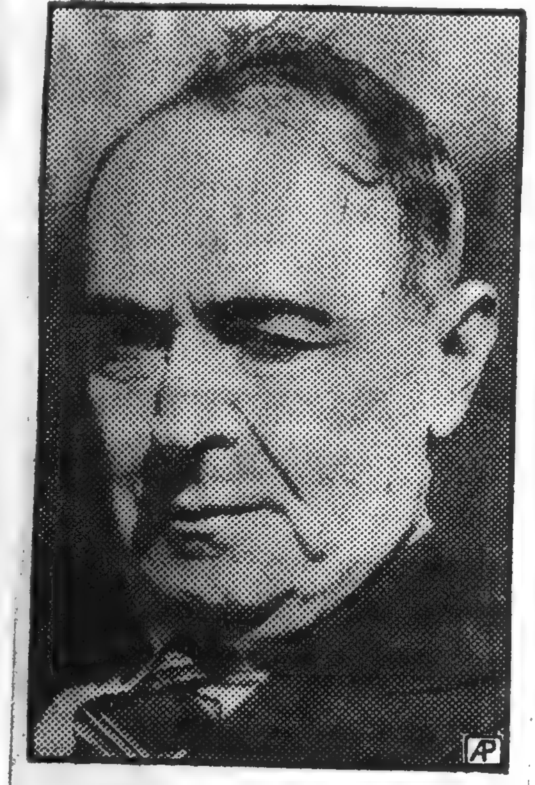
The concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, now in its fourth season, are of the highest artistic standards. Given by an orchestra superior to any in Europe and the equal of any in the United States, they are thoroughly rehearsed to meet the demands of what Dr. Koussevitzky declared to be a most exacting audience. Dr. Koussevitzky returned from Europe to conduct the six concerts composing the festival. Two of these were scheduled for broadcast in entirety by the NBC.

Permanent Building

The founders and backers of the Berkshire festival hope to develop it into an institution comparable to the Salzburg and Bayreuth festivals in Europe. Patronage last year, the first in which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra took part, was so heavy that the festival is to be housed in a permanent building at Tanglewood, a beautiful estate in the foothills of the Berkshires, near Stockbridge, Massachusetts. Plans are being laid to add choral works and opera for the fifth season in 1938.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH
AUG 9 - 1937

'Infernally' Hot, Symphony Plays In Shirt Sleeves



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival Sunday, Koussevitzky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

Crowd Cheers Move To Let Orchestra Men Remove Coats

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitzky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

OCALA, FLA.
STAR
AUG 9 - 1937

Precedent Established By Leader Of Orchestra

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitzky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestraa, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
AUG 9 - 1937

SYMPHONY IN SHIRTSLEEVES

Koussevitzky Tells Audience Acoustic Shell Is "Infernally Hot."

By the Associated Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, Koussevitzky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats. Applause and cheers indicated they would not.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

THIRD CONCERT HAS CROWD OF 5000

Stockbridge, Aug. 9—An audience of fully 5000 filled the marquee tent at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon for the last of the first series of three concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Enthusiasm ran high as at the first two concerts and Dr Koussevitzky scored another triumph. It was so hot that after the first selectin he said to the audience he hoped they would excuse him and the musicians if they removed their coats. There was loud applause and off came the coats.

In the box with Bentley W. Warren of Beacon street, Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra association, were Dr and Mrs Harry A. Garfield. In the box with Mrs Serge Koussevitzky was Eliel Saarinen, architect of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., who has been engaged as architect for the proposed development of Tanglewood as a musical center. He discussed with Mr Warren and officers of the Berkshire Music festival, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, the proposed site of the music shed.

Resort Towns Are Busy

South Berkshire summer resort towns are having the gayest weekend in many years, the entertainments being largely for visitors attending the Tanglewood music festival.

At Aston Magna Mrs Albert Spalding gave a luncheon today in honor of Mr and Mrs Frederick Fisher, Jr., of Westover, Va., and Mr and Mrs Olin Downes. Among others in the company were Mr and Mrs Lawrence White and Dr and Mrs Warfield T. Longcope. Later they went to the matinee at Tanglewood.

In a dinner party last night with Mr and Mrs Charles Rockhill at Cranehill were Mrs James Lees Laidlaw, Mr and Mrs John W. G. Powell, Mr and Mrs Harold E. Weeks and Dr J. Willard Travell, all of whom later were in the Rockhill box at the concert.

Mrs H. Strongman Miller of New York, who is at Heaton hall, Stockbridge, was the honored guest at a supper party given at Curtis hotel, Lenox, Saturday after the concert, by Alfred I. Barton of Miami beach. The others present were his mother, Mrs J. Hunter Barton, Mrs Charles L. Woodward and Mr and Mrs John Hecox of Albany; also Mr and Mrs Leonard Clark Feathers, Allen Howard, Foster Fitzsimmons and Dennis Landers. Tonight Mrs Griswold gave a dinner at Hillhome, Stockbridge, in compliment to Mrs Miller.

At Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, Mrs Robert Latimer Redfield, Jr., was a cocktail party hostess for 50. With Mr and Mrs Redfield at Elmwood farm are Dr and Mrs James F. McKernon and Mrs A. V. Wittmeyer of New Canaan, Ct. Mrs Henry Ware Eaton entertained an equal number at Indian cave, Monterey, for Misses Gladys Williamson and Anne Crews of Raleigh, N. C., her house guests.

Following the chamber music concert at South Mountain, Pittsfield, this afternoon Mrs William Willeke had 100 guests at tea at Mountain house. Mrs Edwin T. Rice poured.

Mrs Louis Lombard, formerly of the Castle de Trevano at Lugano, Switz., was honored by Mrs Robert Metz with a luncheon party at Fernbrook, Lenox.

Miss Mabel Choate entertained at luncheon for Mrs Robert H. Fife, president of the Garden club of America, and Mr Fife.

Noticed in the box with Representative and Mrs Allen T. Treadway at the Tanglewood matinee this afternoon were Mrs Horace R. Shares of Washington, Mrs Geraldine W. Spalding and Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway.

Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs had in her box Mr and Mrs Henry R. Russell, Matthew Rockwell and David Donald, Jr.

With Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago were Joseph Bentonelli, tenor of the Metropolitan opera, and Mr and Mrs Wallace Fanstack of Chicago.

Mr and Mrs Cassius Clay were with Mr and Mrs Adolf A. Berle, Jr., for whom they entertained at dinner last night at Konkapot, Great Barrington.

Mr and Mrs John Bross Lloyd had Mr and Mrs Charles C. Lewis and Miss Lewis of Albany as festival box guests.

Ted Shawn, the dancer, gave a supper party at Curtis hotel, Lenox, Saturday night after the concert. Curtis arrivals include Misses Miriam Hopkins of New York, Emily C. Reynolds, Nellie F. Willmore of Trenton, N. J., Mr and Mrs Norman Eastman and Miss Eastman of Pasadena, Mr and Mrs Eric C. Moore, Mr and Mrs Wilmot C. Castle and A. B. Eastwood of Rochester, N. Y.

Prof Livingston Hall of Harvard, Mrs Hall and Misses Florence Dorothy Bill and Roxanne Beardsley were in the festival matinee box with Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett.

Mrs Serge Koussevitzky had as one of her box guests at the concert Saturday night Edward Burlingame Hill, composer of the Sinfonietta, which was played by the orchestra, Dr Koussevitzky, conductor.

New arrivals at Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, include Mr and Mrs Daniel Parish Kingsford, Dr and Mrs H. H. Whitehouse, Mr and Mrs Walter C. Lang, Mr and Mrs C. S. Witherell of New York; Comdr D. B. Dormer, U. S. N., and Mrs Dormer of Washington.

Newcomers at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, include Mr and Mrs George D. Bradford of Darien, Ct., Mr and Mrs Curtis Brown of London, Mrs Arvine Wales, Miss Helen Wales, Mr and Mrs W. J. Walker, Mr and Mrs Douglas Gilbert of New York.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Orchestra Plays Ably After Doffing Coats

Musicians, Setting Possible Summer Precedent in Dress, Keep Last Festival Concert Up to High Standard Despite Humid Weather

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—The third program of the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival was put through this afternoon with a success all the more gratifying because of the anxious suspense due to the uncertain weather. A semi-outdoor festival in New England lives dangerously, and each concert is an exciting adventure, but yesterday's violent thunderstorm had used up the surplus atmospheric energy, and conditions this afternoon were not unfavorable except for humidity which led Dr Koussevitzky to ask the audience if he and the orchestra might take off their coats.

Permission was rapturously granted, and perhaps the emancipation added to the efficiency as well as to the comfort of the musicians; there was audible speculation as to whether it was not a new record for the Boston Symphony orchestra. It might very well be a precedent, for to musicians having to dress up is the worst of summer concert giving; in shirtsleeves they can practice stoically no matter how hot it gets.

The sultry air perhaps did reduce somewhat the resonance of the instruments, impairing slightly that soft luscious brilliance which comes from the free emission of overtones, but there was no lack of power, and the performance was kept up to the high standard set by the Beethoven program and by the Mozart and Tschaikowsky symphonies presented last night. The audience, of well over 5000 people, was said to be the largest in the festival's history, and the arrangements for extricating cars from the ample parking space had a satisfactory test.

Opening Seductive

In today's program Dr Koussevitzky

(Continued from First Page)

was again successful in finding famous works with enough significance and durability to appear fresh and interesting when played with vitality. For a seductive opening it would be hard to surpass the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, as spontaneous a flow of lovely melody as ever came even from his gushing spring. The orchestra played it with grace and delicacy and passed on to the best known of all symphonies, Schubert's "Unfinished," a work which has had the double misfortune of not coming to life for a generation because it was unfinished and then of being nearly played to death for the same reason. Fortunately, the purity of its inspiration keeps it from going stale, and so fine a performance as that of todays finds any audience responsive. Mr Koussevitzy gave it a very simple and natural interpretation, and each orchestral voice in turn flowed sweetly and expressively.

It was an abrupt and almost startling transition from this ineffable music to the harsh and strident brilliance of Stravinsky's "Fire Bird," but the smooth, deep stream of Schubert's inspiration made a good background for Stravinsky's diabolical cleverness. There is little of beauty in his music, but the flapping and squawking of the fire bird are a joy to the listeners, and the work as a whole shows imaginative power of a high order, as well as originality in devising new instrumental effects. In a few places solo parts showed the influence of the weather, but in general it was an admirable performance.

Franck D Minor Symphony

After the intermission, which needs mention because it was used, at the first daylight concert, for exploration of the beautiful grounds which are to be the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the program closed with another familiar but far from outworn symphony, the one by Cesar Franck in D minor, a work with enough weight and solemnity to offset the cackling frivolity of the fire bird.

Perhaps no composer has done so much as Cesar Franck with a talent in some ways so limited. It would be unjust to call his powers secondrate, yet he lacked the freedom, sureness, spontaneity and volume of the greatest creative minds; it is all the more to his credit that by concentrating his powers he was able to produce one symphony, one quintet, one quartet, and one sonata which are acknowledged masterpieces, and which today are steadily growing in their appeal to the public.

Even the cumulative iteration which disturbs some listeners has its justification in the massive effect which this symphony produces—it was interesting to observe how many of the listeners, as they scattered away from the big tent were quietly humming the intense and emotional principal theme which the composer has pounded in so thoroughly. Altogether it was a moving performance of a noble work.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1937

— Triumph

Even the forces of nature added their cooperation to the talents of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and efficient management to make the first half of the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival a triumph of magnitude.

Artistically, Dr. Koussevitzky and his famous unit vindicated the critical acclaim that has raised the Boston Symphony to rank with the foremost orchestras of the world. The spontaneity of the applause which followed each work of the first three programs is strong testimony that the thousands who sat under the huge concert tent were expressing sincere enthusiasm and not merely perfunctory obedience to a custom which demands handclapping after a performance.

The sincerity of audience interest is confirmed by the almost capacity attendance that marked each of the three concerts despite distinctly unfavorable weather conditions. Storms, and threats of storms, preceded all of the concerts and lasted far beyond the time the majority of those in the audience had to leave their homes if they wished to arrive in time for the first number. Nevertheless, the percentage of those who arrived late was smaller even than one could expect under perfect weather conditions.

Apparently this determination of thousands of music lovers to hear the Festival concerts regardless of what the weather might be, softened Mother Nature's heart. With mathematical regularity she turned off the faucets and faded out the sound effects for the duration of each of the three concerts. Yesterday afternoon there was a slight drizzle toward the end of the first half of the concert, but this could easily be attributed to a faulty celestial washer. Otherwise, the rains which have dampened portions of the Berkshires almost continually for the past week kept religiously away from Tanglewood at concert time.

The unqualified success of the first half of the series presages an equally successful culmination of the most ambitious music festival in America. Public reaction thus far has been enthusiastic to an exceptional degree, and people will talk. The three concerts this week should further entrench the Festival as an event of importance artistically to the world and economically to the Berkshires.

SHENANDOAH, PA.
HERALD
AUG 9 - 1937

PERMISSION GRANTED

Boston, Aug. 9. (U.P)—Traditionally conservative Bostonians, already wilting under a week-old heat wave, gasped anew today at the precedent established at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by Conductor Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Noted for fastidious dress as well as his musical virtuosity, Koussevitzky startled his audience at the annual Stockbridge concert by appealing for permission to remove his coat—and roll up his sleeves. With a burst of applause the audience granted approval.

oats

n Dress, tandard

ASS.

1937 nature added

he talents of
, the Boston and efficient
the first half Berkshire triumph of

Koussevitzky indicated the as raised the ank with the
f the world.
e applause work of the strong testi-nds who sat
t tent were husiasm and y obedience mands handrmance.
dience inter-
e almost ca-hat marked certs despite weather con-threats of the concerts
the time the
the audience
mes if they time for the theless, the who arrived
n than one fect weather

rmination of vers to hear regardless of ht be, soften-heart. With y the turnaded out the duration of
rts. Yester-was a slight of the first t this could faulty erwise, the pened por-almost coneek kept renglewood at of the presages an mination of festival action thus c to an ex-people will s this week

the Festi-ortance ar-
nd econom-

937

ANTED Traditionally already wilt-wave, gasp-edent estab-
Symphonic
Dr. Serge
ston Symfastidious rtuosity, ence at cert by remove
ves. With audience

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1937

THIRD CONCERT HAS CROWD OF 5000

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—An audience of fully 5000 filled the marquee tent at Tanglewood this afternoon for the last of the first series of three concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Enthusiasm ran high as at the first two concerts and Dr Koussevitzky scored another triumph. It was so hot that after the first selection he said to the audience he hoped they would excuse him and the musicians if they removed their coats. There was loud applause and off came the coats.

In the box with Bentley W. Warren of Beacon street, Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra association, were Dr and Mrs Harry A. Garfield. In the box with Mrs Serge Koussevitsky was Eliel Saarinen, architect of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., who has been engaged as architect for the proposed development of Tanglewood as a musical center. He discussed with Mr Warren and officers of the Berkshire Music festival, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, the proposed site of the music shed.

Resort Towns Are Busy

South Berkshire summer resort towns are having the gayest weekend in many years, the entertainments were largely for visitors attending the Tanglewood music festival.

At Aston Magna Mrs Albert Spalding gave a luncheon today in honor of Mr and Mrs Frederick Fisher, Jr., of Westover, Va., and Mr and Mrs Olin Downes. Among others in the company were Mr and Mrs Lawrence White and Dr and Mrs Warfield T. Longcope. Later they went to the matinee at Tanglewood.

In a dinner party last night with Mr and Mrs Charles Rockhill at Cranehill were Mrs James Lees Laidlaw, Mr and Mrs John W. G. Powell, Mr and Mrs Harold E. Weeks and Dr J. Willard Travell, all of whom later were in the Rockhill box at the concert.

Mrs H. Strongman Miller of New York, who is at Heaton hall, Stockbridge, was the honored guest at a supper party given at Curtis hotel, Lenox, last night after the concert, by Alfred I. Barton of Miami beach. The others present were his mother, Mrs J. Hunter Barton, Mrs Charles L. Woodward and Mr and Mrs John Hecox of Albany; also Mr and Mrs Leonard Clark Feathers, Allen Howard, Foster Fitzsimmons and Dennis Landers. Tonight Mrs Griswold gave a dinner at Hillhome, Stockbridge, in compliment to Mrs Miller.

At Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, Mrs Robert Latimer Redfield, Jr., was a cocktail party hostess for 50. With Mr and Mrs Redfield at Elmwood farm are Dr and Mrs James F. McKernon and Mrs A. V. Wittmeyer of New Canaan, Ct. Mrs Henry Ware Eaton entertained an equal number at Indian cave, Monterey, for Misses Gladys Williamson and Anne Crews of Raleigh, N. C., her house guests.

Following the chamber music concert at South Mountain, Pittsfield, this afternoon Mrs William Willeke had 100 guests at tea at Mountain house. Mrs Edwin T. Rice poured.

Mrs Louis Lombard, formerly of the Castle de Trevano at Lugano, Switz., was honored by Mrs Robert Metz with a luncheon party today at Fernbrook, Lenox.

Miss Mabel Choate entertained at luncheon for Mrs Robert H. Fife, president of the Garden club of America, and Mr Fife.

Noticed in the box with Representative and Mrs Allen T. Treadway at the Tanglewood matinee this afternoon were Mrs Horace R. Shares of Washington, Mrs Geraldine W. Spalding and Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway.

Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs had in her box Mr and Mrs Henry R. Russell, Matthew Rockwell and David Donald, Jr.

With Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago were Joseph Bentonelli, tenor of the Metropolitan opera, and Mr and Mrs Wallace Fanstack of Chicago.

Mr and Mrs Cassius Clay were with Mr and Mrs Adolf A. Berle, Jr., for whom they entertained at dinner tonight at Konkapot, Great Barrington.

Mr and Mrs John Bross Lloyd had

Mr and Mrs Charles C. Lewis and Miss Lewis of Albany as festival box guests.

Ted Shawn, the dancer, gave a supper party at Curtis hotel, Lenox, last night after the concert. Curtis arrivals include Misses Miriam Hopkins of New York, Emily C. Reynolds, Nellie F. Willmore of Trenton, N. J., Mr and Mrs Norman Eastman and Miss Eastman of Pasadena, Mr and Mrs Eric C. Moore, Mr and Mrs Wilmot C. Castle and A. B. Eastwood of Rochester, N. Y.

Prof Livingston Hall of Harvard, Mrs Hall and Misses Florence Dorothy Bill and Roxanne Beardsley were in the festival matinee box with Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett.

Mrs Serge Koussevitzky had as one of her box guests at the concert last night Edward Burlingame Hill, composer of the Sinfonietta, which was played by the orchestra, Dr Koussevitzky, conductor.

New arrivals at Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, include Mr and Mrs Daniel Parish Kingsford, Dr and Mrs H. H. Whitehouse, Mr and Mrs Walter C. Lang, Mr and Mrs C. S. Witherell of New York; Comdr D. B. Dormer, U. S. N., and Mrs Dormer of Washington.

Newcomers at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, include Mr and Mrs George D. Bradford of Darien, Ct., Mr and Mrs Curtis Brown of London, Mrs Arvine Wales, Miss Helen Wales, Mr and Mrs W. J. Walker, Mr and Mrs Douglas Gilbert of New York.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 9 - 1937

Country Fiddler Stamps Approval On Koussevitzky

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 8—George R. Sweet of Austerlitz, N. Y., who styles himself king of country fiddlers, dropped his bow while in Pittsfield today to don the robes of criticism. He had attended the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox last night, and put his stamp of approval on Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor. "A few more years," George said, "and those boys are going to be good." Sweet, with his fiddle, will be the artist at the country dance at the Lenox Town Hall Friday night. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival Association, and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, as well as members of the Boston orchestra will attend.

COLUMBIA, MO.
TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1937

Symphony Orchestra Plays in Shirt Sleeves

By The Associated Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphony Festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience it was "infernally" hot, and would the audience mind if musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL

AUG 9 - 1937

Audience Approves Coatless Orchestra

(By The Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 9 - 1937

PRECEDENT FOR PERSPIRING MUSICIANS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9—(AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS-PRESS

AUG 9 - 1937

MUSICIANS DOFF COATS.

Audience Heartily Applauded When Famed Leader Asks Permission.

STOCKRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience it was "infernally" hot, and would the audience mind if musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

AUG 9 - 1937

HUB SYMPHONY SHAKES COATS

Stockbridge, Aug. 9 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday Koussevitsky told the audience the accustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

DULUTH, MINN.
HERALD

AUG 9 - 1937

SYMPHONY GOES COATLESS WHEN MERCURY RISES

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony Goes To Town Coatless

STOCKBRIDGE (AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, the acoustic shell in which the or- Koussevitsky told the audience that chestra was performing was "infernally hot". He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not. The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1937

Coats Discarded; Symphony Goes On

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for prespiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated the audience would not.

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

AUG 9 - 1937

Symphony Leader Asks of Audience Right Doff Coats

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9. 1937.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the accoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

BARTLESVILLE, OKLA.
ENTERPRISE
AUG 9 - 1937

Orchestra Leader Establishes Precedent

(By the Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

ARDMORE, OKLA.
ARDMOREITE

AUG 9 - 1937

Boston Orchestra in Shirtsleeves

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent at the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 10 1937

137

Thousands at Music Festival At Stockbridge

Dampness at Boston Symphony Concerts No Deterrent to Audiences

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—The fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival reached its half-way point Sunday afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its third concert in the vast tent on the Tanglewood estate. The audience again numbered nearly 5,000, of whom many came early to walk through the grounds and gardens of the estate, while the presentation of the concert in the afternoon proved attractive to many who could not come for the full series, but wished to hear at least one of the performances, especially in view of the high artistic standard which Dr. Koussevitzy and his musicians have observed in this festival.

The weather, as on the two previous festival days, Thursday and Saturday, remained damp, the promise of a fair morning fading by mid-afternoon. The view of the Stockbridge bowl was partly veiled by mist and the moisture of the air could hardly have been a boon to the Boston Symphony's strings, but in the absence of a heavy downpour during the concert the Berkshire festival's luck still is continuing.

There was no hint, however, of this possible drawback in the song of the Boston Symphony's strings in a program beginning with two Schubert works, the Overture to Rosamunde and the Unfinished Symphony. Dr. Koussevitzy's interpretation of the Unfinished Symphony merited praise for its clarity, straightforwardness and absence of exaggeration. This immortal music was set forth with eloquence, while the conductor seemed most deeply in the vein and atmosphere of the music among the works heard before the intermission in the Fire Bird Suite. This again impressed the hearer as one of the most time-defying of Stravinsky's major works, if one of the earliest, in its descriptive vividness, its projection of an appealing, exotic and fanciful atmosphere, the skillful use of orchestral and harmonic tints in the treatment of the Russian master's ingratiating melodies.

The opening program on Thursday had been entirely devoted to Beethoven's music, but Dr. Koussevitzy's choices for Saturday night ranged more widely in time and space, beginning with a work composed in 1788, Mozart's Symphony in E Flat No. 543 in the Koechel Catalogue and two movements from a work of this decade, a sinfonietta for strings by Edward Burlingame Hill, of Harvard University. Ravel's second suite of music from his Ballet Daphnis et Chloe completed the first half of the concert and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony followed the intermission.

Except for the American work, all the works on the program were thoroughly familiar to habitual or casual concert goers. Professor Hill's music gave its hearers exceptional pleasure, judging by the ovation bestowed upon the composer at the close.

Given reasonably dry weather, there should be still larger audiences for the three concerts to be given this week. Thursday's Wagner program, Saturday's program which includes Sibelius' Seventh Symphony and Rimsky Korsakoff's Scheherazade and Sunday's Brahms program

---

SHIRT-SLEEVES CONCERT

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky displayed heroic restraint in asking his Stockbridge audience whether he and his accomplices might remove their coats—the humidity, you know. According to the music critic of the Springfield Republican, "permission was rapturously granted," and the man who built the headline said: "Boston orchestra plays ably after doffing coats." Rapturous approval; able playing afterward. Doesn't that imply that the symphothetic auditors would have been willing to let the correct doctor and his collaborators go as far as they pleased? Probably most of the women, who were amply represented in the serried chairs, had already slipped their poor aching feet out of their shoes,—a little way that women have when their feet are out of sight.

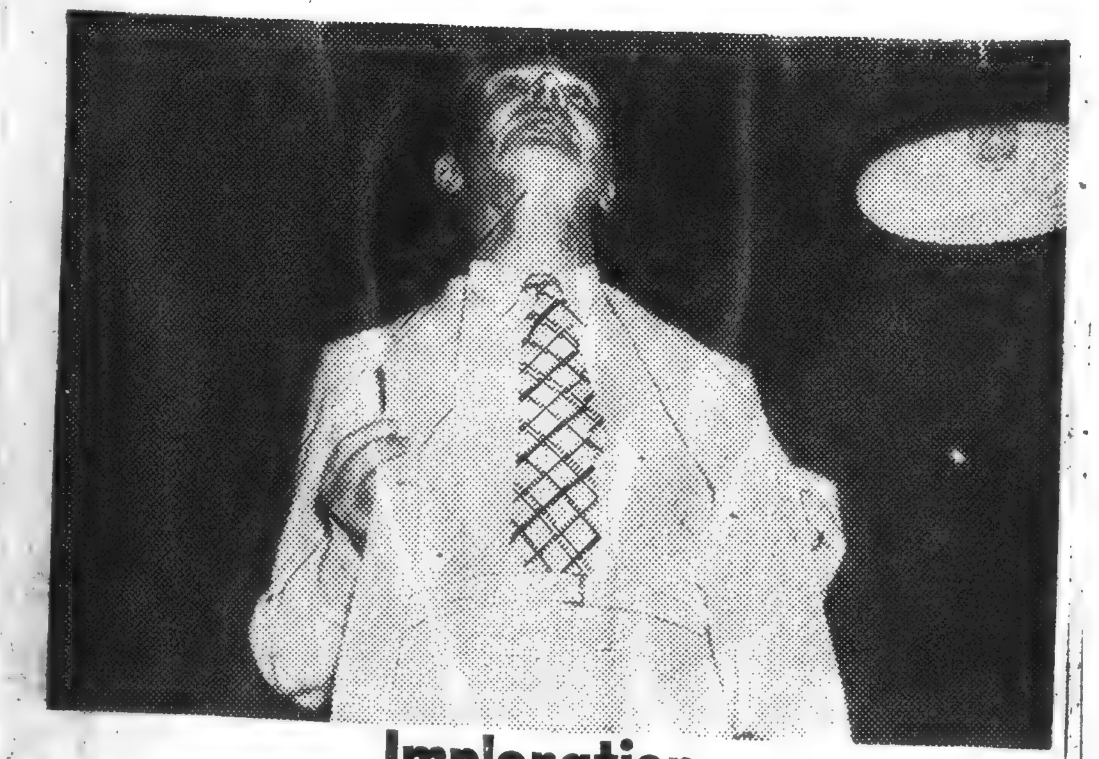
The dashing Arthur Fiedler and his cohorts have often done their stuff in semi-deshabille, without offending the most fastidious of their worshippers. What is permissible for an agent ought to be the prerogative of the principal and master. If Mr. Koussevitzky and his fellows will continue to do as beautifully as they have been doing for some years, the people would not object if they performed in shorts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1937

History Maker

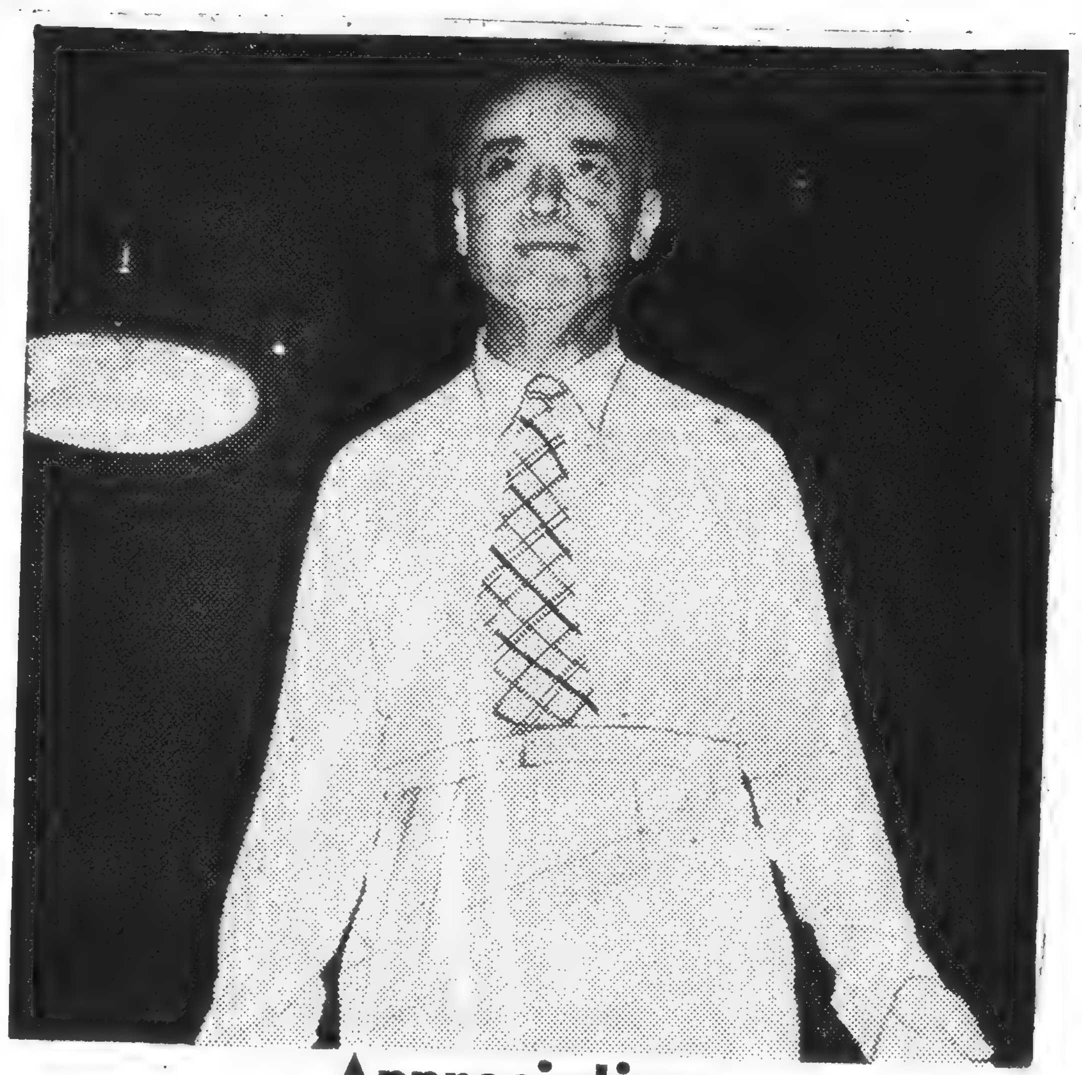
Perspiration

Application



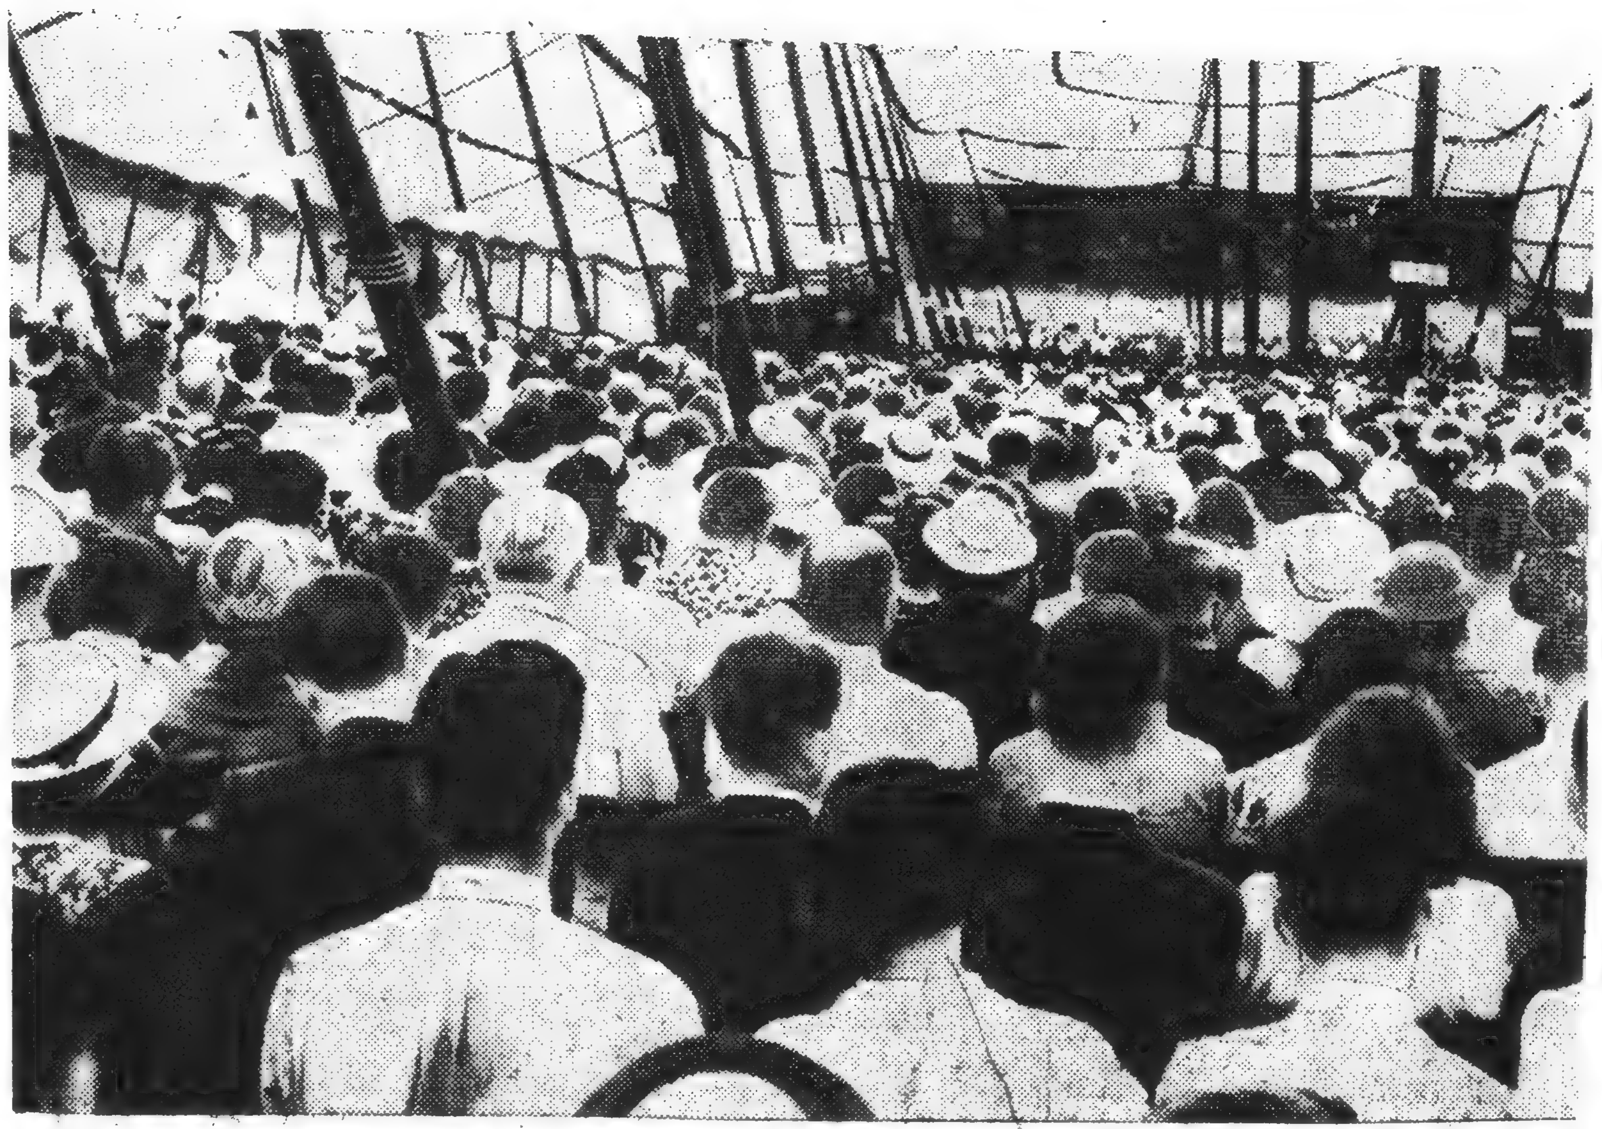
Imploration

Culmination



Appreciation

Refrigeration

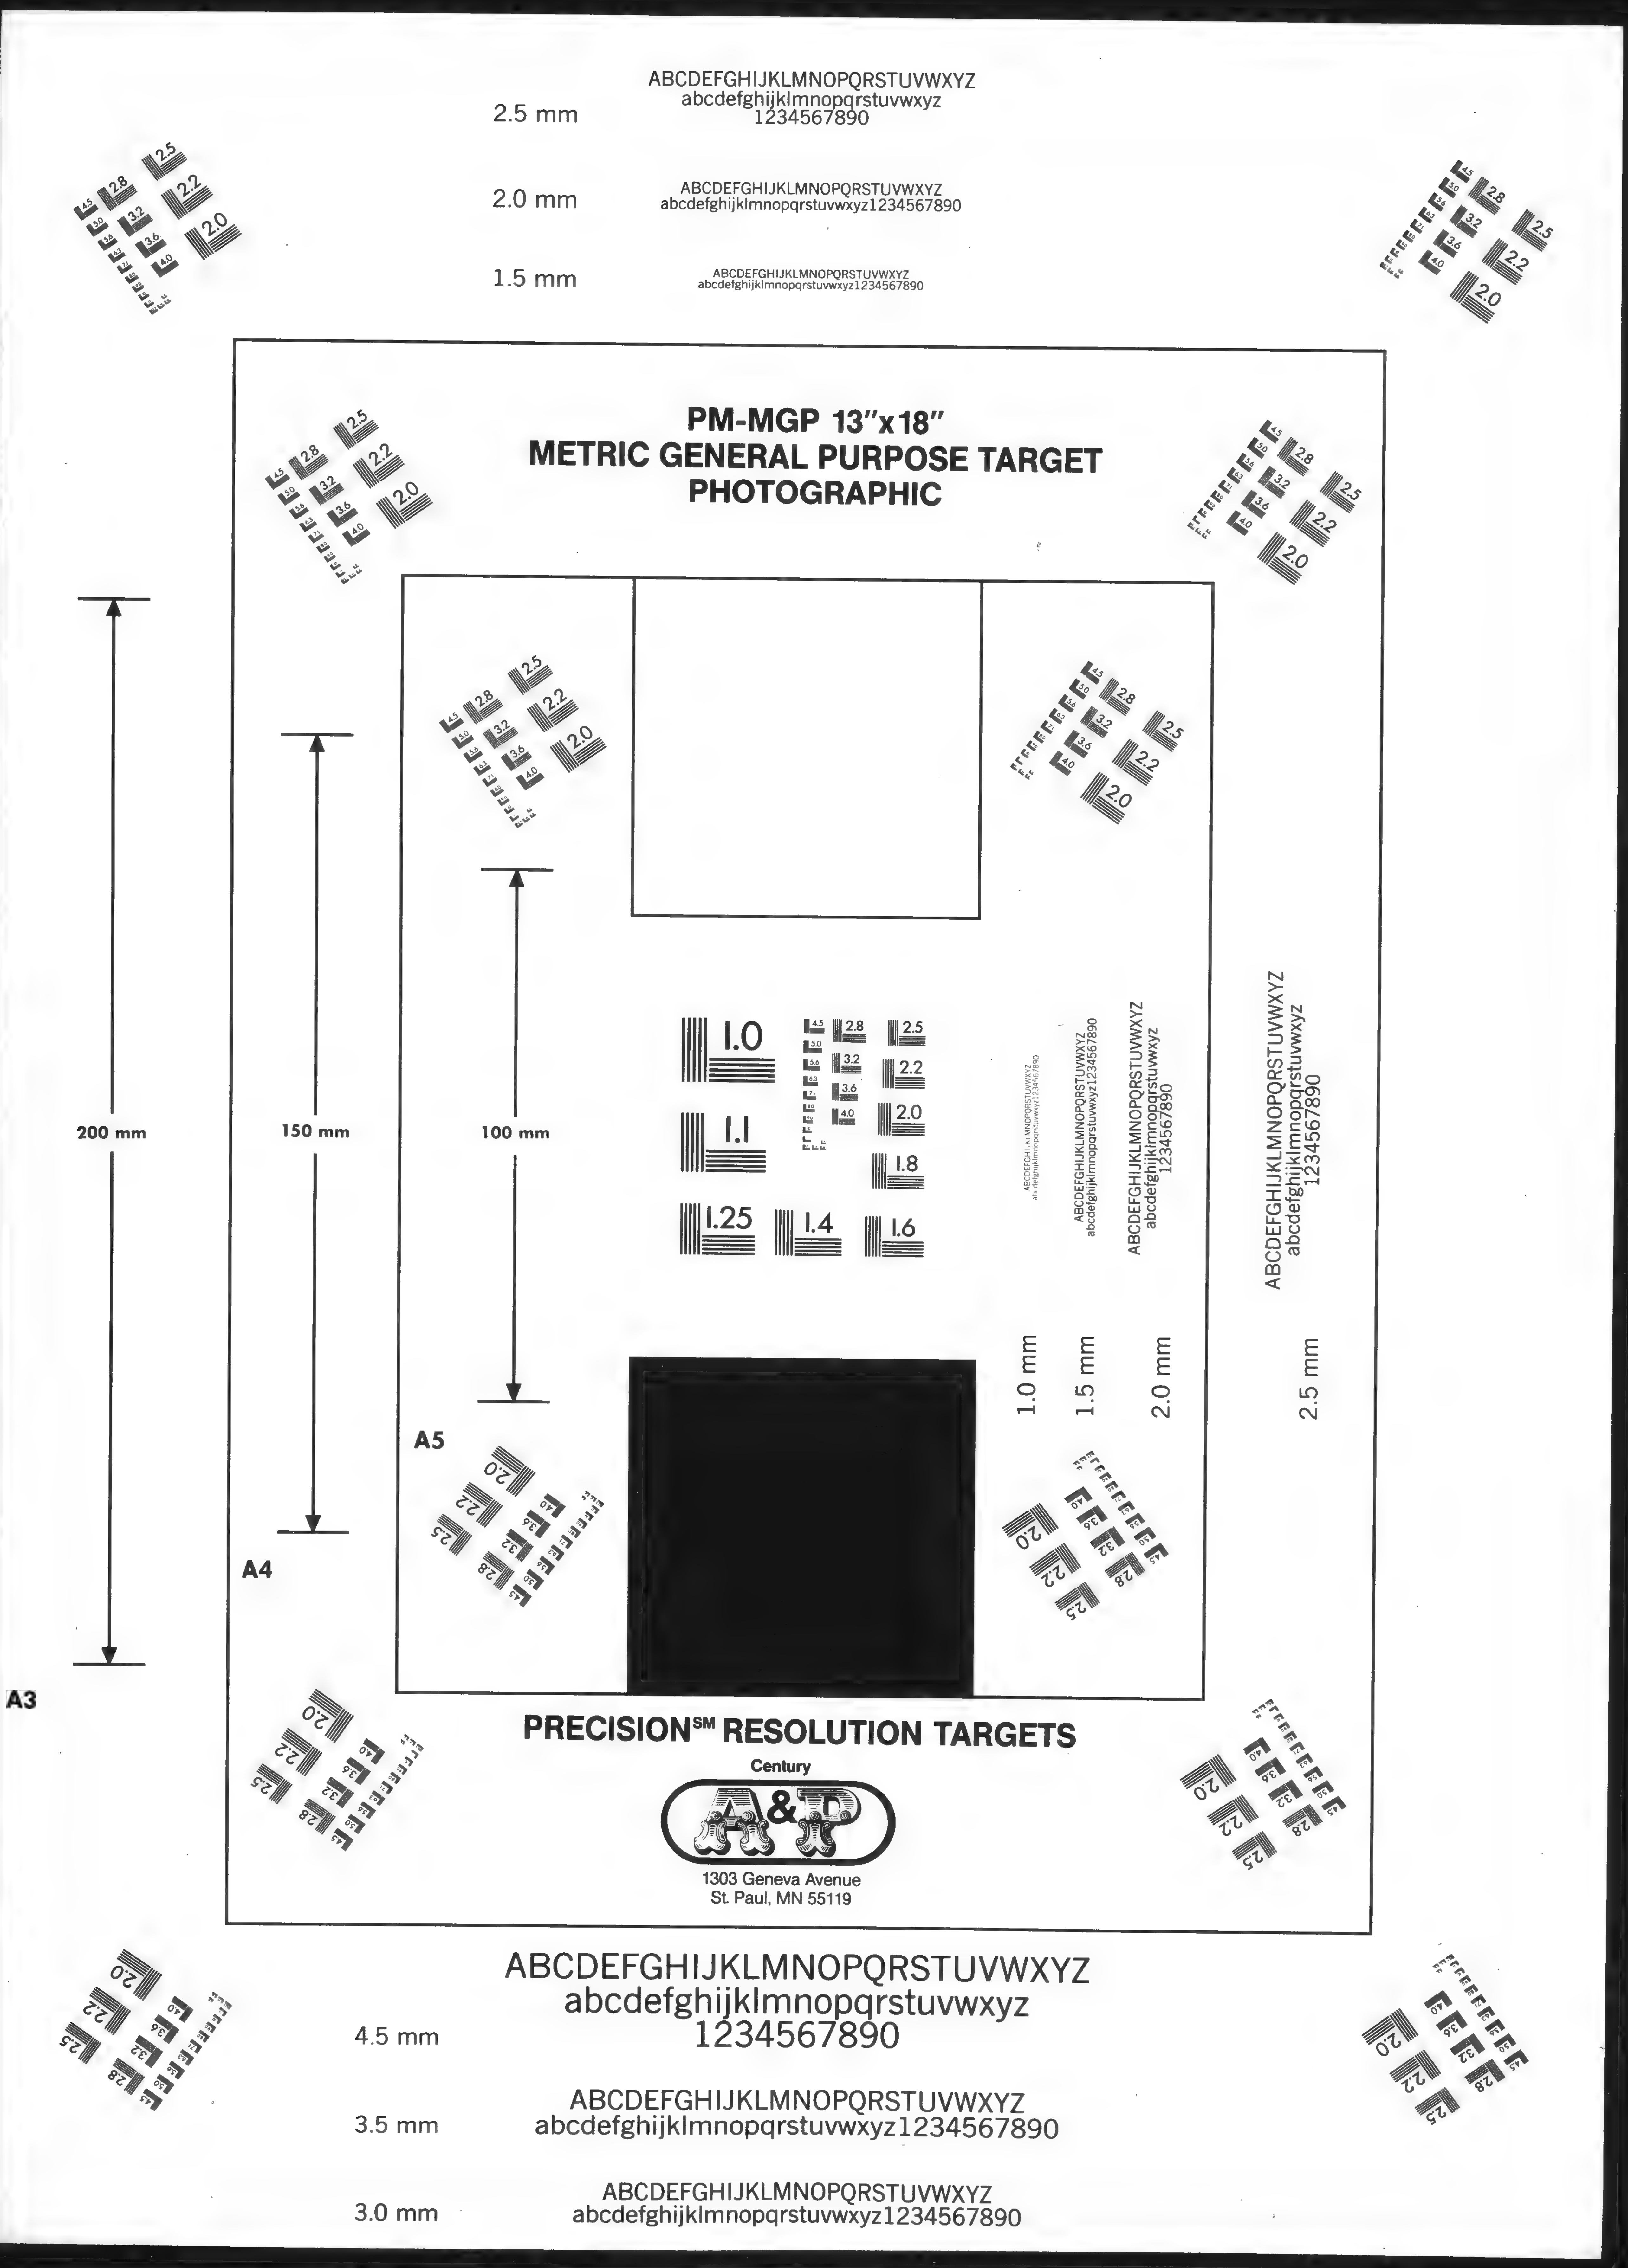


The Eagle cameraman took this picture on a step ladder at the end of "the big top" during yester

SHIRT SLEEVES MAKE NEWS AT TANGLEWOOD

Continued From First Page

REDUCTION
RATIO
17x



2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

The Berkshire Evening Eagle
CITY EDITION
1:30 P. M. Quotations

VOLUME 44—No. 69 PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, MONDAY, AUGUST 9, 1937. 18 PAGES— PRICE—THREE CENTS HOME DELIVERY 15c WEEK

Serge Koussevitzky Removes Coat

Rain Battles Festival In Week-End Concerts But Musicians Triumph

Harps Lose a Couple of Strings, Viola and 'Cello Sections Encounter Momentary Disaster—Patter on Canvas Roof Drowns Out Piano Passages of "Firebird"—Orchestra and Conductor Continue High Standard of Previous Performances

By JAY ROSENFELD

Jupiter Pluvius was at bat three times this last week-end during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, but each time was an easy out, albeit he did give the opposition a bit of concern each time.

Saturday evening's storm preceded the concert by a convenient two hours, cooling and clearing the atmosphere perceptibly yet not enough to dispel the humidity which strains and snaps strings. The harps early lost a couple and somewhere in the viola and 'cello sections there was momentary disaster during the evening. Again yesterday afternoon there was a continuance of the same trouble.

Rain Patter On Canvas

For yesterday afternoon the weather was most dangerous of all three days. There was a very light rainfall at the beginning of the concert and during part of the "Firebird" the patter on the canvas roof drowned out the more piano passages. Under normal conditions, however, those even in the last rows, some two hundred eighty feet from the platform, could hear with astonishing clearness and fidelity. The rain, in addition to its damage on the strings, seemed to have made the walls impervious to air. At the conclusion of the first number on the program, the "Rosamunde" ballet music of Schubert, Koussevitzky, who had not left the stage, but merely stepped down from the podium before resuming in the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony", did something he never had done in all his twelve years with the Boston Orchestra. He unbent to

RAIN BATTLES FESTIVAL BUT MUSICIANS WI

Continued From First Page

the exent of stepping to the fron raising his hands for silence, an saying:

"It is awfully hot: You will ex cuse if we remove our kowts".

Whereupon to the amused hand clapping of the audience, conduc tor and men proceeded to disrob to that extent. Only those whos coats help hold in place shoulde rests, maintained their status qu in attire.

It was a very significant fac that the people in the huge audi ence, composed of a great melang of Berkshireites and visitors, decidedly showed their preference a these two concerts for music of later day than for that of Mozart and Schubert. The "Unfinished" was accorded a succes d'estime, for all its inherent beauty. Many are the reasons advanced by subsequent generations for Schubert's failure to add a final movement to complete his B minor symphony. None being founded on authentic information, is satisfactory. He wrote it as a gift to the town of Graz which had elected him an honorary member of its muiscal society, but it was never played during his lifetime. It was only after he had been dead 37 years, in 1865, and 43 years after he wrote it that it had its first performance.

Olin Downes said in one of his lectures that two sheets of manuscript found among the composer's literary remains were accepted by some as the unfinished part or represented a purpose to complete it.

Cont.

What an opportunity to compare the ballet music of the early nineteen century and that of a century later by placing the Rosamunde and Firebird on the same program! The quaint, exact rhythm of Schubert delineating courtly grace, and the demoniac noise and devices of a contemporary Stravinsky employing every instrument in a percerted manner and in strange exotic combinations to achieve his ends! There is fascination without beauty; elegence without refinement; charm without symetry; a strange concatenation of sounds and sequences which Koussevitsky kept subdued and in wonderful control up to the time when the "Infernal dance of the subjects of Kastchei" arrives, when, indeed, the gates of Hades are opened.

First Half Ends

The Sunday concert and so the first half of this memorable Festival came to an end when, after intermission, the symphony of Cesar Franck was played. Here was music we could unquestionably enjoy, written with sincerity, faith in mankind and musical sanity. Franck wrote only one symphony, but in that one he packed so much fervent vitality, such a wealth of harmonic beauty, that we can only be forever grateful for that one. The performance was glorious in its fidelity and emotional emphasis. As in everything they have done in these three magnificent concerts, the members of orchestra and their conductor have given everything they had, maintaining a standard of performance of the highest ideals of music.

Superb Sunset

As the crowds started to arrive Saturday evening the heavens offered visitors another in their perpetual exhibit of masterpiece Berkshire sunsets. There was a larger audience even than at the opening concert, and the vitality and insistence of the applause increased as the evening progressed until, at the close, there were shouts and huzzahs in one of the most vociferous ovations ever recorded in the short history of these Festivals. The occasion was the performance of the Ravel second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite and the Fourth Symphony of Tschhikowsky. The huge audience rose to a pitch of frenzy as Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this second concert of the Festival.

Great Ovation for Author

The concert had started with the hall of Edwin Burlingame Hill, whose Sinfonietta was next played, was the cause of the first demonstration which was to culminate in the ecstatic outbursts which followed the succeeding compositions. Mr. Hill, professor of music at Harvard, was obliged to rise from his seat in one of the boxes to acknowldge the applause his work deservedly evoked. Koussevitzky would not permit a mere bow by the composer from where he sat to suffice, but obliged him, by a beckoning gesture, to come to the front completely to sense the genuine approval the audience evinced.

It was written for string quartet two years ago. Dr. Koussevitzky suggested the arrangement for stringed orchestra and it was two of the original four movements which were played Saturday. Professor Hill is patently very much at home in the mechanics of orchestral coloring and he has written with warmth and inspiration. The first movement, moderato e risoluto, develops with chivalrous passion; the second, a scherzo, allegro vivace, is a model of sprightly grace.

Audience Enraptured

The Ravel Suite sent the audience into raptures. It was the wizadry of the orchestration, the sheer power and force of the orchestra's playing, and the magnetism of its leader which contrived to bring about this result. Some 25 years ago Diaghileff's ballet was drawing into its net many of the most famous artists in several allied fields. Karsavina and Nijinsky were the premier dancers, Leon Bakst was doing the costumes, and among the composers writing specfically for Diaghileff were Ravel and Stravinsky, whose "Firebird" was played on Sunday's program.

A perusal of the story is very illuminating and helpful in understanding the music, probably more so in the case of the Stravinsky, but the Ravel can stand as music far more easily. How he has brought overwhelming and frenetic excitement out of the tumult of his orchestration is a mystery. There is no little melodic progression, but from the very start, when he depicts the murmurs of a rivulet, through the portrayal of the break of day to the final page of crashing tone effects there is a mounting scale of exhilaration until, at the final tremolo, the persons in the audience are almost literally out of their chairs. It is, of course, the marvelous playing of the Boston orchestra which creates this breath-taking stimulation. Sensitive to a superlative degree to the wards; Singers Anna Gluck and Joseph Bentonelli; Dancer Ted Shawn; Authors Owen Johnson and George E. Sokolsky and a host of others. Saturday evening brought the South Mountain Quartet, Kathleen Parlow, William Willeke, Conrad Held and Edwin Ideler. The presence of Miss Parlow brought to three the representation of students of famed Leopold Auer. She, Mr. Zimbalist and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, are perhaps the greatest pupils of the Russian teacher. Yesterday, between rehearsals, the Stockbridge Playhouse sent a delegation which included Alexander Kirkland, Helen Brooks, Alexander Clark and Charles Sedgwick. On Saturday evening, Director William Miles and Guest Star Edith Barrett attended.

Architect There

Alfred H. Granger, prominent architect of New York and Chicago was at yesterday's concert, sitting in the official box with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. He is a close friend of Eliel Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills (Mich.) architect who has been asked to draw plans for the proposed development at Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen arrived yesterday and will remain in the Berkshires until tomorrow. He drove from New York with Miss Frances Rich, daughter of Irene Rich, the actress. Today Mr. Saarinen visited Tanglewood again with Festival officers. He will sail for Europe tomorrow. Mr. Granger has been Miss Robinson Smith's house guest.

David Stanley Smith of the Yale University faculty, composer and conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Henry Johnson, instructor of music at the University of Arizona, were also at yesterday's concert.

SHIRT-SLEEVE MUSIC HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Audience Approves Attack of Orchestra Leader on Humidity

TANGLEWOOOD, Aug. 9.—The weather again proved an outstanding news-maker as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed the first half of its six-concert series at Tanglewood over the week-end.

Weather on Schedule

Local thunder storms, ranging from mild rumblings and light showers in some parts of the county, to severe electrical downpours in others, preceded both Saturday night's and yesterday afternoon's programs. In both cases, as on the opening night, the rain stopped an hour or so before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky raised his baton to begin the concert. The regularity with which this cooperation between nature and the Festival has been accomplished is fostering a general belief that the skies have been put on a stringent schedule for the series.

Chief non-musical ovation of the week-end, also attributable to the weather, occured yesterday afternoon at the end of the first Schubert selection. After acknowledging the applause that followed the orchestra's performance of ballet numbers from "Rosamunde," Dr. Koussevitzky motioned for silence and said:

"It is awfully hot. I wonder if you would mind if we take off the coats?"

Coats Off

The spontaneous salvo of laughter and hand-clapping that answered him apparently convinced the conductor that his audience not only did not mind, but approved of this counter-attack on the humidity. Dr. Koussevitsky and his men forthwith removed their coats and got back to Schubert, whose "Unfinished" Symphony in B Minor was the second number on the program.

Despite the threatening weather, the attendance for the first three concerts averaged just under 5000. The total of 14,000 is almost equal to that of last year, when only three concerts were given. The three final concerts this week are expected to bring out at least another 14,000 music lovers.

The week-end concerts formed another brilliant spectacle as all Berkshire gathered under the mammoth tent to hear Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra play two of the three "variety" programs of the series.

Ovation for Composer

Highlight of the Saturday evening concert, which included works by Mozart, Ravel and Tchaikovsky, was the tremendous ovation given Edward Burlingame Hill after the orchestra had played his "Sinfonietta for String Orchestra." Dr. Koussevitzky's gestures toward the official box, where Mr. Hill was sitting with Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Festival president, turned the attention of the applauding thousands to the composer. Mr. Hill bowed, and then clapped his appreciation to the conductor and orchestra. Finally, as the ovation continued, he walked down through the center aisle and shook Dr. Koussevitzky's hand as the 5000 people in the tent rose to their feet shouting, stamping and waving programs in a crescendo of applause.

Chief non-musical attraction of the evening, and again yesterday afternoon, was Miriam Hopkins, screen star, who has been visiting her mother at the Curtis Hotel. With her mother, she sat Saturday evening in the front section, and yesterday afternoon in the box of Lester Roberts, Curtis Hotel manager. She left last night for Hollywood.

Toward the end of the "Fire-Bird" suite of Stravinsky, which closed the first half of yesterday's program, a light rain started, which sent some of the extra-tent sitters under cover, but the majority stayed outside, apparently oblivious of such minor matters as getting wet. The shower continued through part of the 20-minute intermission, keeping the larger part of the crowd under the tent.

Traffic Well Handled

The traffic both before and after the week-end concerts was again handled with remarkable efficiency by the detail of State Police and Legionnaires, who directed the thousands of cars out of the property and toward their destinations in as little time as it takes to get out of the family garage. The construction of a walk for parkers in the north section and the improvement of the extra entrance on Hawthorne Street corrected minor difficulties of the opening night.

Other improvements prompted by experiences of the first concert included the shading of the single light over the podium on the audience side and the setting up of additional benches in the rear section.

Wagner Thursday

Dr. Koussevitzky and the 80 men in the orchestra will have somewhat of a vacation during the early days of the week, interspersing rehearsals with relaxation. On Wednesday they will concentrate on the all-Wagner program which will be given Thursday evening. The Saturday night program will mark the third of the "variety" concerts, consisting of works by Haydn, Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakov. The final concert Sunday will be dedicated to Brahms and will consist of his "Academic Festival" overture and two symphonies.

The Thursday evening concert will be broadcast over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Company.

Swing Surpasses Schubert in

While their employers were inside the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tent listening to the works of the immortals, the army of chauffeurs out in the parking lot gave their attention to the products of Tin Pan Alley. The Eagle cameraman collected the pictorial evidence above during an air wave of rendition of "The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down."

Lost-and-Found Inventory Shows Festival Weather

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 9—An inventory of the lost-and-found department at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office gives a fair idea of the weather for the first three concerts.

The articles as yet unclaimed include two umbrellas, two raincoats, two blankets and a pair of men's rubbers.

Also included in the collection are a sash, several handkerchiefs, one kid glove, one blue purse (containing no money) and two cushions. A pair of glasses and one cushion have been claimed. Still lost are an opal pin and a chamois glove.

The Berkshire Evening Eagle
CITY EDITION
1:30 P. M. Quotations
VOLUME 44—No. 69 PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, MONDAY, AUGUST 9, 1937. 18 PAGES— PRICE—THREE CENTS HOME DELIVERY 15c WEEK

Serge Koussevitzky Removes Coat

Rain Battles Festival In Week-End Concerts But Musicians Triumph

Harps Lose a Couple of Strings, Viola and 'Cello Sections Encounter Momentary Disaster—Patter on Canvas Roof Drowns Out Piano Passages of "Firebird"—Orchestra and Conductor Continue High Standard of Previous Performances

By JAY ROSENFELD

Jupiter Pluvius was at bat three times this last week-end during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, but each time was an easy out, albeit he did give the opposition a bit of concern each time.

Saturday evening's storm preceded the concert by a convenient two hours, cooling and clearing the atmosphere perceptibly yet not enough to dispel the humidity which strains and snaps strings. The harps early lost a couple and somewhere in the viola and 'cello sections there was momentary disaster during the evening. Again yesterday afternoon there was a continuance of the same trouble.

Rain Patter On Canvas

For yesterday afternoon the weather was most dangerous of all three days. There was a very light rainfall at the beginning of the concert and during part of the "Firebird" the patter on the canvas roof drowned out the more piano passages. Under normal conditions, however, those even in the last rows, some two hundred eighty feet from the platform, could hear with astonishing clearness and fidelity. The rain, in addition to its damage on the strings, seemed to have made the walls impervious to air. At the conclusion of the first number on the program, the "Rosamunde" ballet music of Schubert, Koussevitzky, who had not left the stage, but merely stepped down from the podium before resuming in the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony", did something he never had done in all his twelve years with the Boston Orchestra. He unbent to

RAIN BATTLES FESTIVAL BUT MUSICIANS WIN

Continued From First Page

the exent of stepping to the fron raising his hands for silence, an saying:

"It is awfully hot: You will excuse if we remove our kowts".

Whereupon to the amused hand clapping of the audience, conductor and men proceeded to disrob to that extent. Only those whos coats help hold in place shoulde rests, maintained their status qu in attire.

It was a very significant fac that the people in the huge audience, composed of a great melange of Berkshireites and visitors, decidedly showed their preference a these two concerts for music of a later day than for that of Mozart and Schubert. The "Unfinished" was accorded a succes d'estime, for all its inherent beauty. Many are the reasons advanced by subsequent generations for Schubert's failure to add a final movement to complete his B minor symphony. None being founded on authentic information, is satisfactory. He wrote it as a gift to the town of Graz which had elected him an honorary member of its muiscal society, but it was never played during his lifetime. It was only after he had been dead 37 years, in 1865, and 43 years after he wrote it that it had its first performance.

Olin Downes said in one of his lectures that two sheets of manuscript found among the composer's literary remains were accepted by some as the unfinished part or represented a purpose to complete it.

Cont. above

What an opportunity to compare the ballet music of the early nineteen century and that of a century later by placing the Rosamunde and Firebird on the same program! The quaint, exact rhythm of Schubert delineating courtly grace, and the demoniac noise and devices of a contemporary Stravinsky employing every instrument in a percerted manner and in strange exotic combinations to achieve his ends! There is fascination without beauty; elegence without refinement; charm without symetry; a strange concatenation of sounds and sequences which Koussevitsky kept subdued and in wonderful control up to the time when the "Infernal dance of the subjects of Kastchei" arrives, when, indeed, the gates of Hades are opened.

First Half Ends

The Sunday concert and so the first half of this memorable Festival came to an end when, after intermission, the symphony of Cesar Franck was played. Here was music we could unquestionably enjoy, written with sincerity, faith in mankind and musical sanity. Franck wrote only one symphony, but in that one he packed so much fervent vitality, such a wealth of harmonic beauty, that we can only be forever grateful for that one. The performance was glorious in its fidelity and emotional emphasis. As in everything they have done in these three magnificent concerts, the members of orchestra and their conductor have given everything they had, maintaining a standard of performance of the highest ideals of music.

Superb Sunset

As the crowds started to arrive Saturday evening the heavens offered visitors another in their perpetual exhibit of masterpiece Berkshire sunsets. There was a larger audience even than at the opening concert, and the vitality and insistence of the applause increased as the evening progressed until, at the close, there were shouts and huzzahs in one of the most vociferous ovations ever recorded in the short history of these Festivals. The occasion was the performance of the Ravel second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite and the Fourth Symphony of Tschhikowsky. The huge audience rose to a pitch of frenzy as Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this second concert of the Festival.

Great Ovation for Author

The concert had started with the Mozart E flat symphony, which was directed in a rather austere manner. The presence in the hall of Edwin Burlingame Hill, whose Sinfonietta was next played, was the cause of the first demonstration which was to culminate in the ecstatic outbursts which followed the succeeding compositions. Mr. Hill, professor of music at Harvard, was obliged to rise from his seat in one of the boxes to acknowldge the applause his work deservedly evoked. Koussevitzky would not permit a mere bow by the composer from where he sat to suffice, but obliged him, by a beckoning gesture, to come to the front completely to sense the genuine approval the audience evinced.

It was written for string quartet two years ago. Dr. Koussevitzky suggested the arrangement for stringed orchestra and it was two of the original four movements which were played Saturday. Professor Hill is patently very much at home in the mechanics of orchestral coloring and he has written with warmth and inspiration. The first movement, moderato e risoluto, develops with chivalrous passion; the second, a scherzo, allegro vivace, is a model of sprightly grace.

Audience Enraptured

The Ravel Suite sent the audience into raptures. It was the wizadry of the orchestration, the sheer power and force of the orchestra's playing, and the magnetism of its leader which contrived to bring about this result. Some 25 years ago Diaghileff's ballet was drawing into its net many of the most famous artists in several allied fields. Karsavina and Nijinsky were the premier dancers, Leon Bakst was doing the costumes, and among the composers writing specfically for Diaghileff were Ravel and Stravinsky, whose "Firebird" was played on Sunday's program.

A perusal of the story is very illuminating and helpful in understanding the music, probably more so in the case of the Stravinsky, but the Ravel can stand as music far more easily. How he has brought overwhelming and frenetic excitement out of the tumult of his orchestration is a mystery. There is no little melodic progression, but from the very start, when he depicts the murmurs of a rivulet, through the portrayal of the break of day to the final page of crashing tone effects there is a mounting scale of exhilaration until, at the final tremolo, the persons in the audience are almost literally out of their chairs. It is, of course, the marvelous playing of the Boston orchestra which creates this breath-taking stimulation. Sensitive to a superlative degree to the great conductor's wishes and playing with a technical perfection subject only to the vagaries of the wards; Singers Anna Gluck and Joseph Bentonelli; Dancer Ted Shawn; Authors Owen Johnson and George E. Sokolsky and a host of others. Saturday evening brought the South Mountain Quartet, Kathleen Parlow, William Willeke, Conrad Held and Edwin Ideler. The presence of Miss Parlow brought to three the representation of students of famed Leopold Auer. She, Mr. Zimbalist and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, are perhaps the greatest pupils of the Russian teacher. Yesterday, between rehearsals, the Stockbridge Playhouse sent a delegation which included Alexander Kirkland, Helen Brooks, Alexander Clark and Charles Sedgwick. On Saturday evening, Director William Miles and Guest Star Edith Barrett attended.

Architect There

Alfred H. Granger, prominent architect of New York and Chicago was at yesterday's concert, sitting in the official box with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. He is a close friend of Eliel Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills (Mich.) architect who has been asked to draw plans for the proposed development at Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen arrived yesterday and will remain in the Berkshires until tomorrow. He drove from New York with Miss Frances Rich, daughter of Irene Rich, the actress. Today Mr. Saarinen visited Tanglewood again with Festival officers. He will sail for Europe tomorrow. Mr. Granger has been Miss Robinson Smith's house guest.

David Stanley Smith of the Yale University faculty, composer and conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Henry Johnson, instructor of music at the University of Arizona, were also at yesterday's concert.

SHIRT-SLEEVE MUSIC HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Audience Approves Attack of Orchestra Leader on Humidity

TANGLEWOOOD, Aug. 9.—The weather again proved an outstanding news-maker as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed the first half of its six-concert series at Tanglewood over the week-end.

Weather on Schedule

Local thunder storms, ranging from mild rumblings and light showers in some parts of the county, to severe electrical downpours in others, preceded both Saturday night's and yesterday afternoon's programs. In both cases, as on the opening night, the rain stopped an hour or so before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky raised his baton to begin the concert. The regularity with which this cooperation between nature and the Festival has been accomplished is fostering a general belief that the skies have been put on a stringent schedule for the series.

Chief non-muscial ovation of the week-end, also attributable to the weather, occured yesterday afternoon at the end of the first Schubert selection. After acknowledging the applause that followed the orchestra's performance of ballet numbers from "Rosamunde," Dr. Koussevitzky motioned for silence and said:

"It is awfully hot. I wonder if you would mind if we take off the coats?"

Coats Off

The spontaneous salvo of laughter and hand-clapping that answered him apparently convinced the conductor that his audience not only did not mind, but approved of this counter-attack on the humidity. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men forthwith removed their coats and got back to Schubert, whose "Unfinished" Symphony in B Minor was the second number on the program.

Despite the threatening weather, the attendance for the first three concerts averaged just under 5000. The total of 14,000 is almost equal to that of last year, when only three concerts were given. The three final concerts this week are expected to bring out at least another 14,000 music lovers.

The week-end concerts formed another brilliant spectacle as all Berkshire gathered under the mammoth tent to hear Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra play two of the three "variety" programs of the series.

Ovation for Composer

Highlight of the Saturday evening concert, which included works by Mozart, Ravel and Tchaikovsky, was the tremendous ovation given Edward Burlingame Hill after the orchestra had played his "Sinfonietta for String Orchestra." Dr. Koussevitzky's gestures toward the official box, where Mr. Hill was sitting with Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Festival president, turned the attention of the applauding thousands to the composer. Mr. Hill bowed, and then clapped his appreciation to the conductor and orchestra. Finally, as the ovation continued, he walked down through the center aisle and shook Dr. Koussevitzky's hand as the 5000 people in the tent rose to their feet shouting, stamping and waving programs in a crescendo of applause.

Chief non-musical attraction of the evening, and again yesterday afternoon, was Miriam Hopkins, screen star, who has been visiting her mother at the Curtis Hotel. With her mother, she sat Saturday evening in the front section, and yesterday afternoon in the box of Lester Roberts, Curtis Hotel manager. She left last night for Hollywood.

Toward the end of the "Fire-Bird" suite of Stravinsky, which closed the first half of yesterday's program, a light rain started, which sent some of the extra-tent sitters under cover, but the majority stayed outside, apparently oblivious of such minor matters as getting wet. The shower continued through part of the 20-minute intermission, keeping the larger part of the crowd under the tent.

Traffic Well Handled

The traffic both before and after the week-end concerts was again handled with remarkable efficiency by the detail of State Police and Legionnaires, who directed the thousands of cars out of the property and toward their destinations in as little time as it takes to get out of the family garage. The construction of a walk for parkers in the north section and the improvement of the extra entrance on Hawthorne Street corrected minor difficulties of the opening night.

Other improvements prompted by experiences of the first concert included the shading of the single light over the podium on the audience side and the setting up of additional benches in the rear section.

Wagner Thursday

Dr. Koussevitzky and the 80 men in the orchestra will have somewhat of a vacation during the early days of the week, interspersing rehearsals with relaxation. On Wednesday they will concentrate on the all-Wagner program which will be given Thursday evening. The Saturday night program will mark the third of the "variety" concerts, consisting of works by Haydn, Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakov. The final concert Sunday will be dedicated to Brahms and will consist of his "Academic Festival" overture and two symphonies.

The Thursday evening concert will be broadcast over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Company.

Lost-and-Found Inventory Shows Festival Weather

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 9—An inventory of the lost-and-found department at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office gives a fair idea of the weather for the first three concerts.

The articles as yet unclaimed include two umbrellas, two raincoats, two blankets and a pair of men's rubbers.

Also included in the collection are a sash, several handkerchiefs, one kid glove, one blue purse (containing no money) and two cushions. A pair of glasses and one cushion have been claimed. Still lost are an opal pin and a chamois glove.

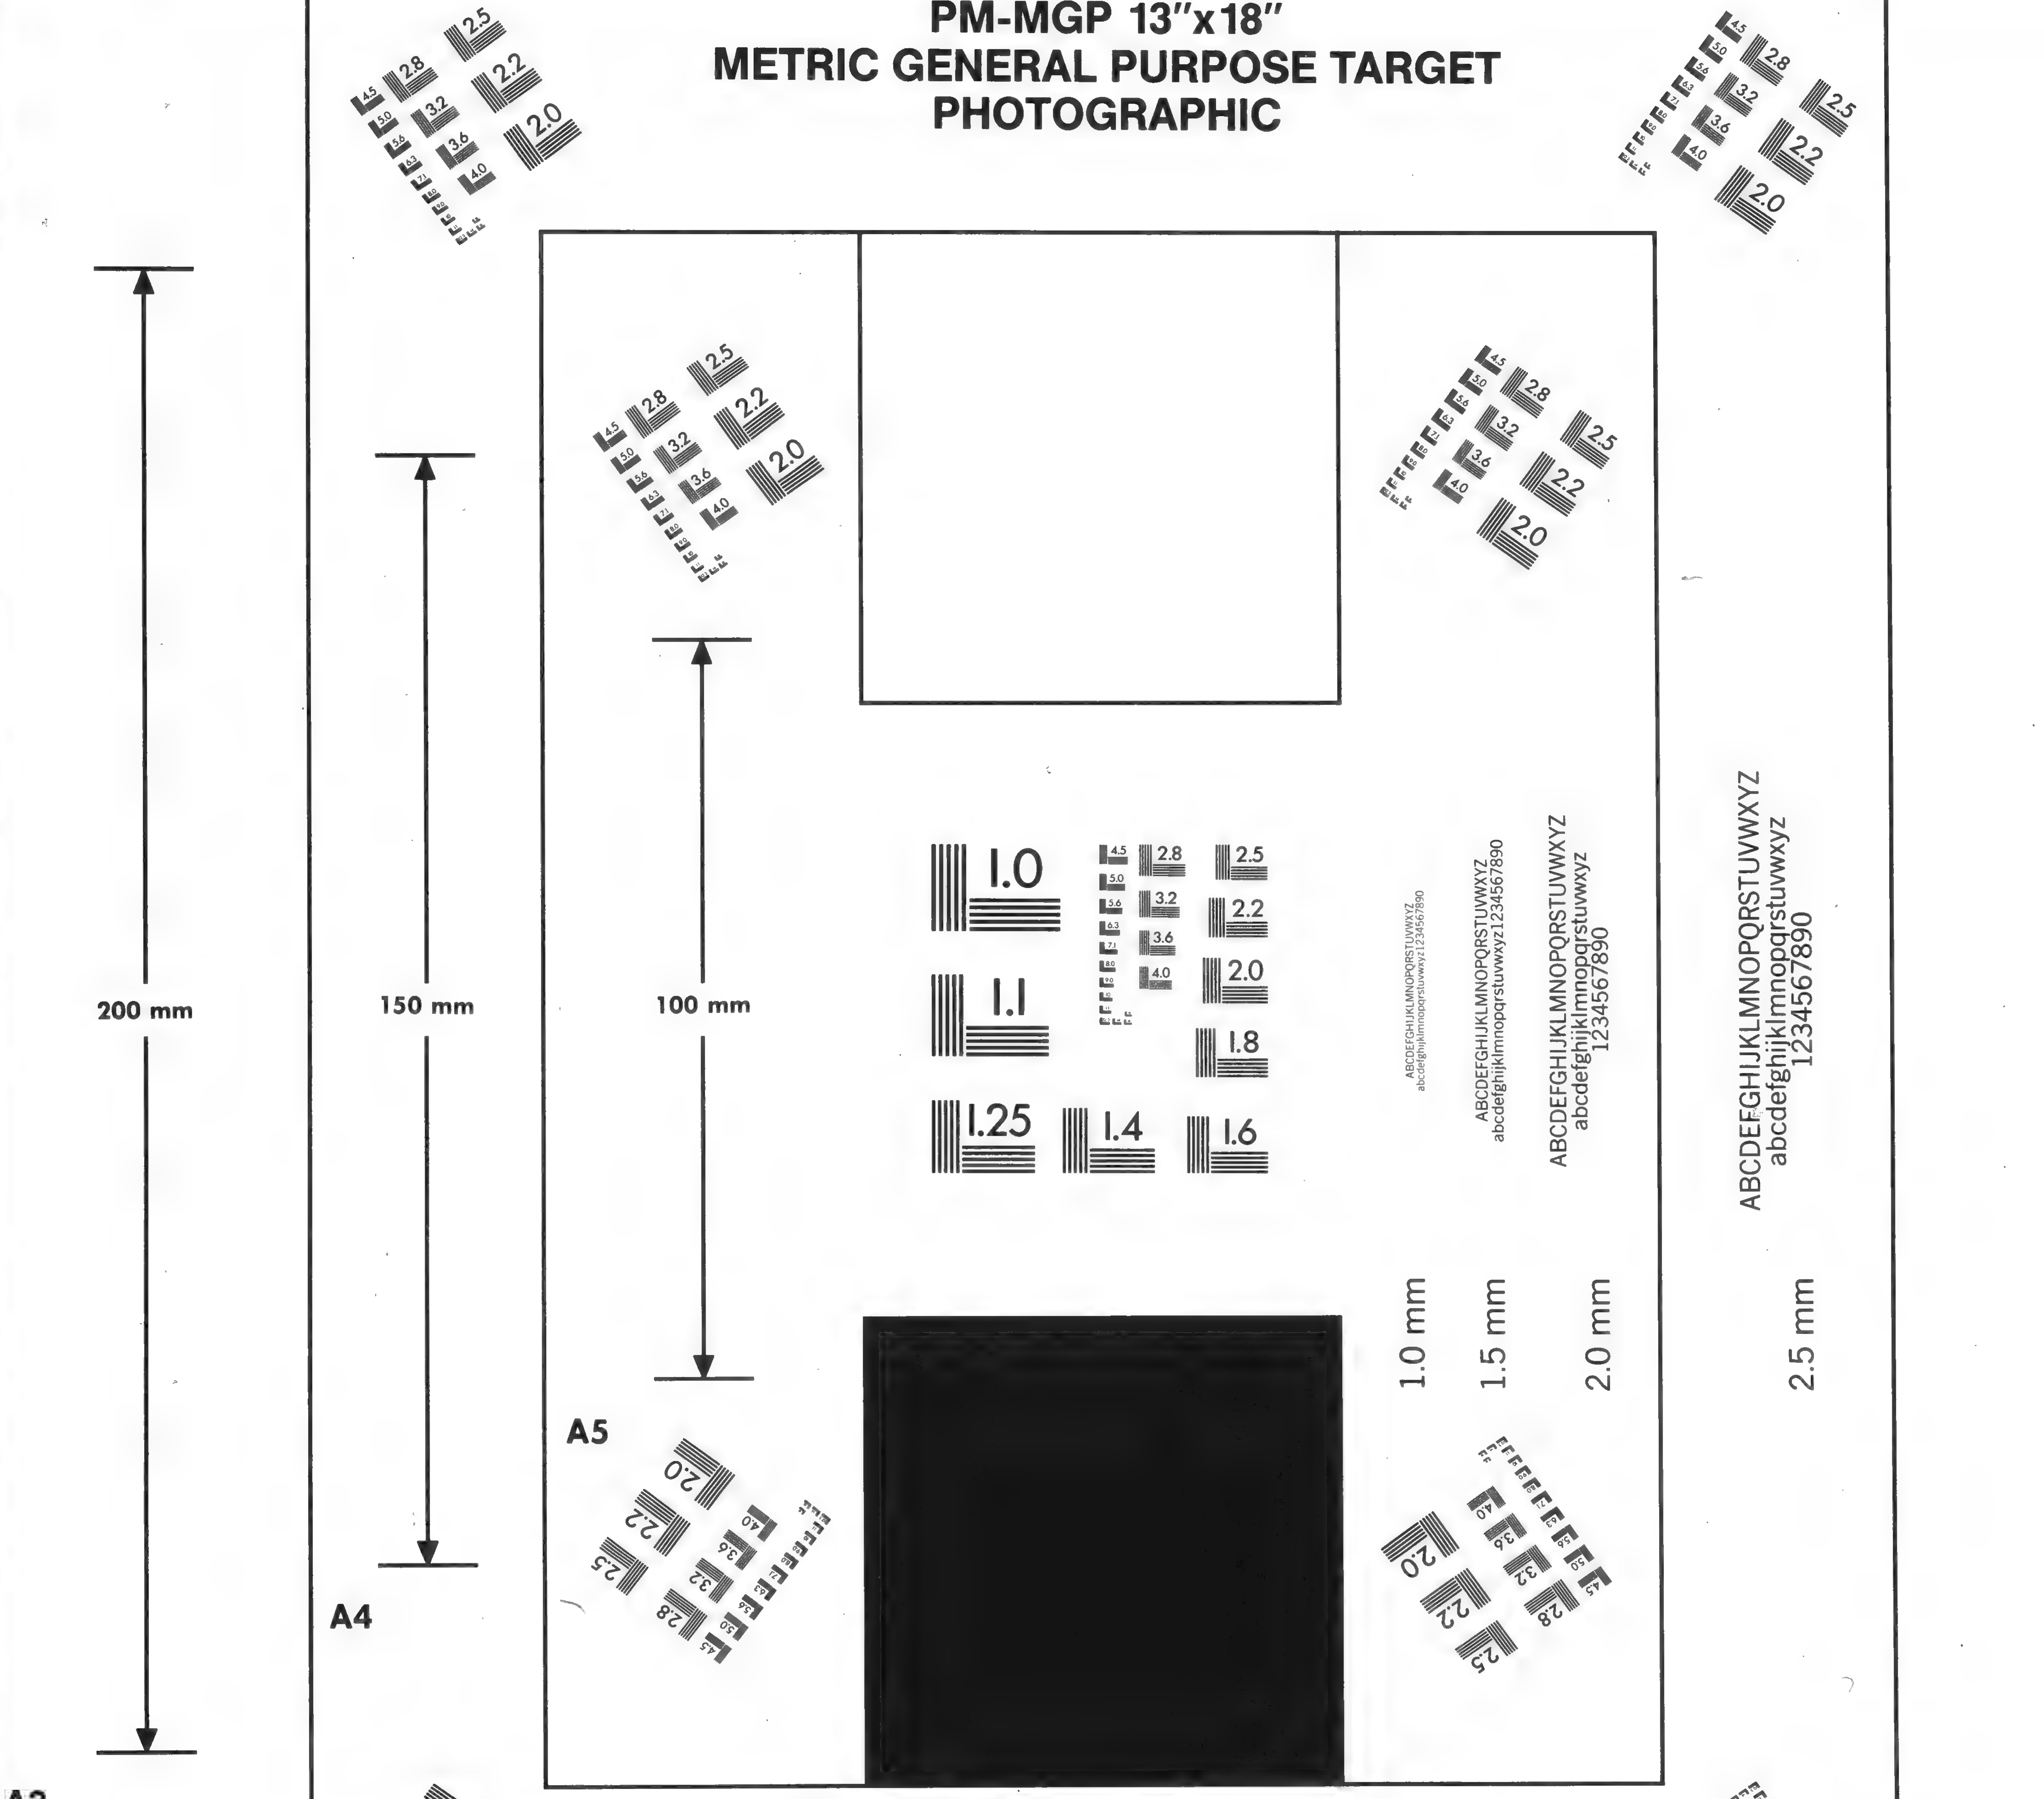
While their employers were inside the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tent listening to the works of the immortals, the army of chauffeurs out in the parking lot gave their attention to the products of Tin Pan Alley. The Eagle cameraman collected the pictorial evidence above during an air wave of rendition of "The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down."

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

The Berkshire Evening Eagle
CITY EDITION
1:30 P. M. Quotations

VOLUME 44—No. 69 PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, MONDAY, AUGUST 9, 1937. 18 PAGES— PRICE—THREE CENTS HOME DELIVERY 15c WEEK

Serge Koussevitzky Removes Coat

Rain Battles Festival In Week-End Concerts But Musicians Triumph

Harps Lose a Couple of Strings, Viola and 'Cello Sections Encounter Momentary Disaster—Patter on Canvas Roof Drowns Out Piano Passages of "Firebird"—Orchestra and Conductor Continue High Standard of Previous Performances

By JAY ROSENFELD

Jupiter Pluvius was at bat three times this last week-end during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, but each time was an easy out, albeit he did give the opposition a bit of concern each time.

Saturday evening's storm preceded the concert by a convenient two hours, cooling and clearing the atmosphere perceptibly yet not enough to dispel the humidity which strains and snaps strings. The harps early lost a couple and somewhere in the viola and 'cello sections there was momentary disaster during the evening. Again yesterday afternoon there was a continuance of the same trouble.

Rain Patter On Canvas

For yesterday afternoon the weather was most dangerous of all three days. There was a very light rainfall at the beginning of the concert and during part of the "Firebird" the patter on the canvas roof drowned out the more piano passages. Under normal conditions, however, those even in the last rows, some two hundred eighty feet from the platform, could hear with astonishing clearness and fidelity. The rain, in addition to its damage on the strings, seemed to have made the walls impervious to air. At the conclusion of the first number on the program, the "Rosamunde" ballet music of Schubert, Koussevitzky, who had not left the stage, but merely stepped down from the podium before resuming in the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony", did something he never had done in all his twelve years with the Boston Orchestra. He unbent to the exent of stepping to the fron raising his hands for silence, an saying:

RAIN BATTLES FESTIVAL BUT MUSICIANS WI

Continued From First Page

"It is awfully hot: You will ex cuse if we remove our kowts".

Whereupon to the amused hand clapping of the audience, conduc tor and men proceeded to disrob to that extent. Only those whos coats help hold in place shoulde rests, maintained their status qu in attire.

It was a very significant fac that the people in the huge audience, composed of a great melang of Berkshireites and visitors, decidedly showed their preference a these two concerts for music of a later day than for that of Mozart and Schubert. The "Unfinished" was accorded a succes d'estime, for all its inherent beauty. Many are the reasons advanced by subsequent generations for Schubert's failure to add a final movement to complete his B minor symphony. None being founded on authentic information, is satisfactory. He wrote it as a gift to the town of Graz which had elected him an honorary member of its muiscal society, but it was never played during his lifetime. It was only after he had been dead 37 years, in 1865, and 43 years after he wrote it that it had its first performance.

Olin Downes said in one of his lectures that two sheets of manuscript found among the composer's literary remains were accepted by some as the unfinished part or represented a purpose to complete it.

Cont. above

What an opportunity to compare the ballet music of the early nineteen century and that of a century later by placing the Rosamunde and Firebird on the same program! The quaint, exact rhythm of Schubert delineating courtly grace, and the demoniac noise and devices of a contemporary Stravinsky employing every instrument in a percerted manner and in strange exotic combinations to achieve his ends! There is fascination without beauty; elegence without refinement; charm without symetry; a strange concatenation of sounds and sequences which Koussevitsky kept subdued and in wonderful control up to the time when the "Infernal dance of the subjects of Kastchei" arrives, when, indeed, the gates of Hades are opened.

First Half Ends

The Sunday concert and so the first half of this memorable Festival came to an end when, after intermission, the symphony of Cesar Franck was played. Here was music we could unquestionably enjoy, written with sincerity, faith in mankind and musical sanity. Franck wrote only one symphony, but in that one he packed so much fervent vitality, such a wealth of harmonic beauty, that we can only be forever grateful for that one. The performance was glorious in its fidelity and emotional emphasis. As in everything they have done in these three magnificent concerts, the members of orchestra and their conductor have given everything they had, maintaining a standard of performance of the highest ideals of music.

Superb Sunset

As the crowds started to arrive Saturday evening the heavens offered visitors another in their perpetual exhibit of masterpiece Berkshire sunsets. There was a larger audience even than at the opening concert, and the vitality and insistence of the applause increased as the evening progressed until, at the close, there were shouts and huzzahs in one of the most vociferous ovations ever recorded in the short history of these Festivals. The occasion was the performance of the Ravel second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite and the Fourth Symphony of Tschhikowsky. The huge audience rose to a pitch of frenzy as Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this second concert of the Festival.

Great Ovation for Author

The concert had started with the hall of Edwin Burlingame Hill, whose Sinfonietta was next played, was the cause of the first demonstration which was to culminate in the ecstatic outbursts which followed the succeeding compositions. Mr. Hill, professor of music at Harvard, was obliged to rise from his seat in one of the boxes to acknowldge the applause his work deservedly evoked. Koussevitzky would not permit a mere bow by the composer from where he sat to suffice, but obliged him, by a beckoning gesture, to come to the front completely to sense the genuine approval the audience evinced.

It was written for string quartet two years ago. Dr. Koussevitzky suggested the arrangement for stringed orchestra and it was two of the original four movements which were played Saturday. Professor Hill is patently very much at home in the mechanics of orchestral coloring and he has written with warmth and inspiration. The first movement, moderato e risoluto, develops with chivalrous passion; the second, a scherzo, allegro vivace, is a model of sprightly grace.

Audience Enraptured

The Ravel Suite sent the audience into raptures. It was the wizadry of the orchestration, the sheer power and force of the orchestra's playing, and the magnetism of its leader which contrived to bring about this result. Some 25 years ago Diaghileff's ballet was drawing into its net many of the most famous artists in several allied fields. Karsavina and Nijinsky were the premier dancers, Leon Bakst was doing the costumes, and among the composers writing specfically for Diaghileff were Ravel and Stravinsky, whose "Firebird" was played on Sunday's program.

A perusal of the story is very illuminating and helpful in understanding the music, probably more so in the case of the Stravinsky, but the Ravel can stand as music far more easily. How he has brought overwhelming and frenetic excitement out of the tumult of his orchestration is a mystery. There is no little melodic progression, but from the very start, when he depicts the murmurs of a rivulet, through the portrayal of the break of day to the final page of crashing tone effects there is a mounting scale of exhilaration until, at the final tremolo, the persons in the audience are almost literally out of their chairs. It is, of course, the marvelous playing of the Boston orchestra which creates this breath-taking stimulation. Sensitive to a superlative degree to the wards; Singers Anna Gluck and Joseph Bentonelli; Dancer Ted Shawn; Authors Owen Johnson and George E. Sokolsky and a host of others. Saturday evening brought the South Mountain Quartet, Kathleen Parlow, William Willeke, Conrad Held and Edwin Ideler. The presence of Miss Parlow brought to three the representation of students of famed Leopold Auer. She, Mr. Zimbalist and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, are perhaps the greatest pupils of the Russian teacher. Yesterday, between rehearsals, the Stockbridge Playhouse sent a delegation which included Alexander Kirkland, Helen Brooks, Alexander Clark and Charles Sedgwick. On Saturday evening, Director William Miles and Guest Star Edith Barrett attended.

[illegible]

Architect There

Alfred H. Granger, prominent architect of New York and Chicago was at yesterday's concert, sitting in the official box with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. He is a close friend of Eliel Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills (Mich.) architect who has been asked to draw plans for the proposed development at Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen arrived yesterday and will remain in the Berkshires until tomorrow. He drove from New York with Miss Frances Rich, daughter of Irene Rich, the actress. Today Mr. Saarinen visited Tanglewood again with Festival officers. He will sail for Europe tomorrow. Mr. Granger has been Miss Robinson Smith's house guest.

David Stanley Smith of the Yale University faculty, composer and conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Henry Johnson, instructor of music at the University of Arizona, were also at yesterday's concert.

SHIRT-SLEEVE MUSIC HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Audience Approves Attack of Orchestra Leader on Humidity

TANGLEWOOOD, Aug. 9.—The weather again proved an outstanding news-maker as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed the first half of its six-concert series at Tanglewood over the week-end.

Weather on Schedule

Local thunder storms, ranging from mild rumblings and light showers in some parts of the county, to severe electrical downpours in others, preceded both Saturday night's and yesterday afternoon's programs. In both cases, as on the opening night, the rain stopped an hour or so before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky raised his baton to begin the concert. The regularity with which this cooperation between nature and the Festival has been accomplished is fostering a general belief that the skies have been put on a stringent schedule for the series.

Chief non-musical ovation of the week-end, also attributable to the weather, occured yesterday afternoon at the end of the first Schubert selection. After acknowledging the applause that followed the orchestra's performance of ballet numbers from "Rosamunde," Dr. Koussevitzky motioned for silence and said:

"It is awfully hot. I wonder if you would mind if we take off the coats?"

Coats Off

The spontaneous salvo of laughter and hand-clapping that answered him apparently convinced the conductor that his audience not only did not mind, but approved of this counter-attack on the humidity. Dr. Koussevitsky and his men forthwith removed their coats and got back to Schubert, whose "Unfinished" Symphony in B Minor was the second number on the program.

Despite the threatening weather, the attendance for the first three concerts averaged just under 5000. The total of 14,000 is almost equal to that of last year, when only three concerts were given. The three final concerts this week are expected to bring out at least another 14,000 music lovers.

The week-end concerts formed another brilliant spectacle as all Berkshire gathered under the mammoth tent to hear Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra play two of the three "variety" programs of the series.

Ovation for Composer

Highlight of the Saturday evening concert, which included works by Mozart, Ravel and Tchaikovsky, was the tremendous ovation given Edward Burlingame Hill after the orchestra had played his "Sinfonletta for String Orchestra." Dr. Koussevitzky's gestures toward the official box, where Mr. Hill was sitting with Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Festival president, turned the attention of the applauding thousands to the composer. Mr. Hill bowed, and then clapped his appreciation to the conductor and orchestra. Finally, as the ovation continued, he walked down through the center aisle and shook Dr. Koussevitzky's hand as the 5000 people in the tent rose to their feet shouting, stamping and waving programs in a crescendo of applause.

Chief non-musical attraction of the evening, and again yesterday afternoon, was Miriam Hopkins, screen star, who has been visiting her mother at the Curtis Hotel. With her mother, she sat Saturday evening in the front section, and yesterday afternoon in the box of Lester Roberts, Curtis Hotel manager. She left last night for Hollywood.

Toward the end of the "Fire-Bird" suite of Stravinsky, which closed the first half of yesterday's program, a light rain started, which sent some of the extra-tent sitters under cover, but the majority stayed outside, apparently oblivious of such minor matters as getting wet. The shower continued through part of the 20-minute in-

---

Lost-and-Found Inventory Shows Festival Weather

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 9—An inventory of the lost-and-found department at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office gives a fair idea of the weather for the first three concerts.

The articles as yet unclaimed include two umbrellas, two raincoats, two blankets and a pair of men's rubbers.

Also included in the collection are a sash, several handkerchiefs, one kid glove, one blue purse (containing no money) and two cushions. A pair of glasses and one cushion have been claimed. Still lost are an opal pin and a chamois glove.

Swing Surpasses Schubert in

While their employers were inside the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tent listening to the works of the immortals, the army of chauffeurs out in the parking lot gave their attention to the products of Tin Pan Alley. The Eagle cameraman collected the pictorial evidence above during an air wave of rendition of "The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down."

concern each time.

SHIRT-SLEEVE MUSIC HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Audience Approves Attack of Orchestra Leader on Humidity

TANGLEWOOOD, Aug. 9.—The weather again proved an outstanding news-maker as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed the first half of its six-concert series at Tanglewood over the week-end.

Weather on Schedule

Local thunder storms, ranging from mild rumblings and light showers in some parts of the county, to severe electrical downpours in others, preceded both Saturday night's and yesterday afternoon's programs. In both cases, as on the opening night, the rain stopped an hour or so before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky raised his baton to begin the concert. The regularity with which this cooperation between nature and the Festival has been accomplished is fostering a general belief that the skies have been put on a stringent schedule for the series.

Chief non-muscial ovation of the week-end, also attributable to the weather, occured yesterday afternoon at the end of the first Schubert selection. After acknowledging the applause that followed the orchestra's performance of ballet numbers from "Rosamunde," Dr. Koussevitzky motioned for silence and said:

"It is awfully hot. I wonder if you would mind if we take off the coats?"

Coats Off

The spontaneous salvo of laughter and hand-clapping that answered him apparently convinced the conductor that his audience not only did not mind, but approved of this counter-attack on the humidity. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men forthwith removed their coats and got back to Schubert, whose "Unfinished" Symphony in B Minor was the second number on the program.

Despite the threatening weather, the attendance for the first three concerts averaged just under 5000. The total of 14,000 is almost equal to that of last year, when only three concerts were given. The three final concerts this week are expected to bring out at least another 14,000 music lovers.

The week-end concerts formed another brilliant spectacle as all Berkshire gathered under the mammoth tent to hear Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra play two of the three "variety" programs of the series.

Ovation for Composer

Highlight of the Saturday evening concert, which included works by Mozart, Ravel and Tchaikovsky, was the tremendous ovation given Edward Burlingame Hill after the orchestra had played his "Sinfonletta for String Orchestra." Dr. Koussevitzky's gestures toward the official box, where Mr. Hill was sitting with Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Festival president, turned the attention of the applauding thousands to the composer. Mr. Hill bowed, and then clapped his appreciation to the conductor and orchestra. Finally, as the ovation continued, he walked down through the center aisle and shook Dr. Koussevitzky's hand as the 5000 people in the tent rose to their feet shouting, stamping and waving programs in a crescendo of applause.

Chief non-musical attraction of the evening, and again yesterday afternoon, was Miriam Hopkins, screen star, who has been visiting her mother at the Curtis Hotel. With her mother, she sat Saturday evening in the front section, and yesterday afternoon in the box of Lester Roberts, Curtis Hotel manager. She left last night for Hollywood.

Toward the end of the "Fire-Bird" suite of Stravinsky, which closed the first half of yesterday's program, a light rain started, which sent some of the extra-tent sitters under cover, but the majority stayed outside, apparently oblivious of such minor matters as getting wet. The shower continued through part of the 20-minute intermission, keeping the larger part of the crowd under the tent.

Traffic Well Handled

The traffic both before and after the week-end concerts was again handled with remarkable efficiency by the detail of State Police and Legionnaires, who directed the thousands of cars out of the property and toward their destinations in as little time as it takes to get out of the family garage. The construction of a walk for parkers in the north section and the improvement of the extra entrance on Hawthorne Street corrected minor difficulties of the opening night.

Other improvements prompted by experiences of the first concert included the shading of the single light over the podium on the audience side and the setting up of additional benches in the rear section.

Wagner Thursday

Dr. Koussevitzky and the 80 men in the orchestra will have somewhat of a vacation during the early days of the week, interspersing rehearsals with relaxation. On Wednesday they will concentrate on the all-Wagner program which will be given Thursday evening. The Saturday night program will mark the third of the "variety" concerts, consisting of works by Haydn, Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakov. The final concert Sunday will be dedicated to Brahms and will consist of his "Academic Festival" overture and two symphonies.

The Thursday evening concert will be broadcast over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Company.

Saturday evening's storm preceded the concert by a convenient two hours, cooling and clearing the atmosphere perceptibly yet not enough to dispel the humidity which strains and snaps strings. The harps early lost a couple and somewhere in the viola and 'cello sections there was momentary disaster during the evening. Again yesterday afternoon there was a continuance of the same trouble.

Rain Patter On Canvas

For yesterday afternoon the weather was most dangerous of all three days. There was a very light rainfall at the beginning of the concert and during part of the "Firebird" the patter on the canvas roof drowned out the more piano passages. Under normal conditions, however, those even in the last rows, some two hundred eighty feet from the platform, could hear with astonishing clearness and fidelity. The rain, in addition to its damage on the strings, seemed to have made the walls impervious to air. At the conclusion of the first number on the program, the "Rosamunde" ballet music of Schubert, Koussevitzky, who had not left the stage, but merely stepped down from the podium before resuming in the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony", did something he never had done in all his twelve years with the Boston Orchestra. He unbent to the exent of stepping to the fron raising his hands for silence, an saying:

RAIN BATTLES FESTIVAL BUT MUSICIANS WI

Continued From First Page

"It is awfully hot: You will excuse if we remove our kowts".

Whereupon to the amused hand clapping of the audience, conduc tor and men proceeded to disrob to that extent. Only those whos coats help hold in place shoulde rests, maintained their status qu in attire.

It was a very significant fac that the people in the huge audience, composed of a great melange of Berkshireites and visitors, decidedly showed their preference a these two concerts for music of a later day than for that of Mozart and Schubert. The "Unfinished" was accorded a succes d'estime, for all its inherent beauty. Many are the reasons advanced by subsequent generations for Schubert's failure to add a final movement to complete his B minor symphony. None being founded on authentic information, is satisfactory. He wrote it as a gift to the town of Graz which had elected him an honorary member of its muiscal society, but it was never played during his lifetime. It was only after he had been dead 37 years, in 1865, and 43 years after he wrote it that it had its first performance.

Olin Downes said in one of his lectures that two sheets of manuscript found among the composer's literary remains were accepted by some as the unfinished part or represented a purpose to complete it.

Cont. above

Franck was played. Here was music we could unquestionably enjoy, written with sincerity, faith in mankind and musical sanity. Franck wrote only one symphony, but in that one he packed so much fervent vitality, such a wealth of harmonic beauty, that we can only be forever grateful for that one. The performance was glorious in its fidelity and emotional emphasis. As in everything they have done in these three magnificent concerts, the members of orchestra and their conductor have given everything they had, maintaining a standard of performance of the highest ideals of music.

Superb Sunset

As the crowds started to arrive Saturday evening the heavens offered visitors another in their perpetual exhibit of masterpiece Berkshire sunsets. There was a larger audience even than at the opening concert, and the vitality and insistence of the applause increased as the evening progressed until, at the close, there were shouts and huzzahs in one of the most vociferous ovations ever recorded in the short history of these Festivals. The occasion was the performance of the Ravel second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite and the Fourth Symphony of Tschhikowsky. The huge audience rose to a pitch of frenzy as Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this second concert of the Festival.

Great Ovation for Author

The concert had started with

---

the second, a scherzo, allegro vivace, is a model of sprightly grace.

Audience Enraptured

The Ravel Suite sent the audience into raptures. It was the wizadry of the orchestration, the sheer power and force of the orchestra's playing, and the magnetism of its leader which contrived to bring about this result. Some 25 years ago Diaghileff's ballet was drawing into its net many of the most famous artists in several allied fields. Karsavina and Nijinsky were the premier dancers, Leon Bakst was doing the costumes, and among the composers writing specfically for Diaghileff were Ravel and Stravinsky, whose "Firebird" was played on Sunday's program.

A perusal of the story is very illuminating and helpful in understanding the music, probably more so in the case of the Stravinsky, but the Ravel can stand as music far more easily. How he has brought overwhelming and frenetic excitement out of the tumult of his orchestration is a mystery. There is no little melodic progression, but from the very start, when he depicts the murmurs of a rivulet, through the portrayal of the break of day to the final page of crashing tone effects there is a mounting scale of exhilaration until, at the final tremolo, the persons in the audience are almost literally out of their chairs. It is, of course, the marvelous playing of the Boston orchestra which creates this breath-taking stimulation. Sensitive to a superlative degree to the ander Clark and Charles Sedgwick. On Saturday evening, Director William Miles and Guest Star Edith Barrett attended.

---

Architect There

Alfred H. Granger, prominent architect of New York and Chicago was at yesterday's concert, sitting in the official box with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. He is a close friend of Eliel Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills (Mich.) architect who has been asked to draw plans for the proposed development at Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen arrived yesterday and will remain in the Berkshires until tomorrow. He drove from New York with Miss Frances Rich, daughter of Irene Rich, the actress. Today Mr. Saarinen visited Tanglewood again with Festival officers. He will sail for Europe tomorrow. Mr. Granger has been Miss Robinson Smith's house guest.

David Stanley Smith of the Yale University faculty, composer and conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Henry Johnson, instructor of music at the University of Arizona, were also at yesterday's concert.

Lost-and-Found Inventory Shows Festival Weather

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 9—An inventory of the lost-and-found department at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office gives a fair idea of the weather for the first three concerts.

The articles as yet unclaimed include two umbrellas, two raincoats, two blankets and a pair of men's rubbers.

Also included in the collection are a sash, several handkerchiefs, one kid glove, one blue purse (containing no money) and two cushions. A pair of glasses and one cushion have been claimed. Still lost are an opal pin and a chamois glove.

Swing Surpasses Schubert in

While their employers were inside the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tent listening to the works of the immortals, the army of chauffeurs out in the parking lot gave their attention to the products of Tin Pan Alley. The Eagle cameraman collected the pictorial evidence above during an air wave of rendition of "The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down."

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 10 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO CLOSE SUNDAY

Berkshire Concerts Also Will Be Given Thursday and Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Gazette

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 10. — Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshrie Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Thursday evening at 8.30 o'clock, with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night at 8.30 and the festival will close Sunday afternoon with an all-Brahms program at 4.30 o'clock.

The festival management expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, Canada and Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large, Rep. Allen T. Treadway, Miss Miriam Hopkins, film actress, Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., city chamberlain of New York, Owen Johnson, the author, Alexander Kirkland, the actor, and Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands present.

Thursday morning at 11 o'clock, Olin Downes, New York critic, will resume his lectures on music to be played at the festival. There will be a final lecture Friday morning at the same hour. Both will be at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, and are open to the public.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced the programs for the remaining three concerts as follows:

Thursday

Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
A Siegfried Idyl	Wagner
Prelude and Libestod from "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure"	Wagner
Waldweben from "Siegfried"	Wagner
Prelude to "Parsifal"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner

Saturday

Symphony in G Major, No. 88	Haydn
Symphony No. 7	Sibelius
"Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday

"Academic Festival" Overture	Brahms
Symphony No. 3	Brahms
Symphony No. 1	Brahms

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, but there are plenty of rooms in private homes and in neighboring towns of Pottsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

A number of the members of the orchestra have pitched their tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac. "Tanglewood," the beautiful estate given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, extends to the shore. Mrs. Brooks, a trustee of the festival, will be in attendance at the closing concerts.

Floodlights have been placed in the formal gardens at "Tanglewood," transforming them in the evening to a fairyland. Music lovers are invited to stroll through the gardens which extend almost to the very edge of the huge canopy erected to house the concerts.

Reservations for the final concerts may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
14 AUG 10 1937

Koussevitsky Sheds His Coat at Concert

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians. Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats. Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not. The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
AUG 10 1937

The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which last week attracted huge crowds to the "Tanglewood" estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, will be completed with three programs Thursday, Saturday and Sunday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. Other features have also been planned for those spending the two-week period in the Berkshire area.

Olin Downs, New York music critic, will give two more lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield the mornings of Aug. 12 and 13. Langdon Mitchell's "Becky Sharp" is being presented at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge all week, with Edith Barrett in the leading role.

The annual exhibition of the Stockbridge Art Association will continue at the Berkshire Museum thru Wednesday, August 18. Three performances of the Bennington Dance Festival will be given Aug. 12, 13 and 14 in Bennington, Vt. Ted Shawn and his group of men dancers will perform on Aug. 13 and 14. A lecture-demonstration will be given at Mr. Shawn's farm Jacob's Pillow, on Friday, Aug. 13.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra programs follow:

Thursday evening
All-Wagner Program
Overture to "Rienzi"
A Siegfried Idyl
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"
The Ride of the Valkyries
Waldweben from "Siegfried"
Prelude to "Parsifal"
Overture to "Tannhauser"

Saturday Evening

Symphony in G major	Haydn
Symphony No. 7	Sibelius
Scheherazade	Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday Afternoon
All-Brahms Program
Academic Festival Overture
Symphony No. 3
Symphony No. 1.

4

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 10 1937

ATTENDED CONCERT AT SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Fully 5,000 people attended the Sunday afternoon concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," Stockbridge, Mass., and again, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played flawlessly a program which included Schubert's Ballet Music from "Rosamunde," Schubert's always beautiful "Unfinished" Symphony, Stravinsky's Fire-Bird, and the Symphony in D minor of Cesar Franck.

The next concert will be on Thursday, and will be an all-Wagner program. There will be a record attendance, for more reservations have been made for that concert than for any of the others.

Among those from this vicinity who attended the Sunday afternoon concert were Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, Mr and Mrs J. Sanderson Hand of Stuyvesant Falls, Dr. and Mrs. Harry A. Pattison and Miss Reeve of Livingston, Mrs. James Tyson of Baltimore, Md., and Canaan, Mrs. William Daley, Miss Helen Underwood of Chatham, the Rev. John F. Nichols of Williamstown, Mass., a former rector of Christ church, this city, and Mrs. Nichols, the Rev. J. J. Paulsen of Lebanon Springs, Mrs. James Van Alstyne, Mrs. Paul Judson and Mrs. Roy McVaugh of Kinderhook, Mr and Mrs Charles P. Hermance, Miss Annah Hermance and Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Jr., of Claverack, and Mr and Mrs Wendover Neefus, Gerald S. Bliss, Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Mr and Mrs William H. Ganson, Mrs. Grace Fritts Newman, Miss Katherine McLellan, Miss Margaret Dowd, Miss Anna Nicholson and Mrs. George H. Hickey of this city; also the house guest of Mr and Mrs Charles P. Hermance, Mrs. Albert Meyer, of New Haven, Conn., and Mrs. Dora Hermance of Claverack.

James E. Leath of Kinderhook, had as guests in his box Mr and Mrs Lawrence Howard of Kinderhook, Mr and Mrs Charles P. Frisbee and Edward Frisbee of Stuyvesant Falls. Miss Frances Rathbone of Stuyvesant, was the guest of Mr and Mrs John Bross Lloyd of Lee, Mass., in their box.

UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 10 1937

European Music Bad, Composer Says

Boston—(AP)—Serge A. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is recognized as one of the outstanding patrons of contemporary music, asserts the present crop of younger European composers is turning out "consistently bad music."

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too," said the famous Russian-born conductor on his return here from Europe.

Positively Wretched

"Some of the pieces I heard at the 15th festival of contemporary music in Paris were wretched, postively wretched. The music was utter banality, simply dressed up in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say."

Dr. Koussevitzky did not include American composers in this group.

"Our American composers," he declared, "are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr Koussevitzky said he would honor the memory of the late George Gershwin, who died two weeks ago, by playing one of his selections, probably from "Porgy and Bess," at the Berkshire festival. "His death was a great loss to American music. Like Schubert, he sang his country's songs."

The conductor said he hoped to see the Berkshire Festival develop in the coming years into a major event lasting six to eight weeks and rivaling the great European festivals.

His plans for the festival call for the founding of a school for training young conductors, "the only requisite for entrance being," he said, "an exceptional talent."

"This talent," he explained, "must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music, composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"For," he continued, "while there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five are truly great."

While Koussevitzky's programs in the Berkshires next week will adhere mostly to classical lines—the schedule including all-Beethoven and all-Wagner programs—the coming Boston season again will hear a good bit of new music.

The conductor said he would introduce for the first time in America the Second Symphony of Malipiero, and a new "concerto for orchestra" by the young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomski.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
AUG 10 1937

Coatless Musicians Of Boston Orchestra Make Musical History

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
AUG 10 1937

Musicians Doff Coats; Idea Is Koussevitsky's

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old-timer said, wrote orchestral history.

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
AUG 10 1937

It Is Said:

That apparently Lynn can furnish about anything from the best news story of the day to artificial ice when it's too hot.

That no wonder Boston Symphony orchestra's leader gets results. He figures on a hot day the orchestra's sartorial appearance is less important to the audience than its musical appeal to the auditory nerves.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
AUG 10 1937

WHO'S NEWS TODAY?

By LEMUEL F. PARTON.
(Copyright, 1937.)

* *

KOUSSEVITSKY: ARTIST.

Serge Koussevitsky, conducting the Berkshire symphonic festival, is the only great virtuoso of the bull fiddle—the only artist to make it a solo instrument. Nineteen years ago, he and all the players in his orchestra on the frozen Volga wore mittens. The mittens had holes in them, so the musicians could finger the strings. Kerensky, with the first flare of the revolution, had ordered the boys to "keep up with their music." So they did.

And, in the meantime, Mr. Koussevitsky has become the distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His program of six concerts on the Tanglewood estate, where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales," is one of the great musical events of America. There is in prospect there an "American Salzburg."

Before his fingers were completely thawed out, he landed in Paris to start an orchestra. He hired a big room, filled it with empty chairs and conducted an imaginary orchestra, just to get warm and limber again. Then he hired an orchestra and a manager. From then on he was steadily in the ascendant. He rebuilt the Boston symphony after Dr. Karl Muck went to Fort Oglethorpe. He is 63 years old.

ASBURY PARK, N. J.
PRESS
AUG 10 1937

Band Writes History When Coats Are Doffed

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, Mr. Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD
AUG 10 1937

DOFF COATS

Boston Symphony Goes To Town After Audience Approves Relief

(By Associated Press)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 10 1937

The Boston Symphony orchestra cast decorum to the winds Sunday and played in shirt sleeves. But the ultimate in undressed musicians will not be reached till the bull fiddle player takes full advantage of the screen behind which he works to toss aside even more vital garments.

OMAHA, NEB.
Morning World-Herald

Precedent

Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding number of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the accoutic shell in which the orchestra was playing was "infernally hot." He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated the listeners would not. The concert went on in shirt sleeves.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
AUG 10 1937

Wagner Program To Open Last Half Of Music Festival

Audience In Berkshires To Hear Koussevitzky And Boston Symphony

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Thursday night at 8:30 with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night and the Festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms program.

The Festival management expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, Canada and Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador - at - large, Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Miss Miriam Hopkins, film actress, Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., city chamberlain of New York, Owen Johnson, the author, Alexander Kirkland, the actor, Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands who were present.

Thursday at 11, Olin Downes, New York critic, will resume his lectures on music tc be played at the Festival. There will be a final lecture Friday morning at the same hour. Both lectures will be at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield and are open to the public.

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, but there are plenty of rooms in private homes, in inns and in neighboring towns, such as Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

Over the weekend, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, the Festival's first vice-president, entertained at luncheon for Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. Among the guests were the Festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony, Mr. and Mrs. Downes and Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson.

A number of the members of the orchestra have pitched their tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac. Tanglewood, the beautiful estate given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, extends to the shore. Mrs. Brooks, a trustee of the Festival, will be in attendance at the closing concerts.

Floodlights have been placed in the formal gardens at Tanglewood, transforming them in the evening to a fairyland. Music lovers at the Festival are invited to stroll through the gardens which come almost to the very edge of the huge canopy erected to house the concerts.

Reservations for the final concerts may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 10 1937

A Whack Taken At Fashion's Shackles

This paper's Department of Saner Clothes for Men in Summer elects to honorary membership the noted director, Serge Koussevitsky, who permitted his perspiring musicians to shed their coats at a concert. The department feels that great progress has been made in its cause when music can be divorced from formality and wed to comfort as it was at Stockbridge, Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 10 1937

TANGLEWOOD GROOMED FOR EVEN LARGER CROWDS AT SECOND FESTIVAL SERIES

Telephone, Telegraph and Mail Orders Being Received at Office in Stockbridge—Koussevitzky Conducts Rehearsal Today—Another Scheduled Before All-Wagner Program Thursday—Mrs. Topping Patron for Second Series.

Tanglewood is groomed again for a record crowd Thursday when the second series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at 8.30 P. M. Because of the success of the first series of concerts and because of the radio broadcast Thursday, many music lovers who failed to attend last week will be in the Berkshires the coming week-end. Orders were coming today by telegraph, telephone and mail.

Rehearsed Today

A perfectionist, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is not letting up on his musicians. There was a strenuous rehearsal this morning and another rehearsal is scheduled before Thursday's all-Wagner concert.

In their spare time, musicians and conductor are enjoying their stay in the Berkshires. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky returned to Tanglewood with Festival officials and Eliel Saarinen, architect, of Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Future developments of the Festival were discussed. At noon, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained Mr. Saarinen at lunch at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox. Last night Mr. Saarinen was the dinner guest of Miss Kate Buckingham of Lenox. Tomorrow Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be dinner guests of the Festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The musicians are having a grand time visiting historic and scenic spots, swimming, playing tennis, or just sitting when they are not rehearsing at Tanglewood.

Telephone for Tickets

Five persons in New York who heard the Thursday broadcast telephoned yesterday for seats for the entire second series of concerts. Another party from New Jersey, several others from New York, Connecticut and the eastern part of the state heard the broadcast and have reserved seats.

Mrs. John A. Topping of Norfolk, Conn., has become a patron for the second series.

Kirkland Staying Over

Alexander Kirkland, star in last week's production of "Many Mansions" at the Berkshire Playhouse, is remaining for this week's concerts. Henry Seidel Canby, former editor of the Saturday Review of Literature, is among the subscribers for the second series.

FRED N. CUMMINGS
Praised for Handling of Festival Parking

From many quarters have come words of praise for the efficiency and courtesy of the parking committee headed by Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings and Willard Sistare's ushering crew. At no time after the three concerts did it take more than 20 minutes to empty the parking areas.

From Superintendent Ward J. Gaston of Tanglewood comes words of appreciation for the consideration of the public when wandering through the gardens. Not a person stepped into the gardens or caused any damage, according to Mr. Gaston, who remarked today:

"It's the most orderly crowd I ever saw."

Mr. Sistare, chairman of the ushering crew, likewise was enthusiastic over the cooperation of the public.

Among the large groups attending concerts this week will be 20 from the Northampton School for Girls. Groups of campers from New York State, Vermont, Connecticut and the Berkshires have taken advantage of the special rates given to parties of 10 or more from camps. Many of them will return this week.

PLAINSFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
AUG 10 1937

Shirt-Sleeved Orchestra Establishes Precedent

Stockbridge, Mass. —(AP)— Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire Sympnonic Festival, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if he and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not. The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 10 1937

Mr. and Mrs. George Messer of Shawmon, R. I., Mrs. W. H. Hayes and the Misses Helen Daley and Margaret Menard of Waterbury, Conn., have returned to their homes following a visit with Dr. and Mrs. Edward R. Messer, Lenox. They attended the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
LEADER
AUG 10 1937

SYMPHONY MEN SHED COATS AND TRADITION

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has established a precedent.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival yesterday, Koussevitsky told the audience it was "infernally" hot, and would the audience mind if musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1937

WAGNER PROGRAM THURSDAY NIGHT

Opening Second Half of Symphonic Festival

AT TANGLEWOOD

Management Pleased at Great Crowds in Attendance — Many Notables Among Those Attending.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Thursday night at 8.30 with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night and the festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms program.

The festival management has expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, Canada and Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Miss Miriam Hopkins, film actress; Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., city chamberlain of New York; Owen Johnson, the author; Alexander Kirkland, the actor; Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands who were present.

Thursday at 11, Olin Downes, New York critic, will resume his lectures on music to be played at the festival. There will be a final lecture Friday morning at the same hour. Both lectures will be at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield and are open to the public.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced the programs for the remaining three concerts as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 12, at 8.30 P. M.

Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
A Siegfried Idyl	Wagner
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure"	Wagner
Waldweben from "Siegfried"	Wagner
Prelude to "Parsifal"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser,"	Wagner

Saturday, Aug. 14, at 8.30 P. M.

Symphony in G major, No. 88,	Haydn
Symphony No. 7	Sibelius
"Scheherazade,"	Rimsky - Korsakov

Sunday, Aug. 15, at 4.30 P. M.

"Academic Festival" Overture	Brahms
Symphony No. 3	Brahms
Symphony No. 1	Brahms

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, but there are plenty of rooms in private homes, in inns and in neighboring towns, such as Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

Over the week-end, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, the festival's first vice-president, entertained at luncheon for Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. Among the guests were the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony; Mr. and Mrs. Downes and Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson.

A number of the members of the orchestra have pitched their tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac. Tanglewood, the beautiful estate given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, extends to the shore. Mrs. Brooks, a trustee of the festival, will be in attendance at the closing concerts.

Floodlights have been placed in the formal gardens at Tanglewood, transforming them in the evening to a fairyland. Music lovers at the festival are invited to stroll through the gardens which come almost to the very edge of the huge canopy erected to house the concerts.

Reservations for the final concerts may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
AUG 10 1937

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLAYS IN SHIRT SLEEVES

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, famous leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has established a precedent for perspiring musicians.

Interrupting the concluding program of the first half of the Berkshire symphonic festival, Sunday, Koussevitsky told the audience the acoustic shell in which the orchestra was performing was "infernally" hot. He asked if the audience would mind if ne and the musicians removed their coats.

Hearty applause and cheers indicated they would not.

The shirt-sleeved orchestra, an old timer said, wrote orchestral history.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 10 1937

Koussevitsky Doffs Coat As He Conducts

BOSTON, Aug. 10.—(UP)—Traditionally conservative Bostonians, already wilting under a week-old heat wave, gasped anew today at the precedent established at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by Conductor Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Noted for fastidious dress as well as his musical virtuosity, Koussevitsky startled his audience at the annual Stockbridge concert by appealing for permission to remove his coat—and roll up his sleeves.

With a burst of applause the audience granted approval.

MILTON, PA.
Evening Standard
AUG 10 1937

Conductor Of Swanky Boston Symphony Takes Off His Coat

Boston—(UP)—Traditionally conservative Bostonians, already wilting under a week-old heat wave, gasped anew today at the precedent established at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by Conductor Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Noted for fastidious dress as well as his musical virtuosity, Koussevitsky startled his audience at the annual Stockbridge concert by appealing for permission to remove his coat—and roll up his sleeves.

With a burst of applause the audience granted approval.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 10 1937

Albany Group At Party in Lenox

MRS. CHARLES C. GRISWOLD, Mrs. W. Austin Ackroyd, Mr. and Mrs. Louis L. Woodward, and Mr. and Mrs. John D. Hecox of this city were among the guests at the supper party given by Alfred I. Barton of Miami Beach at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Saturday night.

The party followed the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and was in honor of Mrs. H. Strongman Miller of New York, who is at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge.

Mrs. Griswold entertained Sunday night at Hill Home, Stockbridge, for Mrs. Miller.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

142

BOSTON SYMPHONY AGAIN TOMORROW IN THE BERKSHIRES

Plans Festival Concerts Tomorrow, Saturday, Sunday —All-Wagner, All-Brahms Programs Arranged

Stockbridge, Aug. 10—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Thursday night at 8.30 with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night and the festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms program.

Thursday at 11, Olin Downes, New York critic, will resume his lectures on music to be played at the festival. There will be a final lecture Friday morning at the same hour. Both lectures will be at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield and are open to the public.

Programs

Dr Koussevitzky has announced the programs for the remaining three concerts as follows:—

Thursday at 8.30 p. m.
Overture to 'Rienzi'	Wagner
A Siegfried Idyl	Wagner
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure"	Wagner
Waldweben from "Siegfried"	Wagner
Prelude to "Parsifal"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Saturday at 8.30 p. m.
Symphony in G major, No 88	Hayden
Symphony No 7	Sibelius
"Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Sunday at 4.30 p. m.
"Academic Festival" Overture	Brahms
Symphony No 3	Brahms
Symphony No 1	Brahms

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, but there are plenty of rooms in private homes, in inns and in neighboring towns, such as Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

Over the weekend, Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia, the festival's 1st vice-president, entertained at luncheon for Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky. Among the guests were the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston symphony, Mr and Mrs Downes and Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 1 1 1937

Small Stadium Audience Hears Diverse Program

Opens With Selections From Brahms and Schumann

In contrast with Monday night, when the season's largest audience had heard the special Gershwin memorial program, one of the least numerous audiences of the summer heard the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra at the Lewisohn Stadium last night under Willem van Hoogstraten's direction. Showers and threatening weather before the concert probably played a part in keeping many of the regular patrons at home.

The well diversified program began with Brahms's Academic Festival overture and Schumann's symphony in D minor. The latter work had not been heard at the stadium since 1932, although it had a later performance in Carnegie Hall by the Boston Symphony in 1932. The second half of the concert included Felix Weingartner's effective transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," the minuet from Mozart's seventeenth divertimento, Liadoff's suite of eight Russian folksongs and Bizet's first suite from his music for Daudet's "L'Arlesienne."

F. D. P.

SAYRE, PA.
TIMES

AUG 1 1 1937

MUSICIAN, 71, SWIMS TO KEEP IN CONDITION

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (UP)—The "grandfather" and the "baby" of the Boston Syhmpony Orchestra are both wind-instrument artists.

Heinrich Lorbeer, 71, keeps his "wind" in condition by distance swimming. For 46 years he has been a star French horn player in the orchestra.

The "baby," Roger Voisin, 19, for two years has played trumpet beside his father, Rene.

NEW YORK TIMES

AUG 1 1 1937

BERKSHIRES TO HEAR ALL-WAGNER PROGRAM

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Present Works by German Composer Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, will open the second half of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., tomorrow evening with an all-Wagner program. After a Saturday night concert the festival will close Sunday afternoon with a program devoted to works of Brahms.

The detailed programs follow: the Wagner concert on Thursday evening comprises the overture to "Rienzi," "Siegfried Idyll," Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkuere," Waldweben from "Siegfried," Prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhaeuser."

Saturday evening's concert will consist of the Haydn symphony in G major, No. 88, the Seventh symphony of Sibelius, and "Scheherazade" by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

The closing concert on Sunday afternoon offers Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture, the Third and the First symphonies.

Olin Downes will lecture on the festival programs Thursday and Friday mornings at 11 o'clock at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield. Both lectures are free to the public.

BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 1 1 1937

Berkshire Festival Resumed Tomorrow

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11. (Special)—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night and the Festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms program.

The Festival management expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, Canada and Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Miss Miriam Hopkins, film actress; Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Adolf A. Berle Jr., city chamberlain of New York, Owen Johnson, the author; Alexander Kirkland, the actor, and Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands who were present.

Thursday at 11, Olin Downes, New York critic, will resume his lectures on music to be played at the Festival. There will be a final lecture Friday morning at the same hour. Both lectures will be at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield and are open to the public.

Floodlights have been placed in the formal gardens at Tanglewood, transforming them in the evening to a fairyland. Music lovers at the Festival are invited to stroll through the gardens which come almost to the very edge of the huge canopy erected to house the concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 1 1937

ALL-WAGNER PROGRAM AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL IS MEETING GOOD RESPONSE

Indications at Stockbridge Office Point to Best Attendance of Any of Concerts to Date—Serge Koussevitzky Conducts Another Rehearsal at Tanglewood—Public Thanked for Co-operation—Parking Crew Composed Entirely of Legionnaires

The all-Wagner program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky tomorrow night at 8.30 at Tanglewood, promises to be the most popular of any of the concerts to date according to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival officers. Orders for tickets are coming in steadily for all concerts but they are especially heavy for tomorrow night at the Stockbridge office.

Dr. Koussevitzky conducted another rehearsal in the big canopy at Tanglewood this morning.

Despite the heavy storms of last night and this morning, the canopy showed no ill effects.

Public's Help Appreciated

Speaking for the Festival trustees, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president, today expressed her appreciation of the public's thoughtfulness in coming early for the concerts.

"The response to our appeal to come early was most gratifying," said Miss Robinson-Smith. "We appreciate it more than I can say, because it has meant starting the concerts without delay. For the remaining concerts I hope the same spirit of co-operation will prevail."

Enthusiasm High

Enthusiasm is running high for the next three concerts. Many people, who had made reservations for the first three are returning for the rest of the week. Mrs. Carl Dreyfus of Boston and Marblehead has accepted the chairmanship for the North Shore for 1938 while Mrs. Edward Shaw has accepted the chairmanship for Dublin, N. H., and vicinity.

The efficient parking crew, working under Fred N. Cummings, is composed entirely of Legionnaires. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield will be on the job with Mr. Cummings this week-end. Members of the crew are:

John Waddock and William A. Ford of Lee; Frank Goodness, Louis Pelky and Francis Smith of Dalton; Harold Williams and Irving Peck of Stockbridge; Frank Scace of Richmond; Ralph Paterson, A. H. Kiligas, Mr. Cummings, Jack Rabiner, Bart Duggan, Benjamin Carpino, George Mountain, Thomas H. Sullivan, Marshall Booth, Walter Messer, Remington Elting, John Noonan, Robert Gibbs and Heman Mitchell of Pittsfield.

Tickets for the remaining concerts may be secured at the Pittsfield office on South Street, from the Lenox booth, from Mrs. T. J. Owens in Lee, Mrs. George L. Taylor in Great Barrington or any of the community chairman it was announced today. There have been reports that tickets are available only in Stockbridge.

Downes To Give Third Festival Lecture Tomorrow

Olin Downes, New York Times critic, will resume his lectures at the Berkshire Museum tomorrow morning at 11 on the music being played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In his two lectures last week, Mr. Downes was given an enthusiastic reception.

Mrs. W. Bradford West, chairman of arrangements at the Museum for the lectures, announces that tickets for the lectures will be available at the door to the capacity of the auditorium, or they may be secured at the Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield offices. More than 200 attended the lecture last Friday.

Mr. Downes will give his concluding lecture Friday morning at 11.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG [illegible] 1937

READY TO GREET ANOTHER CROWD AT TANGLEWOOD

Estate Groomed Again for Second Concert Series; Koussevitzky Keeps Men Rehearsing

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 10—Tanglewood is groomed again for a record crowd Thursday when the second series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at 8.30 p. m. Because of the success of the first series of concerts and because of the radio broadcast Thursday, many music lovers who failed to attend last week will be in the Berkshires the coming week end.

A perfectionist, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is not letting up on his musicians. There was a strenuous rehearsal this morning and another rehearsal is scheduled before Thursday's concert.

In their spare time, musicians and conductor are enjoying their stay in the Berkshires. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky returned to Tanglewood with festival officials and Eliel Saarinen, architect, of Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Future developments of the festival were discussed. At noon, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained Mr. Saarinen at lunch at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox. Last night, Mr. Saarinen was the dinner guest of Miss Kate Buckingham of Lenox. Tomorrow Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be dinner guests of the festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Five persons in New York who heard the Thursday broadcast telephoned yesterday for seats for the entire second series of concerts. Another party from New Jersey, several others from New York, Connecticut and the eastern part of the State heard the broadcast and have reserved seats.

Mrs. John A. Topping of Norfolk, Conn., has become a patron for the second series.

Alexander Kirkland, star in last week's production of "Many Mansions" at the Berkshire Playhouse, is remaining for this week's concerts. Henry S. Canby, former editor of the Saturday Review of Literature, is among the subscribers for the second series.

From many quarters have come words of praise for the efficiency of the parking committee headed by Deputy Sheriff John N. Cummings. At no time after the three concerts did it take more than 20 minutes to empty the parking areas.

From Supt. Ward J. Gaston of Tanglewood comes words of appreciation for the consideration of the public when wandering through the gardens.

Among the large groups attending concerts this week will be 20 from the Northampton School for Girls.

NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

AUG 1 1 1937

Two Attend Music Lecture In Boston

SHARON—Mrs. Morris H. Shepard of So. Pleasant st., accompanied by her sisiter Mrs. Henry G. Ives of Pittsfield, Mass., attended a lecture on the music that was played Saturday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The lecturer was Olin Downes, musical critic of the New York Times, formerly of the Boston Post. The lecture was extremely interesting and was illustrated by records and his playing selections on the piano.

Mr. and Mrs. Downes, (Marion Davenport), formerly resided at "Ston-Holm," the property owned by Mrs. Downes' family, on East st., Sharon. Mrs. Shepard and Mrs Ives., enjoyed seeing Mr. and Mrs Downes and recalled many pleasant memories. Mr. and Mrs. Downes are staying with the novelist, Owen Johnson at his summer home in Lenox which is located in close proximity to Tanglewood, a beautiful estate of many acres that has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. It was named Tanglewood because here in a little red house since burned, Hawthorne wrote Tanglewood Tales.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

READY TO GREET ANOTHER CROWD AT TANGLEWOOD

Estate Groomed Again for Second Concert Series; Koussevitzky Keeps Men Rehearsing

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 11—Tanglewood is groomed again for a record crowd Thursday when the second series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at 8.30 p. m. Because of the success of the first series of concerts and because of the radio broadcast Thursday, many music lovers who failed to attend last week will be in the Berkshires the coming week end.

A perfectionist, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is not letting up on his musicians. There was a strenuous rehearsal this morning and another rehearsal is scheduled before Thursday's concert.

In their spare time, musicians and conductor are enjoying their stay in the Berkshires. Monday Dr. Koussevitzky returned to Tanglewood with festival officials and Eliel Saarinen, architect, of Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Future developments of the festival were discussed. At noon, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained Mr. Saarinen at lunch at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox. Last night, Mr. Saarinen was the dinner guest of Miss Kate Buckingham of Lenox. Tomorrow Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be dinner guests of the festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Five persons in New York who heard the Thursday broadcast telephoned yesterday for seats for the entire second series of concerts. Another party from New Jersey, several others from New York, Connecticut and the eastern part of the State heard the broadcast and have reserved seats.

Mrs. John A. Topping of Norfolk, Conn., has become a patron for the second series.

Alexander Kirkland, star in last week's production of "Many Mansions" at the Berkshire Playhouse, is remaining for this week's concerts. Henry S. Canby, former editor of the Saturday Review of Literature, is among the subscribers for the second series.

From many quarters have come words of praise for the efficiency of the parking committee headed by Deputy Sheriff John N. Cummings. At no time after the three concerts did it take more than 20 minutes to empty the parking areas.

From Supt. Ward J. Gaston of Tanglewood comes words of appreciation for the consideration of the public when wandering through the gardens.

Among the large groups attending concerts this week will be 20 from the Northampton School for Girls.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 1 1 1937

Fourth Berkshire Concert

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony Again Tomorrow

After a three-day intermission the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood Estate, Lenox, Mass., will be resumed tomorrow night at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Wagner program including the overture to "Rienzi," Siegfried Idyll, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Ride of the Valkyries, Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried," prelude to "Parsifal" and overture to "Tannhauser."

Dr. Koussevitzky's program for the fifth festival concert next Saturday night, August 14, includes Hadyn's symphony in G, No. 88; Sibelius's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade." The closing program, next Saturday afternoon at 4:30, consists of Brahms's Academic Festival Overture and third and first symphonies. Inquiries about tickets and lodgings should be directed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass. The management of the festival expressed pleasure at the size of the audiences for the first three concerts last week.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 11 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM ON THURSDAY

Another Concert Saturday, With Closing Event of Series Next Sunday

Tickets for the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, which will open Thursday night at 8.30 with an all-Wagner program, are still selling in large numbers in this vicinity, according to reports received from the Music House, where reservations may be made. There will be another concert Saturday and the festival will close Sunday, with an all-Brahms program.

A number of the members of the orchestra have pitched their tents on the shore of Lake Mankeenac. Tanglewood, the beautiful estate given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, extends to the shore.

Floodlights have been placed in the formal gardens at Tanglewood, transforming them in the evening to a fairyland.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra, has announced the programs for the remaining three concerts as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 12, at 8.30 p. m.
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
A Siegfried Idyl	Wagner
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde"	Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Wakure"	Wagner
Waldweben from "Siegfried"	Wagner
Prelude to "Parsifal"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Saturday, Aug. 14, at 8.30 p. m.
Symphony in G major, No. 88	Haydn
Symphony No. 7	Sibelius
"Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Sunday, Aug. 15, at 4.30 p. m
"Academic Festival" Overture	Brahm
Symphony No. 3	Brahm
Symphony No. 1	Brahm

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

Good Morning

By Malcolm W. Bingay

Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony, asked the audience the other night at a summer concert if the members of his band could take off their coats because "it is so infernally hot." The audience cheered the suggestion and off went the coats.

There is something wrong here. Such conduct is altogether too vulgar and plebeian to assure the onward march of American culture. The very idea of these musicians thinking of their comfort, especially with ladies present!

Why, if this keeps up ordinary men will be walking around the streets, our homes and even in the offices without being half-choked to death by stiff collars and neckties. What's this Nation coming to?

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

AUG 1937

Boston Formality Wilts Under Heat

Boston—(U.P.)—Traditionally conservative Bostonians, already wilting under a week-old heat wave, gasped anew yesterday at the precedent established at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by Conductor Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Noted for fastidious dress as well as his musical virtuousity, Kousseyitsky startled his audience at the annual Stockbridge concert by appealing for permission to remove his coat—and roll up his sleeves.

With a burst of applause the audience granted approval.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 11 1937

WAGNER PROGRAM TO BE PRESENTED BY BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Thursday night at 8:30 with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night and the Festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms program.

The Festival management expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, Canada and Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador - at - large, Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Miss Mirian Hopkins, film actress, Sidney Blumenthal, of New York, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., city chamberlain of New York, Owen Johnson, the author, Alexander Kirkland, the actor, Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands who were present.

Thursday at 11, Olin Downes, New York critic, will resume his lectures on music to be played at the Festival. There will be a final lecture Friday morning at the same hour. Both lectures will be at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield and are open to the public.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced the programs for the remaining three concerts as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 12 at 8:30 P. M.

Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner.
A Siegfried Idyl, Wagner.
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Wagner.
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure," Wagner.
Waldweben from "Sigfried," Wagner.
Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.
Overtrure to "Tannhauser," Wagner.

Saturday, Aug. 14 at 8:30 P. M.

Symphony in G major, No. 88, Haydn.
Symphony No. 7, Sibelius.
"Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov.

Sunday, Aug. 15 at 4:30 P. M.

"Academic Festival" Overture Brahms.
Symphony No. 3, Brahms.
Symphony No. 1, Brahms.

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, but there are plenty of rooms in private homes, in inns and in neighboring towns, such as Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

Over the week end, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, the Festival's first vice president, entertained at luncheon for Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky. Among the guests were the Festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony, Mr. and Mrs. Downes and Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson.

A number of the members of the orchestra have pitched their tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac. Tanglewood, the beautiful estate given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, extends to the shore. Mrs. Brooks, a trustee of the Festival, will be in attendance at the closing concerts.

Floodlights have been placed in the formal gardens at Tanglewood, transforming them in the evening to a fairyland. Music lovers at the Festival are invited to stroll through the gardens which come almost to the very edge of the huge canopy erected to house the concerts.

Reservation for the final concerts may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

[illegible]37

PROGRAM THURSDAY TO BE ALL-WAGNER

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Thursday night at 8.30 with an all-Wagner program. There will be another concert Saturday night and the festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms program.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced the programs for the remaining three concerts as follows:

Thursday
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
A Siegfried Idyl	Wagner
Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure"	Wagner
Waldweben from "Siegfried"	Wagner
Prelude to "Parsifal"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Saturday
Symphony in G major, No. 88	Haydn
Symphony No. 7	Sibelius
"Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Sunday
"Academic Festival" Overture	Brahms
Symphony No. 3	Brahms
Symphony No. 1	Brahms

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 11 1937

WAGNER MUSIC FOR FESTIVAL

Berkshire Symphonic Group to Resume Program Tomorrow

Awaiting the resumption of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts tomorrow night near Lenox, Mass., several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have pitched tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

Tanglewood, the permanent home of the Festival, spreads its acres to the lake shore only a few hundred yards from the formal gardens and the concert tent where 15,000 persons already have heard one-half of the huge orchestra's scheduled programs.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky announced an all-Wagner program for tomorrow night. It has resulted in a sellout. Saturday night's program will offer outstanding examples of the works of Hadyn, Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

When the Festival closes Sunday afternoon the music will be wholly Brahms, featuring two of his symphonies and the Academic Festival overture.

Every political state in Europe, the United States and Canada has been represented in the Festival concert audiences to date. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are at capacity with music lovers. Those coming now for the last three concerts will find their living quarters in private homes and inns of Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

Tomorrow's Wagnerian program will open with the overture to "Rienzi" and close with the overture to "Tannhauser." In between will be heard a Siegfried Idyl, the Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde," "The Ride of the Walkyries" from "Die Walkure," Waldweben from "Siegfried," and the prelude to "Parsifal."

At 11 a. m. tomorrow in the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Olin Downes, New York music critic, will lecture on the programs yet to be heard. He will speak again Friday morning. Both are public.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 12 1937

BERKSHIRE FEST WILL OFFER THREE MORE PROGRAMS

The success of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose closing concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton come Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, is due to the co-operation of summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires and vicinity, striving on a volunteer basis to achieve an ideal. There is no profit motive.

In the programs of the festival is the notation: "Here a shrine is building."

The officers of the festival indicate the broad basis on which it is organized. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York, a Stockbridge summer resident, is the president. The first vice president is Mrs. Carlos M. de-Heredia, of New York and Lenox. Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, is second vice president. The executive vice president is Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield. The treasurer is Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National bank of Stockbridge. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, is secretary and chairman of the co-ordinating committee. All of the officers and a staff of 60 ushers, parking officials and many other workers are all on a volunteer basis.

Advance reservations for the all-Wagner program Thursday night at 8.30 indicate a sell-out. Saturday's concert is at the same hour and the closing concert, an all-Brahms program, will be given Sunday afternoon at 4.30.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DRAWS MANY VISITORS

Mrs. John R. Delafield Honored by Mrs. Edward Vermilye Huntington at Luncheon

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Many arrived at Berkshire hotels today for the start tomorrow night at Tanglewood of the second series of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. An all-Wagnerian program will be given.

Arriving tomorrow at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, will be Baroness Nikolas Korff of Paris and Mrs. Hayden Huestis Butts of New York. Miss Dorothy Sedgwick is the guest of Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister. Others at the Curtis are Mrs. Grace Leeds of London, and Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Starkweather and J. O. Burrows of Hastings, N. Y.

Mrs. John R. Delafield was honored with a luncheon given today at Terrace Inn, North Egremont, by Mrs. Edward Vermilye Huntington. Mrs. F. M. Abell was hostess at a dinner at the Terrace for Mrs. Daniel Chester French.

Newcomers at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, include Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Greer, Mrs. William B. Knox, Mrs. Edwin M. Bulkley, Mrs. Louis G. C. Rumsey, Mr. and Mrs. H. Montague Smith Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George M. Estabrook and Miss Barbara Estabrook of New York.

Arrivals at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford Platt of New York, Mrs. Charles E. Ward and Miss Grace L. Ward of East Orange, N. J.

Miss Frances Starr Donaldson of Washington, Mrs. George H. Hopson of Hempstead, L. I., and Mrs. E. T. Russell of Millbrook, N. Y., are registered at Olde Egremont Tavern, South Egremont.

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

AUG 11 1937

HEALEY TO SPEAK.

Colonel "Jim" Healey will be the guest speaker at the Old Home Day services of the Weston Methodist Church Sunday, Rev. O. Burtis Scouten, pastor, has announced. Music will be played for the occasion by part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 12 1937

143

FESTIVAL'S SUCCESS DUE TO COOPERATION

All Officers, Ushers, Parking Directors and Others Work as Volunteers

Stockbridge, Aug. 11—The success of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose closing concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton come tomorrow, Saturday and Sunday, is due to the cooperation of summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires and vicinity, striving on a volunteer basis to achieve an ideal. There is no profit motive.

The officers of the festival indicate the broad basis on which it is organized. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, a Stockbridge summer resident, is the president. The 1st vice-president is Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Lenox. Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, is 2d vice-president. The executive vice-president is Mrs George W. Edman of Pittsfield. The treasurer is Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National bank of Stockbridge. George W. Edman of Pittsfield is secretary and chairman of the coordinating committee. All of the officers and a staff of 60 ushers, parking officials and many other workers are on a volunteer basis.

Advance reservations for the all-Wagner program Thursday night at 8.30 indicate a sellout. Saturday's concert is the same hour and the closing concert, an all-Brahms program, will be given Sunday afternoon at 4.30.

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

AUG 11 1937

Symphony To Present All-Wagner Program

Serge Koussevitzky and the men of the Boston Symphony will offer an All Wagner Concert on Thursday evening as the second of a pair of concerts from Tanglewood in the famous Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts. The program will be given in its entirety and will include:

Overture—"Rionzi."
Prelude and Liebestod — "Tristan und Isolde."
Ride of the Valkyries — "Die Walkuere."
Waldweben from "Siegfried."
Overture—"Tannhauser."
Prelude—"Parsifal."
(WMAL at 7:30.)

COURIER

AUG 12 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL ATTRACTS MANY

Music-Lovers From All Over America And Canada Attend

Despite threatening thunder showers, the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge, was a gala and thrilling event. The audience was large and enthusiastic and Dr. Serge Koussevitsky's reading of the Beethoven overture and symphonies left nothing to be desired and will long be remembered by the music-lovers who came from all over the United States and Canada.

From the delicate and intricate Mozart E Major Symphony to the powerful and passionate Fourth Symphony of Tchaikowsky, Saturday evening's program thrilled and excited those present. The "Daphnis and Chloe" second suite aroused the audience to a pitch of excitement seldom expressed anywhere at any concert. The audience was treated to a comparatively new String Sinfonietta by Mr. Hill, Professor in the Music Department of Harvard and a native of Massachusetts. Mr. Hill was present and received his due share of applause. The Sinfonietta has a beautiful muted string passage in the second movement and the interesting and subtle rhythms border on syncopation.

The "hit" of the evening was Dr. Koussevitsky's beautifully sympathetic reading of the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony. The melancholy Slavic strains of this selection drew the audience to the eminent conductor. The delightful pizzicato movement was especially appealing. Despite shouts of "Encore" and "Bravo", Dr. Koussevitsky did not favor his audience with an extra number. He was called and recalled many times.

Sunday afternoon's concert was also threatened by rain, but once again the undaunted and enthusiastic crowds retured to "Tanglewood" to acclaim these talented musicians and their great conductor, as well as to hear the outstanding program of the series so far. Dr. Koussevitsky has a genius for picking a varied and interesting symphonic program. The opening number, Schubert's ballet music to "Rosamunde" was rather hurriedly rendered, but the "Unfinished" symphony was beautiful done, especially the fascinating harp accompaniment in the second movement.

The Stravinsky "Fire Bird" suite never fails to to draw the attention and amusement of concert-goers and Sunday's listeners were no exception. The modern harmony and syncopated rhythms were extremely attractive in contrast Schubert works.

The tremendous D Minor S closed the first series in th making festival. After he Koussevitsky's excellent readin greted that the great Belgian never wrote any more than just symphony; for in Dr. Koussev finds a sympathetic and conscien terpreter.

Those attending the festiv Chatham and vicinity were: Mi

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

144

AUG 12 1937

CHOIR SERENADES FESTIVAL LEADER

Dr. Koussevitzky Hears Bach Singers in Chorales

PRAISES MUSIC

Surprise Appearance of W'mstown Group May Lead to Broader Scope for Future Festivals.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the distinguished leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra which is playing at the current Berkshire Symphonic festival, was pleasantly surprised last evening when the Bach choir of Williamstown "serenaded" him in Stockbridge. The singers burst forth in song just as Dr. Koussevitzky and the other guests at dinner in the Stockbridge home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the festival president, were retiring from the dining room for coffee.

The famous conductor and the other guests gathered on a porch of the Smith home while the choir, under the leadership of Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams college, sang two chorales by the composer for which the society was named. So impressed was Dr. Koussevitzky by the two songs that he was insistent that the choir sing again.

Other guests of Miss Smith who enjoyed the concert were Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times who is giving a series of lectures in connection with the festival, Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, the festival vice-president; Ted Shawn, the dancer; and Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown, a member of the festival's executive committee.

The choir, consisting of about 35 voices, offered "Now Let Every Tongue Adore Thee" and "Now Rest Beneath Night's Shadow." For the encore which was insistently demanded by the artist the choir was honoring and the other listeners, the first chorale was repeated.

After the choir had finished Dr. Koussevitzky spoke briefly to the singers. Addressing them as "my dear young people" he voiced his appreciation of the surprise, saying that he had been made "very happy."

In his short talk he expressed a hope that someday perhaps the choir and he could work together in presenting a program that would combine orchestral and vocal music. He said he was convinced that a group like the choir, which sings because it loves to sing, can do "great things."

Dr. Koussevitzky after voicing his gratitude to the singers invited Mr. Safford and his wife, Laura Tappen Safford, contralto, who sings with the choir, in for a chat. During his conversation with them he said that the brief but delightful concert had suggested many things to him.

He said that the idea of combining choral music with that of the orchestra was one of rich possibilities and mentioned that perhaps in the future programs of folk music might be presented and that perhaps various choral groups might meet in competition.

Mr. Downes also expressed himself as being deeply impressed. Complimenting Mr. Safford personally he said "Good work, Tommy, (Mr. Safford is known among his intimates as either Tom or Tommy) that was great."

The choir which has been rehearsing for the past few weeks went down county in two cars. Its appearance at the Smith estate was nicely timed as the guests were just leaving the dining room when the singers, standing in the garden with flashlights focussed on their music, began the program. Neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the other guests at the dinner was aware of the choir's plans. Prof. Brown left the dinner company to join the choir in singing the first chorale as an encore.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1937

SAYS KOUSSEVITZKY BUILT PROGRAM WITH GREAT SKILL

Olin Downes Analyzes Wagner Works To Be Done in Festival at Stockbridge Tonight—Calls Tristan Flawless—Most Astute Scholar Can Find No Mistakes—Ernest Newman's Clinical Work.

Olin Downes, in his Festival lecture today at the Museum, said there have been three towering heights in music. Bach, Beethoven and Wagner, all Germans, have, he said, written the greatest in this particular form of art.

Bach and Beethoven had their limitations. They led more or less secluded lives, Bach because of his studious nature, Beethoven because of the physical handicap of deafness. Wagner, on the other hand, was at close grips with life in its sunniest and gloomiest aspects, and his experiences formed the very basis of his musical composition. He utilized the melody, harmony and counterpoint, so perfected in Bach's work, the passionate surging of warm orchestral effect, achieved by Beethoven, then infused into his music the innovation of completely modern thought.

In Wagner's music there is abrupt departure from the style of all the masters who preceded him. Mr. Downes spoke of a new biography by Ernest Newman in which this erratic, tempestuous, sometimes unscrupulous genius of a man, is discussed without reserve. Newman was severely criticized by many readers for "exposing the entrails of a dead lion." His reply was that he wanted to portray Wagner as God made him, not as the sentimental and loving public chose to picture him.

"Rienzi" First on Program

The overture to "Rienzi" is placed first on the program for tonight. Written during the time Wagner was conductor at Riga, the opera is based upon a German translation of Bulwer Lytton's novel of the same name. The story concerns a popular leader in fourteenth century Italy who defied the autocratic form of government in existence there and really paved the way for later reforms along more liberal and representative lines. The music of this opera is relatively immature, for Wagner was only 25 at the time of its completion. But the work is important because it shows the superb workmanship of the master in the embryonic stage.

Built His Plan Expertly

The Siegfried Idyl is placed next in order. Koussevitzky rightly considered the building of an expert program and did not place the compositions in order of their writing by Wagner. There is evidence of tremendous progress in Siegfried. The Idyl was written as a birthday present for the composer's wife, and for their 18 months' old son. It reflects the peace and contentment found at rare intervals in Wagner's life and music.

"Tristan and Isolde" is, in a way, indescribable. When writing it Wagner was thinking of all-consuming love, of the inspiration of a woman, of the many intangible things he never had experienced. In it are the Prelude and the Liebestod or "Love Death," the latter being the only solution for the tragic love of Tristan and Isolde. The most astute scholar can find in Tristan no mistakes. It is flawless, and could not be improved upon by a solitary note.

Nature In All Moods

"Die Walkure" and "Siéfried" are outstanding for their portrayal of nature in all her aspects. The twittering of birds, the hum of a soft breeze through trees, the ripple of a brook are ingeniously duplicated in impressionistic music.

In "Parsifal," written many years later when much of the turmoil had died out of the man's life, there is the theme of renunciation. There in much religious feeling, a mixture of many religious trends. There are the three mystic and spiritual themes of Love, Faith and Hope.

For climax is the well-known overture to "Tannhauser." In it is the Pilgrim Chorus, often played but never tiresome, and again are the themes of spiritual strife and the redeeming influence of women.

Has Fine Audience

The theatre of the museum was almost filled for Mr. Downes's talk. The stage, as on all occasions, was tastefully arranged. The grand piano, which was used for illustration of themes, was placed against the back drop. There were two chairs of severe yet graceful design at the left, and on the right a matching table bearing a vase of the tall, peach-orange gladioli.

Tomorrow morning at 11 the series will be concluded with a lecture about the programs of Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 12 1937

Wagner Program at Lenox

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at the Tanglewood estate, Lenox, Mass., offering an all-Wagner program. The remaining concerts of the festival will be next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs this morning and tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield.

ROSINDALE, MASS.
Weekly Parkway
Transcript
AUG 12 1937

Symphony Player And West Roxbury Girl To Marry

Eugene Adam of 108 Hemenway street and Miss Marion C. Templeton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Templeton of 189 Belgrade avenue, West Roxbury, will be married at high noon Tuesday at the bride's home. The Rev. James Alexander will perform the ceremony.

Miss Templeton's sister, Agnes Templeton, will be maid of honor, Everett Dyer of 98 Hemenway street, head of Dyer's Travel Service, will be best man. Mr. Templeton will give his daughter in marriage.

The couple are sailing from New York Wednesday on board the French liner Normandie, for a wedding trip to Normandie in France, where they will visit Mr. Adam's father. On their return in October they will make their home in a Fenway apartment.

Miss Templeton is a native of Roslindale. She attended the High School of Practical Arts in Roxbury, and was graduated from the Business Machine School. She is employed with the Carter Ink Company.

Mr. Adam, a native of France, has been a local resident since 1918. He is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music in Paris, from which he received a "first prize" in 1903. He is a tuba player in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now playing in the Berkshire Festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 12 1937

MANY ARRIVING AT BERKSHIRES FOR FESTIVAL

Baroness Nikolas Korff of Paris Expected at Lenox Today — Second Series Starts Tonight

Special Dispatch to The Springfield Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 11—There were many arrivals at all the Berkshire hotels today for the start tomorrow night at Tanglewood of the second series of Boston Symphony orchestra concerts. An all-Wagner program will be given.

Arriving tomorrow at the Curtis hotel, Lenox, will be Baroness Nikolas Korff of Paris and Mrs Hayden Huestis Butts of New York city, who is coming from Bar harbor. Miss Dorothy Sedgwick is the guest of Mrs E. Griswold Hollister. Others at the Curtis are Mrs Grace Leeds of London, Mr and Mrs J. K. Starkweather and J. O. Starkweather of Scarsdale, N. Y.; Clarence M. Chauncey of New York, Mr and Mrs W. S. Burrows of Hastings, N. Y., Mrs Leslie Thompson of Pine Orchard, Ct.

Mrs John R. Delafield was honored with a luncheon given at Terrace inn, North Egrement, by Mrs Edward Vermilye Huntington, and Mrs F. M. Abell gave a dinner at the Terrace for Mrs Daniel Chester French.

Mrs William Hall Walker and Mrs Orlando N. Dana are back at Norfolk from Pine Orchard, Ct. Mrs Walker was a luncheon hostess there today for Miss Harriet Ingham and Mrs Amey Reinmund of Englewood, N. J., who are at the Terrace. Arrivals there include Mrs Paul Downing who has joined Mrs Sarah Peters Downing. Mr and Mrs Daniel S. Husted and Miss Edith Harmon Brown of New York.

Newcomers at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, include Mrs D. McRae Livingston, Mr and Mrs Bruce Clark, Mr and Mrs Louis M. Greer, Mrs William B. Knox, Mrs Edwin M. Bulkley, Mrs Louis G. C. Rumsey, Mr and Mrs H. Montague Smith, Jr., Mr and Mrs George M. Estabrook, Miss Barbara Estabrook of New York, Mrs Leslie S. Howell of Gwynedd Valley, Pa., and Mrs George S. Page of Pittsburg, Pa.

Listed among arrivals at Heaton hall, Stockbridge, are Mr and Mrs Graham K. Mellen of New Haven, Ct., Mr and Mrs Rutherford Platt of New York, Mrs Charles E. Ward, Miss Grace L. Ward of East Orange, N. J.

Dr and Mrs Lauriston B. Hardin, Jr., of Washington, D. C., who have been visiting Mrs Hardin's mother, Mrs Edward Boltwood Hull of Bartlett avenue, Pittsfield, departed today for Nantucket.

Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt and Miss Judith Colt of Pittsfield are at Nantucket until after the first of September.

Miss Frances Starr Donaldson of Washington, Mrs George H. Hopson of Hempsted, L. I., and Mrs E. T. Russell of Millbrook, N. Y., are registered at Olde Egremont tavern, South Egremont.

Mrs Russell H. Hibbs of Arrowhead, Pittsfield, has gone to her camp on Huron mountain, northern Michigan.

Mr and Mrs George Trowbridge Elliman of New York registered at the Stockbridge Golf club.

Mr and Mrs Norman L. Macy, who were with her mother, Mrs Churchill Satterlee, at Syringa cottage, Lenox, went to Manhasset, L. I.

Prof and Mrs Winfield Abell of New York are occuping Little Pine cabin, North Edgremont.

Mrs William E. Cushing of Boston and Pittsfield was a luncheon hostess at Yellow Astor Tea room, Pittsfield, in honor of Mrs Louis Lombard of Riverside, Ct., formerly of the Castle de Trevano, Lugano, Switz.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS
MORNING UNION

INTEREST KEEN IN TANGLEWOOD MUSIC TONIGHT

'All-Wagner Program Will Be Given by Berkshire Festival; Tent Not Damaged by Storm

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 11 — The all-Wagner program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky Thursday night at 8.30 at Tanglewood, promises to be the most popular of any of the concerts to date, according to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival officers. Orders for tickets are coming in steadily for all concerts but they are especially heavy for Thursday night at the Stockbridge office.

Dr. Koussevitzky conducted another rehearsal in the big canopy at Tanglewood this morning. Despite the heavy storms of Tuesday night and this morning, the canopy showed no ill effects.

Enthusiasm is running high for the next three concerts. Many who had made reservations for the first three concerts are returning for the rest of the week. Mrs. Carl Dreyfuss of Boston and Marblehead has accepted the chairmanship for the North Shore for 1938 while Mrs. Edward Shaw has accepted the chairmanship for Dublin, N. H., and vicinity.

The efficient parking crew working under Fred N. Cummings is composed entirely of Legionnaires. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield will be on the job with Mr. Cummings this week end.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 12 1937

Wagner Program At Music Festival

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Sergei Koussevitzky conducting, will open the second half of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., this evening with an all Wagner program. The attendance for the concerts which started last week continues large. This morning Olin Downs, New York music critic, lectured on the festival programs, and will do so tomorrow morning also at 11 o'clock in the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Tonight's program at Tanglewood includes the overture to "Rienzi," "Siegfried Idyll," "Prelude and Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde," "The Ride of the Valkyries" from "Die Walkure," the prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhauser." On Saturday night the orchestra will play Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 8, the Seventh Symphony by Sibelius, and "Scheherazade" by Rimsky-Korsakoff. The festival closes Sunday afternoon with a Brahms program.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 12 1937

FESTIVAL SUCCESS DUE TO CO-OPERATION

The success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose closing concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's baton come today, Saturday and Sunday, is due to the co-operation of summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires and vicinity, striving on a volunteer basis to achieve an ideal. There is no profit motive.

In the programs of the Festival is the notation:

"Here a shrine is building."

The officers of the Festival indicate the broad basis on which it is organized. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York, a Stockbridge summer resident, is the president. The first vice president is Mrs Carlos M. de-Heredia, of New York and Lenox. Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, is second vice president. The executive vice president is Mrs George W. Edman, of Pittsfield. The treasurer is Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, is secretary and chairman of the co-ordinating committee. All of the officers and a staff of 60 ushers, parking officials and many other workers are all on a volunteer basis.

Advance reservations for the all-Wagner program tonight at 8:30 o'clock indicate a sellout. Saturday's concert is the same hour and the closing concert, an all-Brahms program, will be given Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

HACKE
BERGE
AUG

BE

Among thos
Lenox, Mass., S series of six con
conductor of th
Cliffside Park S

ALBA
Knickerbo

AUG

Thund
Berksh

145

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD
AUG 12 1937

BERGEN FOLK ATTEND BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

—Bergen Evening Record Photo.

Among those from Bergen County attending the Berkshire Symphony Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., Sunday, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is giving a series of six concerts, were: (left to right) Henry P. Cross of Ridgefield Park, supervisor of music and conductor of the Ridgefield Park Choral Club; Mrs. Cross; Mrs. Jennie MacCulloch, supervisor of music, Cliffside Park Schools, and Giuseppe Amato, well known flutist, of Ridgefield Park.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 12 1937

FESTIVAL COMES TO END SUNDAY

Summer And Permanent Berkshire Residents Cooperate

The success of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose closing concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's baton come today, Saturday and Sunday, is due to the cooperation of summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires and vicinity, striving on a volunteer basis to achieve an ideal. There is no profit motive.

In the programs of the Festival is the notation: "Here a shrine is building."

The officers of the festival indicate the broad basis on which it is organized. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, a Stockbridge summer resident, is the president. The first vice-president is Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Lenox. Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, is second vice-president. The executive vice-president is Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield. The treasurer is Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National bank of Stockbridge. George W. Edman of Pittsfield is secretary and chairman of the coordinating committee. All of the officers and a staff of 60 ushers, parking officials and many other workers are all on a volunteer basis.

Advance reservations for the all-Wagner program tonight at 8:30 indicate a sellout. Saturday's concert is the same hour and the closing concert, an all-Brahms program, will be given Sunday afternoon at 4:30.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

INTEREST KEEN IN TANGLEWOOD MUSIC TONIGHT

All-Wagner Program Will Be Given by Berkshire Festival; Tent Not Damaged by Storm

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 12 — The all-Wagner program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood, promises to be the most popular of any of the concerts to date, according to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival officers. Orders for tickets are coming in steadily for all concerts but they are especially heavy for Thursday night at the Stockbridge office.

Dr. Koussevitzky conducted another rehearsal in the big canopy at Tanglewood yesterday. Despite the heavy storms of Tuesday night and this morning, the canopy showed no ill effects.

Enthusiasm is running high for the next three concerts. Many who had made reservations for the first three concerts are returning for the rest of the week. Mrs. Carl Dreyfuss of Boston and Marblehead has accepted the chairmanship for the North Shore for 1938 while Mrs. Edward Shaw has accepted the chairmanship for Dublin, N. H., and vicinity.

The efficient parking crew working under Fred N. Cummings is composed entirely of Legionnaires. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield will be on the job with Mr. Cummings this week end.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

Thunder, Rain Drown Out Berkshire Symphony

By RAY A. MOWERS

It was 8:35 p. m.

With up-raised baton, Serge Koussevitzky turned his well-tailored back on more than 4,000 persons dimly visible in the darkened tent at Lenox, Mass. The next instant the world-famous long-drawn opening trumpet note of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" filled the air.

Then, with a menacing growl, Mother Nature threw open the flood gates of heaven and a spirited battle was on.

The roar of the descending waters against the huge tent of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival immediately submerged the sounds from the great stage. Even the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing the frequently thunderous music of the genius of Beyreuth, was no match for such an assault by Jupiter, cast for the nonce in his three most celebrated roles—Pluvius, Tonans and Fulminator.

Struggle on for Hour

For an hour the unequal struggle continued. Dr. Koussevitzky eventually raced through the overture but only partts of it were audible above the roll of the thunder plus the tthunder of rain over head.

Maybe it was with a pagan notion that the raging elemental gods outside might be placated by it, the famous conductor announced an immediate change in the program. But, fortunately, he chose to substitute the pianissimi of "Forest Murmus" instead of something vociferous like "The Ride of the Valkyries." As a result the orchestra met another defeat and its pilot retired in good order but with gray head sadly shaking.

As the uneven contest progressed there was less and less disposition on the part of the human factors involved to dispute possession of the field with their celestial opponents. An hour had passed before anything like normal conditions returned.

Meanwhile rain had sought out and discovered several vulnerable points in the huge concert cover and umbrellas sprouted like mushrooms here and there through the crowd. Then the surplus surface water from the gardens outside began seeping rapidly along the ground and around the feet of the auditors.

Eventually a recess was called and, to the surprise of most who took advantage of the opportunity to step outside, the rain had ceased and none of Tanglewood's familiar objects had been washed into neighboring Lake Mahkeenac.

From 10 until 11 o'clock the orchestra played a badly disrupted program to a cheering throng without opposition from above.

The moisture saturated air, however, affected adversely the tonal quality and it cannot be said with truth that the orchestra was more than 50 per cent efficient compared with its customary standards. It must be added in all fairness that no human endeavor of its type could be expected to be better in the face of the long string of handicaps and obstacles it had survived.

Though subjected to a terrific strain by his experiences of the first hour, Dr. Koussevitzky was still his smiling, self-contained and expert self when his warring opponent retired behind the adjacent Taconic fold leaving a dripping field of battle once more in uncontested control of the men from Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

KOUSSEVITSKY WINNER AGAIN OVER WEATHER

Several Halts Called as Heavy Downpour Drowns Out Tent Concert at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 A. M.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried" was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

Wait Half Hour

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

The Berkshire Evening Eagle
PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 13, 1937.

DOWNES ENDS LECTURES ON FESTIVAL CONCERTS

Noted Music Critic Addresses Audience of 200 at Berkshire Museum—Illustrates at Piano Passages From Composers' Works.

Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, completed his series of four lectures on the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program this morning in the Berkshire Museum before a crowd of more than 200.

The works of Brahms, Sibelius, Haydn and Rimsky-Korsakov, which will comprise the final week-end concerts of the Festival were taken up in detail, with Mr. Downes at the piano much of the time illustrating outstanding passages and themes.

Talks on Brahms

Most time was spent on the three symphonies which are to form the all-Brahms program Sunday. Although not considering Brahms on a plane with Beethoven or Wagner, Mr. Downes sees in the composer one of the first of the immortals to "stem the tide against Wagner." Brahms brought back the classic traditions which the great Wagner had flouted for more passionate, emotional music.

Between the four symphonies written by Brahms, three of which will be played Sunday, Mr. Downes finds more variation than in the nine written by Beethoven. Brahms did not "dare" to write a symphony until he was 40 years of age.

Mr. Downes characterized the Academic Overture as "glorious," and full of vigor, humanity and youth, attributes with which Brahms is not generally credited. The third symphony, he finds "mountainous, full of towering heights" reflecting the composer's love for his Bavarian Alps. He believes the First Symphony to have been modeled closely on Beethoven's Fifth.

Praises Sibelius

Mr. Downes also gave considerable attention to Sibelius, "the greatest symphonist after Brahms and the most brilliant, radiant light to have shown on music since the beginning of the nineteenth century."

He considers the Seventh Symphony, which will be on the program tomorrow evening, "perhaps the purest music Sibelius has written." The score is "one of the subtlest I know," he said.

146

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

BERKSHIRE STORM UNABLE TO WASH OUT TENT CONCERT

Dr. Koussevitzky Fights It Out with the Elements To Bitter End

Special to The Hartford Times

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Stockbridge, Mass.—Rain can wash out a baseball game, a railroad, or a war but not a symphony program.

The fourth concert of the Stockbridge Festival was played last night under the greatest conceivable handicaps. But it was played. Incidentally it proved Serge Koussevitzky was one of the most good-humored and long-suffering of artists.

Almost any other conductor of his sensitive temperament would have given up in despair of projecting music, which he and his men had spent a solid week rehearsing, under the unmerciful drumfire of a Berkshire storm upon the resonant canvas which partially sheltered some 5,000 persons.

The listeners were fairly patient, too. They had to be—they couldn't go home. In some ways they were just as trying as the storm, however. There was excitement, restlessness and anxiety which at times bordered on symptoms of suppressed hysteria.

As the Gentle Rain

Dr. Koussevitzky had no sooner taken the podium than a light rain began to patter. At the first trumpet tone in the Rienzi Overture, which began this all-Wagner program, the tattoo of rain increased and by the time the strings took their cue, it was impossible to hear them. Koussevitzky threw up his hands and the music stopped. When the pelting shower abated a bit he tried again—and again had to give it up. After a fifteen-minute wait he returned and this time succeeded in getting through the overture. He unleashed all his resources and gave the orchestra its head in this unfair battle with the elements.

He quit the stage, perturbed but not disheartened. Concertmaster Burgin followed him. Ten minutes later Burgin came back and announced that the program would be changed. For some curious reason the Waldweben was to follow. After two starts, Koussevitzky saw that it was no use. The pouring rain on the canvas became a steady rush, a roar, a deafening pedal-point of pitchless sound, against which no music in the world could stand up.

The tent was beginning to admit streams of water in the seams and the pole vents. Umbrellas went up in the audience. People in the boxes fared badly. Many of them were drenched. The shell itself leaked and the trombones began to ship water.

A Good Sport

Dr. Koussevitzky's face was a study. It was possible to see it as a mock-pathetic visage that he turned to the audience. He was a good sport about it. At the same time it couldn't be funny. Only those who knew that Koussevitzky has been talking Stockbridge Festival up and down the land for the past year, and who knew what store he set upon it, could realize that there was a heart-break in the situation too.

He gave them the Ride of the Valkyries and got through it to the finish. He tried to give them the Tannhauser Overture but it had to be abandoned after a half dozen bars. An intermission was announced at 10 o'clock. There was no order whatever to the program by this time anyway.

The heavens finally relented and at 10:20 Waldweben, the Parsifal Prelude and the Tristan Prelude and Love Death were played in that order, the wondrous strains of the last being accompanied by the drip from the wet pine branches.

It is impossible to consider the musical values of last night's performance apart from the storm. It was ever in the minds of everyone there, including the conductor and the orchestra. No one can say whether the music was good or bad. There was a lift and a curious spell to both the Parsifal and the Tristan music, showing that the musicians were able to rally impaired morale, but the audience was satisfied to leave at 11 o'clock after only perfunctory applause. Only the Siegfried Idyll had been omitted.

It would be easy to think that the Festival was hurt last night. But to stop there would be to discount the forces behind it. Managers, patrons and musicians are not to be discouraged. Ask any of them and they will tell you that the storm made a permanent auditorium for next year's festival a certainty.

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITSKY WINS BATTLE WITH STORM

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hou downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the "Overture to Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the "Overture to Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD

AUG 13 1937

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY MERGES VICTOR AGAIN

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from Siegfried, "was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of The Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the ten.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 13 1937

Conducts Orchestra in 2-Hour Downpour

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13. (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's All-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Koussevitsky eventually completed his program except for an interrupted number from "Siegfried."

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 13 1937

NEW RECORD WON BY KOUSSEVITSKY

Shirt-Sleeves Conductor Victor Over Rain Storm

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 12 1937

BERKSHIRES FESTIVAL RESUMES TONIGHT

All-Wagner Program to Be Given by Boston Symphony Orchestra

The symphonic festival in the Berkshires on the beautiful Tanglewood estate will be resumed this evening when Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will present an all-Wagner program. It will include the Overture to Rienzi, the Siegfried Idyl, and excerpts from Tristan and Isolde, Die Walkuere, Parsifal and Tannhauser.

This is colorful music in which the Boston orchestra may be depended upon to give a good account of itself. The program, it is understood, will be broadcast.

The concert on Saturday evening will include a Haydn Symphony, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius and the "Scheherezade" suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff. The festival will end on Sunday afternoon with a Brahms program including the third and first symphonies.

S. R. F.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY VICTOR IN FIGHT WITH STORM

Symphony Leader and Elements Stage Duel in Berkshires.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13.—(UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra rested on their laurels today, after besting the elements in a duel at last night's concert in the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Twice the orchestra was forced to halt, as rain booming on the huge tent sheltering the orchestra and audience drowned out the soft strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." The third time they carried the performance to completion.

A half-hour wait followed a noisy interruption of Wagner's "Forest Murmers" from Siegfried."

To officials backstage, Dr. Koussevitzky said he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m. That was not necessary, however, for shortly thereafter the storm subsided and the orchestra completed the program.

Dust is used in the manufacture of tar board in Germany.

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot

AUG 13 1937

Koussevitsky Is Victor Over 2-Hour Rain

Boston Conductor Finishes Program Despite Night Storm

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Koussevitsky eventually completed his program except for an interrupted number from "Siegfried."

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 13 1937

Rain Drowns Festival Music As Koussevitsky Battles Storm

Noise Of Elements Louder Than Symphony Crescendo, But Conductor Wins Out At Last

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 12—(AP)—A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitzky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Reinzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoo of rain booming against the tent roof completely drowned the music.

Tossing his face upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signalled the orchestra to halt. The audience applauded.

Aides quickly let down the sides of the marquee tent, and lights, usually confined to the stage during the concerts, were kept burning. The audience, showing a little timidity at first, quickly reassured itself that the tent was sturdy and dry and Koussevitzky resumed playing to prevent unrest in the largest audience of the two-week summer music festival.

Tonight's program opened the last of three concerts. Oppressive heat handicapped the orchestra last week, and on Sunday Koussevitzky and the players broke precedent by playing in shirt sleeves.

Twice Koussevitzky started the "Reinzi" overture only to stop short under the overwhelming drumming of the rain. A third time he started, and carried the performance to completion.

After a wait, he seized on a lull to start the second number, Wagner's "Forest Murmurs" from "Seigfried" but as the players began the soft, murmuring measures, the rain was only playing possum. Again the orchestra was overwhelmed by the roar on the tent roof. A wait of nearly half an hour followed.

Then two of the louder numbers were played from the second half of the overture to "Tannhauser," but the booming of the torrent resumed before the two mighty-toned pieces were over.

As defening applause broke out after the "Tannhauser" overture, Koussevitzky signalled the audience for silence, and announced a short intermission, after which the program would be continued if possible.

Praises Conductor.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president on the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in the lull paid tribute to Koussevitzky for "his splendid spirit in trying to continue the concert against terrible odds" and to the audience for "its patience and sportsmanship."

To officials backstage Koussevitzky declared if the audience would remain he would fight it out with the storm if it took till 4 a. m.

As the storm subsided, the orchestra completed the program except for the earlier, thrice-interrupted number from "Siegfried."

ERIE, PA.
DISPATCH-HERALD
AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITSKY

Weather or Not

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out a half dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

He was many times interrupted. When he called the second intermission and announced that he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience. Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program.

NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
AUG 13 1937

ORCHESTRA FIGHTS STORM

Boston Symphony Conductor Emerges Victor at Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's All-Wagner concert was held Thursday night, Koussevitsky announced that he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 A. M.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour, the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvass at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. Finally, the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

erkshire Evening Eagle

CITY EDITION

1:30 P. M. QUOTATIONS

PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 13, 1937.

24 PAGES— PRICE—THREE CENTS HOME DELIVERY 15c WEEK

147

COMMITEE FAVORS BLACK

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Wagner Shakes Fist at Wotan

Valkeries Ride Wildly As Koussevitzky Again Wins Fight With Storm

Downpour Compels Condu render—Musicians an To Aid of Symphony L

NATURE RAPS 13TH CONCERT OF FESTIVAL

Big Tent Bombarded On Eve of Friday, the 13th

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 13.—On the eve of Friday the 13th, nature finally caught up with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at its 13th concert last evening, bombarding the great tent with such elemental vindictiveness that five times the persevering Boston Symphony and its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, were forced to halt the program.

But despite the semi-cloudburst that roared down on the tent roof, despite running brooks in the gravel paths, slippery mud, rumbling thunder, flashes of lightning a broken water main and snapping harp strings, Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra gave a concert that brought a roaring ovation from the 4800 people who had braved the weather to attend.

Musicians Triumph

Throughout the deluge that brought delays, cancelled the NBC broadcast, forced the shifting of numbers and the omission of one the crowd equalled, in good-natured resignation to the elements, the sportsmanship of Dr. Koussevitzky and his one hundred musicians. And when finally, at 9.30, the rain stopped and the orchestra was able to play its first number through to completion, the applause gave the decision to the musicians in their battle with nature.

A heavy, cloud-ridden sky shot with intermittent lightning to the north greeted the crowd as it began to gather shortly after 8. Few were without umbrellas or raincoats, and the sartorial prevalence of white, which has formed the dominent color note for the earlier concerts, was conspicuously absent except in the boxes.

Water Main Bursts

Entrants via the main gate coming from Lenox got their first glimpse of water in large quantities near the auxiliary gate, where a water main burst shortly after 8, flooding the west side of the road. The water was shut off half an hour later.

The skies sent a mild warning as Dr. Koussevitzky came on the platform and raised his baton to start the overture to "Rienzi." There was a low rumble of thunder and a brief swish of rain on the tent. A few seconds later, the rain provided a crescendo of its own, and in the deafening roar Dr. Koussevitzky smilingly descended from the podium to the amused applause of the crowd.

The ushers sprang to the side flaps, the crowd on the outside benches grabbed coats, blankets and umbrellas and streamed in, and the tent was closed to the down pour. Umbrellas were opened in the tent as drops sneaked through seams. A lull in the storm brought Dr. Koussevitzky back to resume, but the [illegible]ain, apparently incensed at th[illegible] of dis- [illegible] under[illegible] stool apprehensively outside, finally button-holing Manager Judd to tell him that Miss Sergio was "running out of material." It was finally decided to cancel the broadcast.

As a result of the conference, Manager Judd went out on the platform and announced that the orchestra would change the order of the program in order to play those of Wagner's works which could more successfully compete with the elements. Appropriately, the Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure" was chosen as the first opponent for mother nature. This was completed with success and the orchestra turned to the overture to "Tannhauser." The storm made one last bid for victory, drowning out the opening and sending Dr. Koussevitzky glumly off the stage for the last time. Quiet returned again, and the rest of the program was completed with success. Because of the delays, the Siegfried Idyll was omitted.

Given Ovation

One of the most resounding ovations of the series was given the conductor and the orchestra at the end of the concert.

While the orchestra and audience were having their troubles inside the tent, the force of State Police and Legionnaires under Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre who were in charge of traffic, prepared with their customary efficiency for the problems they knew would arise when the crowd emerged from the tent to get their cars. Wreckers were called from Lenox and Stockbridge, and their presence was fortunate. More than a dozen cars were stuck in the slippery mud of some sections of the parking area. The volunteer Legionnaires did yeoman service, wading in mud to help push cars, going to the far corners of the area to bring them back for women.

President's Statement

The following statement was issued this morning by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival:

"We of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival take our hats off to Serge Koussevitzky for his determination to proceed with last night's concert in face of terrific odds. To the public too and to the orchestra we owe a debt of gratitude for their patience, their fine spirit and good nature.

"We have been going now for four years, three years with the insurance of a tent (which in many respects is no insurance at all). We are sure now the public will see eye to eye with us and appreciate the need for a structure to afford more protection against the elements. There is no question now, but that some kind of a structure is necessary at once if we want the Festival to continue. This structure must be provided by 1938.

"Words are inadequate to express again our deep appreciation to Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the public for the triumph of last evening."

Conductor Determined

During the conference backstage, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his determination to keep on going as long as the audience was willing to stay.

He said that he would fight it out with the storm "if it takes until four in the morning."

Several persons were taken ill as the result of the storm and the heat within the closed tent. A half dozen were treated in the emergency room of the main house. All recovered quickly.

The parking area problem was heightened for a while when two circuits in the huge space were blown out.

Wagner Program

So now came the Ride of the Valkyrie and the Tannhauser overture and after intermission the Waldweben which had to be stopped, the Prelude to Parsifal and to close the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde." For this was the program which was to be devoted to only the music of Richard Wagner. Three of the six concerts of the Festival consist of compositions of a single composer. The first concert last Thursday was all Beethoven, the final concert Sunday afternoon will be all Brahms and this one of last night was all Wagner.

It would be less than accurate to say that vagaries of the storm did not affect the interest of the audience. If the applause was the measure, the contrary might have been considered the result. Nor did the orchestra depart for an instant from the intense efforts it has displayed throughout the Festival to give of its best, which, incidentally, has been without exception, on a plane unmatched even by the famous orchestra itself.

It is hardly fair to call selections from Wagner's operas excerpts when played in a concert hall. They stand alone so well in that posture that they may more properly be called tone poems. Rules which apply to the general run of composers do not fit Wagner in any sense, and while one must denote the derivation of the Liebestod, for instance, as from the opera "Tristan and Isolde," its connotation as an operatic segment need not obtain.

Idyll Lost

The only loss from the original program was the Idyll; all the rest was played although in altered sequence. Koussevitzky chose the overture to Rienzi to start this concert, and the beginning of the last half of the Festival. This was the product of the very early part of Wagner's career. He had read the late translation of Bulver Lytton's novel and the way its hero defied baronial control and fought for representative people's government appealed to the independent nature of Wagner, just as Goethe's Egmont had awakened responsive chords in Beethoven.

Born only a scant few years after such immortals as Chopin, Schumann and Mendelssohn, Wagner so far eclipsed them in the scope of his music that it seems incredible that their lives were parallel. He thought in no terms of 'Songs Without Words' 'Children's Scenes,' or 'Nocturnes' for adoring ladies; he had to have weapons to achieve his purpose, might, force, passion and power. Even in this early Rienzi there is a spirit of challenge and invitation to combat which was not for terrestrial beings. And Wagner's special genius was his ability to set to paper what no other composer of any time has ever been able to transpose to the world of sound. The magnitude of the man's artistic stature can not be exaggerated. Whose music can move us like the Liebestod? No one makes his Wagner contrasts more violent than Koussevitzky, and the bursting passions and emotions of Wagner can not be expressed by any degree less than violence. Heine said "when words fail, there music begins," which applies specifically to Wagner.

Orchestra At Best

The orchestra's virtuosity shone

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 13 1937

RAIN "OBLIGATO" AT STOCKBRIDGE

Conductor Emerges Victor After Being Drowned Out Half a Dozen Times

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—AP — Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather — a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Reinzi," and his second, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries," and the overture to "Tanhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission.

(Continued on Page 3)

(Continued from Page 1)

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 13 1937

Downpour Fails to Rout Koussevitsky and Orchestra

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather — a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's All-Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

AUG 13 1937

CONDUCTOR VICTOR OVER ELEMENTS

Finally Completes Concert Between Flurries Of Storm

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(A.P.)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out a half dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a.m.

INTERMISSIONS CALLED

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced that he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITSKY WINS OVER DOWNPOUR

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m. He did, despite frequent interruptions by the rain.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 13 1937

The Berkshire symphonic festival will have a real home next year in a shed that will stand up against the rain. The effort of Serge Koussevitzky to outplay the rain last night could hardly have been more dramatic to those at Tanglewood than it was for the hour and a half over the radio during which the effort to broadcast the music was tried over and over again.

ORT, R. I.
EWS

13 1937

FIGHTS STORM

ny Conductor Emer-

Berkshire Festival

GE, Mass., Aug. 13
ssevitsky, conductor
ymphony Orchestra,
en in shirt sleeves
vercome the heat,
ctor today over an-
of the weather—a pour.
orchestra was f a dozen times by den rain against the Berkshire Festival's
cert was held Thurssevitsky announced
ght it out with the until 4 A. M. were necessary be-ky could finish the enzi," and his sec-
"Forest Murmurs" was thrice inter-
e conductor called to await the end of hour, the musicians y the "Ride of the
the overture to med drumming on the close of the and Koussevitsky termission. Finally,
ied and Koussevit-
s program except ed number from 147

Berkshire Evening Eagle
CITY EDITION
1:30 P. M. QUOTATIONS
PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 13, 1937.
24 PAGES— PRICE—THREE CENTS HOME DELIVERY 15c WEEK

COMMITEE FAVORS BLACK

* * *

Wagner Shakes Fist at Wotan

Valkeries Ride Wildly As Koussevitzky Again Wins Fight With Storm

Attorney General Tells Roosevelt He Has Right To Fill Supreme Court

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP).—A Senate judiciary subcommittee today overrode protests of Senator Warren R. Austin, R., Vt., and approved the nomination of Senator Hugo L. Black to the Supreme Court.

It acted only minutes after President Roosevelt told a press conference Attorney General Cummings had informed him that it was perfectly legal and constitutional to appoint Black of Alabama to the Supreme Court.

Rejects Austin's Move

The Judiciary Subcommittee of x members voted to report Black's omination favorably, after rejectng a move by Senator Austin

Continued on Second Page

Milk Price Goes Up Cent Here Monday

The price of milk in District 2-A, which consists of Pittsfield, Dalton and Lanesboro, will go up one cent Monday, it was announced today in Boston by the State Milk Control Board.

The producers' price will also advance from $3.25 per hundredweight, to $3.55. It will bring the consumer price per quart to 14 cents.

Two Critically Adams Swit

ADAMS, Aug. 13, (AP).—Two me ere critically injured today whe switch gear in a transforme ault of the Arnold Print Works xploded.

Joseph Ross, 55, head electrician

LIGHTNING
)F PEDESTRIAN

t Charge After Car Fatally on Wahconah Street, Near

e was traveling 25 miles an hou

Many Injuries

Jaffe suffered a fractured sku oncussion of the brain, internal inuries, fractured ribs, a compound racture of an arm and a fracured left leg. Dr. John Hughes ssociate medical examiner, viewe he body.

According to the report of Captain Hines the accident occurred near the entrance of Wahconah Park. Kelly was traveling northerly and Jaffe was crossing the street. The radiator of the Kelly car was pushed inward and an emblem knocked off. Kelly was placed uner arrest by Captain Hines and ductor To Stop, but Not Surand Festival Audience Come Leader in Successful Battle

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra had not played sixteen bars of the Rienzi overture last night when the heavens opened up and bombarded the canvas roof over the tremendous audience which had assembled for the fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox. The roar it created within the tent completely drowned out the tones coming from the stage and Koussevitzky waved his arms in submission. The strange part of it all was that there was next to no rain falling when the famous conductor made his initial appearance of the evening, and yet before he fairly got started, a downpour came which compelled him to stop.

Audience in Fine Humor

There was a good deal of goodnatured commotion which followed, as those outside the sheltering canvas hustled in to safety. Except for a very few seams the big top provided perfectly adequate protection. The deluge subsided quickly enough, and Dr. Koussevitzky thought the moment propitious to resume. This second time the trumpet did not get to its second call in the introduction of the famous overture when again the drumfire of the rain on the roof caused the cessation of all efforts. The orchestra and its leader took the situation with great good fun, and the waves of applause which emanated from the audience was a mixed expression of pity and happy sympathy.

Make Third Start

After another short period of waiting they started a third time, and although they achieved the end without any more stops, the relentless storm surged up severa times doing its best to put dow the insurgent orchestra but thi time it would not be downed.

Koussevitzky decided, after a quick conference during the entr'acte, that the fragile Siegfried Idyll would better be eschewed and something more substantial be attempted. So the Valdweben from "Siegfried" which as listed for performance after ntermission was here interjected. That is, the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, made that announcement, but the elements only permitted a few bars when it again rose in its majestic fury and smote the defenseless canvas. At this point there was a general disruption of proceedings; the audience visited friends in near-by seats, the men of the orchestra wandered to desks of others of the band, all in a jovial carnival spirit.

After a moderate wait George Judd, the Boston orchestra manager, came to the front of the tage and announced that, with a ew changes, the concert would oceed and so it did now without y further serious interruptions. st e applause accorded Koussevitzky as he reappeared with the mile which had never left his face uring the trials which might well ave elicited petulant reactions as in appreciation of what the lience was heard to call his od sportsmanship."

Wagner Program

So now came the Ride of the Valkyrie and the Tannhauser overture and after intermission the Waldweben which had to be stopped, the Prelude to Parsifal and to close the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde." For this was the program which was to be devoted to only the music of Richard Wagner. Three of the six concerts of the Festival consist of compositions of a single composer. The first concert last Thursday was all Beethoven, the final concert Sunday afternoon will be all Brahms and this one of last night was all Wagner.

It would be less than accurate to say that vagaries of the storm did not affect the interest of the audience. If the applause was the measure, the contrary might have been considered the result. Nor did the orchestra depart for an instant from the intense efforts it has displayed throughout the Festival to give of its best, which, incidentally, has been without exception, on a plane unmatched even by the famous orchestra itself.

It is hardly fair to call selections from Wagner's operas excerpts when played in a concert hall. They stand alone so well in that posture that they may more properly be called tone poems. Rules which apply to the general run of composers do not fit Wagner in any sense, and while one must denote the derivation of the Liebestod, for instance, as from the opera "Tristan and Isolde," its connotation as an operatic segment need not obtain.

Idyll Lost

The only loss from the original program was the Idyll; all the rest was played although in altered sequence. Koussevitzky chose the overture to Rienzi to start this concert, and the beginning of the last half of the Festival. This was the product of the very early part of Wagner's career. He had read the late translation of Bulver Lytton's novel and the way its hero defied baronial control and fought for representative people's government appealed to the independent nature of Wagner, just as Goethe's Egmont had awakened responsive chords in Beethoven.

Born only a scant few years after such immortals as Chopin, Schumann and Mendelssohn, Wagner so far eclipsed them in the scope of his music that it seems incredible that their lives were parallel. He thought in no terms of 'Songs Without Words' 'Children's Scenes,' or 'Nocturnes' for adoring ladies; he had to have weapons to achieve his purpose, might, force, passion and power. Even in this early Rienzi there is a spirit of challenge and invitation to combat which was not for terrestrial beings. And Wagner's special genius was his ability to set to paper what no other composer of any time has ever been able to transpose to the world of sound. The magnitude of the man's artistic stature can not be exaggerated. Whose music can move us like the Liebestod? No one makes his Wagner contrasts more violent than Koussevitzky, and the bursting passions and emotions of Wagner can not be expressed by any degree less than violence. Heine said "when words fail, there music begins," which applies specifically to Wagner.

Orchestra At Best

The orchestra's virtuosity shone throughout the evening. In innumerable instances the perfection of detail, notably in the Valkyrie Ride, reached a point to which orchestras rarely achieve. What a man so sensitive and aware of the fitness of things as Koussevitzky can elicit from such an assemblage of instrumentalists is the marvel of the modern orchestra.

In the familiar Tannhauser overture pure beauty of tone made the performance outstanding. The elements after intermission relinquished their attack entirely. There was no competing noise and the air was clearer and cooler. There was a miniature raid on the strings toward the close of the concert, and several "pops" came from one corner of the platform, as the harp, one of the double basses and one of the 'celli each in turn lost a string.

Stayed to the Last

Because of the frequent delays the concert did not end until later than intended, but everyone stayed to the close to enjoy to the full, all in all, certainly not the least sumptuous in the rich feasts the Festival up to now has provided.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 13 1937

RAIN "OBLIGATO"' AT STOCKBRIDGE

Conductor Emerges Victor After Being Drowned Out Half a Dozen Times

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—AP — Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather — a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Reinzi," and his second, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries." and the overture to "Tanhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission.

(Continued on Page 3)

(Continued from Page 1)

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 13 1937

Downpour Fails to Rout Koussevitsky and Orchestra

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's All-Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

AUG 13 1937

CONDUCTOR VICTOR OVER ELEMENTS

Finally Completes Concert Between Flurries Of Storm

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 —(A.P.)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out a half dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a.m.

INTERMISSIONS CALLED

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced that he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITSKY WINS OVER DOWNPOUR

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m. He did, despite frequent interruptions by the rain.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 13 1937

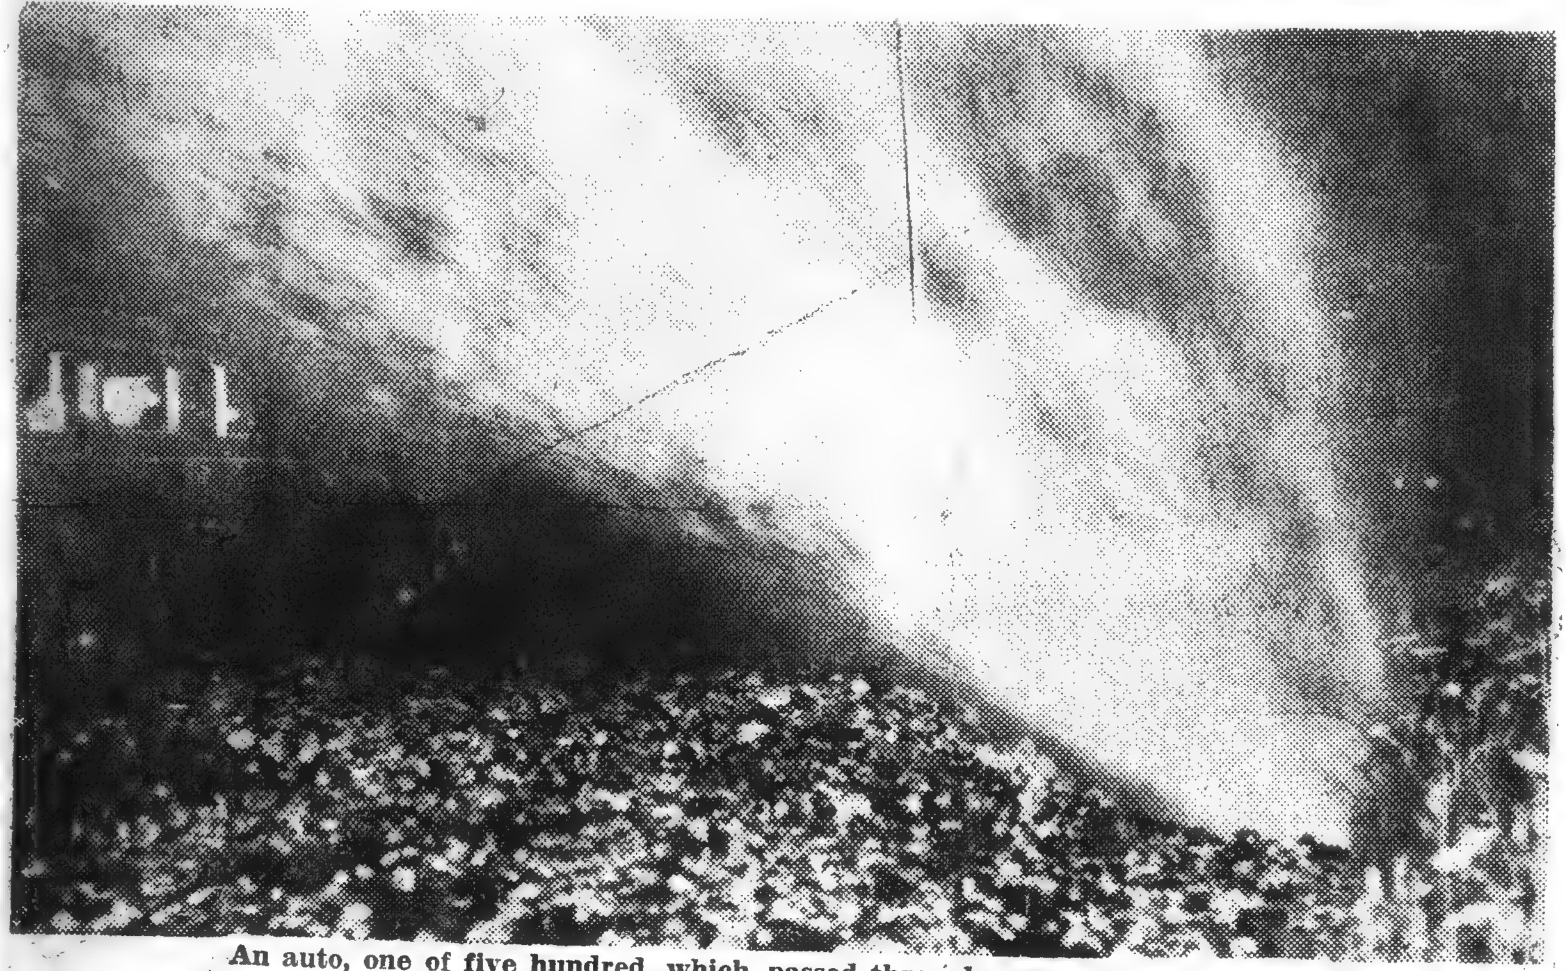
The Berkshire symphonic festival will have a real home next year in a shed that will stand up against the rain. The effort of Serge Koussevitzky to outplay the ~~rain~~ last night could hardly have been more dramatic to those at Tanglewood than it was for the hour and a half over the radio during which the effort to broadcast the music was tried over and over again.

148

She Liked It, Anyway

And her escort proved his regard by lugging her over a puddle.

Through Flood to the Concert



An auto, one of five hundred, which passed through geyser near entrance.

X:XZ-- K-L-? ! ! !

And you can imagine what this mired miss is saying.

Tenting Tonight

Many in the audience were double-tented when they raised umbrellas to keep off the spray.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 13 1937

Boston Symphony Persists Despite Rain

STOCKBRIDGE (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

BINGHAMTON N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 13 1937

Boston Maestro Wins Against Weather Again

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—(Associated Press) — Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his ~~men in shirt~~ sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out a half dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Mr. Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Mr. Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 13 1937

Stockbridg Concert Interrupted By Rain

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night. Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a.m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi", and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried", was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the pownpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 13 1937

○ ○ ○

DR. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra rested on their laurels today after besting the elements in a duel at last night's concert in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge. Twice the orchestra was forced to halt as rain booming on the huge tent sheltering the orchestra and audience drowned out the soft strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." The third time they carried the performance to completion. A half-hour wait followed a noisy interruption of Wagner's "Forest Murmers" from "Siegfried." To officials backstage, Dr. Koussevitzky said he would fight it out with the storm if it took till 4 A. M. That was not necessary, however, for shortly thereafter the storm subsided and the orchestra completed the program.

14

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 13 1937

Brilliant Assemblage Hears Concert From Festival Boxes

Gay Clad Subscribers and Their Guests Add Attractiveness to Tanglewood Scene, Amid Confusion of Interrupting Downpours—Many Boxholders Are From Outside Berkshire as Second Series Opens

Brilliant, despite the frequent interruptions of the Boston Symphony's all-Wagner program by a relentlessly noisy downpour of rain, was the scene that presented itself to concert-goers last night at Tanglewood.

Nearly 60 boxes, stretching across and along the sides of the great tent, were filled by the box-subscribers and their guests, in evening dress.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival president, of Glendale, had in her box Ted Shawn of Becket and William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge.

With Miss Mable Choate of Stockbridge in her box were Mis Mary Hayden and Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey Platt.

Miss Mary Parsons of Lenox had in her box Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield, Mrs. Fred King and Mrs. E. P. Morgan of Stockbridge.

Mrs. William Scott Pyle of Sharon, Conn., mother-in-law of Albert Spalding, the violinist, had in her box Mrs. E. H. Smithers, Mrs. Clinton Noyes of Sharon, Conn., Mrs. John Topping and Mrs. Carroll Post of Norfolk, Conn.

With Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox were Mrs. Hayden Canning and daughter, Miss Cathleen Channing, Mrs. J. F. Schenck, Miss Ilsa Schlegendal and Mrs. Joseph Lovering.

With Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts of Lenox were Otis Curtis and Mrs. Robert's daughter, Miss Elizabeth D. Lyle.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson had in their box Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Mrs. Frederic E. Cromwell, Mr. and Mrs. Cuthbert Lee and and Miss Patricia Johnson.

R. J. Flick of Lenox had as guests in his box Miss Katharine Gandy and Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease of Lenox.

Miss Ellen Bullard and Mrs. David T. Dana of Lenox had in their box Mr. and Mrs. John A. Brownell of Lenox, Miss Brownell and Mr. Dana.

In Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway's box were her daughter, Miss Ann Treadway of Stockbridge, Mrs. G. W. Spalding of New York City, Mrs. William Chase Mudgett of Southern Pines, N. C., Mr. and Mrs. Walter Baermann of Holyoke.

Guests of Mrs. Evelyn W. Adams of Colebrook, Conn., in her box at the Festival were Dr. and Mrs. William Mather Lewis of Lafayette College, Lafayette, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Phillips and Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Woodruff of New Rochelle, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Pearson, William A. Pearson of Great Barrington and Mrs. James J. O'Hara of Washington, D. C.

In the Norman H. Davis box were Mrs. Francis Sedgwick, Mrs. Goode Davis, Mrs. Norman P. Davis and Mrs. J. C. Potter.

Guests of Mrs. John Topping of Norfolk, Conn., were Mrs. Francis S. Smithers and Mrs. Carol J. Post.

Occupying another box were Mrs. Aubrey Barnes of North Egremont, Mrs. Waite Talcott of North Egremont, Mrs. John Roy, Mrs. Sarah Downing and Mrs. Paul Downing of Stockbridge.

Dr. and Mrs. Carol Perry of Ipswich were in another box.

With Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane in their box were Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Wiggin of Litchfield, Conn., and Miss Polly Wiggin, and Mrs. Alexander Simpson 3d of this city.

With Miss Dorothy Willard in her box were Mr. and Mrs. George Fitch, Richard Leach, and Alexander Kirkland, the actor.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Lippincott had as guests in their box Miss Maine, Mrs. Luke, Mrs. Van Dyke and Mrs. Treadway Beach.

With Mr. and Mrs. Butler Swann of Lenox in their box were Mr. and Mrs. J. Dwight Francis of Stockbridge and New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton O. Jones of Lenox had as guests Mrs. Eugene Wright of Norwalk, Conn., Mr. and Mrs. V. E. Goodwin and Otis Curtis.

Mr. and Mrs. James Lawson Karrick, Washington, D. C., and Stockbridge, had as guests in their box, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hill, Mrs. Henry L. Morris and Miss Margaret Downs.

In another box were Mrs. Frederic S. Gould of Santa Barbara, Cal., Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Belches of South Egremont, and Walter W. Hoffmann of the American Legation at San Salvador, Dominican Republic.

Miss A. M. Hegeman, Mrs. George Warren of Boston and Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Hazden occupied another box.

In Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister's box were Mrs. William Gosline, Mrs. Olive A. Colton and Miss Dorothy Sedgwick.

Mrs. Arthur D. Budd of Windsor had as guests in their box, Dr. Edith Meyer, professor of psychology at the University of Geneva, Switzerland; Mr. and Mrs. Elmer A. Euston and William Lindsay, St. Paul, Minn.

With Mrs. W. Henry Harrison in her box were Mrs. George Rockwood of New Lebanon, N. Y., and Mrs. Rockwood's daughter, Princess Diana Eristavi, and John P. S. Harrison.

Mr. and Mrs. John Bartol of Boston and Milton had as guests in their box, Mrs. W. L. Burrage of Brookline, Mrs. A. H. Sturgis of Milton, G. M. Bartol of Brookline.

In Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Dwight's box were Mrs. Bertha Dunn and her daughter, Miss Nancy Dunn and Mr. and Mrs. Dwight's daughter, Miss Carol Dwight, all of Stockbridge.

With Mr. and Mrs. Edward Thaw in their box were Mrs. William Prall, Miss Frances Sibley, Mrs. Buell Hollister of New Haven, Conn., and Miss Mary Rowan.

Professor and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown had as their box guests, Mrs. G. Lucas of Montreal, Can., Mrs. Brown's sister; Rev. Grant Noble, pastor of St. John's Church in Williamstown, and Mrs. Noble.

In another box were Mrs. C. W. Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. James Brosnahan, Mrs. Gordon B. Simpson, all of Boston.

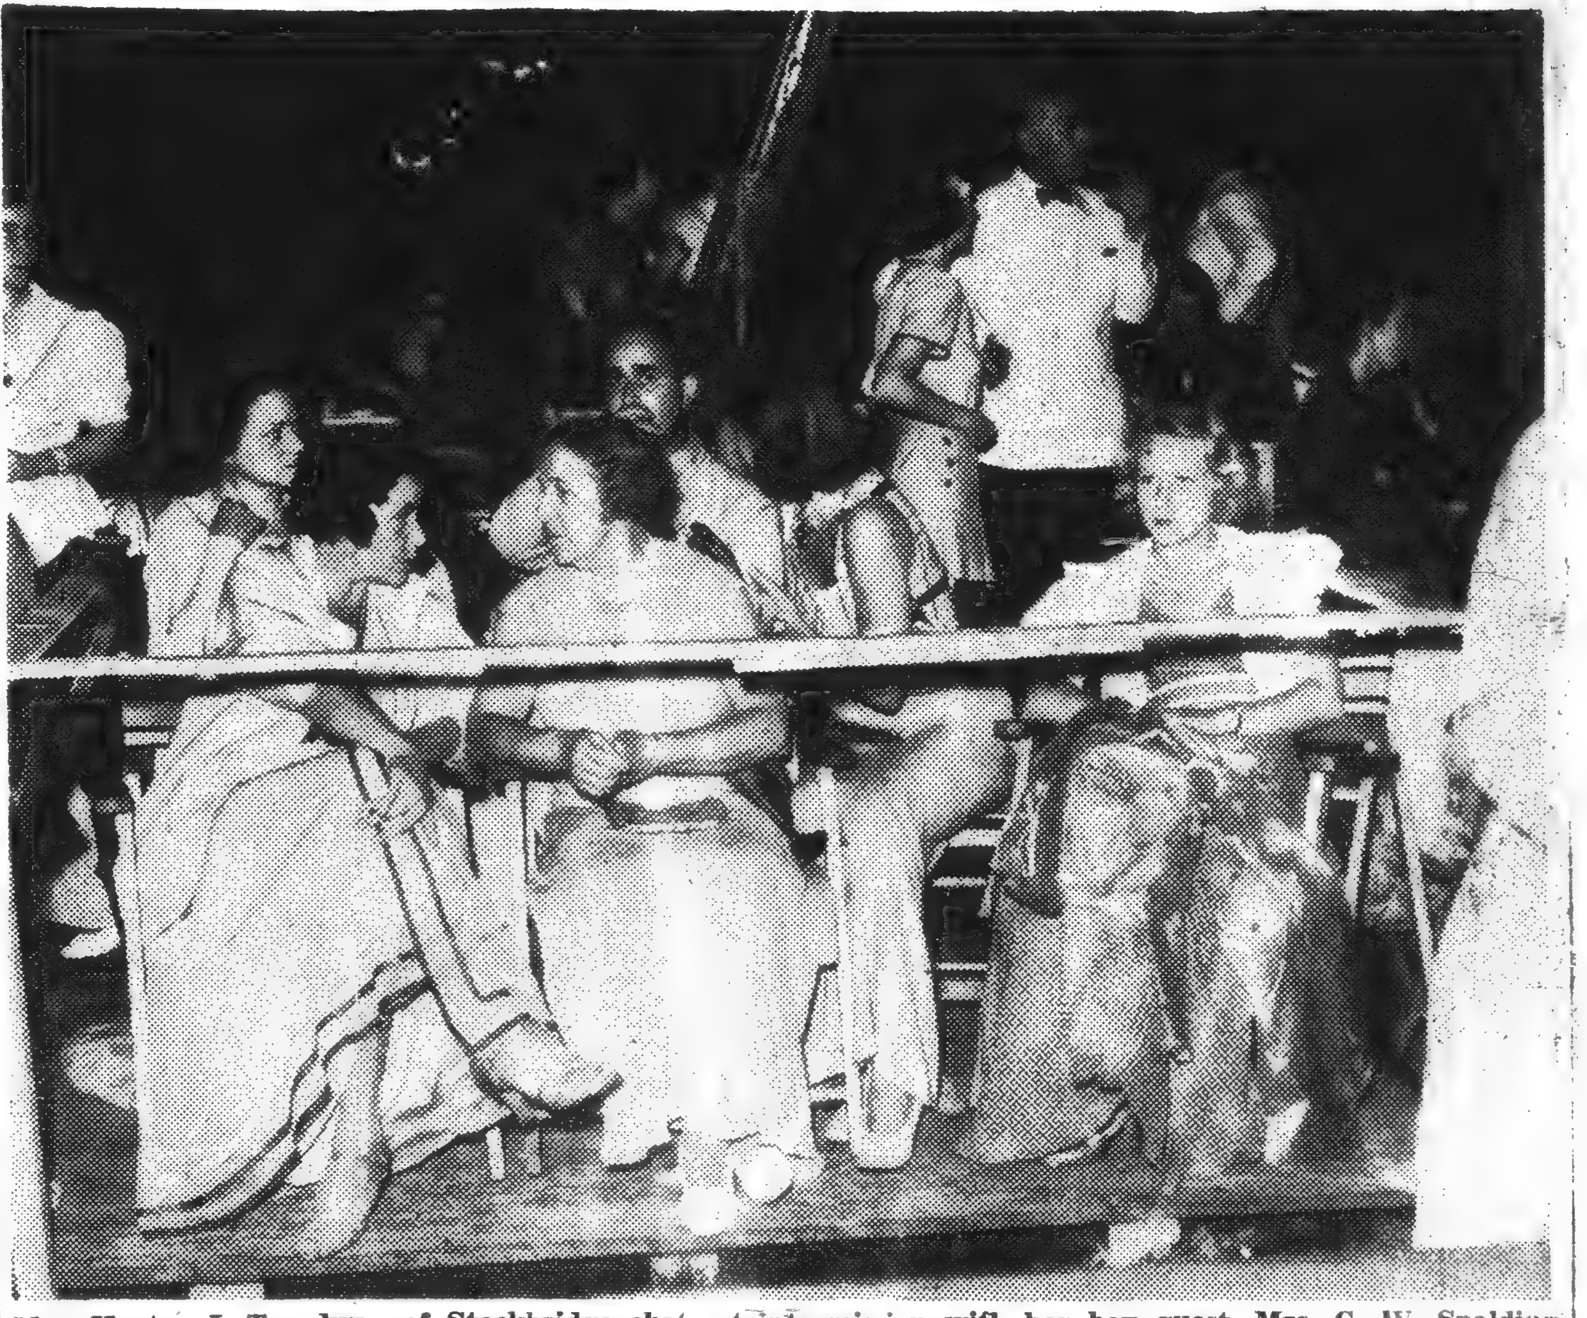
With Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Scoville Jr., of Taconic, were Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Feruski, also of Taconic, and Frederick Waring of Savannah, Ga.

In another box were Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. E. F. Jackson, Miss Louise Edie and Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed of Lenox.

A group from Jacob's Pillow, the Ted Shawn headquarters in West Becket, occupied another box. In the party were Miss Ferne Helscher, Mr. and Mrs. Chase Weckwerth, John Delmar, Horace Jones, Fred Hern, Harvie Coleman of New York and Joseph Mueller of Baltimore, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Robinson of Lenox had in their box, their daughters, the Misses Betty and Margaret Robinson, and Mrs. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge.

Waiting for the Rain To Stop



Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway of Stockbridge chats at intermission with her box guest, Mrs. G. W. Spalding of New York City. At the right is Miss Ann Treadway. Seated behind them are Mrs. William Chase Mudgett of Southern Pines, N. C., and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Baermann of Holyoke.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITSKY VICTOR OVER A 2-HOUR STORM

Orchestra Is Drowned Out By Rain at Times at Festival.

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rieni," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
AUG 13 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONQUERS RAIN

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festivals all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Koussevitsky eventually completed his program except for an interrupted number from "Siegfried."

WESTERLY, R. I.
SUN

AUG 13 1937

Rain Descends, Music Drowned at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Aug. 13 (AP)—A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitsky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoo of the rain booming against the tent roof completely drowned the music.

Tossing his face upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signalled the orchestra to halt. The audience applauded.

BARRE, VT.
TIMES

AUG 13 1937

MUSIC VS. WEATHER.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Triumphant Over Downpour.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (A.P.)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who led his men in shirtsleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Koussevitsky eventually completed his program except for an interrupted number from "Siegfried."

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

AUG 13 1937

Orchestra Competes With Thunderous Rain

STOCKBRIDGE —(AP)— A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire Symphonic festival last night, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitzky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo, which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoo of the rain booming against the tent roof completely drowned the music.

Tossing his face upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signaled the orchestra to a halt. The audience applauded.

Aids quickly let down the sides of the marquee tent, and lights, usually confined to the stage during the concerts, were kept burning. The audience, showing a little timidity at first, quickly reassured itself that the tent was sturdy and dry and Koussevitzky resumed playing to prevent unrest in the largest audience of the two-week summer music festival.

Last night's program opened the last of three concerts. Oppressive heat handicapped the orchestra last week, and on Sunday Koussevitzky and the players broke precedent by playing in shirt sleeves.

Twice Koussevitzky started the "Rienzi" overture, only to stop short under the overwhelming drumming of the rain. A third time he started and carried the performance to completion.

Many in the audience were [illegible] when they raised umbrellas to keep off the spray.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 13 1937

Koussevitzky Defies Storm As Rain Drowns Out Wagner

Boston Symphony Leader 'Fights It Out' With Berkshire Downpour While Audience Watches Classic Struggle and Raindrops Boom On Tent During Music Festival Concert at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Aug. 12—(AP)—A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitzky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo, which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoo of the rain booming against the tent roof completely drowned the music.

Tossing his face upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signaled the orchestra to a halt. The audience applauded.

Aids quickly let down the sides of the marquee tent, and lights, usually confined to the stage during the concerts, were kept burning. The audience, showing a little timidity at first, quickly reassured itself that the tent was sturdy and dry and Koussevitzky resumed playing to prevent unrest in the largest audience of the two-week summer music festival.

(Continued from First Page)

Tonight's program opened the last of three concerts. Oppressive heat handicapped the orchestra last week, and on Sunday Koussevitzky and the players broke precedent by playing in shirt sleeves.

Twice Koussevitzky started the "Rienzi" overture, only to stop short under the overwhelming drumming of the rain. A third time he started and carried the performance to completion.

After a wait, he seized on a lull to start the second number, Wagner's "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," but as the players began the soft, murmuring measures, the rain was only playing possum. Again the orchestra was overwhelmed by the roar on the tent roof. A wait of nearly half an hour followed.

Then two of the louder numbers were played from the second half of the all-Wagner program, "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser," but the booming of the torrent resumed before the two mighty-toned pieces were over.

As deafening applause broke out after the "Tannhauser" overture, Koussevitzky signaled the audience for silence, and announced a short intermission, after which the program would be continued if possible.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, in the lull paid tribute to Koussevitzky for "his splendid spirit in trying to continue the concert against terrible odds" and to the audience for "its patience and sportsmanship."

To officials back stage Koussevitzky declared if the audience would remain he would fight it out with the storm if it took till 4 a. m.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

AUG 13 1937

RAIN FORCES MUSIC TO STOP

Symphony Concert at Stockbridge Interrupted Several Times by Storm

Stockbridge, Aug. 13 (AP)—A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire Symphonic festival last night, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitsky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo, which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoo of the rain booming against the tent roof completely drowned the music.

Tossing his face upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signaled the orchestra to a halt. The audience applauded.

Aids quickly let down the sides of the marquee tent, and lights, usually confined to the stage during the concerts, were kept burning. The audience, showing a little timidity at first, quickly reassured itself that the tent was sturdy and dry and Koussevitsky resumed playing to prevent unrest in the largest audience of the two-week summer music festival.

Last night's program opened the last of three concerts. Oppressive heat handicapped the orchestra last week, and on Sunday Koussevitzky and the players broke precedent by playing in shirt sleeves.

Twice Koussevitzky started the "Rienzi" overture, only to stop short under the overwhelming drumming of the rain. A third time he started and carried the performance to completion.

After a wait, he seized on a lull to start the second number, Wagner's "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," but as the players began the soft murmuring peasures, the rain was only playing possum. Again the orchestra was overwhelmed by the roar on the tent roof. A wait of nearly half a hour followed.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 13 1937

ORCHESTRA BEAT OUT RAIN STORM

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13—(UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra rested on their laurels today after besting the elements in a duel at last night's concert in the Berkshire symphonic festival.

Twice the orchestra was forced to halt as rain booming on the huge tent sheltering the orchestra and audience drowned out the soft strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." The third time they carried the performance to completion.

A half-hour wait followed a noisy interruption of Wagner's "Forest Murmers" from "Siegrfried."

To officials backstage, Dr. Koussevitzky said he would fight it out with the storm if it took till 4 a. m. that was not necessary, however, for shortly thereafter the storm subsided and the orchestra completed the program.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 13 1937

Cloudburst Interrupts Festival at Tanglewood

Koussevitzky Has to Start 'Rienzi' Overture 4 Times

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—A cloudburst broke over Tanglewood tonight as the Boston Symphony Orchestra started the first strains of the "Rienzi" overture at 8:30 in an all-Wagnerian program. For more than an hour rain pelted the huge tent where more than 5.000 persons were gathered, the largest festival crowd so far this summer.

Four times Serge Koussevitzky started the overture. Each time the storm drowned out the instruments. He finally completed the number. The Siegfried Idyl and prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" were abandoned for the time being, and after several intermissions the orchestra finally got through the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser" before an intermission at 10. By that time the rain had let up, and the "Tristan and Isolde" and "Parsifal" numbers were played during the second half.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the symphonic festival, said: "We of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival take our hats off to Dr. Koussevitzky for his splendid spirit in trying to continue the concert tonight against terrible odds. To the public we owe a debt of gratitude for its patience and sportsmanship. It only goes to prove that we must raise additional funds and have a building complete in time for next year's concert."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 13 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL WELL ATTENDED ON FOURTH NIGHT

All-Wagner Program Is One of Most Popular of Concerts — Society Out in Force

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 12—All boxes and the entire blue ticket section were occupied tonight for the fourth Boston Symphony orchestra concert at Tanglewood. For society the all-Wagnerian program was one of the most popular of the entire festival.

Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson had as box guests, Mrs Johnson's son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs Goodhue Livingston, Jr., and Mr and Mrs Frederic Cromwell (Cornelia T. Livingston).

In Miss Mabel Choate's box were Mr and Mrs Geoffrey Platt and Miss Mary Putnam Hayden of New York, and Mr and Mrs Bernard J. Harrison, Jr., of Washington. They also are to be Miss Choate's guests at the concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., were accompanied in their box by Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook, United States navy, Mrs Cook; Mr and Mrs William W. Peake of Rye, and Miss Jean McClelland of Greenwich, Ct. They were the principal guests at a dinner given by Mr and Mrs Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Mr and Mrs Edward A. Taft of Boston are back at the Lenox club and had a box. Mr Taft is a director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Mrs E. Griswold Hollister who is at Curtis hotel, entertained in another box, her sister, Miss Olive S. Colton; Mrs S. Cornell Walbridge and Mrs William Gosline of Toledo, O.

With Mrs Henry Whitney Monroe were her son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs Philip Ainsworth Means, of Pomfret, Ct.

Mrs George Baty Blake of Pine Needles, Lenox, had as box guests Mr and Mrs William A. Burnham and Mr and Mrs Nelson S. Bartlett of Boston.

Mrs Georgette Winthrop of London has joined her sister, Mrs Clark Greenwood Voorhees, at Merrywood, Lenox, for the festival.

John Briggs Potter, former curator of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and Mrs Potter, have Mrs Roger S. Warner of Boston as a festival guest at Shady Lawn, Stockbridge.

Mr and Mrs Albert J. Kennedy of New York are with Mr and Mrs Edwin T. Rice on Prospect Hill, Stockbridge, for the weekend of music.

Mr and Mrs Willem Willeke and Mr and Mrs Charles H. Jones accompanied Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs in her box.

Joseph Bentonelli, tenor of the Metropolitan opera, and William Kohler, baritone, were with Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago.

The guests of Dr and Mrs Robert Metz in a box were Dr Edith Meyer of the University of Geneva, Switzerland, and Prof William Lindsay head of the department of music, University of Minnesota, for whom they entertained at dinner tonight at Fernbrook, Lenox.

Mr and Mrs William Ellery Sedgwick had as concert guests Miss Helen H. Howe, Mrs Maurice M. Osborne of Boston, and Mr and Mrs John J. Glessner of Manchester, North Shore.

Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, entertained at dinner tonight entrants to the Western New England women's tennis tournament which opened today.

Mrs James Lawson Karrick has Mrs Francis C. Dodd of Washington as a guest at Southmayd, Stockbridge.

Mrs William Marshall Bullitt went to Marblehead for a visit with Mr and Mrs Francis B. Crowninshield.

COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER

AUG 13 1937

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony, returning from a two months visit abroad, where he spent much time listening to new music, says: "Most of the crop of younger European composers are turning out consistently bad music. The composers simply have nothing to say." He says the jury which passes on this music has also degenerated. He thinks our American composers are better artists and have greater inspiration.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 13 1937

WAGNER PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD IS GREAT SUCCESS

Berkshire Storm Defeated by Boston Orchestra as Second Series of Festival Concerts Opens

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 12 — The Berkshire Symphonic festival suffered its first setback in its spirited contest ith the uncertainties of a New Eng- ind August when a heavy thunder-torm interferred with, but did not poil, the fine Wagner program by he Boston Symphony orchestra. Previously there had been narrow scapes, but tonight came a direct iit, and a heavy downpour came just is the audience was assembling. After several starts and interruptions lue to rain on the tent and on the oof of the shell which made the soft pening inaudible, the Rienzi overure was carried through to a briliant conclusion which defied the elements.

But by that time various leaks had developed, leading to abrupt shifts in some parts of the audience. It was plainly useless to go on with the soft "Siegfried Idyl," which came next, and the atmosphere was not right for the love death of Isolde, so it was sensibly decided to skip both of these and pass directly to the second part. Too much praise cannot be given to the self-control with which Dr Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave a spirited performance of "The Ride of the Valkyries" and the "Tannhauser" overture while waiting for the thunder to subside, and the drumming of the rain to dwindle. In these sonorous works the brazen voices of the orchestra could compete more fairly with the noise outside and the audience found the concert delightful as well as exciting.

Festival Plan Unusual

Circumstances have made the plan of the festival unusual in several ways. For one thing, it is spread out over two weekends—the weekend in each case beginning on Thursday evening, with Friday left blank and the Sunday concert put in the afternoon. Of the two triplets of concerts thus provided for, the Thursday evening program has been reserved for a single composer—Beethoven last week and Wagner tonight, while a third great composer is to be featured in the all-Brahms concert Sunday afternoon.

This plan need not be regarded as a precedent, but it has served very well, in default of interesting novelties, to give mass and significance to the classics upon which Dr Koussevitzky has fallen back as an alternative. Wagner's available range,

---

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

Music at Stockbridge Interrupted by Rain

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 12.—(AP.)—A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire symphonic festival tonight, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitzky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoon of the rain booming against the tent roof completely drowned the music.

Tossing his face upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signalled the orchestra to a halt. The audience applauded.

Aides quickly let down the sides of the marquee tent, and lights, usually confined to the stage during the concerts, were kept burning. The audience, showing a little timidity at first, quickly reassured itself that the tent was sturdy and dry and Koussevitzky resumed playing to prevent unrest in the largest audience of the two-week summer music festival.

Tonight's program opened the last of three concerts. Oppressive heat handicapped the orchestra last week. and on Sunday Koussevitzky and the players broke precedent by playing in shirt sleeves.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

Orchestra Leader Is Again Victorious In Weather Battle

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP).—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out a half dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner cncert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 A. M

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs," from Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

AUG 13 1937

KOUSSEVITSKY IS VICTORIOUS

Conducts Symphony As Rain Interrupts

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug 13. (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather — a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchstra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tatto of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's All-Wagner concert was hed last night. Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to "Rienzi," and his second number, "Forest Murmurs" from Siegfried," was thrice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half hour the musicians were able to play the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience, huddled beneath the uncertain protection of the tent.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from "Siegfried."

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 13 1937

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge entertained Thursday evening at the fourth Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Tanglewood, Lenox. They had as box guests, Mrs. Johnson's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Cromwell.

GREENW
NEWS-
AUG

UNDAUNT

Serge Koussevit
ed the Boston
last night at T in the all-Wag opened the sec
Berkshire Musi

Wagner
Heard I
In Ber

151

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

AUG 13 1937

UNDAUNTED BY RAIN

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the Boston Symphony concert last night at Tanglewood, Mass., in the all-Wagner program that opened the second half of the Berkshire Music Festival.

Wagner Program Heard Last Night In Berkshires

Rain Interferes With But Does Not Stop Performance

The largest audience to be present at the Berkshire Music Festival thus far, convened at 8:30 last night to hear the All-Wagner program, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Undaunted by the interference of the torrential downpour during the early part of the program, the concert went on as scheduled. Several minor changes were made in the order of the program, so that the loudest numbers such as the "Ride of the Valkyries," and the "Tannhaeuser" overture were played during the heaviest downpour, but the second half of the program went on as originally planned, for the rain ceased after the intermission.

The storm caused the cancellation of a nation-wide broadcast after the first composition, the "Rienzi" overture was played.

The second half of the program was devoted to the Waldweben from "Siegfried," the prelude to "Parsifal" and the prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde."

Parking arrangements for 2,500 cars were directed by High Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre and traffic was in charge of Lieutenant John P. Sullivan and Sergeant Warner E. Eaton, of the State Police headquarters at Northampton. Practically every State in the Union was represented in last night's audience.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 14 1937

Berkshire Festival Will End Tomorrow

The final program for the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockbridge tomorrow at 4:30 p. m. will be devoted to Brahms, the Boston Symphony offering the composer's Academic Festival Overture, Symphony No. 3 and Symphony No. 2.

Over the week-end, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, the festival's First Vice-President, entertained at luncheon for Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky. Among the guests were the festival's President, Gertrude Robinson Smith; Bentley W. Warren, President of the Boston Symphony, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes and Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson.

Several members of the orchestra have pitched their tents on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac. Tanglewood, the estate given to the orchestra as a permanent home for the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, extends to the shore. Mrs. Brooks, a Trustee of the festival, will be in attendance at the closing concert.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 13 1937

BERKSHIRE FETE MARRED BY RAIN

Broadcast of All-Wagner Program Is Abandoned.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—Richard Wagner, who of all composers most successfully portrayed the natural world, waged a three-hour battle last night with the veritable elements themselves at "Tanglewood," as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival entered its closing phases. Ultimately it was Wagner who triumphed, for the torrential downpour which caused repeated interruptions of the concert, one of a half-hour's duration, finally relented, and the program was pushed to its conclusion by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky with the Boston orchestra. Though two and a quarter hours had been allotted for the longest broadcast of a symphony concert in the history of the sponsoring company, it was decided to cancel the arrangements after the opening work had been attempted three times.

The combination of a brilliantly sunlit day and an all-Wagner program brought the largest audience of the festival to the huge tent, considerably more than five thousand persons being present. However, the clouds which had been gathering late in the afternoon chose the moment of the concert's beginning to drop their burden on the Berkshire hills, and Dr. Koussevitzky's efforts to make Rienzi's triumphant call heard above the clatter of the rain on the vast expanse of canvas were unavailing. He dropped his arms and took counsel with the musicians. Another start was made, but its duration was even briefer.

After an extended pause the overture was once more begun, and this time was carried to its conclusion—no doubt in consideration of the broadcast engineers fuming at their instruments. When further delays became inevitable the broadcast was terminated.

As the elements showed no disposition to defer to art, the management (after a half hour's consultation) wisely altered the order of the program, substituting the numerous decibels of the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the "Tannhaeuser" overture for the "Siegfried Idyl." With exemplary forbearance Dr. Koussevitzky led his men through intensely spirited performances of the works. They were rewarded with tumultuous applause from the listeners, who had cheerfully utilized the enforced interruption for social calls and conversation, their apprehensions about the storm lessened by the reassuringly tight waterproofing of the tent. After a brief intermission the concert was concluded with the "Waldweben," from "Siegfried"; the "Parsifal" prelude and the prelude and "Love Death," from "Tristan." By this time the rain had ceased, permitting perfect enjoyment of the orchestra's splendid performances. It was nearly 11 o'clock when the concert was concluded, even though the "Idyl" was omitted completely.

In a formal statement Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival committee, thanked the audience and the musicians for their remarkable good humor under the trying circumstances and acknowledged that a permanent building must be a part of any plans for the future. It is an open secret that Dr. Koussevitzky will not return otherwise. IRVING KOLODIN.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
JOURNAL

AUG [illegible] 1937

Musicians Will Attend Concert

Director and Mrs. Andre Polah and Harry Hammer, local violinist, will leave Saturday to attend the Sunday afternoon concert at the Berkshire symphonic festival in Stockbridge, Mass. The program, devoted to the works of Brahms, is the last event being given during the festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1937

BERKSHIRES HEAR ALL-WAGNER BILL

Second Half of the Symphonic Festival Is Opened With 'Rienzi' Overture

5,500 ATTEND PROGRAM

Koussevitzky Halts Orchestra When Thunderstorm Mutes Build Up for Crescendo

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—One of the gamest audiences in the annals of concert-going sat through a concert by an equally courageous orchestra and conductor at Tanglewood tonight as the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began under enormously trying circumstances. A storm of almost tropical intensity broke at the commencement of an all-Wagner program and for the next hour the concert was virtually a shambles.

The arrangement of the program was scrambled. There was a pause of about thirty minutes while orchestra and festival officials conferred. Louder works were placed on the first half of the list, and one—the delicate, reticent "Siegfried Idyl"—was omitted.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were determined not to let down the 5,500 persons who congregrated for this concert—the largest attendance at the festival thus far.

Broadcast Is Canceled

The storm caused the cancellation of a nation-wide broadcast after the first composition, the "Rienzi" overture, was played. A water main burst on the State highway between the village of Lenox and Tanglewood, washing away a small section of the road. Electric and telegraph connections were disrupted.

The festival's bad luck with the weather reached a culminating point tonight. Last week's three concerts were preceded by rain and lightning and thunderstorms.

The trumpet call with which the "Rienzi" overture opens sounded to signalize the beginning of the concert. Just as the 'cellos commenced their counter-theme a veritable deluge poured from the heavens. Mr. Koussevitzky looked up in dismay as the rain beat a tattoo on the canvas tent, blotting out the crescendo that the instruments were building. He caused his men to stop. There was a pause of several minutes for the rain to subside.

The overture began once more, a few bars were played and there was another stop as the rain and thunder and lightning achieved another sonorous climax. Mr. Koussevitzky's third try went through without pause and only Wagner's grandiloquently scored overture could compete on an even footing with the angry elements.

Concert Delayed Half Hour

The concert was held up for half an hour. Then George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, came forward to announce that the two loudest works on the program would be attempted; the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

"Then there will be an intermission," he said, "and we will decide whether it is worth going on."

Mr. Koussevitzky had argued months ago that a permanent structure of timber or brick and mortar was desirable. He had consented to conduct under a tent this year because it was not feasible to build permanently in a short time. Tonight's conditions were eloquent evidence that his point was well advised.

When the officials met backstage during the half-hour pause Mr. Koussevitzky made it clear that he would remain on the job as long as the audience was willing to stay. He observed that he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 A. M.

The skies began to clear and the rain ceased to fall at intermission time. The second half of the program was devoted to the Waldweben from "Siegfried," the prelude to "Parsifal" and the prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde."

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 14 1937

STORM ALMOST WON OVER CONCERT

The first concert in the second and last series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held at "Tanglewood," Stockbridge, Mass., Thursday evening before an audience of about 5,000 people, and for a time it was a struggle for supremacy between Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Richard Wagner on the one hand and the elements on the other. Directly after the first few bars of the Overture to "Rienzi" the heavens opened to their fullest, and so deafening was the roar of the rain on the huge tent that Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra called it a "temporary" day. After a slight lull in the storm, the orchestra again essayed the overture, and again the noise of the rain won out, and it was not until the third attempt that the overture was played in its entirety. The next number was also interrupted by the storm. The big tent was almost "seaworthy," although here and there it "shipped" a bit of water, and a few timorous souls raised their umbrellas. It was not until after a long intermission, during which several of the trustees of the organization were in hurried and worried conference, that the storm abated and the orchestra was able to go on with the program. The orchestra rose to heights in the sublime Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," in the glorious Overture to "Tannhauser" and in the Prelude to "Parsifal."

Among those from this vicinity in Thursday evening's audience were Mrs. Pauline Avery and Mrs. A. E. Avery of West Taghkanic, and George B. Savitsky of this city. James E. Leath of Kinderhook, had as guests in his box the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Mrs. Clark G. Rossman and Gerald S. Bliss of this city, Mr and Mrs John Bross Lloyd of Lee, Mass., former residents of Kinderhook, were present in their box, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, has as guest in her box Ted Shawn, the famous leader of the Ted Shawn Dancers of Jacob's Pillow, near Lee, Mass.

Tonight's program will include Symphony in G major by Haydn, Symphony No. 7 by Sibelius, and the Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" by Rimsky-Korsakov. The Festival, which has been an artistic and financial success, will conclude tomorrow afternoon with an all-Brahms program.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1937

BERKSHIRE CONCERT ATTRACTS PARTIES

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson Are Among Those Entertaining at Symphony Program

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 12.—Many Summer residents of the Berkshires entertained tonight at the fourth Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Tanglewood.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson had as box guests Mrs. Johnson's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Goodhue Livingston Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Cromwell. In Miss Mabel Choate's box were Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Platt and Miss Mary Putnam Hayden of New York and Mr. and Mrs. Bernard J. Harrison Jr. of Washington.

Others who entertained were Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y.; Mrs. Griswold Hollister, Mrs. Henry Whitney Monroe and Mrs. George Baty Lake of Pine Needles, Lenox.

Mrs. Georgette Winthrop of London has joined her sister, Mrs. Clark Greenwood Voorhees at Merrywood, Lenox, for the music festival.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Kennedy of New York are with Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Rice on Prospect Hill, Stockbridge, for the week-end.

Joseph Bentonelli, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, and William Kohler, baritone, were with Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago at the concert.

Among other hosts were Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz and Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick.

Mrs. Louis Lombard of Riverside, Conn., was honored with a luncheon at the Yellow Astor, Pittsfield, given by Mrs. William E. Cushing of Boston.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

RAIN MARS BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY PROGRAM

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 12—(AP) A sudden downpour of rain burst on the huge tent of the Berkshire symphonic festival tonight, forcing a temporary halt in the program just as Serge Koussevitzky had directed the orchestra in the soft opening strains of Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

As the leader was building one of his famous long crescendos, the rain started a stronger crescendo which raised to a climax so fast that the tattoo of the rain booming against the tent roof completely drown the music.

Loking upward to the source of the noise, Koussevitzky signalled the orchestra to a halt. The audience applauded.

Aides quickly let down the sides of the marquee tent, and lights, usually confined to the stage during the concerts, were kept burning. The audience, showing a little timidity at first, quickly reassured itself that the tent wa ssturdy and dry and Koussevitzky resumed playing to prevent unrest in the largest audience of the two-week summer music festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 14 1937

PASTORAL SETTING FOR CLASSICS OF MUSIC

Wide World Photo.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky in his shirt sleeves as he rehearses the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1937

Berkshires Festival Calls 30,000

The Brookses, Patrons of Event, At Last Concert

Special to the World-Telegram.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 14.—The fourth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will end tomorrow with total attendance for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of between 25,000 and 30,000. It has been by far the most successful musical event in the history of Berkshire County.

Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston, are to attend tomorrow's concert as guests of Ellen T. Bullard. The gift of Tanglewood to the orchestra and Berkshire Festival Assn. was made by Mrs. Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The much-admired murals in Tanglewood house were painted by Miss Tappan's sister, the late Mrs. Richard C. Dixey.

Mrs. Frederick H. Turner is chairman of the tea at the Wyantenuck Club this afternoon, assisted by Mrs. Donald Worthington, Mrs. Arthur C. Boyce, Mrs. Seaver B. Buck, Mrs. David McCandless, Mrs. Joseph C. Keber, Mrs. Peter J. Noonan, Mrs. B. Holly Rose, Jr.; Mrs. Lucius A. Wing and Mrs. G. Fred Yessler.

Lenox Kennel Show.

Entries are closing tonight for the annual show of the Lenox Kennel Club on the grounds of the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club next Saturday. Giraud Foster has succeeded Elizabeth L. Goodwin as president of the club. Kate Cary is honorary president; Mrs. Frederick S. Delafield, vice president; John Matthews and Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Spurr Morse, acting secretary and treasurer, respectively.

Miss Cary is giving a silver trophy for the best dog in the show. Other cups are being offered by Giraud Foster, Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Mr. and Mrs. Morse, Anna Remsen Alexandre and Elizabeth L. Goodwin.

Oglesbys Present Daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodson R. Oglesby are giving a debutante ball for their daughter, Kate Oglesby, at Blantyre, Lenox, next Saturday night, and it is expected to be one of the largest dances of the season in Berkshire.

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, of Rye, N. Y., are having as guests at Sky Farm, North Egremont, for this second series of music festival concerts, Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook and Mrs. Cook, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. William W. Peake, of Rye, and Jean McClelland, of Greenwich, Conn.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Kennedy, of New York, are with Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Rice on Prospect Hill, Stockbridge.

Mr. B. Lauriston Hardin, Jr., of Washington, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Edward Boltwood Hull, at Pittsfield.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 14 1937

Symphonic Series In Berkshire Hills Attended by 30,000

Mrs. John B. Hull Jr. Is Chairman of Costume Ball Tonight.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 14.—With the music festival at Tanglewood; the Western New England women's tennis tournament and ball tonight at Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington; the Pittsfield Country Club men's golf tournament and ball tonight; many dinners, luncheons and teas, the week end is one of the liveliest for mid-summer in many years. The festival closes with tomorrow's matinee in an all-Brahms program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. ~~Officers of~~ the Berkshire symphonic organization say the total attendance for the two series of six concerts will be about thirty thousand, which is greatly in excess of any other musical event ever held in New England.

Tonight's ball at Wyantenuck is to be a costume affair with prizes for the most beautiful and picturesque clothes. An attendance of more than three hundred from all the Southern Berkshire resort towns is expected. Mrs. John B. Hull Jr. is general chairman, and associated with her are Mrs. George C. Stanley, Mrs. Robert Latimer Redfield Jr., Mrs. George Church, the Misses Marion Gilbert and Margaret Maloney, Mrs. Denison D. Dana, Mrs. Annabelle Terrell, Mrs. Frederick H. Turner and Mrs. John H. Warren.

Mrs. Frederick H. Turner is chairman of the tournament tea this afternoon, and she is being assisted by Mrs. Donald Worthington, Mrs. David McCandless, Mrs. B. Holly Rose Jr., Mrs. Lucius A. Wing, Mrs. G. Fred Yessler, Mrs. Seaver B. Buck, Mrs. Arthur C. Boyce, Mrs. Joseph C. Keber and Mrs. Peter J. Noonan. The final matches in both singles and doubles will be played tomorrow.

Entrants to the golf tournament at Pittsfield were entertained at dinner last night by the Country Club and tonight comes the tournament dinner-dance, always one of Pittsfields leading summer events. James D. Colt 2d is general chairman.

Entries will close tonight for the annual dog show of the Lenox Kennel Club at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox, next Saturday. In other years 600 dogs of all varieties, shapes and sizes have passed before the judges. Miss Kate Cary is giving her usual silver trophy for the best dog in the show and in variety groups cup prizes are being offered as follows: Giraud Foster for the best sporting dog, Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana for the best non-sporting, Mrs. Carlos M. Heredia for the best hound, Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Spurr Morse for the best working dog, Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre, who is now abroad, for the best terrier; Miss Elizabeth L. Godwin for the best toy dog. Officers of the Kennel club, which was organized more than thirty years ago, are president, Giraud Foster; honorary president, Miss Kate Cary; vice-president, Mrs. Frederick S. Delafield; treasurer, Mrs. Dawin Spurr Morse; secretary, John Matthews; acting secretary, Darwin Spurr Morse. Harry L. Peters is chairman of the bench committee.

CONNEAUT, O.
NEWS HERALD

AUG 14 1937

Symphony Conductor Wins Victory Over Weatherman

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor yesterday over another clement of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Though his orchestra was drowned out a half-dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a. m.

Three starts were necessary before Koussevitsky could finish the overture to Rienzi and his second number, Forest Murmurs from Siegfried was twice interrupted before the conductor called an intermission to await the end of the downpour.

After a half-hour the musicians were able to play the Ride of the Valkyries and the overture to Tannhauser.

The rain resumed drumming on the canvas at the close of the latter number and Koussevitsky called another intermission. When he announced he still planned to continue if at all possible, deafening applause came from the audience.

Finally the storm subsided and Koussevitsky completed his program except for the interrupted number from Siegfried.

THE GAZETTE, MONTREAL, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1937.

18

NEWS OF STAGE, SCREEN A

A GREAT ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Occupies Unique Position in North America and in Modern Musical History — Personal Experience Narrated

By THOMAS ARCHER.

One of the most distinguished musical bodies, not only in North America but also in the world, is the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is conducting the concerts constituting the Berkshire Symphonic Festival being held at the moment in western Massachusetts. Two of these concerts, taking place tonight and tomorrow afternoon, will be reviewed in The Gazette during the coming week and will be followed by general remarks on the festival next Saturday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Henry Lee Higginson, a remarkable citizen of Boston who combined business acumen which brought him wealth with a knowledge of music gained as a student of the art in Vienna. Mr. Higginson was not only the founder of the orchestra and its principal financial supporter but also its guide until just before his death in 1919, and its successful protector during the early and critical stages of its career.

The orchestra early won recognition not only in America but also in Europe. According to Max Kalbeck, his friend and biographer, Brahms knew and cherished the work done by the Boston Symphony in furthering a greater knowledge of his music in America. All of Brahms's leading orchestral works were given by the orchestra within a few years after their composition. The Symphony in F major, No. 3, was indeed performed in Boston in less than a year after its premiere at Leipzig.

Many distinguished musicians have paid tribute to the greatness of the Boston Symphony. During his first tour of America in 1904, Richard Strauss was beside himself with enthusiasm at the playing of the orchestra. "Mr. Higginson, what a wonderful orchestra you have," he said to the founder. "How all this sounds and how it is studied! I wish I could have this orchestra in Europe and perform all the Beethoven Symphonies with it." It must be remembered that Strauss was not only the leading composer of the day but also one of the leading orchestral conductors.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is particularly noted for the catholicity of its programmes. It is doubtful if any orchestra in the world could match in this the list of programmes given in the volume of its history published in 1931 on the 50th anniversary of its foundation. This list shows that it has never bound itself to any extreme policy, that it has maintained a proper place for the classics but at the same time has avoided that endless repetition of old music which is the curse of the programmes of many symphony orchestras at the present time.

Such composers as Strauss, Sibelius, Debussy and Ravel are represented, not by an occasional performance of a few popular scores but by practically the whole of their orchestral output. The younger modern composers have all been given their place. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has introduced to America compositions by Bax, Bliss, De Falla, Milhaud, Szymanovski, Goossens, Prokofieff, Constant Lambert, Honegger, Ibert, Tcherepnin, Webern and others. It has given world premieres of works by European composers such as D'Indy, Honegger, Prokofieff, Hindemith, Respighi, Roussel and Tansman.

American composers have been consistently encouraged. There is scarcely one of reputation who has not been represented either by a premiere or an early performance. It is only necessary to mention the names of Chadwick, Converse, Copland, Eichheim, Gilbert, Griffes, Hadley, Hanson, Hill, Josten, Mason, Powell and Sessions as well as the naturalized Charles Martin Loeffler (a member of the orchestra) and Ernest Bloch.

The conductors of the orchestra have included some of the most illustrious names in modern music. The late Sir George Henschel was the first. The others were Gericke, Nikisch, Paur, Fiedler, Muck, Rabaud and Monteux. The present conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, has had the longest tenure of all. He is serving his 14th year with the orchestra. It is generally acknowledged that Dr. Koussevitzky has maintained the orchestra at the extraordinarily high pitch of virtuosity it enjoyed under the direction of Karl Muck.

The writer's most memorable contact with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was made some years ago when he called upon the late William Brennan, predecessor of George Judd, the present manager of the orchestra. At the end of the call Mr. Brennan asked me if I would like to hear the orchestra as he knew I was leaving Boston in a few hours. Naturally the answer was yes!

He conducted me through a small door in the corner of his office into the impressive auditorium of Symphony Hall. About six people were scattered about in the seats. On the platform was the orchestra in full strength rehearsing the Violin Concerto in D minor of Sibelius. Dr. Koussevitzky was directing at the podium. He was in his shirt sleeves. Beside him stood the soloist, the immaculate Jascha Heifetz.

I felt like King Ludwig II of Bavaria who had the privilege of commanding performances for himself alone by the then best orchestra in Germany.

Montrealers have had plenty of opportunity to surmise the supreme quality of the performances of the Boston Symphony by the frequent broadcasts which have been relayed locally, one of the present festival. It may be said, however, that no radio could possibly do full justice to the tonal virtues of this superb instrument.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Drawing Capacity Audiences

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the second half of the Berkshire Sympohnic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday night with an all-Wagner programme. There will be another concert tonight and the festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms programme. These last two concerts will be reviewed in The Gazette during the coming week.

The festival management expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, as well as the provinces of Canada and the countries of Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Congressman Allen T Treadway; Miriam Hopkins, film actress; Sidney Blumenthal, of New York; Adolf A. Berle, jr., city chamberlain of New York; Owen Johnson, the author; Alexander Kirkland, the actor; Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands who were present.

On Thursday at 11 a.m., Olin Downes, New York Times critic, resumed his lectures on music being played at the festival. Mr. Downes's lectures were given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

The programmes of the two concerts to be reviewed by The Gazette are announced as follows:

Saturday evening, August 14—Symphony in G major, No. 88 (Haydn); Symphony No. 7 (Sibelius); "Scheherazade" (Rimsky-Korsakov).

Sunday afternoon, August 15—"Academic Festival," Overture, Symphony No. 3 in F, Symphony No 1 in C minor (Brahms).

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, and visitors have to seek accommodation in private homes, in inns and in neighboring towns, such as Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

The success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is due to the cooperation of summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires and vicinity, striving on a volunteer basis to achieve an ideal. There is no profit motive.

In the programme of the festival is the notation: "Here a shrine is building."

The officers of the festival indicate the broad basis on which it is organized. Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York, a Stockbridge summer resident, is the president. The first vice-president is Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, of New York and Lenox. Norval H. Busey, jr., of New York and Lee, is second vice-president. The executive vice-president is Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield. The treasurer is Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, is secretary and chairman of the co-ordinating committee. All of the officers and a staff of 60 ushers, parking officials and many other workers are on a volunteer basis.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1937

FUNDS ARE SOUGHT FOR MUSIC SHED AT BERKSHIRE ESTATE

Festival Next Year to Open August 4—Gifts of $100,000 Needed to Finance Building

Stockbridge, Aug. 14—Plans for the 1938 Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood already have started. There will be six concerts, as this year, by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the tentative dates are August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The festival committee, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and several trustees of the orchestra, Bentley Wirt Warren, president, met this afternoon at Tanglewood house and discussed ways and means of raising $100,000, which it is believed will be required to finance a new and permanent music shed with seating capacity of 5000. It was agreed that such a structure should be completed, if possible, before the 1938 festival.

On the executive committee of the festival besides Miss Smith are Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, vice-president; George W. Edman, Robert K. Wheeler, Henry W. Dwight and Norval H. Busey, Jr.

The 5000 persons attending tonight's concert were handed a circular having on one side a questionaire asking if the patrons of the festival this year favor a permanent music shed, if they will subscribe to a building fund and will help in a building fund campaign. Patrons also are asked if they will sign up for a $150 box for all the concerts next year, or for three concerts at $75, or become sustaining members for six concerts at $10 or for three concerts at $5.

On the other side of the circular is a statement, signed by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, which reads as follows:—

"The gratitude everyone must feel toward the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, its great conductor, for the spiritual and musical moments experienced during the first half of this year's festival, is indeed difficult to express.

"To these feelings must be added those of admiration for the magnificent spirit shown by the conductor and the orchestra on Thursday evening, August 12, under most unusual weather conditions.

"As you know, it has been suggested that a permanent music shed be constructed with a stage, tuning and dressing rooms for the musicians at Tanglewood. Certainly no one can question the advisability of this suggestion. We all want these concerts, and of course we will all want to have a part in making them permanent.

"Funds for this development must be raised independently of the receipts derived from membership dues and the sale of tickets. All such receipts go entirely to the operating expenses of the festival."

PITTSFIEL
EAG
AU

Mr. Edman's been in d magazine

KOUSS
SYMP
TWO

Many Mer
Toda
Hom
Ticke
Stag

Serge Kou ton Symphon
final rehear
Tanglewood
last two con
Symphonic F night at 8.30
noon at 4.30
and patrons privilege of al and enj work of the chestra.

Fair W

With fair tonight and val manage to receive t
the concerts
fice, the Great Barri activity toda
tened to pu

Few

There are and those w lawn anywh
ed area. T
Club of Gr
all those wh
the gardens
the estate freshment supper.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1937

Festival Clerk Raises a Point

Mr. Edman's title of clerk of The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., is inadequate for his biggest job has been in directing publicity for the concert series, and doing it so effectively that 50 newspapers and magazines sent representatives to Tanglewood. This picture was taken in The Eagle office where Mr. Edman is County Editor.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 14 1937

Music Festival's Future Depends on $100,000 Fund

Permanent Structure Must be Erected if Concerts Are to be Continued in Future Years, Officials of Festival Organization and Boston Symphony Orchestra Agree—Thursday Evening Experience With Downpour Which Five Times Interrupted Program Leads to Firm Stand—Group Meets Tomorrow to Consider Next Steps—Festival President Calls for Nation-Wide Support of $100,000 Building Fund Campaign—Concerts Tonight and Tomorrow Round Out 1937 Series.

Between the closing concerts tonight and tomorrow the advisory board of the Berkshire Symphonic festival will meet to discuss far-reaching plans for the future. The vile weather that upset Thursday's program and hovered close to some of those which formed the first week's series of concerts has influenced the festival officials as well as those of the Boston Symphony orchestra to take a firm stand on the need of supplanting the enormous canvas that unexpectedly failed to provide adequate shelter, with a permanent structure.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, president of the festival corporation, declared yesterday that a permanent music shed is essential if the festival is to be perpetuated. She estimated that a minimum of $100,000 would have to be raised to finance a music shed of sufficient proportions to shelter an audience of 5,000. She voiced an appeal to the nation at large for co-operation in obtaining the funds.

A fund-raising campaign will be considered at a meeting of the advisory board which is to take place tomorrow afternoon. Just before the final concert at Tanglewood, Lenox. The members will gather at the home of Mrs. Carlos de Heredia of Lenox, first vice-president of the festival.

The board will also consider plans for the 1938 season. It is understood that there will again be six concerts spread over two week-ends with Serge Koussevitzky leading the famed Boston Symphony orchestra. Developments in the building fund campaign will probably have something to do with the extent and calibre of the program, however.

At the fifth and next-to-the-last concert at 8.30 o'clock this evening the orchestra will turn from Wagner to Haydn and Sibelius and Rimsky-Korsakov. Tomorrow's program, opening at 4.30 o'clock in the afternoon, will be devoted entirely to Brahms.

Officials of the festival again yesyesterday paid tribute to the courage and gallantry of Thursday's audience and the musicians. Dr. Koussevitzky was reported to have been touched by the quality of the listeners. He has never experienced such an audience before, it was said.

KOUSSEVITZKY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY READY FOR LAST TWO CONCERTS OF FESTIVAL

Many Members and Patrons at Tanglewood Rehearsal Today—Mrs. Brooks, Donor of Permanent Festival Home, To Be Present Tonight and Tomorrow—Ticket Offices Beehives of Activity as Music Lovers Stage Another Rush for Seats.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra held their final rehearsal this morning at Tanglewood in anticipation of the last two concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival scheduled tonight at 8.30 and tomorrow afternoon at 4.30. Sustaining members and patrons took advantage of the privilege of attending the rehearsal and enjoyed immensely the work of the maestro with the orchestra.

Fair Weather Tonight

With fair weather predicted for tonight and tomorrow, the Festival management was making plans to receive tremendous turnouts for the concerts. The Stockbridge office, the booths in Lenox and Great Barrington were beehives of activity today as music lovers hastened to purchase their tickets.

Few Good Seats Left

There are a few good seats left and those who wish may sit on the lawn anywhere within the enclosed area. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington invites all those who come early to enjoy the gardens and surroundings of the estate to patronize their refreshment stand for a pick-up supper.

Mrs. Brooks Coming

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, whose gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Tanglewood has made it possible to have a permanent home for the Festival, will attend the concerts tonight and tomorrow with Mr. Brooks and their three children.

Meeting This Afternoon

This afternoon, the executive committee of the Festival is meeting with a few members of the Boston Symphony Board to discuss plans for next year. It is likely an announcement will be made following the meeting.

Ward J. Gaston, superintendent of Tanglewood, has been busy since yesterday morning with a crew of men hauling gravel for the roads leading to the parking areas to eliminate all hazards developing from the heavy storm Thursday. Frank Ruesch and his gang of carpenters have gone over all their construction work, making minor repairs here and there. The entire concert area and the gardens have been given a final grooming.

The Festival management estimated today that the four concerts so far have been attended by about 18,000 and crowds of 5000 are expected tonight and tomorrow.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE
AUG 14 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Drawing Capacity Audiences

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday night with an all-Wagner programme. There will be another concert tonight and the festival will close Sunday with an all-Brahms programme. These last two concerts will be reviewed in The Gazette during the coming week.

The festival management expressed great pleasure at the tremendous crowds in attendance at the first three concerts. Almost every state in the Union, as well as the provinces of Canada and the countries of Europe were represented. Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large; Congressman Allen T. Treadway; Miriam Hopkins, film actress; Sidney Blumenthal, of New York; Adolf A. Berle, jr., city chamberlain of New York; Owen Johnson, the author; Alexander Kirkland, the actor; Albert Spalding, violinist, were a few of the thousands who were present.

On Thursday at 11 a.m., Olin Downes, New York Times critic, resumed his lectures on music being played at the festival. Mr. Downes's lectures were given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

The programmes of the two concerts to be reviewed by The Gazette are announced as follows:

Saturday evening, August 14—Symphony in G major, No. 88 (Haydn); Symphony No. 7 (Sibelius); "Scheherazade" (Rimsky-Korsakov).

Sunday afternoon, August 15—"Academic Festival," Overture, Symphony No. 3 in F, Symphony No 1 in C minor (Brahms).

The Berkshires are overflowing with music lovers. All hotels in Great Barrington, Lenox and Stockbridge are filled to capacity, and visitors have to seek accommodation in private homes, in inns and in neighboring towns, such as Pittsfield, Richmond, Dalton, Lee and West Stockbridge.

The success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is due to the co-operation of summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires and vicinity, striving on a volunteer basis to achieve an ideal. There is no profit motive.

In the programme of the festival is the notation: "Here a shrine is building."

The officers of the festival indicate the broad basis on which it is organized. Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York, a Stockbridge summer resident, is the president. The first vice-president is Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia, of New York and Lenox. Norval H. Busey, jr., of New York and Lee, is second vice-president. The executive vice-president is Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield. The treasurer is Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, is secretary and chairman of the co-ordinating committee. All of the officers and a staff of 60 ushers, parking officials and many other workers are on a volunteer basis.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 14 1937

Berkshire Festival Closing

The last two concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction tonight at 8:30 and tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass. Tonight's program consists of Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88; Sibelius's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade." Tomorrow's concert will be devoted to the Academic Festival Overture and third and first symphonies of Brahms.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
AUG 14 1937

Music Festival Closes Sunday

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox will have its closing concerts this evening and tomorrow afternoon. There has been a large attendance for all concerts. An all Wagner program was played by the Boston Symphony Thursday night, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Heavy downpours interrupted the prgoram several times. A Brahmas program will be played tomorrow afternoon. Hotels in the Berkshires will be filled to capacity over the week-end and there will be many large house parties.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1937

Ancient Registers Intrigue Visitors At Crawford Notch

SeveralPresidentsHaveSigned There; 8th Women's Golf Tourney This Week

Special to the Herald Tribune

CRAWFORD NOTCH, N. H., Aug. 14.—Guests at the Crawford House, which was built in 1859, show much interest in a file of ancient hotel registers displayed in a corner of the foyer. They look up registrations of noted persons of bygone days, including several Presidents, who in early days drove from the nearest railway station at Littleton on tally-hos drawn by six horses. The first hotel was built by the Crawford family at the gates of the notch 144 years ago, in 1793, and was known as Crawford Tavern.

Next week the eighth women's golf tournament, open to guests of the Crawford House, will be played here. The Jessie Ormiston Calhoun memorial trophy, a silver bowl, must be won thrice to become permanent property of a player. Several golfers who have won honors in past seasons have returned, including Mrs. Theodore W. Hodges, of Marblehead, Mass.

Plans for the annual horse show on Saturday, August 21, are going forward, and the younger colonists are spending more time in the saddle, practicing jumps at the riding ring.

A classical concert will be given by Boston Symphony Ensemble tomorrow, and a bridge party will be held Tuesday evening. Mr. Boaz Piller, who played in the Music Festival in the Berkshires, has returned here for the remainder of the season.

Young people of Crawford Notch have enjoyed diversified entertainment this week, including a horseback ride to the base of Mt. Washington for a brookside breakfast, hikes up Mts. Avalon and Willard, Elephant's Head and Echo; a hare and hounds race, a croquet tournament, badminton and ping-pong games, and a polo match on Mexican burros.

At the weekly putting party Mrs. Vivian Leftwich, of Hewlett, L. I. was awarded first prize, others going to Miss Adelaide Whitehall and Mrs. P. L. Schoenen, of New York; Miss Deedie Leftwich and Miss Ruby Jordan, of Wilmington, Del. Men's first prize went to Mr. Charles E. Roh jr., of Montclair, N.J., and others to Mr. William Parsons, of Ardmore, Pa.; Mr. George Smith, of Highland Park, N. J.; Major C. L. Rague, of Brooklyn; Mr. P. L. Schoenen, of New York, and Mr. W. B. Odenatt, of Philadelphia.

Among visitors here are Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Brady, Dr. and Mrs. Edward Hanger, Mr. C. P. Brady and Mr. R. F. Hougen, of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis.; Col. M. M. Brodie and Mrs. Brodie, Windsor, Conn.; Mrs. W. A. Jordan and Miss Ruby Mae Jordan, Wilmington, Del.; Mr. and Mrs. Harvey M. Merker and Miss Majorie Merker, Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Ringe, Philadelphia; Mrs. Lester E. Wright and Lester E. Wright jr., Glen Ridge, N. J.; Miss Rose Laubenheimer and Mr. W. W. Laubenheimer, Bayonne, N. J.; Mrs. Alden Reed and Miss Reed, Worcester, Mass.; Mrs. S. M. Morse and Miss Natalie A. Bender, Watervliet, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Feeney, Tuckahoe, N. Y.

154

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1937

BERKSHIRE MUSINGS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

THE fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will close this afternoon at 4:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Brahms program consisting of the Academic Festival Overture and the third and first symphonies in the vast tent on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass.

When Dr. Koussevitzky takes his final bows after the ultimate triumphant C major chords of Brahms's first symphony, the festival's board of trustees should have every reason to believe that the 1937 series has fully realized their expectations in regard to public interest and artistic standards. In spite of weather which, if it might have been much worse, could also have been better, the opening Beethoven program of August 5 had an audience of 4,300 persons, and the concerts of August 7 and 8 had attendances of about 5,000 each. Last Thursday's concert, which was interrupted more than once by the rival music of heavy thunderstorms, drew 5,500 persons, and, if there are no threats of rain this afternoon, it is quite likely that the closing concert will have a still larger audience.

The orchestra, in the first three concerts, fully realized the high standards of performance which mark its work in the regular winter season. Acoustic conditions under canvas, which are sometimes debatable, proved unexpectedly good in this instance, and one slight acoustic drawback, an occasional impression of somewhat excessive prominence for the music of the brass choir, seemed to have been eliminated after the first two concerts. This was undoubtedly due to observations and experiments made by Dr. Koussevitzky and his colleagues during the daily rehearsals.

* * *

Rapid Progress

CONSIDERING the shortness of its history thus far, the Berkshire Festival has advanced and expanded rapidly since its inception in the summer of 1934. The engagement of the Boston Symphony, one of the foremost orchestras of the country, under its regular conductor last summer was an important forward step; another was the acquisition of a permanent home, when Mrs. Gorham Brooks, representing the third generation of the owners of Tanglewood, turned it over to the Boston Symphony for this festival. The number of concerts was doubled for 1937, and the patronage and interest have shown that six performances was anything but excessive.

While next summer is some distance ahead, some theorizing may be pardonable on the prospects and directions for the further development of this institution and on what may be further contributed by it toward the enrichment of music in this country. The first three seasons have shown that the Berkshires are a region well suited for festival activities, geographically and also on account of the strong musical tradition already bred there by the chamber music series developed under the sponsorship of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. The Tanglewood estate provides an exceptionally ingratiating scenic investiture for the concerts, and is more readily accessible than the previous sites, especially from the viewpoint of public transportation and pedestrianism.

* * *

The Proposed Building

THE next step is the planning and construction of a building, and Eliel Saarinen, an architect of much experience in designing public edifices, has already inspected the grounds under festival conditions, and probably has already conferred with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and the other festival trustees about the most advantageous site and the type and size of building which is most likely best to serve both the festival's present scope and purposes and possibilities for expansion.

A building is undoubtedly necessary, even although the tent and orchestra shell used this summer proved unexpectedly satisfactory, and one cogent reason for having it ready by next summer was demonstrated last Thursday, when the drumming of copious rain on the tent and sound of thunder competed sometimes all too successfully with Wagner's music. But yet it may be better to study the festival's present and future demands thoroughly, even at the cost of some delay, rather than to risk the chance that the future building might prove unsuitable in some respect or limit further development.

* * *

Keeping Present Advantages

Outdoor music has two major drawbacks, one imposed by the familiar vagaries of our outdoor summer weather and the other by acoustic conditions, but it has certain charms of its own which were preserved to a considerable extent in the concerts of the past week and a half in their semi-outdoor locale. The pleasure of being more or less outdoors and in the country was especially apparent during the performance of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony on the first evening; there seemed to be a particular association and sympathy between Beethoven's ever fresh, vernal music and the surroundings amid which it was played, as well as a detachment from the oppressive sense of the passage of time which we city dwellers cannot always shake off even in the concert hall; a feeling that the symphony was not long, but rather leisurely, and the outdoor and rural atmosphere contributed to an especially appreciative mood on the part of its hearers.

The value of preserving this atmosphere, rather than to attempt to duplicate an urban concert hall or opera house, apart from the necessity of accommodating large audiences, impressed several observers at this summer's festival, who thought that its sacrifice beyond an absolutely necessary point would cause a loss both in the individuality and appeal of the festival. And this well may be. It has been suggested that a hall or theater of a type resembling the theater at Ravinia Park, near Chicago, long a home of opera and now of symphony concerts, which is open at the sides and back, might prove advisable, especially if it could be equipped with movable partitions to meet the possibility of bad weather. Opera is unlikely for a while, at least in view of the fact that the Boston Symphony has never been associated with this form of musical art, but, if the proposed building should not be equipped for operatic services at first, it might be well so to construct it that an adequate stage could be added at some future time; adequate, at least, for less scenically exacting works.

* * *

Expansion of Repertoire

It would hardly seem extravagant to foresee an increase in the number of concerts during the next two or three years, say to twelve or fifteen performances spread over a month, but in this event it might be well to co-ordinate the schedule with those of the various chamber music groups in the Berkshires and adjoining regions to avoid, so far as possible, conflicts of dates. An expansion of the schedule would probably imply an expansion of the repertoire. Dr. Koussevitzky limited himself this summer to familiar works of the standard orchestral repertoire, apart from one relatively new American work, Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta. It proved to be a happy choice, but there should be room for more home-grown and other familiar works of a similar standard tactfully distributed throughout the programs, without the risk of alienating the festival's present or future patrons. The addition of large or small choral works, both classic cantatas and oratorios or significant modern compositions, might well be harmonious with the Berkshire Festival's conditions, standards and policy, and, in the possibility of the organization and training of a regional festival chorus, could increase the interest and value of the festival from a neighborhood point of view.

All this, however, is doubtless receiving, or about to receive mature and carefully consideration by the festival trustees, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony's management, who are probably primarily concerned with the development of the festival along the lines best suited to its individuality and conditions, without bothering about the unessential question whether or not it can or should be called an American Salzburg or Bayreuth. This is not to deny that both meet musical needs which are still unprovided for on this side of the Atlantic, but that is a question which must await some future Sunday.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1937

Salzburg—American Plan

By Irving Kolodin

FRESH from a week in the Berkshires, the citybound music critic is apt to find his mind a confusion of mountains and music, with the mountains easily having the more prominent place. This year's concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival were given in the unparalleled surroundings of the "Tanglewood" estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, in the heart of the Berkshire Hills, which has now become the permanent home of the festival through the generous gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston.

Though only half the scheduled concerts have been completed as these lines are written, the course of the festival has been clearly enough defined for the total accomplishment to be appraisable. To the pleasant surprise of many persons who heard last year's concerts under virtually identical conditions, the level of performance has been measurably improved, to a point which closely approximates the norm of the orchestra's Winter standard. And that, of course, means an auditory pleasure offered by no other band in the world, regardless of the several excellencies of a half-dozen others.

For those who are acquainted with Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the concerts comprised a series of familiar triumphs. Such matters as Koussevitzky's treatment of Beethoven's "Leonore No. 3" overture, the second of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" suites, the Tschaikowsky Fourth, and Stravinsky's "L'Oiseau de Feu" are imbedded in the walls of the Academy no less than they are in Boston's Symphony Hall or New York's Carnegie. If last Sunday's performance of the Stravinsky suite was not as overwhelming as some of the past by Koussevitzky, there was the compensation of an unexpected-beautiful treatment of Beethoven's "Pastoral" and a rendering of the "Leonore No. 3" that tightened every fiber in its well-worn structure, caressed its lovely shape with heart-warming tenderness.

Having said this much, however (and I would be the last to deny that performances of this superb quality are not "much"), there is little more to be said about the musical values of this festival. There is no chronicle of worthy new works to be set down (the surprisingly substantial Sinfonietta by Edward Burlinghame Hill of Harvard had been widely played by the Bostonians before), no tales of stunning new experiences to be recounted, no history of pleasures unprecedented. It is true that one of the principal aims of the Festival's dominating personality, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith—a desire to bring fine music to the permanent residents of the district, who have no opportunity to hear actual concerts during the Winter—has been realized. But she would agree that the expenses cannot be met by local patronage alone.

Whether more sophisticated patrons will continue to come indefinitely, in the required numbers, for performances of the standard repertory as good or even better than those of this year may be an interesting speculation, but it must also be remembered that this is an enterprise with pretentions to artistic uniqueness. A few score more performances of the Beethoven Fifth or the Brahms First, however fine, is hardly sufficient raison d'etre for the vast effort involved in giving these concerts for the construction of a permanent building on an expensive estate donated to the "cause." Only the history of lost opportunities in America will be augmented if this remains the sole accomplishment of the Berkshire Festival.

Whatever the facilities for symphony concerts, the permanent pavilion (for which plans are shortly to be drawn by Eliel Saarinen of Bloomfield Hills, Mich.) should certainly contain the stage and orchestra pit suitable for the artistic presentation of opera. Palpably this is the phase of musical activity in America which most urgently demands the corrective that a festival could administer. To be sure, this will have to be achieved by degrees, for neither the funds nor the physical resources are at hand for a spectacular ascent to excellence in this direction. However there is comfort in the thought that neither elaborate scenic equipment nor world-famous singers are necessary for the works which clamor most strenuously to be heard—the operas of Mozart that are virtually unknown to the present generation, save by short-wave broadcast from abroad or on phonograph discs. Without going so far as Salzburg, one may instance the Glynbourne performances of Mozart (in England) as ample proof that directorial skill and an ensemble based on a fine orchestra are infinitely more important in these works than big names. And these resources, it is hardly necessary to point out, are precisely the ones which the sponsors of the Berkshire Festival have at arm's length.

There has been much intelligence displayed in the management of the festival to date, and there is the further bulwark of a unique person in Miss Gertrude Smith, who has made this enterprise her particular concern. It was her pleasure to declare several years ago, when the movement first gained impetus, "It's high time that America had its own Salzburg." Lacking an American Mozart, this may be a hope somewhat too optimistic, but certainly ther is no bar to doing a needed and wholly feasible thing—performing, with taste and devotion, the works which have given the town on the Salzach its particular distinction.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

AUG 16 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CLOSES

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays Music of Brahms

The music of Brahms, played superbly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under ~~the direction of~~ Serge Koussevitzky, brought to a close the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., yesterday afternoon.

A mellow, cloudless day, enveloping Tanglewood in a blend of green, blue and other sunlit hues, was the setting for the final concert of the series of six. An audience estimated at over 5,000 turned out to bid the orchestra and its conductor au revoir, responding to the stately periods of the "Academic Festival" overture and the glowing personal Third symphony and sublimity of the First symphony with tumultous approval.

The record for the festival is a total attendance of about 30,000. The dates set for next years's concerts are Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Plans are being made to raise a subscription fund to erect a permanent shed for the concerts to be held. The Festival looks to the future with high hopes and broad purpose.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1937

5,000 Hear 5th Concert Of Berkshire Festival

Total of 28,000 Is Expected; Was 18,000 Last Year

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—For the first time since the 1937 Berkshire Festival started on August 5, perfect weather with a slight tinge of autumn in the air greeted 5,000 persons who attended the fifth concert tonight at Tanglewood. Festival officials estimated tonight the total attendance, including the matinee tomorrow, will have been around 28,000, compared with 18,000 a year ago, at the three concerts on Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate.

The festival executive committee met this afternoon at the Stockbridge summer home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, to confer with trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, inc~~luding~~ Bentley Wirt Warren, president, and it was agreed to start a campaign at once to raise money for a permanent music shed. Miss Smith has said $100,000 will be required. It is proposed to have six concerts on two successive week ends next year, starting August 4.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, selected for his program tonight the Haydn Symphony in G minor, No. 88; Sibelius's Symphony No. 7 and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherzade."

155

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 15 1937

BERKSHIRES CLOSE MUSIC FETE TODAY

All-Brahms Program to End Festival as Ideal Weather at Last Arrives

LARGE SATURDAY AUDIENCE

Move Under Way to Raise Sum for Building of Music Shed Before Next Season

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—The fourth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, which has had more need thus far for weather reporting than music reviewing, enjoyed its first taste this season of a perfect day and evening for tonight's concert. There was a lively demand for tickets throughout the Berkshire communities all day, and the audience was the largest of the series.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented tonight a program that had attractions for the experienced concertgoer, the neophyte and student of music. It began with Haydn's Joyous Symphony in G, No. 88 (B and H No. 13). Then came the last of Sibelius's published Seven Symphonies, the Seventh, in which the Finnish master concentrated into one movement a considerable aspect of his genius in maturity. The second half was devoted to the perennially popular "Scheherazade" by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Festival Closes Today

The festival will end tomorrow afternoon with an all Brahms program consisting of the "Academic Festival" overture and the third and first symphonies.

The statement yesterday by officials that the festival could not be continued unless an appropriate permanent music shed were built by next Summer met with general approval among visitors and residents who have been attending the concerts. Executives of the Berkshire Festival, Inc., and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra met today to canvass the possibilities of raising a minimum fund of $100,000 as well as to make plans for next year's concerts.

By tomorrow there will probably be a definite decision as to how the drive will be managed. There was no doubt today, however, that a campaign would be undertaken. In tonight's program book circulars were enclosed stating the need for a permanent music shed and asking for cooperation. There was also an invitation to the audience to become patrons or sustaining members of the festival.

This morning's rehearsal of the orchestra was thrown open to boxholders, patrons and members, and several hundred availed themselves of the opportunity to watch a major orchestra prepare for a concert under the direction of an internationally famous conductor.

Estate Open to Visitors

Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate which has been given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., as a permanent site for the concerts, has not been closed at any time during the festival weeks. Persons who arrived during the day to look over the grounds and to appreciate the view have been permitted to sit through rehearsals.

Besides the raising of a building fund, the festival authorities must face another job for next season; the knitting together of all cultural activities in the Berkshires during festival weeks. These must be scheduled so that there will be no overlapping of important events and so that visitors will have the maximum variety.

Among the ventures that should be woven into the festival fabric are the Sunday afternoon chamber music concerts that are presented on South Mountain through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

In additi[redacted]music, the theatre and the dance are available. The Stockbridge Playhouse operates during the Summer and Ted Shawn and his male ensemble [redacted]n presenting Friday afternoon exhibitions at Jacob's Pillow in West Becket and formal recitals on Saturday afternoons at the Stockbridge Playhouse. As the festival grows in scope additional events will join the programs.

One of the most delightful side attractions was an old fashioned square dance at the Lenox Town Hall last night, with prizes for the best dancers. The music and calling of the dances were provided by rustic experts. The two prize-winning couples were from New York City.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 14 1937

BERKSHIRES SEEK HOME FOR MUSIC

Fete to Be Abandoned Unless a Permanent Building Is Provided, Officials Say

COST IS PUT AT $100,000

Appeal for Funds Is Made After Storm Upsets Symphony Performance in Tent

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which completes its fourth season with concerts tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, will have to be abandoned unless funds can be raised for the building of a permanent structure for the audience, it was learned today.

Last night's torrential downpour, accompanied by lightning and thunder, which made listening to an all-Wagner program a hazardous adventure rather than an uncomplicated pleasure, caused the officials of the festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take a firm stand about the need of replacing the enormous canvas tent under which the concerts are being played.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., declared today that a permanent music shed was essential if the festival was to carry on in the future. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, said that a new structure was the "sine qua non" for his continued participation in this annual event.

Structure to Cost $100,000

Miss Smith estimated that a minimum of $100,000 would have to be raised for an edifice sufficiently large to provide shelter for an audience of 5,000 persons. She appealed to the nation at large for cooperation in obtaining the money.

"We are building at Tanglewood," she said, "a festival that is national in scope, and we hope that it will become international in influence and attractiveness. The festival has its base in the Berkshires, but it is already clear tha persons from every part of the United States and Canada are making these concerts the hub of their Summer plans. It is also clear that we have brought the great masterpieces of music, performed by one of America's outstanding orchestras and conductors, to a new audience in this part of the country.

"We are not interested in developing a festival that will be confined to the fortunate few who have music available in the Winter in New York, Boston or other major centers. We wish to bring the unifying and healing powers of music to those who cannot hear it otherwise."

The general lines along which the building will be constructed, if the money is forthcoming, have already been laid down. The festival authorities wish, above all else, to preserve the natural charm and beauty of Tanglewood. They contemplate an enormous shed open at the sides, as is the tent now in use.

Curtains to Protect Sides

In bad weather there will be curtains at the sides that will function like Venetian blinds, making the enclosure watertight. It is proposed to build a double roof with a space of a foot or more between each layer to provide a shock absorber against the beat of rain. Modern insulating and resonating devices will be installed.

Miss Smith emphasized the fact that the authorities hope that the festival will burgeon slowly but steadily. They wish to build a permanent music shed in such a way that it will be susceptible to later enlargement. The plans for the stage would have a similar elasticity, so that it would be equipped for opera when the time was ripe for the addition of lyric works to the festival repertoire.

The manner in which a campaign for funds will be conducted will be discussed at a meeting of the advisory board at the home here of Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, first vice president of the festival, on Sunday afternoon before the final concert. At that time arrangements for next season will also be considered.

It was foreshadowed that next year's festival will consist of six concerts spread over two long weekends, like this year's programs, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Koussevitzky as the principal performers. But a decision on the extent and caliber of the programs will await developments on the campaign for a building fund.

Tribute Paid to Audience

If the festival's vile luck with the weather this season is at an end and the remaining two concerts are blessed by fair skies, the audiences are expected to be large enough to allow the balancing of this season's budget.

The festival officials took the opportunity today again to pay their tribute to the courage and gallantry of the audience and musicians last night. The heavens seemed to be rent asunder. There were leaks in the roof of the tent. The rain swirled in from the sides. Expensive gowns and headpieces were ruined. One dignified lady took off her cerise shoes and her stockings and strolled across a muddy field in her bare feet.

First aid was required for several women who suffered from nervous shock. But most of the audience behaved with cheerfulness and considerateness. Mr. Koussevitzky was evidently touched by the quality of these listeners. He had never experienced such an audience before. The audience, indeed, was a more exciting part of the show than the music.

Only the works of a titan like Richard Wagner were able to stand up against the pounding of the wrathful heavens. Even his music had to be started again and again before a work could be traversed triumphantly. Perhaps the most galvanizing performance of the evening was "The Ride of the Valkyries." No stage director had ever lavished such a setting on this wild music. The storm was at its height, and the fury of the wind and the skies that Wagner poured into the music was matched by nature.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
AUG 16 1937

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL COMPLETED

Boston Orchestra Plays to Largest Audience During Closing Program in Tent

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP)—The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season. Some have, for that matter.

The nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
AUG 16 1937

SYMPHONY DIRECTORS SEEK BUILDING FUND

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15. (UP)—Directors of the Berkshire Symphony Festivals, Inc., and the Boston Symphony Orchestra today [redacted] to promote a nationwide campaign for $100,000 to erect an auditorium at historic Tanglewood here. The proposed building would replace the huge tent now used to shelter an audience of 5,000 and the orchestra at the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Concerts during this, the fourth season, have been twice interrupted by torrential downpours and electrical storms. The concluding concert was presented this afternoon.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 16 1937

REHEARSING IN A STALL: Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians practicing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a stable on the Stockbridge, Mass., estate given to the orchestra and Festival as a permanent home by Mrs. Gordon Brooks. The performances were held in a huge tent on the grounds.

OTTAWA, CAN.
EVENING JOURNAL
AUG 17 1937

REHEARSING IN A STALL: Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians practicing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a stable on the Stockbridge, Mass., estate given to the orchestra and Festival as a permanent home by Mrs. Gordon Brooks. The performances were held in a huge tent on the grounds.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 16 1937

Plan Permanent Home for the Berkshire Festival

(By The Associated Press)

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., Aug. 16—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded, the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

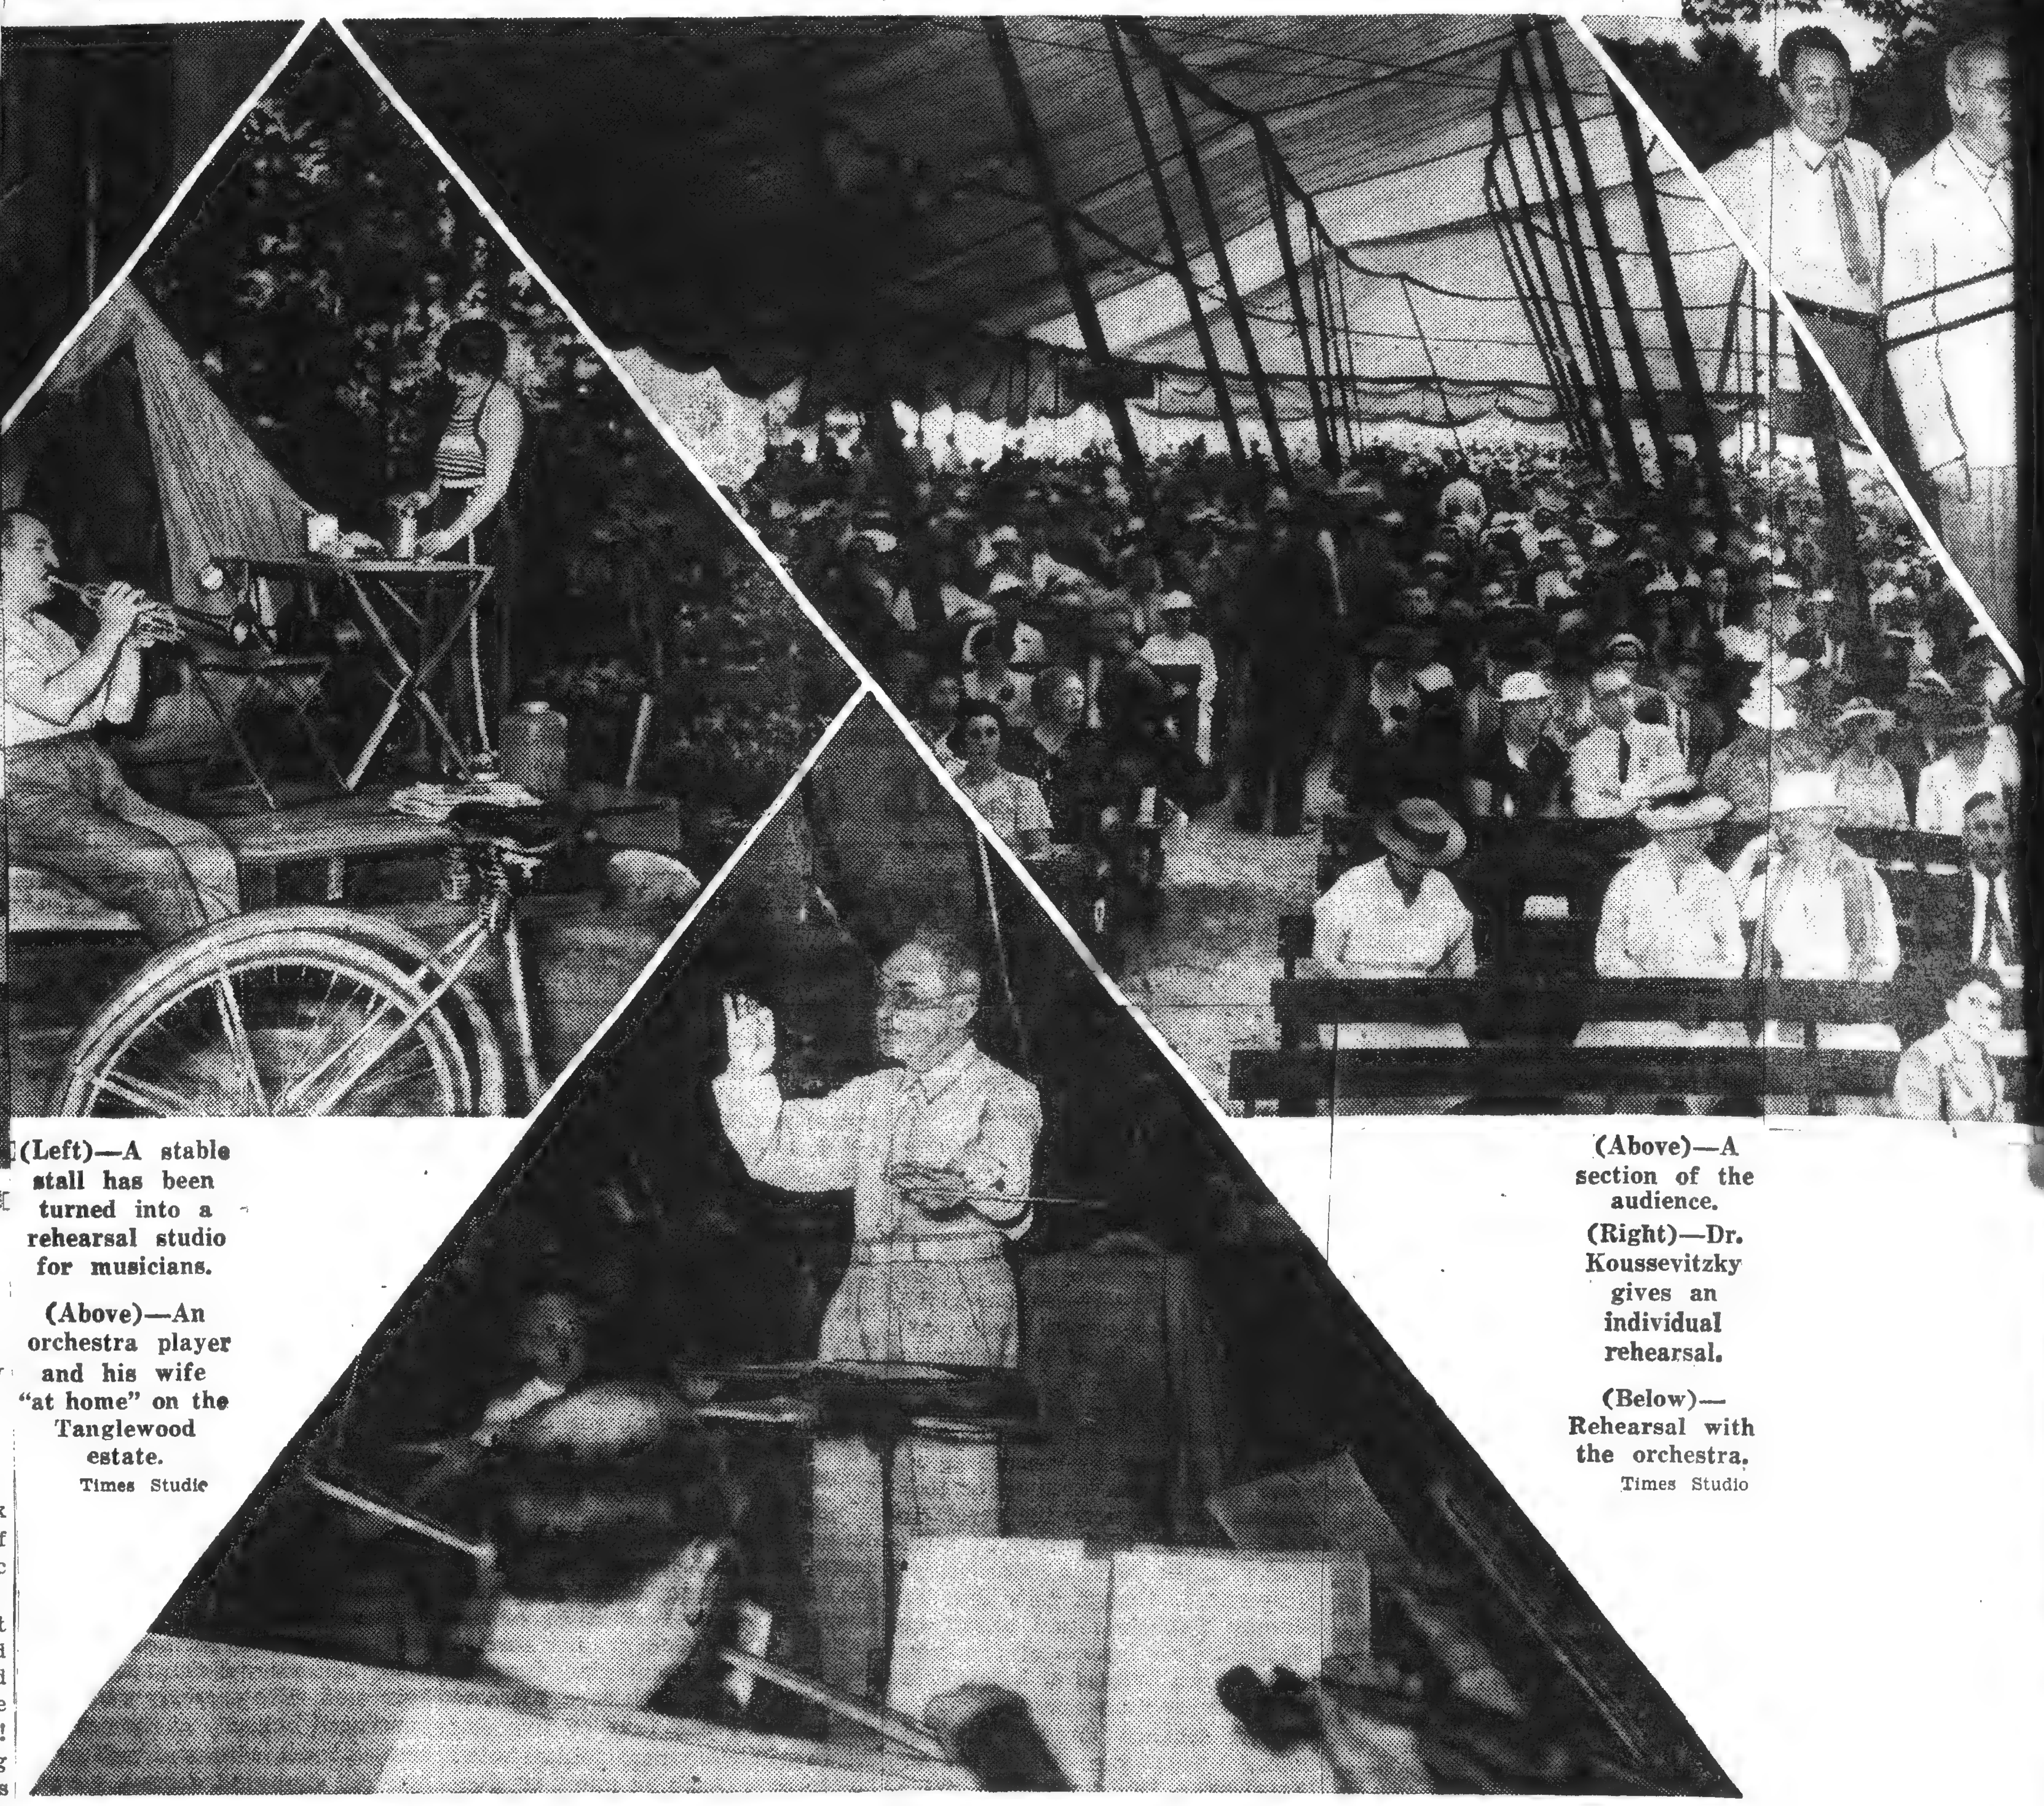
The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,00 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first steps had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000

MUSIC OF THE TIMES: NEWS AND CURRENT COMMENT

SCENES FROM THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL



(Left)—A stable stall has been turned into a rehearsal studio for musicians.

(Above)—An orchestra player and his wife "at home" on the Tanglewood estate.

Times Studio

(Above)—A section of the audience.

(Right)—Dr. Koussevitzky gives an individual rehearsal.

(Below)—Rehearsal with the orchestra.

Times Studio

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Tonal Quality of Orchestra Improved by New Acoustical Devices This Season

By OLIN DOWNES

THE second Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be give by Dr. Serge Koussevitzk and the Boston Symphon Orchestra, and the first to be he in the glorious new home bestow upon orchestra and festival by M Gordon Brooks, comes to an e today. The performances this ye have been a very conspicuous a vance in tonal quality over those last season, and more representative than ever before of the celebrated orchestra and its distinguished leader.

The reason for this is not an improvement in the performance themselves, which last year, as this were of the same finish and eloquence which make the visits Dr. Koussevitzky and his men suc outstanding events of the New Yor Winter season. The change is du to the greatly improved acoustic arrangements. This has occurr in spite of the fact that the orchestra has not yet the building which, whatever form it takes, is indispensable to the complete artistic effect of the concerts. This year, as on previous occasions, the men played under a great tent. But a new shell in which the players are seated has been devised in a way that has had a marked effect upon the success of the concerts.

* * *

The shell is modeled closely after the shape of the stage of Symphony Hall in Boston. It is not loosely connected with the tent, as last season, but is covered by one end of the great cloth. The sound is therefore projected without very much wastage, and the result is astonishingly good. Prevailingly the tone has the roundness and vibrancy which, it had been feared, it was impossible to obtain except in an enclosed auditorium. Last season a very fine orchestra was to be heard in a way that made allowance for special conditions necessary. But at every performance of the first week save one, when a particularly damp atmosphere affected the instruments, only more than they are affected by wet weather in New York concert halls, the sensation was that of symphonic interpretations that sounded very nearly as they sound in the Winter time, so that the audiences gathered from most of the States of the Union for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1937 heard superb sound as well as interpretations of special authority and nobility from Dr. Koussevitzky.

This would apply with exceptional force to the opening concert of the festival. It was devoted, advisedly, to familiar compositions of Beethoven. It is platitudinous to say that these compositions — the Third "Leonore" overture, the Sixth and Fifth symphonies—do not pall. They have much more than that neutral excellence. They stupendously grow, perhaps as the listener grows with each decade of experience, perhaps as the greatest conductors grow, as they must, being great themselves and consorting, in the world of tone, with supreme greatness. Beethoven grew upon all of us who listened on that opening night. He grew in our perception of the sublime heroism and pathos of his art, and he grew because of the towering nobility and simplicity of the Koussevitzky interpretations.

* * *

The Fifth symphony, the most familiar masterpiece in the whole orchestral literature, has nevertheless its many and difficult problems of interpretation. One of them is the grand simplicity and depth of the slow movement, which today can so easily be made by second-rate presentation to sound as a series of rather old-fashioned platitudes. Another is the finale, so simple one could well say, so splendidly common in the motives, which are like fanfares, and the harmonic scheme, which is almost elementary, that it can come as an anticlimax after the scherzo, which is one of the most original and dramatic pages in all music.

As for the Pastoral symphony, it was Owen Johnson who remarked that after such a performance, and in such surroundings, it could be called the "Berkshire symphony"! And it is a fact more astounding than some might think that this score did not sound trivial, ridiculous, imitative or miniature in the midst of fields and trees. In the midst of fields and trees is a perilous setting for a creative musician. One asks one's self whether even Wagner, so elemental in the opera house, sounds big when put actually by the side of mountains. Do we not remain in the presence of even that colossus distinctly aware that one of the conventions of art is its artificiality? Not so with the "Pastoral" symphony, of which the magic was wrought with true and profound understanding. Beethoven's spirit brooded over the orchestra as over surrounding nature.

* * *

A highly suggestive observation, and one well supported by the evidence, was made by a distinguished musician present: that Koussevitzky's Beethoven towers always higher and more tremendous, while his Tchaikovsky tends a trifle in the direction of a refinement which may not be wholly in the music. The Tchaikovsky Fourth symphony was the item under discussion. It was interpreted with the eloquence of a virtuoso leader, a Russian by birth, and with the attachment that most conductors and music-lovers feel toward this sincere and remarkable work. But not only were we aware, in that instant, that Tchaikovsky was not Beethoven: it was hard to avoid the conclusion that the conductor also was having difficulty in forgetting it! The performance gave the music exceptional coherence, well adjusted climax, and all the rest of it, but——

Tchaikovsky followed the highly artificial and extremely exhilarating music of the second "Daphnis and Chloë" suite of Ravel, which, with this leader and orchestra, is one of the crack performances of our period. This, in itself, was calculated to put Tchaikovsky in a tight place. The program included the big E flat symphony of Mozart, and two movements from the quartet which Edward Burlingame Hill refashioned, at Dr. Koussevitzky's behest, into a "Sinfonietta for Strings." Mozart's symphony had all due feeling, sparkle and classic line. The radiant music was beautifully played. Then came Mr. Hill's composition. Unpretentious, admirably made, it not only held its own in distinguished musical surroundings, but made a vey strong impression upon the audience. It is amusing, emanating as it does from a composer whose sympathies have been very much in the direction of the Ravel who followed him on the program and of greater figures of the French school. But this is a coloristic trait. The essential quality of the Hill music is the fineness, clarity, strength of the writing, and the instinct for beauty and proportion which always have characterized him. The movements of the "Sinfonietta" were received with an enthusiasm there was no mistaking. At last Mr. Hill, who was present, had to march the length of a long aisle to the stage to receive the acclaim of audience and conductor.

* * *

Thereafter the orchestra launched into the "Daphnis et Chloë" music, which was the climax of the concert and one of the high points of the festival. How marvelously they play this piece! With what wanton virtuosity and exultant precision! The woodwinds are simply intrepid masters, every one of them in such performance. In the "Danse générale" they are a released pack in cry. They rival each other with delight, and they enchant the ear—as, indeed, does the whole shimmering, blazing orchestra.

One could particularize about each of the concerts, but there is no need to do so. The preceding has been written as indication of the mood and artistic qualities of the festival. It is written and transmitted to the typesetter in advance of the final programs. Accompanying photographs may furnish a further indication of the character of the event. It is unique among American music festivals; unique in the qualities of one of the greatest conductors of this time; in the excellence of the orchestra, which is rehearsed for these events just as carefully, meticulously, as for any gala occasion of the year; unique, also, in the wonderful site which is now the permanent endowment of the festival.

* * *

This festival appears certain to develop, paralleling the immense musical development of America today, to a point only indicated now. In so doing, it encounters one logical and understandable ob-of a number of people who have lived, in some cases for generations, neighbors all, in the beautiful and quiet country of the Berkshires. These citizens know good music well. They hear it every Winter in Boston or New York or in other Eastern centers. They love the land, and the beauty about them. They are not completely convinced that they want, so to speak, a festival of national and international reputation to come running over their lawns.

It is a perfectly reasonable ob-bor, and is far from routes of public conveyance. The greatest number of patrons come by automobile from far and near, seldom numbering less than 5,000 for a concert on a rainy day and considerably more when there is opportunity to sit on the grass or occupy the seats placed in rows outside the tent. It is the opportunity, and this is the time, for such a festival to be given in America. To the neighbors of Lenox, Stockbridge and adjacent places there is only this to say: If they do not want the Berkshire Festival they should stop it now. Otherwise it will inevitably roll up fame, reputation, patronage.

TOSCANINI SALZBURG

By HERBERT F. PEYSER

SALZBURG.

NOTHING will be gained b pretending that Toscanini' ~~new~~ "Magic Flute" is 10 per cent. It is not. It ha ome exceptional qualities and i any respects it gives a new slan Mozart's opera and places it i unaccustomed perspective. Bu ken by and large it is disappoint g, and the audience which sa hrough the greater part of the firs performance in stony silence wa anifestly chilled by somethin e than a fear that the conducto ht resent applause. That th t and scenery have their defect not the root of the trouble. Man oorly sung and badly mounte uction can, under the prope umstances, set a public on fire his public did not burn it wa use the igniting spark wa ing.

* * *

hen Nietzsche talked of "Med aneanizing" music he mus had a prophetic vision of th anini "Magic Flute." For thi rt is filled with the limpidezz he south and its heels — ed. It is purged and thinne lightened. It never dogmatize r trails or sweats. It has a r and a lesser density than u German conductors. Indee of Toscanini's principal aim s to have been to redeem the Teutonic Kapellmeister performance is an act of pur tion, of exorcism. He has aspire an at all costs the spirit of dul s, so freely invoked by German d by them defended and justifie ith a thousand sophistries.

The chief means he employs s end are exceptionally fleet an latile tempi. Yet it so happen that if slow tempi can be dull, fa ones, under certain conditions, ca be no less so. And there was som thing curiously, insidiously du bout the larger part of this pe ormance, for all its beauty of o hestral sound and sculptured pe ection of orchestral detail, for a the light and air the conductor h let into the score. As usual, t things he does are implicit or e plicit in the work (though in couple of cases, like Tamino's "pi ture" air and Sarastro's song abo the hallowed halls, Toscanini frankly faster than Mozart's pr scribed larghetto). But, when all said, the issue is not of a few eigh notes or of some debatable nuanc of pace, but of warmth, of em tion of heart—or of the absence Toscanini, in pious zeal for Emmanuel Schikaneder, saw to it that much was restored which is usually cut, and conversely eliminated some of the "gags" and accretions of decades. For the wisdom of this procedure there are things to be said on both sides. The Papageno of the well-graced Willy Domgraf-Fasbender, subtle, sympathetic and mercurial, was priceless at the dress rehearsal, but somewhat over-wistful, subdued and insufficiently humorous at the première. Helge Roswaenge would probably sing Tamino better today if he had remained the lyric tenor he was seven years ago and not thickened his voice by singing Parsifal or other heroic parts in Germany.

* * *

Jarmila Novotna's Pamina turne out to be rather better than I an ticipated after numerous exper ences of it in Vienna. But whethe she sings a little better or a littl worse, Mme. Novotna's visibl blandishments always so success fully beguile the eye that mer questions of tone quality can a most be overlooked. The Thre Ladies, sung by Hilde Konetzn Stefania Fratnikova and Kersti Thorborg, with lovely smoothnes and warm blend of voice, wer among the best items of the pro duction. Less so the Three Boys done by members of the Wiene Saengerknaben, whose weak pip ings could hardly have been th sort of thing Mozart intended.

Dr. Herbert Graf, whose "Mei tersinger" last year proved a nin days' wonder, was chosen by Toscanini for the staging of the "Magic Flute," and his direction was always in good taste, imaginative and resourceful without eve having recourse to extravagances. But one thing I fail to grasp i Toscanini's approval of the cold, drab, monotonous and sometimes downright cheap settings provided by the Breslau painter and professor, Hans Wildermann.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 16 1937

Music Festival Closes Sunday At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Festical at Tanugelwood near Lenox, Mass., was concluded yesterday afternoon. The last two days of the festival were perfect as to weather conditions, the heavy air of the past week having cleared. A Brahms program was played yesterday by the Boston Symphony with Serge Kouvetsky conducting.

Saturday night Hayrn's 88 symphony was performed. This piece was composed in 1789,and its reading Saturday night was a successful accomplishment to the attending critics. Following the Haydn triumph the group played the Seventh Symphony and the descriptive Rimsky-Korsakoff "Scheherazade." It is estimated that 5,000 or more were in attendance yesterady afternoon for the Brahms, the final event of the series. It was decided tentatively that the dates for the Festival for next summer will be August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Mr. Koussevitsky and his Boston orchestra will in all likelihood return next season provided the new music shed planned is finished. Plans were discussed at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival.

The attendance for the entire series was estimated at 30,000, many attending from all parts of the country, from New York city and from New England. Among local people attending were Mr. and Mrs John L. Bonn of Willow street and Mrs. Roger Sperry of Pine street and Middlebury.

157

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
AUG 16 1937

REHEARSING IN A STALL: Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians practicing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a stable on the Stockbridge, Mass., estate given to the orchestra and Festival as a permanent home by Mrs. Gordon Brooks. The performances were held in a huge tent on the grounds.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
carried picture like above
AUG 16 1937

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
AUG 16 1937

″ READING, PA.
EAGLE
AUG 16 1937

″ BRAZIL, IND.
TIMES & NEWS
AUG 18 1937

″ TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
AUG 16 1937

″ MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN
AUG 19 1937

″ LANCASTER, PA.
NEW ERA
AUG 16 1937

″ BLUEFIELD, W. VA.
SUNSET NEWS
AUG 17 1937

″ PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 16 1937

″ FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 16 1937

″ TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE
AUG 17 1937

″ FLUSHING, N. Y.
North Shore Journal
AUG 16 1937

″ ASHEVILLE, N. C.
CITIZEN
AUG 17 1937

″ LAWRENCE, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1937

″ SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
AUG 18 1937

″ UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 16 1937

″ NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
AUG 16 1937

″ SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Festival Directors Seek Fund for Concert Hall

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16 (AP) Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this Summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the Festival Board announced the first steps had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1937

TEMPORARY HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

(Boston Herald-Wide World Photo)

A section of the audience at one of this year's Berkshire festival concerts showing the tent which proved unsatisfactory when the sound of torrential rains drowned out the Boston Symphony orchestra in all-Wagner program Thursday night.

$100,000 NEEDED FOR FESTIVAL

Berkshire Symphonies Must End Unless Permanent Structure Is Built

(Continued from First Page)

have to be raised for an edifice sufficiently large to provide shelter from the elements for an audience of 5000 persons. She appealed to the nation at large for co-operation in obtaining the money.

"We are building at Tanglewood," she said, "a festival that is national in scope, and we hope that it will become international in influence and attractiveness. The festival has its base in the Berkshires, but it is already clear that persons from every part of the United States and Canada are making these concerts the hub of their summer plans. It is also clear that we have brought the great masterpieces of music, performed by one of America's outstanding orchestras and conductors, to a new audience in this part of the country.

"We are not interested in developing a festival that will be confined to the fortunate few who have music available in the winter in New York, Boston or other major centers. We wish to bring the unifying and healing powers of music to those who cannot hear it otherwise."

The general lines along which the building will be constructed, if the money is forthcoming, have already been laid down. The festival authorities wish, above all else, to preserve the natural charm and beauty of Tanglewood. They contemplate an enormous shed open at the sides, as is the tent now in use. The roof will be 15 feet high, three feet more than the edge of the tent, and the audience will thus be enabled to feel itself part of the out-of-doors in fine weather.

CURTAINS AT SIDES

In bad weather there will be curtains at the sides that will function like Venetian blinds, making the enclosure water-tight. It is proposed to build a double roof with a space of a foot or more between each layer to provide a shock absorber against the beat of rain. Modern insulating and resonating devices will be installed.

These ideas will be incorporated in plans being worked out by Eliel Saarinen, Cleveland architect, who was here last week to obtain the feel of the setting and the audience.

Miss Robinson Smith emphasized the fact that the authorities hope that the festival will burgeon slowly but steadily. They wish to build a permanent music shed in such a way that it will be susceptible to later enlargement. The plans for the stage would have a similar elasticity, so that it could be equipped for opera when the time was ripe for the addition of lyric works to the festival repertoire.

$100,000 NEEDED FOR FESTIVAL

Berkshire Symphonies Must End Unless Permanent Structure Is Built

[Boston Herald-N. Y. Times Dispatch]

LENOX, Aug. 13—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which completes its fourth season with concerts tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, will have to be abandoned unless funds can be raised for the building of a permanent structure for the audience, it was learned today.

Last night's torrential downpour, accompanied by lightning and thunder, which made listening to an all-Wagner program a hazardous adventure rather than an uncomplicated pleasure, caused the officials of the festival and the Boston Symphony orchestra to take a firm stand about the need of replacing the

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

Cont.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

Spa Prepares For Music Festival

Exactly three weeks from the regret-filled moment tomorrow when the last Brahmsian sonority fades from hearing across the broad acres of Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass., ending the greatest in the series of Berkshire Symphonic Festivals, another audience will be assembling for a similar purpose in Saratoga Springs.

In other words, Sept. 5 will mark the beginning of a concert series of eight programs by 24 members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. The differences between this contemplated series and that drawing to a close tonight at Tanglewood in the Berkshires are too great, however to permit comparison.

There is little point in pitting the 24 coming to the Spa with the 80 of the Boston Symphony Orchestra now in the Berkshire triumph, or to compare the latter's repeated audiences of 5,000 persons with the 500 to which the Spa's theater will limit next month's listeners. The announced Saratoga venture is none the less important, and would be so if only by reason of the fact that it is New York State's first sally into a cultural field as sponsor.

Elsewhere in today's Knickerbocker News is a discussion of the growth of America's fondness for good music. In the forthcoming Spa music festival is another proof of it. A few years ago, New York State's executive chiefs would have laughed and jeered at the suggestion that it as a state should promote concerts by a string orchestra such as the one now shortly to appear, or any other musical attraction.

"Beyond the unusual musical interest of the concerts," writes Pierrepont B. Noyes, president of the Saratoga Springs Authority, 'we feel that the festival merits support because in it the state is sponsoring, for the first time, such a cultural opportunity."

Headed by Henry T. Moore of Saratoga Springs, a woman's committee has been chosen to promote the concert series in various Capital District communities. In Albany, the committeewoman is Mrs. Edmund L. Conklin, president of the Monday Musical Club. Mrs. Dixon Ryan Fox and Mrs. Arthur L. Kimball represent Schenectady, while Troy's member is Mrs. James Laurence Meader.

Each of the eight concert programs will present a soloist, beginning Sept. 5 with Emily Roosevelt, soprano. Her climactic number will be the world premier of Vittorio Giannini's arrangement of Schubert's "The Erlking."

Probably the outstanding name on the solo list for the series is Edwina Eustis, contralto, who will sing at the last concert Sept. 18, with Werner Josten at the piano.

Cont. left

But now let us take a look at the festival in the Berkshires, which the Boston Orchestra concerts tonight and tomorrow will bring to an end with the confidence of sponsors greatly strengthened in the future of their great undertaking.

Before 8:30 o'clock tonight, acres of automobiles will be packed fender to fender on anglewood's green turf. By 11:30 they all will be gone again, the festival grounds will be darkened and its applauding thousands gone homeward.

In the interim, Dr. Koussevitzky will have scored with his orchestra another artistic success which has become routine with the Boston organization under his leadership. Haydn's 13th Symphony will have been played, along with the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius and the colorful "Scheherazade" suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff.

When the thousands return to Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon, followers of Brahms will be found leading the demonstrations at the end of each number. The Academic Festival overture will begin the proceedings followed by two symphonies, the Third and First, by the gifted Johannes.

When the last cheer dies on the lips of the throng before the bowing Koussevitzky and his men and the last car has threaded its way through Tanglewood's gates, the Berkshire Festival for 1937 will have ended in probably what is the greatest demonstration of public interest in a musical venture ever undertaken in the Capital District.

Next year, say the festival's sponsors, the tent will not be needed to shelter orchestra and auditors. By next August they expect to have the permanent covered stadium completed at Tanglewood. The architect is on the grounds today.

158

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 6 1937

Berkshire Festival To Construct Home

Campaign for $100,000 Launched as Concert Program Ends at Stocbridge

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16 (AP)—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open or under huge tents. Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood" permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this Summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Serge Koussevitzky, conducting his famed Boston Symphony continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of forty-eight hundred brought the total attendance up to approximately twenty-seven thousand for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its forty thousand dollar budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is esetimated, about one hundred thousand dollars. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

Only a "Shed" Needed

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith, and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitzky has hinted that large choral work, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrook, Mich., the architect, already has inspected the site.

This Summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous Summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD

AUG 27 1937

PLAN PROGRAM OF SIX CONCERTS IN 1938

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27—(AP)—Sponsors of Berkshire Symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Festival Board Plans Permanent Music Home

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the Festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Serge Koussevitzky, conducting his famed Boston Symphony continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the Festival board announced the first step had been taken to ward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith, and the others of the Festival Board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks.

But Koussevitzky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrook. Mich., the architect, already has inspected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 16 1937

Concert Building Planned

Berkshire Festival Plans Permanent Home

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner — although Serge Koussevitzky, conducting his famed Boston Symphony continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken to ward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith, and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitzky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be need than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrook, Michigan, the architect, already has inspected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

AUG 1 6 1937

WANT PERMANENT SYMPHONY BLDG.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—Directors of the Berkkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents..

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the buildings erected at "Tanglewood,' permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concert staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities off the temporary wood stage the canvas proved no protection against the noise or the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first steps had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 1 6 1937

PLAN BUILDING FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

Berkshire Concerts End with 27,000 at Six Programs

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16—(A. P.)—Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first steps had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000.

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 1 6 1937

Want Permanent Building For Symphonic Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16 (AP) — Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner — although Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced first steps had been taken toward a permanent building, which will cost, it is estimated, about $100.000.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

AUG 1 6 1937

Plan Music Shed At 'Tanglewood'

STOCKBRIDGE —(AP)— Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Koussevitzy continued the concert after rearranging the program.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first steps had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 6 193

FESTIVAL ENDS IN BERKSHIRES

All - Brahms Concert by Hub Symphony 'Probably Unrivaled'

LARGEST AUDIENCE

Total Attendance of 27,000 Assures Event Self-Paying

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)— The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this Summer.

There is no other American Summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

Finished, Brilliant

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod Summer standard.

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures — no "memorials" to George Gershwin, no 'popular" nights, no great 'names" engaged because of their movie prominence, though perhaps of different musical ability.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the Winter season. Some have, for that matter.

Beethoven to Brahms

Curiously Dr. Koussevitzky chose to begin the series with an all Beethoven program which included two symphonies—the Sixth and the Fifth. He ended it today with an all-Brahms concert, the bulk of which was made up on the Third and First symphonies. These were played quite as handsomely as if they were opening the Boston Symphony's season in, for example, Carnegie Hall, New York.

In fact, the nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm.

Physical surroundings have also done a great real for Berkshire audiences. The view from the headquarters building on Tanglewood estate, which was given the Boston orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is perhaps the loveliest in the Lenox-Stockbridge neighborhood, looking across a blue lake to Monument mountain, and to the hazy further reaches of the lower Berkshires.

Instead of buildings and elevated trains, the immediate surroundings of the music tent are beautifully kept lawns. The "foyer" is a formal garden known many decades for its beauty.

Movies Represented

The audience has come from every stratum of society—it is gathered in the center of the Massachucetts "Summer society belt." but it is by no means confined to estate holders.

Even the movies have been represented, by Miriam Hopkins, among others. Many stage people, ambassadors, including Norman H. Davis, ambassador at large, and musicians such as Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalit and Alma Gluck have been among the thousands.

"Be cause we have no intention of announcing more concerts than we are perfectly sure we can give up to standard," said Judd and Edman, "we plan to do only six next Summer. Later, perhaps, we shall add others.

"They will never be scratched-up events, howevcer."

CHI

AU

M

In Tanglewo
In Massachus
Berkshire hills,
184) was Will Boston merchant chased 210 acr
Stockbridge, call a Victorian mans
small red cott
Author Nathan
Hawthorne wro
for children and the Seven Gable
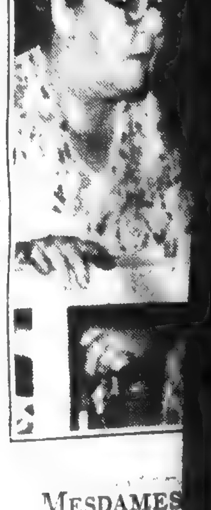
tant had since ha



MESDAMES
They pack

wood until Berkshire Hi
he and his best suite, C of the Bosto Tanglewood, tan tent, 28
high at its property.
tent, comma together bef shell. Liste of the tent,
the distinct
"Fine! Fin
as the sun
Conductor podium in coat, tappe
the porten
Leonora O
Thus be Symphonic years was a few co
Symph
Henry H
Lenox. L
Stockbrid
Symphon
$1,800, c to begin burg" a maestro mer conc obtain a that the
Mrs. Go

LEWIS
S

AUG

M

BERKSH SEA

Stockbridge
The fourth festival close tory today w unrivaled world for sp or for beaut
The large weeks filled
formerly,
Boston Sy
Serge Kous day brough for six co practically taking wo this summ
There is mer music those who program
This fe

159

TIME
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 16 1937

MUSIC

In Tanglewood's Tent

In Massachusetts' green and social Berkshire hills, a pioneer landowner in 1849 was William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker. He purchased 210 acres between Lenox and Stockbridge, called it "Tanglewood," built a Victorian mansion on it. He also built a small red cottage which he rented to Author Nathaniel Hawthorne. There Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales for children and began his The House of the Seven Gables. Nothing very important had since happened at sedate Tanglewood until last week. From the near-by Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, where he and his wife had been put up in the best suite, Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony drove over to Tanglewood, noted with approval that a tan tent, 280 ft. by 120 ft. and 60 ft. high at its peak, had been raised on the property. Dr. Koussevitzky entered the tent, commanded that two sticks be clicked together before the big plywood orchestra shell. Listening judiciously from the rear of the tent, Conductor Koussevitzky heard the distinct click, beamed, pronounced: "Fine! Fine! Very good!" Next evening as the sun dropped behind the green hills, Conductor Koussevitzky stood on the podium in un-summery white tie and tail coat, tapped his baton, raised his arms for the portentous opening of Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3.

Wide World

MESDAMES SMITH & KOUSSEVITZKY

They packed 5,500 under the big top.

Thus began the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which in its first two years was nothing more pretentious than a few concerts by New York Philharmonic Symphony men under oldtime Conductor Henry Hadley on the Hanna Farm at Lenox. Last summer, on an estate near Stockbridge, three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky netted $1,800, caused organizers of the Festival to begin to talk of "an American Salzburg" and impelled the stately Boston maestro to urge that the number of summer concerts be increased and the Festival obtain a permanent home. Result was that the present owners of Tanglewood, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, turned their estate over to the Festival committee, which raised $16,000 in pledges for an orchestra pavilion to be designed by famed Finnish-born Architect Eliel Saarinen.

Last week at the first of six Berkshire concerts to be given during the fortnight, the audience of 5,500—near capacity of the temporary tent—was as impeccable and polite as any in Symphony Hall or Carnegie Hall, included such folk as Violinists Efrem Zimbalist, Albert Spalding, Jacques Gordon, Mrs. E. Parmalee (Alta Rockefeller) Prentice, Dancer Ted Shawn, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller (wife of Massachusetts' onetime Governor), U. S. Ambassador-at-large Norman Hezekiah Davis, Novelist Owen Johnson, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness and many another social column name. Most of them sat in boxes which were shrewdly placed in a double row in the middle of the tent so that their occupants could be thoroughly seen.

That the Festival's opening turnout was notable, that advance ticket sales came within $10,000 of liquidating a $40,000 budget, was largely the accomplishment of the committee's energetic head, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. Daughter of Corporation Lawyer Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Smith is in her 50s, lives near Stockbridge. She got local people to work as ushers for nothing, persuaded the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington to operate a food concession co-operatively with the Festival management. Spreading word of the Festival among Eastern socialites, Miss Smith also labored to make concertgoers of plain Berkshire folk who would never see the inside of a city concert hall.

Staple Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner, salted sparingly with Sibelius and Ravel, was the Berkshire Festival's fare, with the promise that soloists or opera may be served up later if the U. S. Salzburg comes into its own. But music critics who, summer after summer, have faithfully reported mediocre U. S. hot-weather performances, found cause for enthusiasm last week in the Tanglewood tent. Dr. Koussevitzky's men had never played indoors with more sonority or vitality. And when real lightning flashed during the storm music in Beethoven's Sixth Symphony (Pastoral), most of the audience felt that it was no more than an able performance deserved.

Wide World

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY & FRIEND (IN THE INTERMISSION)

The sticks clicked to his liking.

MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 16 1937

BERKSHIRE FETES TO BE CONTINUED

Over 27,000 Persons Heard Famous Boston Symphony Orchestra; Big Receipts.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—((AP)—Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temoprary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner, although Koussevitsky continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitsky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitsky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrock, Michigan, the architect, already has inpected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of t he many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends With All-Brahms Program

(Special to The Eagle-News)

TANGLEWOOD, Berkshire Hills, Aug. 15—The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival came to an end here this afternoon as Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony orchestra thrilled 5,500 music lovers who filled the giant canvas amphi-theatre with a well-balanced and brilliantly-presented all-Brahms program.

The concert was the sixth and last of the 1937 series, termed by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival board of directors, the most successful in its history.

Officials of the festival estimated total attendance at the six concerts at over 30,000, far above pre-concert expectations. Plans are already underway for the 1938 season with a possibility that the canvas tent, used in the last three years will be replaced by a permanent hall. The land on which the festival was held this year, onetime favorite vacation spot of Oliver Wendell Holmes, has been given to the orchestra for a permanent summer home.

Of the three concerts presented last week, Saturday evening's program was the first of the entire series to be enhanced by perfect weather conditions. An all-Wagner program, given to the accompaniment of violent thunderstorms Thursday evening was appreciated by the 4,800 attending despite poor weather conditions.

Dr. Koussevitsky carried through his clever knack of presenting popular symphony to the audiences in his Saturday night program. Under a cloudless, star-studded sky and with an enormous audience attending in fine spirits, he reached the high point of the festival with his splendid offering of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" symphonic suite.

The concert opened with a Hayden symphony in G major, performed with delightful neatness and finish. The gay and spirited tempo made it an ideal choice for the beginning of the concert.

It was followed by the symphony No. 7, composed by the great Finish musician Jean Sebelius. This beautiful example of short symphonic work, written in one movement, is great orchestral music, remarkable for its breadth and interest of harmony.

The orchestra's presentation of the Rimsky-Korsakov symphony, built around the "Arabian Nights" tales, was unusually fine and held the sustained interest of the audience despite the fact that it is very familiar to symphony fans. The concert master, Mr. Bergin carried the solo violin part with brilliance and virtuosity and harp arrangements were particularly beautiful.

This afternoon's Brahm's concert carried through the fine example set by the previous presentations.

Many celebrities attended the concerts, among them Efren Simbalist, New York violinist, Miriam Hopkins and Conrad Nagle of the screen, Edith Barrett, prominent stage actress, Alma Gluck, of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Dr. Allen Craig, head of the Charlotte Hungerford hospital in Torrington, Conn.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, gave two lectures in connection with the festival program. Two broadcasts of Thursday concerts were carried over a nation-wide chain of stations.

K. V. B. H.
C. W. K.

There are more than 521,000 Boy Scouts in the British Empire.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1937

The Note Book

By J. H.

On a 25th Wedding Anniversary
(To Mr. and Mrs. I. D. H.)

Through twenty-five years of richness in living;
Through twenty-five years of kindness and grace;
Through twenty-five years of generous giving,
They have made in friends' hearts an enviable place.

* * *

Festival Fancies

HAYDN is master of the art of clear, lucid, exact patterning of classical music. The symphony in G major, played Saturday night, is a splendid example of his style. The restrained, self-contained Haydn showed little of the fire and passion of Wagner or Tochaikovsky, but wrote his symphonies in pure, scholarly form and achieved an exquisite beauty therein. He could write them to order, so to speak, for special musical occasions, and yet they are never found to be without inspiration, high purpose.

It is generally conceded Jean Sibelius, a modern composer, living in Finland, has done more significant work in his later symphonies. This is accounted for by the fact that he is living alone and writing according to the dictates of his own conscience. The influence of society and the metropolitan whirl of earlier years, make his first products suffer by comparison. His seventh, in one movement, contains the elaboration of a theme established early in the piece by solo trombone. He uses harmonies which appear at first to be discordant, but are really intricate, imaginative combinations, resolving logically into legitimate chords.

After the concert Saturday, everyone was humming the lovely Prince and Princess theme from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade." The whole fantasy is one that is generally loved even though it commits the unpardonable crime of being "modern."

Grandiose is the word for Brahms. His music is rich, it is deep, it has soul. He resorts to none of the orchestral trickery found occasionally among even the great masters. His use of percussion is not ostentatious, nor does he call for bizarre effects from any one group of instruments. In the Academic Festival Overture he took a few student airs, essentially simple, stated them as themes, developed them through skillful manipulation of all harmonic possibilities, then concluded with the customary recapitulation. He has rightly gained his place among the "few really great."

There was in Sunday's twilight the melancholy thought that Koussevitzky and the B. S. O. were to go away. Lonely will be the lawn at Tanglewood where the loveliest music of the great masters throbbed awhile, then rolled up into the green hills and lost itself over the horizon in countless echoes. This too, like all good things, must end. —Jo Ann.

* * * *

And that, my masters, is the skeleton in human living—the knowledge that one day the feast
even though every hour
love and every mo-with a joy . . She envy, not only by her manner, but by her use of language; her
ng; her vocabulary;
of diction; her knowl-
expressive, palpitating
appreciation and her n; her rare and envi-
cy; her faultless tech-flowing rythm; her
yle. My ambition is to
er. But, alas, I am only

y, that in your might,
ay teach me how to write;
make the muses smile,
aster some such style.

* * * *

rolled at Tanglewood have run through your

the sun there is pardon,
of the bird there is mirth;
God's heart in a garden
anywhere else on earth.

Pagan, perhaps, but wondrously beautiful, like so much of the Pagan music we have so lately enjoyed.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 16 1937

Music and The Drama

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ENDS FOURTH SEASON WITH MAGNIFICENT RECITAL

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15-AP-The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000 and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season. Some have, for that matter.

The nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 16 1937

Largest Audience of Festival Hears Final Symphony Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this Summer.

There is no other American Summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the Winter season. Some have, for that matter.

The nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

159

TIME
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 16 1937

MUSIC

In Tanglewood's Tent

In Massachusetts' green and social Berkshire hills, a pioneer landowner in 1849 was William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker. He purchased 210 acres between Lenox and Stockbridge, called it "Tanglewood," built a Victorian mansion on it. He also built a small red cottage which he rented to Author Nathaniel Hawthorne. There Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales for children and began his The House of the Seven Gables. Nothing very important had since happened at sedate Tanglewood until last week. From the near-by Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, where he and his wife had been put up in the best suite, Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony drove over to Tanglewood, noted with approval that a tan tent, 280 ft. by 120 ft. and 60 ft. high at its peak, had been raised on the property. Dr. Koussevitzky entered the tent, commanded that two sticks be clicked together before the big plywood orchestra shell. Listening judiciously from the rear of the tent, Conductor Koussevitzky heard the distinct click, beamed, pronounced: "Fine! Fine! Very good!" Next evening as the sun dropped behind the green hills, Conductor Koussevitzky stood on the podium in un-summery white tie and tail coat, tapped his baton, raised his arms for the portentous opening of Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3.

Wide World

MESDAMES SMITH & KOUSSEVITZKY

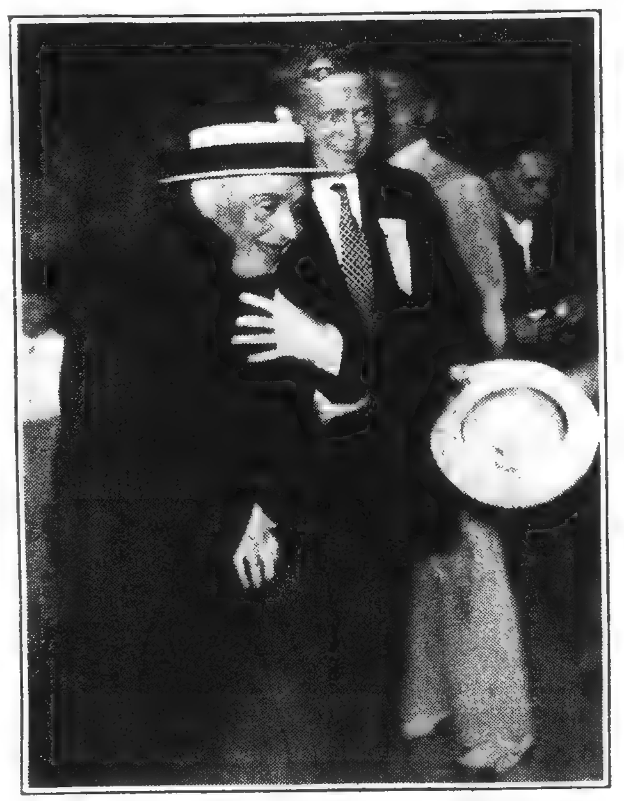
They packed 5,500 under the big top.

Thus began the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which in its first two years was nothing more pretentious than a few concerts by New York Philharmonic Symphony men under oldtime Conductor Henry Hadley on the Hanna Farm at Lenox. Last summer, on an estate near Stockbridge, three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky netted $1,800, caused organizers of the Festival to begin to talk of "an American Salzburg" and impelled the stately Boston maestro to urge that the number of summer concerts be increased and the Festival obtain a permanent home. Result was that the present owners of Tanglewood, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, turned their estate over to the Festival committee, which raised $16,000 in pledges for an orchestra pavilion to be designed by famed Finnish-born Architect Eliel Saarinen.

Last week at the first of six Berkshire concerts to be given during the fortnight, the audience of 5,500—near capacity of the temporary tent—was as impeccable and polite as any in Symphony Hall or Carnegie Hall, included such folk as Violinists Efrem Zimbalist, Albert Spalding, Jacques Gordon, Mrs. E. Parmalee (Alta Rockefeller) Prentice, Dancer Ted Shawn, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller (wife of Massachusetts' onetime Governor), U. S. Ambassador-at-large Norman Hezekiah Davis, Novelist Owen Johnson, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness and many another social column name. Most of them sat in boxes which were shrewdly placed in a double row in the middle of the tent so that their occupants could be thoroughly seen.

That the Festival's opening turnout was notable, that advance ticket sales came within $10,000 of liquidating a $40,000 budget, was largely the accomplishment of the committee's energetic head, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. Daughter of Corporation Lawyer Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Smith is in her 50s, lives near Stockbridge. She got local people to work as ushers for nothing, persuaded the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington to operate a food concession co-operatively with the Festival management. Spreading word of the Festival among Eastern socialites, Miss Smith also labored to make concertgoers of plain Berkshire folk who would never see the inside of a city concert hall.

Staple Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner, salted sparingly with Sibelius and Ravel, was the Berkshire Festival's fare, with the promise that soloists or opera may be served up later if the U. S. Salzburg comes into its own. But music critics who, summer after summer, have faithfully reported mediocre U. S. hot-weather performances, found cause for enthusiasm last week in the Tanglewood tent. Dr. Koussevitzky's men had never played indoors with more sonority or vitality. And when real lightning flashed during the storm music in Beethoven's Sixth Symphony (Pastoral), most of the audience felt that it was no more than an able performance deserved.



Wide World

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY & FRIEND (IN THE INTERMISSION)

The sticks clicked to his liking.

MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 16 1937

BERKSHIRE FETES TO BE CONTINUED

Over 27,000 Persons Heard Famous Boston Symphony Orchestra; Big Receipts.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—((AP)—Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temoprary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner, although Koussevitsky continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitsky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrock, Michigan, the architect, already has inpected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of t he many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends With All-Brahms Program

(Special to The Eagle-News)

TANGLEWOOD, Berkshire Hills, Aug. 15—The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival came to an end here this afternoon as Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony orchestra thrilled 5,500 music lovers who filled the giant canvas amphi-theatre with a well-balanced and brilliantly-presented all-Brahms program.

The concert was the sixth and last of the 1937 series, termed by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival board of directors, the most successful in its history.

Officials of the festival estimated total attendance at the six concerts at over 30,000, far above pre-concert expectations. Plans are already underway for the 1938 season with a possibility that the canvas tent, used in the last three years will be replaced by a permanent hall. The land on which the festival was held this year, onetime favorite vacation spot of Oliver Wendell Holmes, has been given to the orchestra for a permanent summer home.

Of the three concerts presented last week, Saturday evening's program was the first of the entire series to be enhanced by perfect weather conditions. An all-Wagner program, given to the accompaniment of violent thunderstorms Thursday evening was appreciated by the 4,800 attending despite poor weather conditions.

Dr. Koussevitsky carried through his clever knack of presenting popular symphony to the audiences in his Saturday night program. Under a cloudless, star-studded sky and with an enormous audience attending in fine spirits, he reached the high point of the festival with his splendid offering of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" symphonic suite.

The concert opened with a Hayden symphony in G major, performed with delightful neatness and finish. The gay and spirited tempo made it an ideal choice for the beginning of the concert.

It was followed by the symphony No. 7, composed by the great Finish musician Jean Sebelius. This beautiful example of short symphonic work, written in one movement, is great orchestral music, remarkable for its breadth and interest of harmony.

The orchestra's presentation of the Rimsky-Korsakov symphony, built around the "Arabian Nights" tales, was unusually fine and held the sustained interest of the audience despite the fact that it is very familiar to symphony fans. The concert master, Mr. Bergin carried the solo violin part with brilliance and virtuosity and harp arrangements were particularly beautiful.

This afternoon's Brahm's concert carried through the fine example set by the previous presentations.

Many celebrities attended the concerts, among them Efren Simbalist, New York violinist, Miriam Hopkins and Conrad Nagle of the screen, Edith Barrett, prominent stage actress, Alma Gluck, of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Dr. Allen Craig, head of the Charlotte Hungerford hospital in Torrington, Conn.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, gave two lectures in connection with the festival program. Two broadcasts of Thursday concerts were carried over a nation-wide chain of stations.

K. V. B. H.
C. W. K.

There are more than 521,000 Boy Scouts in the British Empire.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1937

The Note Book

By J. H.

On a 25th Wedding Anniversary

(To Mr. and Mrs. I. D. H.)

Through twenty-five years of richness in living;
Through twenty-five years of kindness and grace;
Through twenty-five years of generous giving,
They have made in friends' hearts an enviable place.

* * *

Festival Fancies

HAYDN is master of the art of clear, lucid, exact patterning of classical music. The symphony in G major, played Saturday night, is a splendid example of his style. The restrained, self-contained Haydn showed little of the fire and passion of Wagner or Tschaikovsky, but wrote his symphonies in pure, scholarly form and achieved an exquisite beauty therein. He could write them to order, so to speak, for special musical occasions, and yet they are never found to be without inspiration, high purpose.

It is generally conceded Jean Sibelius, a modern composer, living in Finland, has done more significant work in his later symphonies. This is accounted for by the fact that he is living alone and writing according to the dictates of his own conscience. The influence of society and the metropolitan whirl of earlier years, make his first products suffer by comparison. His seventh, in one movement, contains the elaboration of a theme established early in the piece by solo trombone. He uses harmonies which appear at first to be discordant, but are really intricate, imaginative combinations, resolving logically into legitimate chords.

After the concert Saturday, everyone was humming the lovely Prince and Princess theme from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade." The whole fantasy is one that is generally loved even though it commits the unpardonable crime of being "modern."

Grandiose is the word for Brahms. His music is rich, it is deep, it has soul. He resorts to none of the orchestral trickery found occasionally among even the great masters. His use of percussion is not ostentatious, nor does he call for bizarre effects from any one group of instruments. In the Academic Festival Overture he took a few student airs, essentially simple, stated them as themes, developed them through skillful manipulation of all harmonic possibilities, then concluded with the customary recapitulation. He has rightly gained his place among the "few really great."

There was in Sunday's twilight the melancholy thought that Koussevitzky and the B. S. O. were to go away. Lonely will be the lawn at Tanglewood where the loveliest music of the great masters throbbed awhile, then rolled up into the green hills and lost itself over the horizon in countless echoes. This too, like all good things, must end.
—Jo Ann.

* * * *

And that, my masters, is the skeleton in human living—the knowledge that one day the feast
-even though every hour
th love and every mo-led with a joy . . She envy, not only by her of manner, but by her ie use of language; her
ng; her vocabulary;
of diction; her knowl-
expressive, palpitating
appreciation and her on; her rare and envi-
cy; her faultless tech-
flowing rythm; her tyle. My ambition is to
er. But, alas, I am only

y, that in your might,
lay teach me how to write;
make the muses smile,
aster some such style.

* * * *

rolled at Tanglewood
have run through your

the sun there is pardon,
of the bird there is mirth;
God's heart in a garden
man anywhere else on earth.

Pagan, perhaps, but wondrously beautiful, like so much of the Pagan music we have so lately enjoyed.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 16 1937

Music and The Drama

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ENDS FOURTH SEASON WITH MAGNIFICENT RECITAL

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15-AP-The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000 and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season. Some have, for that matter.

The nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 16 1937

Largest Audience of Festival Hears Final Symphony Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this Summer.

There is no other American Summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the Winter season. Some have, for that matter.

The nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

159

TIME
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 16 1937

MUSIC

In Tanglewood's Tent

In Massachusetts' green and social Berkshire hills, a pioneer landowner in 1849 was William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker. He purchased 210 acres between Lenox and Stockbridge, called it "Tanglewood," built a Victorian mansion on it. He also built a small red cottage which he rented to Author Nathaniel Hawthorne. There Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales for children and began his The House of the Seven Gables. Nothing very important had since happened at sedate Tanglewood until last week. From the near-by Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, where he and his wife had been put up in the best suite, Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony drove over to Tanglewood, noted with approval that a tan tent, 280 ft. by 120 ft. and 60 ft. high at its peak, had been raised on the property. Dr. Koussevitzky entered the tent, commanded that two sticks be clicked together before the big plywood orchestra shell. Listening judiciously from the rear of the tent, Conductor Koussevitzky heard the distinct click, beamed, pronounced: "Fine! Fine! Very good!" Next evening as the sun dropped behind the green hills, Conductor Koussevitzky stood on the podium in un-summery white tie and tail coat, tapped his baton, raised his arms for the portentous opening of Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3.

Wide World

MESDAMES SMITH & KOUSSEVITZKY

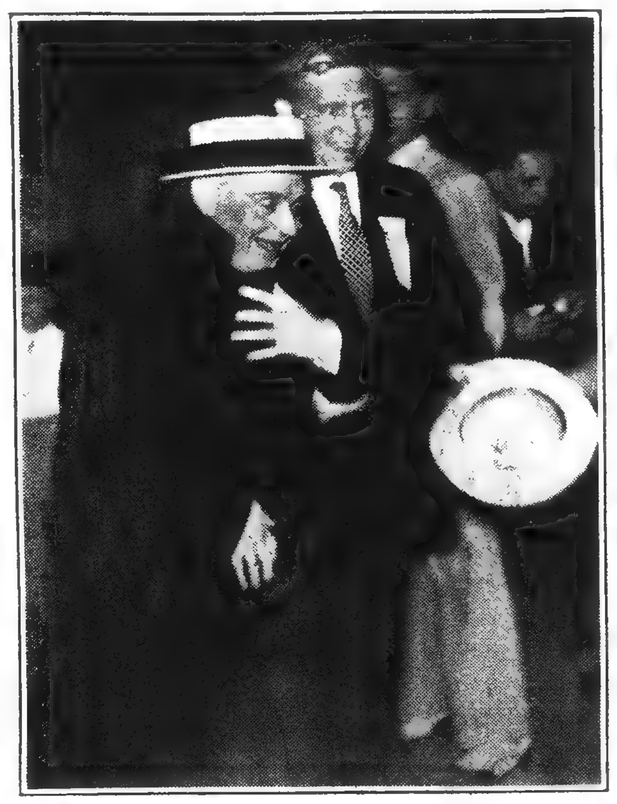
They packed 5,500 under the big top.

Thus began the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which in its first two years was nothing more pretentious than a few concerts by New York Philharmonic Symphony men under oldtime Conductor Henry Hadley on the Hanna Farm at Lenox. Last summer, on an estate near Stockbridge, three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky netted $1,800, caused organizers of the Festival to begin to talk of "an American Salzburg" and impelled the stately Boston maestro to urge that the number of summer concerts be increased and the Festival obtain a permanent home. Result was that the present owners of Tanglewood, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, turned their estate over to the Festival committee, which raised $16,000 in pledges for an orchestra pavilion to be designed by famed Finnish-born Architect Eliel Saarinen.

Last week at the first of six Berkshire concerts to be given during the fortnight, the audience of 5,500—near capacity of the temporary tent—was as impeccable and polite as any in Symphony Hall or Carnegie Hall, included such folk as Violinists Efrem Zimbalist, Albert Spalding, Jacques Gordon, Mrs. E. Parmalee (Alta Rockefeller) Prentice, Dancer Ted Shawn, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller (wife of Massachusetts' onetime Governor), U. S. Ambassador-at-large Norman Hezekiah Davis, Novelist Owen Johnson, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness and many another social column name. Most of them sat in boxes which were shrewdly placed in a double row in the middle of the tent so that their occupants could be thoroughly seen.

That the Festival's opening turnout was notable, that advance ticket sales came within $10,000 of liquidating a $40,000 budget, was largely the accomplishment of the committee's energetic head, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. Daughter of Corporation Lawyer Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Smith is in her 50s, lives near Stockbridge. She got local people to work as ushers for nothing, persuaded the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington to operate a food concession co-operatively with the Festival management. Spreading word of the Festival among Eastern socialites, Miss Smith also labored to make concertgoers of plain Berkshire folk who would never see the inside of a city concert hall.

Staple Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner, salted sparingly with Sibelius and Ravel, was the Berkshire Festival's fare, with the promise that soloists or opera may be served up later if the U. S. Salzburg comes into its own. But music critics who, summer after summer, have faithfully reported mediocre U. S. hot-weather performances, found cause for enthusiasm last week in the Tanglewood tent. Dr. Koussevitzky's men had never played indoors with more sonority or vitality. And when real lightning flashed during the storm music in Beethoven's Sixth Symphony (Pastoral), most of the audience felt that it was no more than an able performance deserved.



Wide World

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY & FRIEND (IN THE INTERMISSION)

The sticks clicked to his liking.

MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 16 1937

BERKSHIRE FETES TO BE CONTINUED

Over 27,000 Persons Heard Famous Boston Symphony Orchestra; Big Receipts.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—((AP)—Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temoprary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner, although Koussevitsky continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitsky's desire that it be weather proof and its accustics perfect. Miss Smith and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitsky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrock, Michigan, the architect, already has inpected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of t he many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends With All-Brahms Program

(Special to The Eagle-News)

TANGLEWOOD, Berkshire Hills, Aug. 15—The fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival came to an end here this afternoon as Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony orchestra thrilled 5,500 music lovers who filled the giant canvas amphi-theatre with a well-balanced and brilliantly-presented all-Brahms program.

The concert was the sixth and last of the 1937 series, termed by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival board of directors, the most successful in its history.

Officials of the festival estimated total attendance at the six concerts at over 30,000, far above pre-concert expectations. Plans are already underway for the 1938 season with a possibility that the canvas tent, used in the last three years will be replaced by a permanent hall. The land on which the festival was held this year, onetime favorite vacation spot of Oliver Wendell Holmes, has been given to the orchestra for a permanent summer home.

Of the three concerts presented last week, Saturday evening's program was the first of the entire series to be enhanced by perfect weather conditions. An all-Wagner program, given to the accompaniment of violent thunderstorms Thursday evening was appreciated by the 4,800 attending despite poor weather conditions.

Dr. Koussevitsky carried through his clever knack of presenting popular symphony to the audiences in his Saturday night program. Under a cloudless, star-studded sky and with an enormous audience attending in fine spirits, he reached the high point of the festival with his splendid offering of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" symphonic suite.

The concert opened with a Hayden symphony in G major, performed with delightful neatness and finish. The gay and spirited tempo made it an ideal choice for the beginning of the concert.

It was followed by the symphony No. 7, composed by the great Finish musician Jean Sebelius. This beautiful example of short symphonic work, written in one movement, is great orchestral music, remarkable for its breadth and interest of harmony.

The orchestra's presentation of the Rimsky-Korsakov symphony, built around the "Arabian Nights" tales, was unusually fine and held the sustained interest of the audience despite the fact that it is very familiar to symphony fans. The concert master, Mr. Bergin carried the solo violin part with brilliance and virtuosity and harp arrangements were particularly beautiful.

This afternoon's Brahm's concert carried through the fine example set by the previous presentations.

Many celebrities attended the concerts, among them Efren Simbalist, New York violinist, Miriam Hopkins and Conrad Nagle of the screen, Edith Barrett, prominent stage actress, Alma Gluck, of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Dr. Allen Craig, head of the Charlotte Hungerford hospital in Torrington, Conn.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, gave two lectures in connection with the festival program. Two broadcasts of Thursday concerts were carried over a nation-wide chain of stations.

K. V. B. H.
C. W. K.

There are more than 521,000 Boy Scouts in the British Empire.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1937

The Note Book

By J. H.

On a 25th Wedding Anniversary
(To Mr. and Mrs. I. D. H.)

Through twenty-five years of richness in living;
Through twenty-five years of kindness and grace;
Through twenty-five years of generous giving,
They have made in friends' hearts an enviable place.

* * *

Festival Fancies

HAYDN is master of the art of clear, lucid, exact patterning of classical music. The symphony in G major, played Saturday night, is a splendid example of his style. The restrained, self-contained Haydn showed little of the fire and passion of Wagner or Tochaikovsky, but wrote his symphonies in pure, scholarly form and achieved an exquisite beauty therein. He could write them to order, so to speak, for special musical occasions, and yet they are never found to be without inspiration, high purpose.

It is generally conceded Jean Sibelius, a modern composer, living in Finland, has done more significant work in his later symphonies. This is accounted for by the fact that he is living alone and writing according to the dictates of his own conscience. The influence of society and the metropolitan whirl of earlier years, make his first products suffer by comparison. His seventh, in one movement, contains the elaboration of a theme established early in the piece by solo trombone. He uses harmonies which appear at first to be discordant, but are really intricate, imaginative combinations, resolving logically into legitimate chords.

After the concert Saturday, everyone was humming the lovely Prince and Princess theme from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade." The whole fantasy is one that is generally loved even though it commits the unpardonable crime of being "modern."

Grandiose is the word for Brahms. His music is rich, it is deep, it has soul. He resorts to none of the orchestral trickery found occasionally among even the great masters. His use of percussion is not ostentatious, nor does he call for bizarre effects from any one group of instruments. In the Academic Festival Overture he took a few student airs, essentially simple, stated them as themes, developed them through skillful manipulation of all harmonic possibilities, then concluded with the customary recapitulation. He has rightly gained his place among the "few really great."

There was in Sunday's twilight the melancholy thought that Koussevitzky and the B. S. O. were to go away. Lonely will be the lawn at Tanglewood where the loveliest music of the great masters throbbed awhile, then rolled up into the green hills and lost itself over the horizon in countless echoes. This too, like all good things, must end. —Jo Ann.

* * * *

And that, my masters, is the skeleton in human living—the knowledge that one day the feast must end—even though every hour be rich with love and every moment jeweled with a joy . . She excites my envy, not only by her gentleness of manner, but by her charm in the use of language; her understanding; her vocabulary; her clarity of diction; her knowledge of expressive, palpitating words; her appreciation and her interpretation; her rare and enviable brilliancy; her faultless technique; her flowing rythm; her matchless style. My ambition is to write like her. But, alas, I am only a poet.

O, Lord, I pray, that in your might,
You'll some day teach me how to write;
That you will make the muses smile,
So I can master some such style.

* * * *

If you strolled at Tanglewood there must have run through your mind:

In the kiss of the sun there is pardon,
In the song of the bird there is mirth;
We are nearer God's heart in a garden
Than anywhere else on earth.

Pagan, perhaps, but wondrously beautiful, like so much of the Pagan music we have so lately enjoyed.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 16 1937

Music and The Drama

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ENDS FOURTH SEASON WITH MAGNIFICENT RECITAL

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15-AP-The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000 and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season. Some have, for that matter.

The nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 16 1937

Largest Audience Hears Final Symp

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor and conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this Summer.

There is no other American Summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

This festival is one of the very few conc seve are Al sym whic

Hall Win that
Th lar
Thu
the men
Dr. bon and fer cert as ted.

congested forced firemen entrate their fo
spreading.
Police and fire
uated two tener vicinity of the
through a long company grounc
Firemen from Boston and Som
the alarm sounc men when the
engulf the area.
The Everett owned by San Everett, firemen Flames shooti from the oil-lac racted hundred
Police and fire lies from near truggled to ke Dull explosion flames reached blaze shot even Spreading fro ire engulfed a c
00 feet wide,
bout 75 feet hi

160

Festival Series Closes With Brilliant Program Of Brahms Compositions

Tremendous Ovation Given Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony—Demonstrations Exceed Those at Any Previous Concert—Saturday Night Program Also Given Enthusiastic Reception

Eag

By J. C. ROSENFELD

THE final chord of the Brahms First Symphony yesterday afternoon at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival detonated a demonstration which exceeded anything experienced at any of these memorable events.

End of Fourth

It marked the end of the Fourth Annual Festival, the first in its new and permanent home, thanks to the magnificent gift of Tanglewood by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, the first at which there were six concerts instead of three as at the first three Festivals, and a possible stepping-off spot into a future limited now only by one's imagination.

Enthusiasm has been at the boiling point throughout the two weekends. There were ovations for Beethoven, Ravel, Tschaikowsky, Wagner, Sibelius, and now at the final program, all Brahms, certainly the least spectacular among composers, there was a tumult as the whole huge audience standing clapped and shouted in a wild release of joyous appreciation.

Weather Propitious

It was inevitable, on a percentage basis, that some of the programs would be performed without a deterrent threat by weather, and so yesterday afternoon and also at the penultimate concert Saturday night all conditions were most propitious. The wisdom of an all Brahms program, especially as a final one to such an exciting series, seemed debatable, but all arguments dissolved before the proof of the reaction of the audience. From a distant perspective it was an excellent complement to the other varied programs which had preceded it and a fine compensating corner-stone to the all-Beethoven program with which the Festival had begun.

FESTIVAL SERIES CLOSES WITH ALL BRAHMS PROGRAM

Continued From First Page

Brahms Program

Brahms program started with the Academic Overture, a title which belies the music. Brahms wrote it in gratitude to the University of Breslau which granted him an honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1879, and based the music on student tunes. The Third Symphony followed and after intermission came the First Symphony.

As the members of the orchestra reappeared after intermission they divested themselves of their coats, this time sans permission, and when Koussevitzky himself reappeared he, too, was coatless and had even changed from the gray trousers he had worn with his blue coat to a pair of white flannels!

Koussevitzky does not give all of Brahms its true rhythmic value. The afternoon, however, was a continuation of the lofty standard of performance which has made the Festival so successful. The slow movement of the First Symphony revealed string tone beyond description, and testimony might be adduced without end of similar evidence of the orchestra's superlative work.

Saturday Night Program

The Saturday night program was an exceptionally happy choice: Hayden's G Major Symphony, the Sibelius Seventh, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade." It evoked another of those vociferous acclamations which left the audience with hands puffed from clapping and throats rasped from shouting.

Koussevitzky long has been of the most earnest and assiduous champions of Jan Sibelius in this country. On every occasion he has spread the gospel of his music because of a faith in its message and its content. The Finnish government has granted Sibelius a pension that he might devote himself without worry to his creative work, but since 1924, when this seventh symphony was composed he has produced no important composition. On the occasion of his seventieth birthday two years ago he was honored by all the musical world but nowhere more than in America. His symphony is played in one movement. It made a tremendously profound impression, due in great part, to the marvellous Boston Orchestra which outdid itself in this performance.

Sibelius, to express his sombre thoughts, writes in registers of the tonal scale less frequently used and which benefits tremendously from the skill of such men as comprise the members of the Boston Symphony. The tone from the wind sections which has been so outstanding for its beauty served Sibelius perfectly. It is highly concentrated writing, and its fascination certainly was enhanced by the glowing tone with which the orchestra played it.

Koussevitzky played Haydn as he did Mozart, with ascetic severity, as well he might with such an orchestra. His musical purism, at least with music of the eighteenth century, displayed the absolute transparence of the orchestra's playing and the remarkable variety of its tone colors. The acoustics of the canvas shelter were remarkably faithful. The cooler, spicy air dispelled any possibility of lassitude on the part of the audience or orchestra, and the fresh vivacity of the Haydn, especially the final movement, glittered in its brilliance. The first movement was endowed with noble dignity.

The "Scheherazade" filled the second half of the program and sent the audience home wilted from excitement. Koussevitzky is on his home grounds in music of this type. The incredible discipline of the orchestra expresses every minute detail scrupulously. The music is based on the story of the Sultana Scheherazade in the Thousand and One Nights and the seductive rhythms and exotic uses of tonal resources have made it one of the most popular pieces from the orchestral repertory. Its familiarity also has been increased by its alliance with ballet in which the intrigues and escapades so audible in the music are so easily depicted. The violin solos which fall to the lot of the concertmaster were beautifully played by Richard Burgin and Koussevitzky deservedly singled him out at the close of the performance.

Orchestra Gave Its Best

As leaflets are handed out and statements issued concerning plans for future Festivals the fact remains, as this historical musical event comes to a close, that six concerts have been heard which, from their obvious preparation and intensely precise execution, were intended to make this not a mere passing amusement, but a serious, firmly founded event of the first musical importance. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra did everything in their vast powers to achieve such a goal and their unquestioned success is worthy of any and every effort to ensure and enlarge its continuance.

We in Berkshire have again become the cynosure of all the musical world. We have an opportunity at one stroke to do something for ourselves and for the progress of the art of music.

Circular Asks For Expression On Future Plans

Festival trustees today urged everyone interested to fill in the circulars handed out at the concerts Saturday and Sunday asking for suggestions and memberships for 1938. The trustees also asked for an expression on the proposed building and whether persons receiving the circulars would assist in the building fund campaign. Many of these slips have been returned, all of them reflecting interest in plans.

CONCERT HEADS MAP PROGRAM FOR FUTURE

Plan $100,000 Building To House Festival Next Year

With the six-concert series of the 1937 Berkshire Symphonic Festival sucessfully completed, sponsors of the event today looked toward the future.

The erection of a special building to house next year's series will be the first and immediate step of officials. The raising of approximately $100,000 to build an auditorium on the grounds of Tanglewood, the Festival's new permanent home in Lenox, will be discussed at a meeting of the Festival's board of trustees this week.

Average 5000

The total attendance for the six concerts is estimated at 30,000, an average of 5000 per concert. The same average was achieved last year, when some 15,000 attended

Continued on Second Page

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

AUG 1 6 1937

CAMPAIGNERS HOPE TO HOUSE CONCERTS

Berkshire Festival Directors Seek $100,000 For Permanent Building

[By the Associated Press]

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16—Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

The directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the buiding erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Rain Causes Disturbance

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

Despite the storm, yesterday's last day audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced a subscription campaign for a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000.

MASS

IE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1937

Further Obser

THEATER and SCREEN

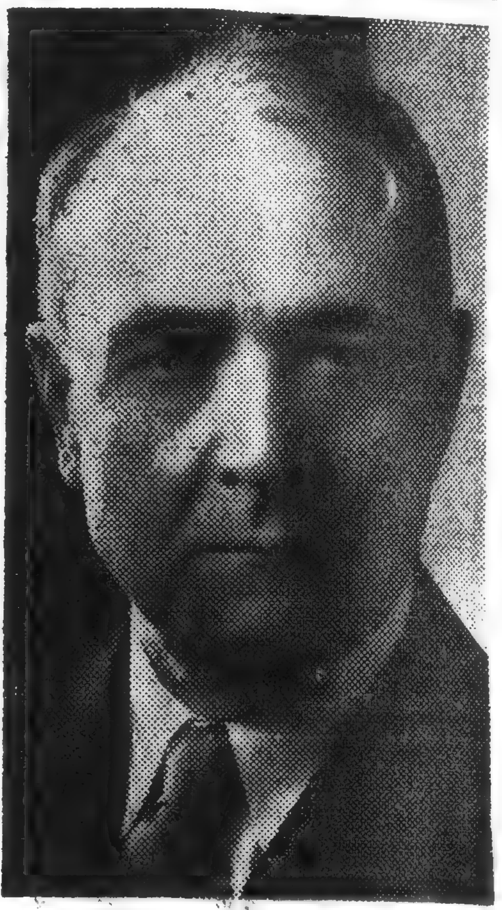
Berkshire Concerts Have Been Huge Success Despite Bad Weather

'TOM SAWYER' AGAIN IN FILMS

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky, has now completed the second season at the Berkshire festival. The concerts of both weeks have been a huge success, in spite of difficulties with the weather. Rain is something that nothing can be done about, that is until something more permanent than a tent is constructed. One condition of weather, however, is certain to afflict the Berkshire festivals, and that is heat. So long as they are held in early August there will be uncomfortably hot weather, and a permanent shed might be far worse than a tent.

We do not know what will be done about these festivals in the future. At the moment it is enough to record that there is a large public that seems anxious to attend some function of this sort. Moreover, it brings the fame and proves the excellence of the Boston Symphony to a much wider public than was previously approached. It is foolish, of course, to talk of giving opera until there are the facilities not only of the stage but of a place where an audience of 5000 could see as well as hear.

For the present it seems wise to confine any discussion of the future to a purely symphonic festival. We do not know what Dr. Koussevitzky has in mind for next year or how much the members of the orchestra relish this interruption in their holiday. From one point of view it would be wise to give the festival some definite aim and at least to play other works than those already thrice familiar to the public which attends symphony concerts in the winter. When a number of things of this nature have been done, it will be time to indulge in comparisons with Salzburg and not before.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 13 1937

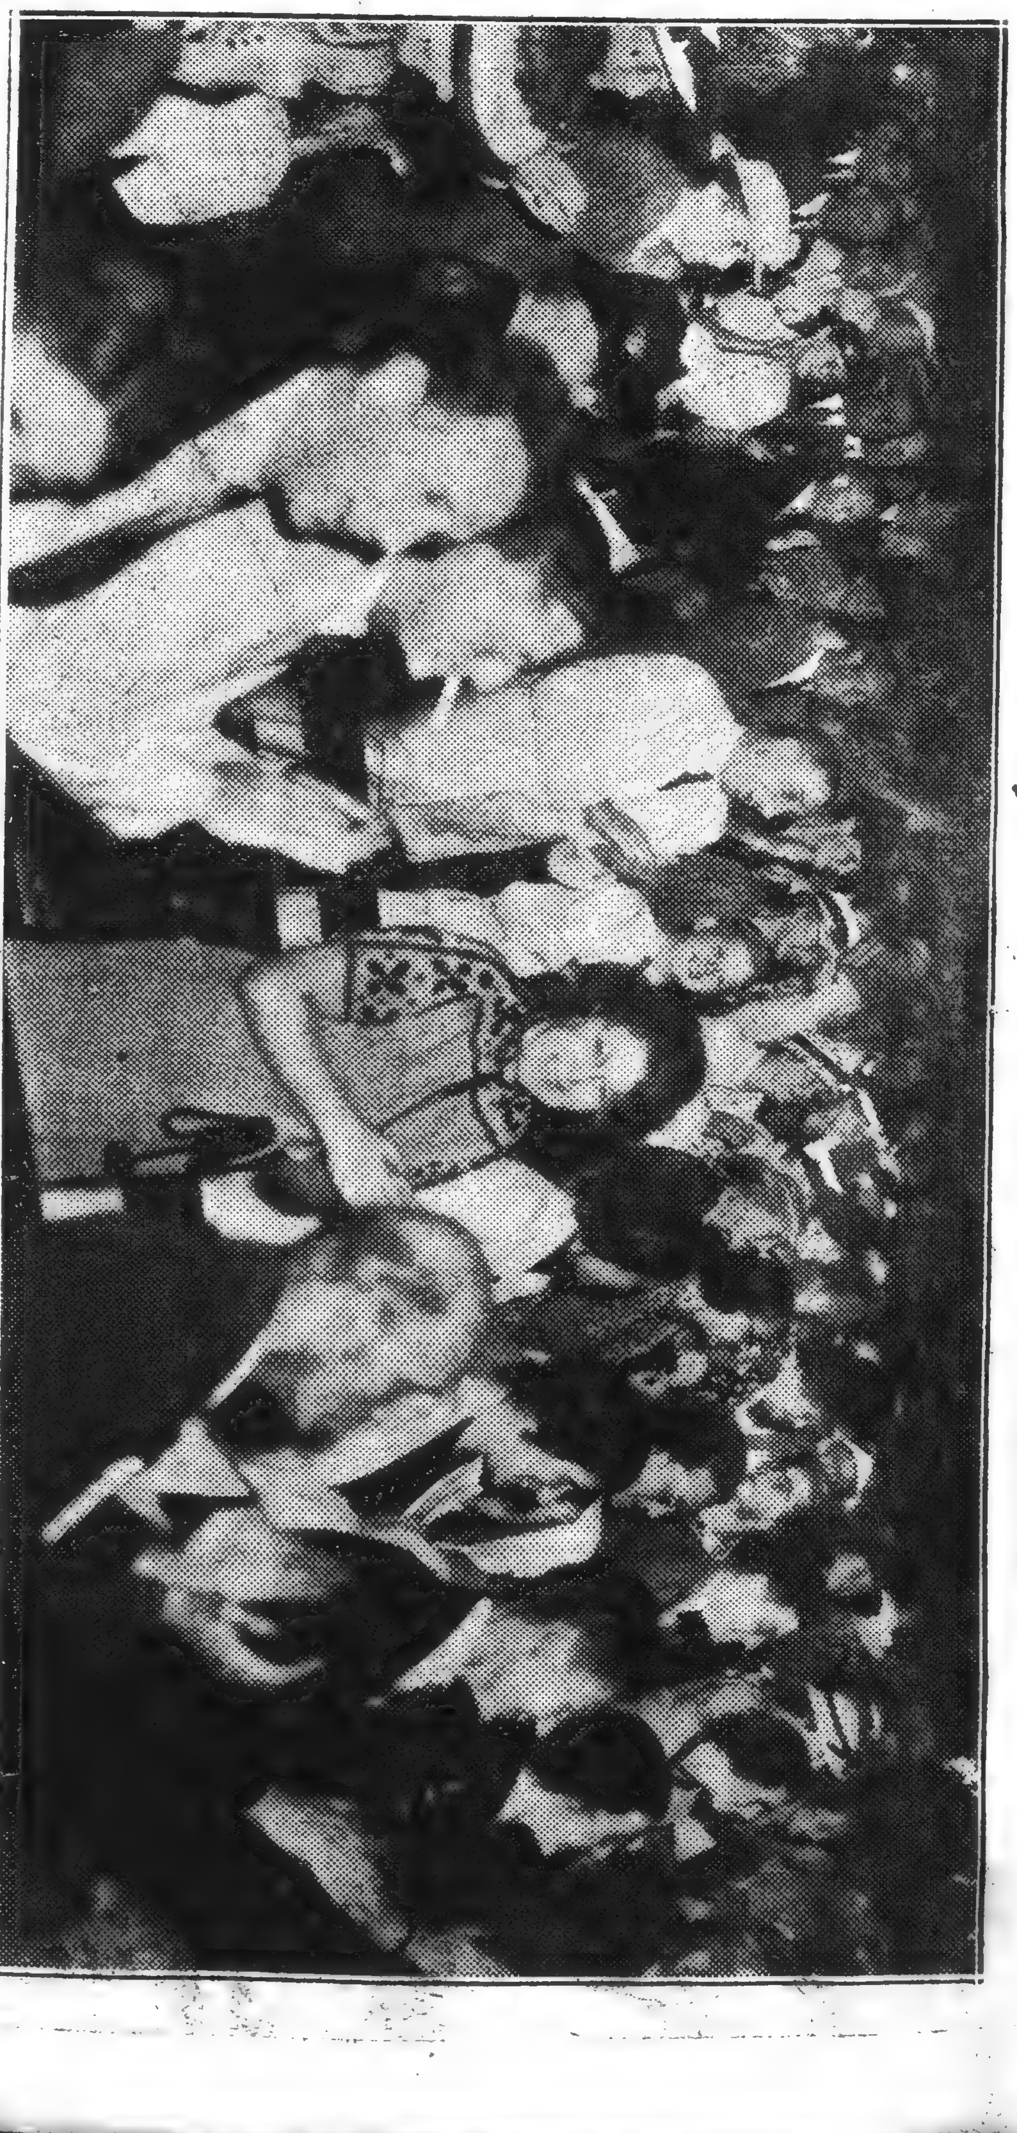
KOUSSEVITSKY BATTLES ELEMENTS AND WINS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13 -AP-Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who led his men in shirt sleeves Sunday to overcome the heat, emerged the victor today over another element of the weather—a two-hour downpour.

Tho his orchestra was drowned out half a dozen times by the tattoo of sudden rain against the tent where the Berkshire Festival's all-Wagner concert was held last night, Koussevitsky announced he would fight it out with the storm if it took until 4 a.m.

Koussevitsky eventually completed his program except for an interrupted number from "Siegfried."

Koussevitzky and Orchestra Rewarded



This picture, taken just at the conclusion of the Brahms First Symphony yesterday afternoon in the big tent at Tanglewood, tells its own story of the reception given to a great leader of a great musical organization.

Progr
Conc
S Two We
For Qua

STOCKBRI
The Fourth
Festival closed today with a rivaled in any for splendor beauty of perf
The largest weeks filled th formerly, the ton Symphony
Koussevitzky.
brought the to concerts to 2
assured that t
pay its way a
There is no
mer music
those who hea program reali and perhaps there is no oth which is give great sympho world, playin manent condu
This has p brilliance ent slipshod Sum

No Attem

For anothe is one of th not attempt t
Instead of si week, only t
The result o
gram is ade
there is no standards, a ence either.
It is also tr
none of the s
with such v nights, no because of t though perha
al ability.
All six straight sym of which co
phony Hall,
the Winter
that matter.
Curiously to begin t
Beethoven
two sympho
Fifth. He all-Brahms which was and First S played qui they were phony's sea negie Hall,

Setting o

In fact, t popular ni cert of T also was t
the eleme
of events.
men were rainstorm,
were trans
the conce
cerpts suc
were omit Physicia done a g audiences.
quarters estate, wh orchestra perhaps t Stockbrid
across a Mountain reaches o
Instead trains, th of the m kept lawr garden k beauty.
The au
stratum

Program of Unrivaled Beauty Concludes Berkshire Festival

B. Globe – Aug. 16/37

Two Weeks of Symphonic Music Notable For Quality of Choice and Performance

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug 15 (A P)—The Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this Summer.

There is no other American Summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod Summer standard.

No Attempts at Ballyhoo

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which do not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of their movie prominence, though perhaps of indifferent musical ability.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the Winter season. Some have, for that matter.

Curiously Dr Koussevitzky chose to begin the series with an all-Beethoven program which included two symphonies—the Sixth and the Fifth. He ended it today with an all-Brahms concert, the bulk of which was made up of the Third and First Symphones. These were played quite as handsomely as if they were opening the Boston Symphony's season in, for example, Carnegie Hall, New York.

Setting of Great Beauty

In fact, the nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

Physicial surroundings have also done a great deal for Berkshire audiences. The view from the headquarters building on "Tanglewood" estate, which was given the Boston orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks, is perhaps the loveliest in the Lenox-Stockbridge neighborhood, looking across a blue lake to Monument Mountain, and to the hazy further reaches of the lower Berkshires.

Instead of buildings and elevated trains, the immediate surroundings of the music tent are beautifully kept lawns. The "foyer" is a formal garden known many decades for its beauty.

The audience has come from every stratum of society—it is gathered in the center of the Massachusetts "Summer society belt," but it is by no means confined to estate holders

Heard by Many Notables

Even the movies have been represented, by Miriam Hopkins, among others. Many stage people, Ambassadors, including Norman H. Davis, Ambassador at large, and musicians, such as Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist and Alma Gluck have been among the thousands.

The Berkshire neighborhood bristles with cultural undertakings throughout the Summer, the oldest of which, musically speaking, are the Coolidge concerts, Sunday afternoons on South Mountain, Pittsfield.

Visiting musicians have been amazed to find the Berkshire Festival including in its own announcements all the news of these other undertakings. These differ as widely as the Lenox Kennel Club's dog show Aug 21, and Ted Shawn and [illegible] men dancers, whose programs at Jacob's Pillow are invariably mentioned.

Both George W. Edman, the festival's "coordinator," and George E Judd, manager of the orchestra, report this courtesy has borne fruit generously.

"Because we have no intention of announcing more concerts than we are perfectly sure we can give up to standard," said Judd and Edman, "we plan to do only six next Summer. Later, perhaps, we shall add others.

"They will never be scratched-up events, however."

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

AUG 16 1937

BUILDING IS SOUGHT FOR BERKSHIRE FETE

Permanent Structure to House Concerts Will Be Object in Drive.

By the Associated Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., August 16.—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

The directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at Tanglewood, permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this Summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

Yesterday's last-day audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced a subscription campaign for a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000.

The festival will be repeated next year, with six concerts scattered over two weeks.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 16 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL ENDS

Koussevitzky Directs Boston Symphony at Stockbridge.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history Sunday with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The orchestra was the Boston symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000 and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this Summer.

There is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

Directors of the festival today launched a compaign for a permanent building to house concerts, which in the past have been given in the open or in tents.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

161

AUG 16 1937

Music Festival In Berkshires Ends Concerts

Performances of Boston Symphony Excel Others; Attempt No 'Stunts' to Popularize Programs

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP).—The fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod summer standard.

For another raeson, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearse dand there is no relaxation of artistic standards and no tiring of the audience.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "memorials" to George Gershwin, no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of their movie prominence.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in symphony hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season. Some have, for that matter.

Curiously Dr. Koussevitzky chose to begin the series with an all-Beethoven program which included two symphonies—the sixth and the fifth. He ended it today with an all-Brahms concert, the bulk of which was made up of the third and first symphonies. These were played quite as handsomely as if they were opening the Boston Symphony's season in, for example, Carnegie hall, New York.

In fact, the nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

Youngest Member of Orchestra and Father Play Trumpets Under Koussevitzky's Baton

Rene Voisin, left, is fourth trumpet in the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his son, Roger, right, third trumpet and assistant first trumpet.

Among the 100 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, are a father and son, both trumpeters.

The father is Rene Voisin, 42 fourth trumpet, and the son is Roger Voisin, 19, third trumpet and asistant first trumpet in the orchestra.

Youngest Member

The son is the youngest member of the orchestra and probably the youngest man in any major orchestra in the world.

Both natives of Angerx, France, where Quantro is distilled, the father and son came to America 10 years ago. The father immediately joined the Boston Orchestra, then as now conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The son attended schools in Boston, returned to France for a year, and two years ago had an audition with Dr. Koussevitzky and was accepted as a member of the orchestra when he was only 17 years old. Since then he has continued his study of the trumpet with his father and Georges Mager, first trumpeter of the orchestra.

The father, the mother and the son have taken a cottage in Lenox for the duration of the Festival, and Roger says he is now studying the double bass as "a spare tire." He will have a qualified critic in the latter instrument in Dr. Koussevitzky, who achieved international fame as a double bass player.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 16 1937

4th Berkshire Symphonic Festival Comes to Close

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP) — The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is not other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized.

For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

ARDMORE, PA.
WEEKLY CHRONICLE
AUG 27 1937

102

Metropolitan Music

A Review of Outstanding Contributions by Florence Leonard

In the summer months one is astonished to discover how much of the metropolitan music has betaken itself to the un-metropolitan countryside or seashore.

Some of it, to be sure, remains within city limits, but its reverberative beginnings in the open air are so strong and far-reaching that they will reach us in the winter months, as for instance those of the Goldman Band in New York. For Mr. Goldman, who has been giving open-air concerts for many years (his band was organized 25 years ago) announces that he will conduct a series of low-price autumn and winter concerts in New York City, beginning about the middle of October.

Glancing over the announcements in a New York paper, one finds that there was music to be had, within a short interval of various sorts and at various resorts. There was operetta, if one wished, at Randall's Island and at Jones Beach; concerts and opera at the Stadium in Connecticut a Mozart theatre will be opened, a festival orchestra will be heard. In Atlantic City opera is to be had, in Chautauqua Concerts, operas, ballets, choral programs. The Berkshires offered a Festival Orchestra Symphony series and three groups of string quartet or chamber music programs. The Adirondacks and White Mountains, Cape Cod, the Connecticut Valley and Maine make noteworthy contributions to the melodious disturbings of the summer air.

There is promise also, of a new and imposing venture at Saratoga Springs, with twenty-four string players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra as the nucleus of the group which will play a number of new works, mostly by Americans, and many other compositions, "hitherto unknown or forgotten."

Philadelphia's splendid concerts and ballets and operas at "The Dell," are good fortune for these regions, and Chicago and the West make no small nor unimportant additions to this surprising number of activities.

When one remembers the concerts of the Federal Music Project, of which only a few are included in those enumerated, it seems hardly possible that there is not music enough. Yet the fact remains that projects are already underway for new auditoriums, more concerts, better programs.

Perhaps the most striking of the summer innovations of this year, has been that at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshires. It was only three summers ago that the first experiment was made there, with symphony players chiefly from the Boston Orchestra. This year, for the second time, the whole Boston Symphony was engaged, with its regular conductor, Koussewitzky. A spacious tent gave cover on this beautiful estate, which has been given as a permanent home for the festival. There were six performances, three a week for two weeks, and the programs made no concessions to listeners of less than serious tastes. There was an all-Beethoven program, an all-Brahms, an all-Wagner, and others composed of the standard and familiar works for orchestra. The only relatively new work was by Edward Burlingame Hill.

The weather was not wholly kind, and despite the covering of the tents, a severe thunderstorm on the Wagner night outdid even the insistent drums of Wagner's boyhood overture (which, however, was not being played) so that the question of a building to house orchestra and chorus is now occupying the thoughts of the sponsors of this splendid series. The audiences numbered from 4000 to 6000, the total for the six concerts being 27,000.

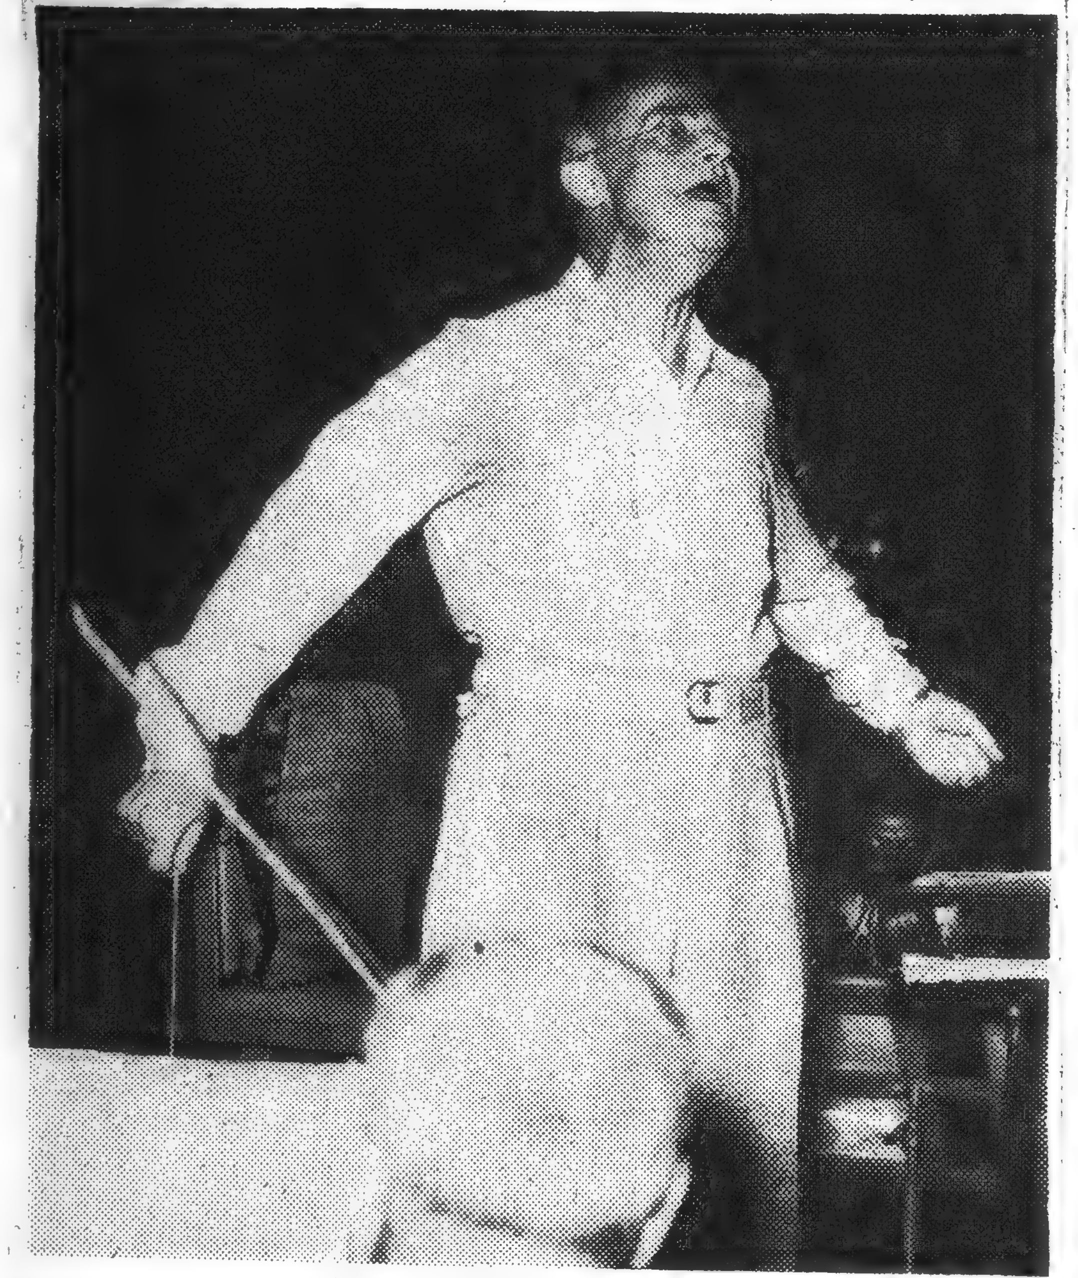
With such a vast array of audiences and programs (the New York Stadium had audiences of 18,000 and 20,223 persons on its two most crowded nights) plainly the next advance will be in quality, where such advance is needed. Different localities require different programs, different attractions, it is true, but the power of the best music to attract is strangely inalienable.

In New York, whose compositions occupied most time on the programs of the season? Wagner's and Beethoven's. How did one of the "music memory experts," as he was called, choose to praise the Goldman Band? "No other band can play Bach like the Goldman Band," he said with a touch of awe in his voice."

The "music memory experts" form, for the present writer, one of the most interesting examples of reverberations. Some one wrote of them, "There were two men who stood out as listeners. Their general mien was serious; their attitude intent. They seemed to breathe in the music like deer sniffing a down-wind scent. They were winners of this year's Music Memory Contest." They have listened for a total of 32 years, and have made 21 perfect scores, Mr. Gold of the Bronx, and Mr. Koonz also of the Bronx. Mr. Gold won with a list of twenty-five composers and selections. Mr. Koonz made one slip. Mr. Koonz is a dental mechanic. He plays the piano by ear. Mr. Gold works on pocket-books, and has taught himself to play the violin. "Sometimes I get very nervous," said Mr. Gold. "You know I once came near making a failure on such an easy one as the "Marche Slav." But this year Mr. Gold got the silver medal and Mr. Koonz the bronze one.

MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1937

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR IN ACTION



(Boston Herald-Wide World Photo)

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he rehearsed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stockbridge.

~~BREAK YIELDS $8000 IN FURS~~

Chauncy St. Store Looted Between Alarm and Arrival of Police

(Continued from First Page)

squad, obtained a description of the stolen coats and ordered a broadcast to all cruiser cars, directing that garages, parking spaces and suspected cars be searched for the loot. Sergt. James V. Crowley and Special Officer Thomas Conaty, who solved the $10,000 Middleboro leather robbery, were assigned to the case.

A check-up of the Chauncy street building showed the electric circuit had been broken only once, but that two locks were found to have been picked and a window slightly forced, indicating that the thieves had tried to get in by other means before forcing the door wired with the alarm.

The police, finding the door closed after the thieves escaped, sent for Lyman Lehrburger of 23 Parkman street, Brookline, one of the partners. When he let Detectives Albert Hurst and Dennis Riordan in, they found several coats and a squirrel neckpiece had been dropped by the robbers in their flight. Several expensive mink coats were found hanging on the racks, but Lehrberger said five inexpensive pieces had be taken.

FESTIVAL ENDS IN BERKSHIRES

Boston Symphony Plays All-Brahms Concert as Last of Series

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

THREE CONCERTS A WEEK

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod summer standard.

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "memorials," no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of

---

WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL
AUG 16 1937

$100,000 Home For Berkshire Festival Sought

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building

---

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 16 1937

Music Group Opens Building Drive

Stockbridge, Mass. —(AP)— Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 16 1937

FESTIVAL SEEKS PERMANENT HOME

First Steps Taken in Drive as Stockbridge Ends Musical Programs.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts, which, in the past, have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded, the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Rain Proves Handicap

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Serge Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help.

Simple Structure Wanted

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Fete Must Raise Funds Or Discontinue

The executive committees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra jointly announced today before the closing concert of the 1937 Festival that they are agreed on the necessity for a permanent music shed to house next year's concerts and that the Festival group was prepared to move immediately to raise $100,000 for such a structure.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who through his concerts here has added to his many admirers, declares that it is impossible to conduct the Festival another year unless steps are taken to avoid interruptions by storms such as occurred last Thursday night.

A building of simple design, open on the sides, which will harmonize with the surroundings at Tanglewood, is contemplated by the Festival group.

The announcement followed a meeting of the two groups at the home of the Festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft of the Boston Board; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey, Jr., Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman, representing the Festival.

The statement from the meeting follows:

"Our groups are in complete accord. The building must be of simple design, completely open on the sides, but with sides affording protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The Festival group agrees to conduct a campaign for $100,000 with which to erect the music shed, the stage and tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours where a Festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Anyone interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1937

5,500 Attend Last Concert Of Berkshire Festival

Total Attendance for 4th Annual Series Is 30,000

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The sixth and final concert in the fourth annual Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, ended tonight at Tanglewood. The largest audience in the four-years heard an all-Brahms program. At least 5,500 persons were present. Extra seats were provided and hundreds sat upon the lawn.

At the conclusion of the final number, the Symphony No. 1 in C minor in four movements, the audience stood, many on settees, and cheered and applauded for ten minutes. Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled again and again. Total attendance at the six concerts was about 30,000.

George W. Edman, chairman of the executive committee of the Berkshire Festival, said tonight the gate receipts today were $1,112, which exceeded by $250 the receipts at any other festival program this year.

It is understood several $1,000 subscriptions have been promised for the proposed new permanent music shed. The budget this year was $40,000, and Mr. Edman said the festival at least will break even.

ARDMORE, PA.
WEEKLY CHRONICLE
AUG 27 1937

102

Metropolitan Music

A Review of Outstanding Contributions by Florence Leonard

In the summer months one is astonished to discover how much of the metropolitan music has betaken itself to the un-metropolitan countryside or seashore.

Some of it, to be sure, remains within city limits, but its reverberative beginnings in the open air are so strong and far-reaching that they will reach us in the winter months, as for instance those of the Goldman Band in New York. For Mr. Goldman, who has been giving open-air concerts for many years (his band was organized 25 years ago) announces that he will conduct a series of low-price autumn and winter concerts in New York City, beginning about the middle of October.

Glancing over the announcements in a New York paper, one finds that there was music to be had, within a short interval of various sorts and at various resorts. There was operetta, if one wished, at Randall's Island and at Jones Beach; concerts and opera at the Stadium; in Connecticut a Mozart theatre will be opened, a festival orchestra will be heard. In Atlantic City opera is to be had, in Chautauqua Concerts, operas, ballets, choral programs. The Berkshires offered a Festival Orchestra Symphony series and three groups of string quartet or chamber music programs. The Adirondacks and White Mountains, Cape Cod, the Connecticut Valley and Maine make noteworthy contributions to the melodious disturbings of the summer air.

There is promise also, of a new and imposing venture at Saratoga Springs, with twenty-four string players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra as the nucleus of the group which will play a number of new works, mostly by Americans, and many other compositions, "hitherto unknown or forgotten."

Philadelphia's splendid concerts and ballets and operas at "The Dell," are good fortune for these regions, and Chicago and the West make no small nor unimportant additions to this surprising number of activities.

When one remembers the concerts of the Federal Music Project, of which only a few are included in those enumerated, it seems hardly possible that there is not music enough. Yet the fact remains that projects are already underway for new auditoriums, more concerts, better programs.

Perhaps the most striking of the summer innovations of this year, has been that at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshires. It was only three summers ago that the first experiment was made there, with symphony players chiefly from the Boston Orchestra. This year, for the second time, the whole Boston Symphony was engaged, with its regular conductor, Koussewitzky. A spacious tent gave cover on this beautiful estate, which has been given as a permanent home for the festival. There were six performances, three a week for two weeks, and the programs made no concessions to listeners of less than serious tastes. There was an all-Beethoven program, an all-Brahms, an all-Wagner, and others composed of the standard and familiar works for orchestra. The only relatively new work was by Edward Burlingame Hill.

The weather was not wholly kind, and despite the covering of the tents, a severe thunderstorm on the Wagner night outdid even the insistent drums of Wagner's boyhood overture (which, however, was not being played) so that the question of a building to house orchestra and chorus is now occupying the thoughts of the sponsors of this splendid series. The audiences numbered from 4000 to 6000, the total for the six concerts being 27,000.

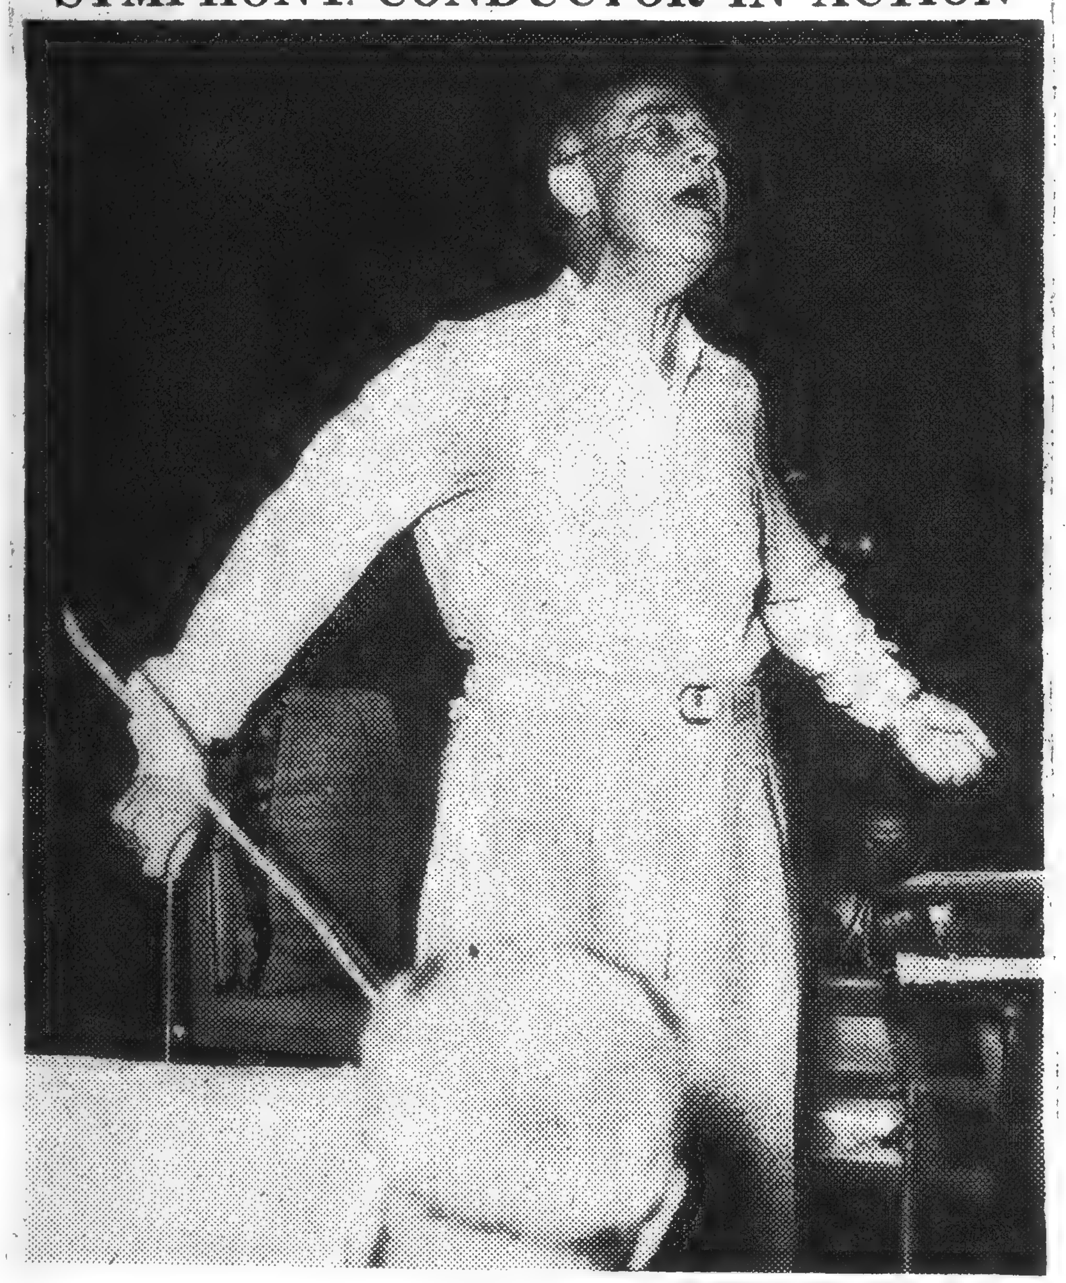
With such a vast array of audiences and programs (the New York Stadium had audiences of 18,000 and 20,223 persons on its two most crowded nights) plainly the next advance will be in quality, where such advance is needed. Different localities require different programs, different attractions, it is true, but the power of the best music to attract is strangely inalienable.

In New York, whose compositions occupied most time on the programs of the season? Wagner's and Beethoven's. How did one of the "music memory experts," as he was called, choose to praise the Goldman Band? "No other band can play Bach like the Goldman Band," he said with a touch of awe in his voice."

The "music memory experts" form, for the present writer, one of the most interesting examples of reverberations. Some one wrote of them, "There were two men who stood out as listeners. Their general mien was serious; their attitude intent. They seemed to breathe in the music like deer sniffing a down-wind scent. They were winners of this year's Music Memory Contest." They have listened for a total of 32 years, and have made 21 perfect scores, Mr. Gold of the Bronx, and Mr. Koonz also of the Bronx. Mr. Gold won with a list of twenty-five composers and selections. Mr. Koonz made one slip. Mr. Koonz is a dental mechanic. He plays the piano by ear. Mr. Gold works on pocket-books, and has taught himself to play the violin. "Sometimes I get very nervous," said Mr. Gold. "You know I once came near making a failure on such an easy one as the "Marche Slav." But this year Mr. Gold got the silver medal and Mr. Koonz the bronze one.

MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1937

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR IN ACTION



(Boston Herald-Wide World Photo)
Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he rehearsed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stockbridge.

~~BREAK YIELDS $8000 IN FURS~~

~~Chauncy St. Store Looted Between Alarm and Arrival of Police~~

~~(Continued from First Page)~~

~~squad, obtained a description of the stolen coats and ordered a broadcast to all cruiser cars, directing that garages, parking spaces and suspected cars be searched for the loot. Sergt. James V. Crowley and Special Officer Thomas Conaty, who solved the $10,000 Middleboro leather robbery, were assigned to the case.~~

~~A check-up of the Chauncy street building showed the electric circuit had been broken only once, but that two locks were found to have been picked and a window slightly forced, indicating that the thieves had tried to get in by other means before forcing the door wired with the alarm.~~

~~The police, finding the door closed after the thieves escaped, sent for Lyman Lehrburger of 23 Parkman street, Brookline, one of the partners. When he let Detectives Albert Hurst and Dennis Riordan in, they found several coats and a squirrel neckpiece had been dropped by the robbers in their flight. Several expensive mink coats were found hanging on the racks, but Lehrberger said five inexpensive pieces had been taken.~~

FESTIVAL ENDS IN BERKSHIRES

Boston Symphony Plays All-Brahms Concert as Last of Series

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

THREE CONCERTS A WEEK

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod summer standard.

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "memorials," no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of

---

WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL
AUG 16 1937

$100,000 Home For Berkshire Festival Sought

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Yesterday's audience of 4.800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky; conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 16 1937

FESTIVAL SEEKS PERMANENT HOME

First Steps Taken in Drive as Stockbridge Ends Musical Programs.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts, which, in the past, have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded, the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Rain Proves Handicap

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Serge Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27.000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40.000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100.000. Her announcement asked for money and help.

Simple Structure Wanted

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Fete Must Raise Funds Or Discontinue

The executive [illegible] of the Berkshire Sy[illegible] and the Boston S[illegible] tra jointly annou[illegible] the closing conce[illegible] Festival that the[illegible] on the necessity fo[illegible] sic shed to hous[illegible] certs and that t[illegible] was prepared to [illegible] ly to raise $100[illegible] structure.

Serge Koussev[illegible] of the Boston Sym[illegible] tra, who throug[illegible] here has added [illegible] miters, declares [illegible] sible to conduct [illegible] other year unless [illegible] to avoid interrupti[illegible] such as occurred [illegible] night.

A building of [illegible] open on the sides, [illegible] harmonize with the surroundings at Tanglewood, is contemplated by the Festival group.

The announcement followed a meeting of the two groups at the home of the Festival's pre[illegible], Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft of the Boston Board; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey, Jr. Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman, representing the Festival.

The statement from the meeting follows:

"Our groups are in complete accord. The building must be of simple design, completely open on the sides, but with sides affording protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The Festival group agrees to conduct a campaign for $100,000 with which to erect the music shed, the stage and tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours where a Festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Anyone interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1937

5,500 Attend Last Concert Of Berkshire Festival

Total Attendance for 4th Annual Series Is 30,000

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The sixth and final concert in the fourth annual Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, ended tonight at Tanglewood. The largest audience in the four-years heard an all-Brahms program. At least 5,500 persons were present. Extra seats were provided and hundreds sat upon the lawn.

At the conclusion of the final number, the Symphony No. 1 in C minor in four movements, the audience stood, many on settees, and cheered and applauded for ten minutes. Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled again and again. Total attendance at the six concerts was about 30,000.

George W. Edman, chairman of the executive committee of the Berkshire Festival, said tonight the gate receipts today were $1,112, which exceeded by $250 the receipts at any other festival program this year.

It is understood several $1,000 subscriptions have been promised for the proposed new permanent music shed. The budget this year was $40,000, and Mr. Edman said the festival at least will break even.

ARDMORE, PA.
WEEKLY CHRONICLE
AUG 27 1937

102

Metropolitan Music

A Review of Outstanding Contributions by Florence Leonard

In the summer months one is astonished to discover how much of the metropolitan music has betaken itself to the un-metropolitan countryside or seashore.

Some of it, to be sure, remains within city limits, but its reverberative beginnings in the open air are so strong and far-reaching that they will reach us in the winter months, as for instance those of the Goldman Band in New York. For Mr. Goldman, who has been giving open-air concerts for many years (his band was organized 25 years ago) announces that he will conduct a series of low-price autumn and winter concerts in New York City, beginning about the middle of October.

Glancing over the announcements in a New York paper, one finds that there was music to be had, within a short interval of various sorts and at various resorts. There was operetta, if one wished, at Randall's Island and at Jones Beach; concerts and opera at the Stadium; in Connecticut a Mozart theatre will be opened, a festival orchestra will be heard. In Atlantic City opera is to be had, in Chautauqua Concerts, operas, ballets, choral programs. The Berkshires offered a Festival Orchestra Symphony series and three groups of string quartet or chamber music programs. The Adirondacks and White Mountains, Cape Cod, the Connecticut Valley and Maine make noteworthy contributions to the melodious disturbings of the summer air.

There is promise also, of a new and imposing venture at Saratoga Springs, with twenty-four string players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra as the nucleus of the group which will play a number of new works, mostly by Americans, and many other compositions, "hitherto unknown or forgotten."

Philadelphia's splendid concerts and ballets and operas at "The Dell," are good fortune for these regions, and Chicago and the West make no small nor unimportant additions to this surprising number of activities.

When one remembers the concerts of the Federal Music Project, of which only a few are included in those enumerated, it seems hardly possible that there is not music enough. Yet the fact remains that projects are already underway for new auditoriums, more concerts, better programs.

Perhaps the most striking of the summer innovations of this year, has been that at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshires. It was only three summers ago that the first experiment was made there, with symphony players chiefly from the Boston Orchestra. This year, for the second time, the whole Boston Symphony was engaged, with its regular conductor, Koussewitzky. A spacious tent gave cover on this beautiful estate, which has been given as a permanent home for the festival. There were six performances, three a week for two weeks, and the programs made no concessions to listeners of less than serious tastes. There was an all-Beethoven program, an all-Brahms, an all-Wagner, and others composed of the standard and familiar works for orchestra. The only relatively new work was by Edward Burlingame Hill.

The weather was not wholly kind, and despite the covering of the tents, a severe thunderstorm on the Wagner night outdid even the insistent drums of Wagner's boyhood overture (which, however, was not being played) so that the question of a building to house orchestra and chorus is now occupying the thoughts of the sponsors of this splendid series. The audiences numbered from 4000 to 6000, the total for the six concerts being 27,000.

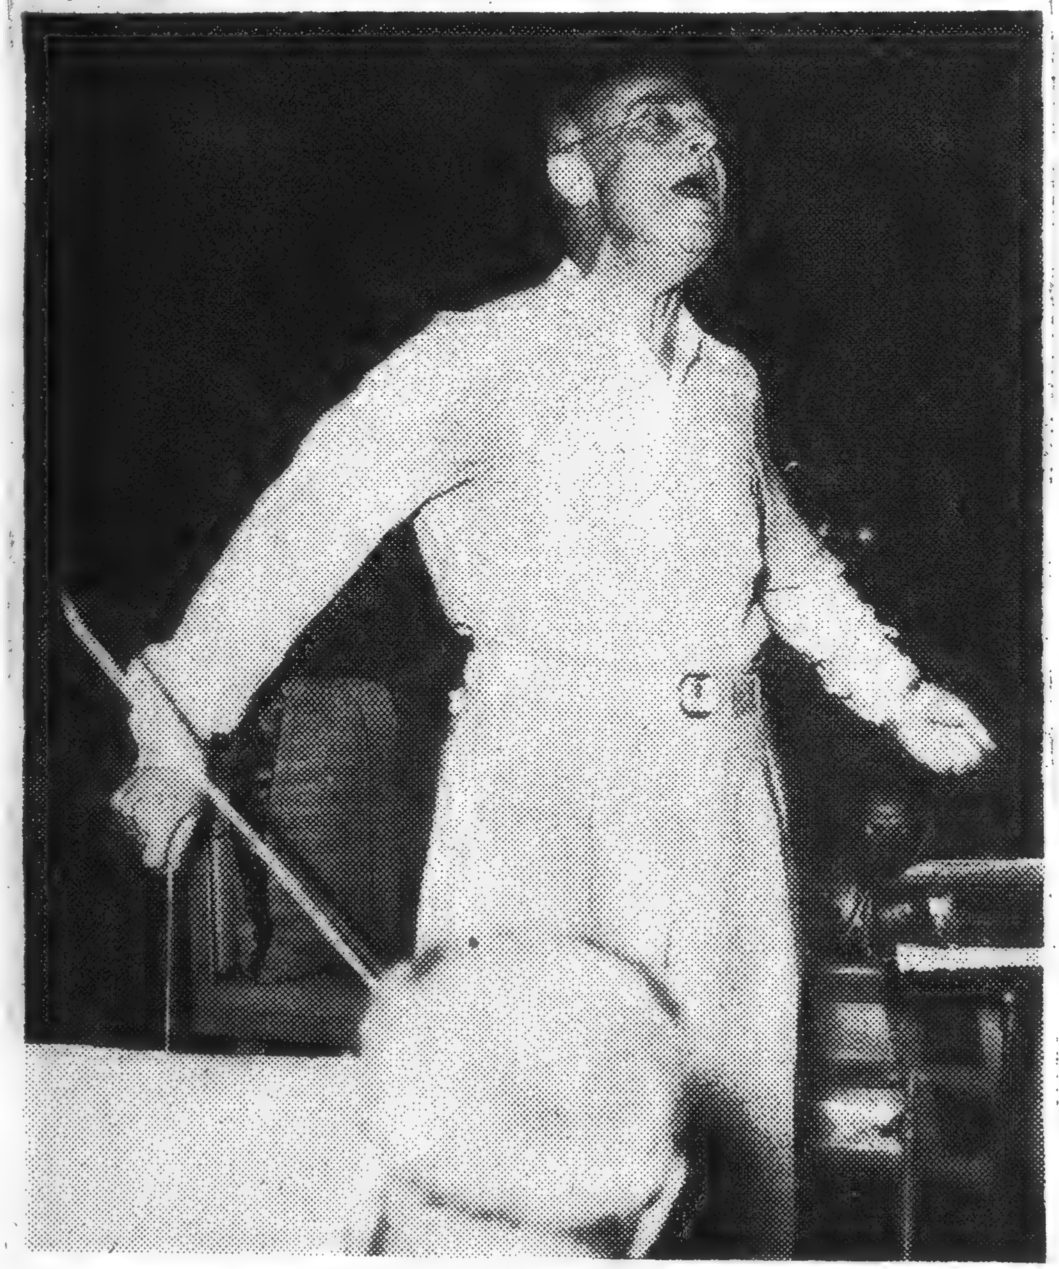
With such a vast array of audiences and programs (the New York Stadium had audiences of 18,000 and 20,223 persons on its two most crowded nights) plainly the next advance will be in quality, where such advance is needed. Different localities require different programs, different attractions, it is true, but the power of the best music to attract is strangely inalienable.

In New York, whose compositions occupied most time on the programs of the season? Wagner's and Beethoven's. How did one of the "music memory experts," as he was called, choose to praise the Goldman Band? "No other band can play Bach like the Goldman Band," he said with a touch of awe in his voice."

The "music memory experts" form, for the present writer, one of the most interesting examples of reverberations. Some one wrote of them, "There were two men who stood out as listeners. Their general mien was serious; their attitude intent. They seemed to breathe in the music like deer sniffing a down-wind scent. They were winners of this year's Music Memory Contest." They have listened for a total of 32 years, and have made 21 perfect scores, Mr. Gold of the Bronx, and Mr. Koonz also of the Bronx. Mr. Gold won with a list of twenty-five composers and selections. Mr. Koonz made one slip. Mr. Koonz is a dental mechanic. He plays the piano by ear. Mr. Gold works on pocket-books, and has taught himself to play the violin. "Sometimes I get very nervous," said Mr. Gold. "You know I once came near making a failure on such an easy one as the "Marche Slav." But this year Mr. Gold got the silver medal and Mr. Koonz the bronze one.

MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1937

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR IN ACTION



(Boston Herald-Wide World Photo)

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he rehearsed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stockbridge.

~~BREAK YIELDS $8000 IN FURS~~

Chauncy St. Store Looted Between Alarm and Arrival of Police

(Continued from First Page)

squad, obtained a description of the stolen coats and ordered a broadcast to all cruiser cars, directing that garages, parking spaces and suspected cars be searched for the loot. Sergt. James V. Crowley and Special Officer Thomas Conaty, who solved the $10,000 Middleboro leather robbery, were assigned to the case.

A check-up of the Chauncy street building showed the electric circuit had been broken only once, but that two locks were found to have been picked and a window slightly forced, indicating that the thieves had tried to get in by other means before forcing the door wired with the alarm.

The police, finding the door closed after the thieves escaped, sent for Lyman Lehrburger of 23 Parkman street, Brookline, one of the partners. When he let Detectives Albert Hurst and Dennis Riordan in, they found several coats and a squirrel neckpiece had been dropped by the robbers in their flight. Several expensive mink coats were found hanging on the racks, but Lehrberger said five inexpensive pieces had be taken.

FESTIVAL ENDS IN BERKSHIRES

Boston Symphony Plays All-Brahms Concert as Last of Series

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

THREE CONCERTS A WEEK

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod summer standard.

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "memorials," no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of their movie prominence, though perhaps of different musical ability.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL
AUG 16 1937

$100,000 Home For Berkshire Festival Sought

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Yesterday's audience of 4.800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky; conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 16 1937

FESTIVAL SEEKS PERMANENT HOME

First Steps Taken in Drive as Stockbridge Ends Musical Programs.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts, which, in the past, have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded, the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Rain Proves Handicap

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner—although Serge Koussevitzky continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help.

Simple Structure Wanted

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
AUG 16 1937

Berkshire Fete Must Raise Funds Or Discontinue

The executive [illegible] of the Berkshire Sym[illegible] and the Boston Sy[illegible]ony Orches[illegible]tra jointly annou[illegible] the closing conce[illegible] 1937 Festival that th[illegible] on the necessity fo[illegible] music shed to hous[illegible] concerts and that t[illegible] was prepared to [illegible]ly to raise $100[illegible] structure.

Serge Koussevi[illegible] of the Boston Sy[illegible]tra, who through [illegible] here has added to [illegible]mirers, declares [illegible]sible to conduct [illegible] other year unless [illegible] to avoid interrupti[illegible] such as occurred [illegible] Thursday night.

A building of [illegible] open on the sides, w[illegible] harmonize with the sur[illegible] at Tanglewood, is contemplate[illegible] by the Festival group.

The announcement followed a meeting of the two groups at the home of the Festival's pre[illegible], Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, pres[illegible] of the Boston Symphony Orch[illegible], Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft of the Boston Board; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey, Jr. Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman, representing the Festival.

The statement from the meeting follows:

"Our groups are in comp[illegible] accord. The building must [illegible] of simple design, completely open on the sides, but with sides afford[illegible] protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The Festival group agrees to conduct a campaign for $100,000 with which to erect the music shed, the stage and tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours where a Festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Anyone interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1937

5,500 Attend Last Concert Of Berkshire Festival

Total Attendance for 4th Annual Series Is 30,000

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The sixth and final concert in the fourth annual Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, ended tonight at Tanglewood. The largest audience in the four-years heard an all-Brahms program. At least 5,500 persons were present. Extra seats were provided and hundreds sat upon the lawn.

At the conclusion of the final number, the Symphony No. 1 in C minor in four movements, the audience stood, many on settees, and cheered and applauded for ten minutes. Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled again and again. Total attendance at the six concerts was about 30,000.

George W. Edman, chairman of the executive committee of the Berkshire Festival, said tonight the gate receipts today were $1,112, which exceeded by $250 the receipts at any other festival program this year.

It is understood several $1,000 subscriptions have been promised for the proposed new permanent music shed. The budget this year was $40,000, and Mr. Edman said the festival at least will break even.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 16 1937

'Tanglewood Tales' Festival Edition

CHEERED by the tremendous ovation at the closing concert yesterday, Serge Koussevitzky left today for Boston and tonight will meet with trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to discuss the 200 concerts planned for the winter season at Symphony Hall.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, who has been at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, two weeks, accompanied by his son, William Judd, left this morning for their summer home at Norwell. William Judd was employed at the Festival office six weeks.

Four young persons from Winsted, Conn., arrived at 7.45 and asked what time the concert was to begin.

The lost and found department has been transferred to the Festival office in Stockbridge. Gloves, bags, umbrellas, straw hats, glasses, cushions and odds and ends may be claimed there.

The delegation from Montreal included Thomas Archer, music critic of the Montreal Gazette, and Mrs. Archer; Mr. and Mrs. Graham Drinkwater, supporters of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra; Mrs. Murray Williams, Mrs. W. G. Ross, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Bryson. Mrs. Bryson is Florence Hood, the violinist, friend of Kathleen Parlow of South Mountain.

In Albert Spalding's box yesterday was Charles O'Connell, who conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra on occasions. He is a former Springfield resident, but now resides in New York where he is associated with the Victor Company.

Roy Harris, the composer, of New York, was up for the last two concerts of the Festival.

In the Springfield Republican Sunday the leading editorial article dealt with the Festival in a highly pleasing way. Francie Regal attended the concerts, wrote enthusiastically of them.

Fritz Mahler who conducts the Philadelphia opera and also conducts opera for the Columbia Broadcasting Company attended the last two concerts.

Even during the trying Thursday night the elaborate light service held without a break or a skip during the two weeks, much to the gratification of everyone, including company officials, many of whom were among the patrons of the festival. These included William A. Whittlesey, John J. O'Connell, Charles S. Van Burkirk.

On the big storm night (Thursday) the derrick crews from Pittsfield garages did a landoffice business. But little water got into machines.

The visit to Pittsfield recently for the Festival, of Mrs Louis Lombard of Riverside, Ct., formerly of the Castle de Trecano, Lugano, Switz., great granddaughter of Rev. Thomas Allen, "Parson Allen," is a reminder that today is the 160th anniversary of the battle of Bennington, in which he, at the head of a company of Berkshire patriots, took a conspicuous part. Recent visitors at Pittsfield also were Parson Allen's great-great-grandson, Louis Chauvenet, and Mrs. Chauvenet of Boston. Mr. Chauvenet is the son of Mrs. Louis Chauvenet of 101 Chestnut Street, Boston, sister of Mrs. Lombard.

"I am sorry I shall be unable to get to the office to say good-bye," said G. E. Judd, manager for the B. S. O. at the conclusion of Koussevitzky's triumph of the afternoon. "I have enjoyed immensely my stay in the Berkshires, and the way in which the press have treated us is beyond praise. I have been in close association with a member of your organization, Mr. Edman, and in all those trying days he never lost his poise or good nature. He has been a tower of strength all the way through. I never worked with a man who understood things better or with whom it was easier to get along. I hope he gets a good rest from his labors. He has earned it. I am hurrying back to Boston where I have a conference Monday night with reference to plans. Mr. Koussevitzky faces two hundred more concerts right away and a busy season is in prospect."

Among those at the afternoon performance were a number of boys from a camp nearby. They hailed from Newark, are to be in Berkshire until the end of the month, and had the time of their lives.

Everyone praised warmly the work of Willard Sistaire and his corps of ushers, program folks and ticket takers. It was universally pronounced a great job, well done. Fred T. Francis was chairman of the box section, Alec Henry in charge of the blue section. William H. Walters and Walter W. Bohan were co-chairmen in the red section. George W. Kelsey Jr. was another associate.

Two harps were in evidence on the platform but only one was in use. The other was an auxiliary, kept for emergency purposes, employed in case anything serious should happen to the other. The player spent more than an hour before the concert Sunday, tuning the beautiful golden instrument. On only one night was there an accident. Two strings snapped, but the player continued with the instrument instead of switching to the other.

Koussevitzky signed many programs, always smiling. He shook hands as he greeted persons, including numerous children.

Noting the short distance between the shell and the house where Koussevitzky went between the two parts of the program, a boy commented:

"Why doesn't he walk? It looks to me as if he had a fine pair of legs."

When the Sunday afternoon concert opened Serge had on grey trousers. When he appeared without his coat, he had on flannels and a different make of summer shoe! He had made a quick change and in so doing observed all the sartorial formalities.

During the six concerts between 500 and 600 shots were taken by the various photographers.

Lloyd Herkama, Robert W. Wellington, Elliott M. Preble, Oscar F. Haffner, Howard Reynolds, George B. Castle, Walcott Fuller, David M. Cullen Jr. were in charge of the several entrances. They were a part of efficient sixteen in this division.

Olin Downes devoted the better part of a page in the New York Times, Sunday, to an illustrated story of the Festival, with many original pictures.

A man prominent in Festival activities had dreamed frequently and thought often of being taken for a ride, but it was not until Sunday before the concert that the dream came true. He seated himself in a wheel chair for a moment of repose and was given a ride about the grounds by a friend who thought by the stunt to add to the gaiety of nations—and he did.

A. B. Nicholls and party were among those at the Saturday night performance.

Mr. and Mrs. Grenville N. Willis that day had received from their son a card showing the set-up at Salsburg. He is having a great time abroad this summer, has fallen in with Paul D. Cravath, identified with musical affairs in New York. Edward plans to spend three weeks in England before returning to the States on the Bremen. He is in second year in law school following his graduation from Harvard.

Joan Fossa and Margaret Daniels retain a pleasant memory of a meeting with Serge at intermission—his smile and his hand shake.

Miss Rose E. Trainor of the Massachusetts Division of the Blind, Boston, now in the Berkshires, attended the Sunday afternoon's concert with Miss McCormick. Mrs. N. A. Campbell has been a patron of the series and Mrs. George W. Edwards and her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Bardwell, recently come to town to be her guest, were present.

Buddy Weeks and Jack Amber distinguished themselves at the program end, with many hard working associates. The Troop of Boy Scouts from Lenox proved invaluable through the series.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Morning Telegraph
AUG 17 1937

Berkshire Festival In $100,000 Drive

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—Directors of the Berkshire Symphony Festivals, Inc., and the Boston Symphony Orchestra today agreed to promote a nation-wide campaign for $100,000 to erect an auditorium at historic Tanglewood here.

The proposed building would replace the huge tent now used to shelter an audience of 5,000 and the orchestra at the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Concerts during this, the fourth, season have been twice interrupted by torrential downpours and electrical storms. The concluding concert was presented this afternoon.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 16 1937

Concert Of Unrivalled Beauty Concludes Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony Presents All-Brahms Program In Handsome Fashion

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivalled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and virtually assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing under its permanent conductor.

Rehearsals Adequate.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod summer standard.

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "memorials" to George Gershwin, no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of their movie prominence, although perhaps of indifferent musical ability.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season. Some have been, for that matter.

Symphonies Played Handsomely.

Curiously, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to begin the series with an all-Beethoven program which included two symphonies—the Sixth and the Fifth. He ended it today with an all-Brahms concert, the bulk of which was made up of the Third and First symphonies. These were played quite as handsomely as if they were opening the Boston Symphony's season in, for example, Carnegie Hall, New York. In fact, the nearest approach to a popular night was the Wagner concert of Thursday night, and that also was the only concert in which the elements disturbed the order of events. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were bombarded by a roaring rainstorm, and so all "loud" pieces were transferred to the first half of the concert, and some quieter excerpts such as the "Siegfried Idyll" were omitted.

View Is Lovely.

Physical surroundings have also done a great deal for Berkshire audiences. The view from the headquarters building on Tanglewood estate, which was given the Boston orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is perhaps the loveliest in the Lenox-Stockbridge neighborhood, looking across a blue lake to Monument mountain, and to the hazy further reaches of the lower Berkshires.

Instead of buildings and elevated trains, the immediate surroundings of the music tent are beautifully kept lawns. The "foyer" is a formal garden known many decades for its beauty.

Even Movies Represented.

The audience has come from every stratum of society— it is gathered in the center of the Massachusetts "summer society belt," but it is by no means confined to estate holders.

Even the movies have been represented, by Miriam Hopkins, among others. Many stage people, ambassadors, including Norman H. Davis, ambassador-at-large, and musicians, such as Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist and Alma Gluck, have been among the thousands.

The Berkshire neighborhood bristles with cultural undertakings throughout the summer, the oldest of which, musically speaking, are the Coolidge concerts, Sunday afternoons on South mountain, Pittsfield.

Visiting musicians have been amazed to find the Berkshire festival including in its own announcements all the news of these other undertakings. These differ as widely as the Lenox Kennel club's dog show Aug. 21, and Ted Shawn and his men dancers, whose programs at Jacob's Pillow are invariably mentioned.

Both George W. Edman, the festival's "coordinator," and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, report this courtesy has borne fruit generously.

"Because we have no intention of announcing more concerts than we are perfectly sure we can give up to standard," said Judd and Edman, "we plan to do only six next summer. Later, perhaps, we shall add others.

"They will never be scratched-up events, however."

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
AUG 17 1937

The executive committes of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony orchestra have jointly announced that they agree on the necessity for a permanent music shed to house next year's concerts and that the Festival group is prepared to move immediately to raise $100,000 for such a structure. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, declares that it will be impossible to conduct the Festival another year unless steps are taken to avoid interruptions by storms such as occurred last Thursday night.

The Festival group contemplates a building of simple design, open at the sides, which will harmonize with the sorrundings at Tanglewood, the estate where the concerts are held. The statement which they have issued folows:

"Our group are in complete accord. The building must be of simple design, completely open on the sides, but with sides affording protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The Festival group agress to conduct a campaign for $100,000 with which to erect the music shed, the stage and tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours where a Festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Anyone interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass."

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
AUG 18 1937

With the close of the summer series of concerts in the Berkshires by the famous Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, there has arisen a desire to insure the permanence of these concerts by a campaign to raise funds to build a suitable "music shed" to protect musicians and auditors from the weather. It appears that last week serious discomfort was caused by a sudden shower. Mr. Koussevitzky says he regards it as impossible to continue unless a shelter is erected. The idea is to make it simple and to insure its harmony with the local scenery, and above all to make it with open sides so that it may be free from the objection of being too hot and close. Some way will be found to protect those sitting near the open sides from the rain. No details are given in the circular before me as to the size of the structure, but I assume it would be designed to shelter several thousand. Beyond this idea looms the very alluring notion that "America is ready for a shrine such as this in which a festival of significance and purpose can be developed." Sort of like Baireuth, maybe.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 16 1937

FOURTH BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY GIVEN

Largest Audience in History Hears Music Festival.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16—Those who believe that music begins with Beethoven and ends with Brahms would have found verification in the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which concluded yesterday afternoon with a program devoted to the last of the great B's, rounding out a series of concerts which began ten days ago with a Beethoven evening. Skeptical festivalians rubbed their eyes in amazement as the second perfect day of the week end manifested the weather's attonement for its earlier capriciousness. Appropriately, the festival ended with the largest gathering of its history, an audience that filled the seats beneath the tent and flowed onto the surrounding lawns saluting Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony with a long-continued ovation.

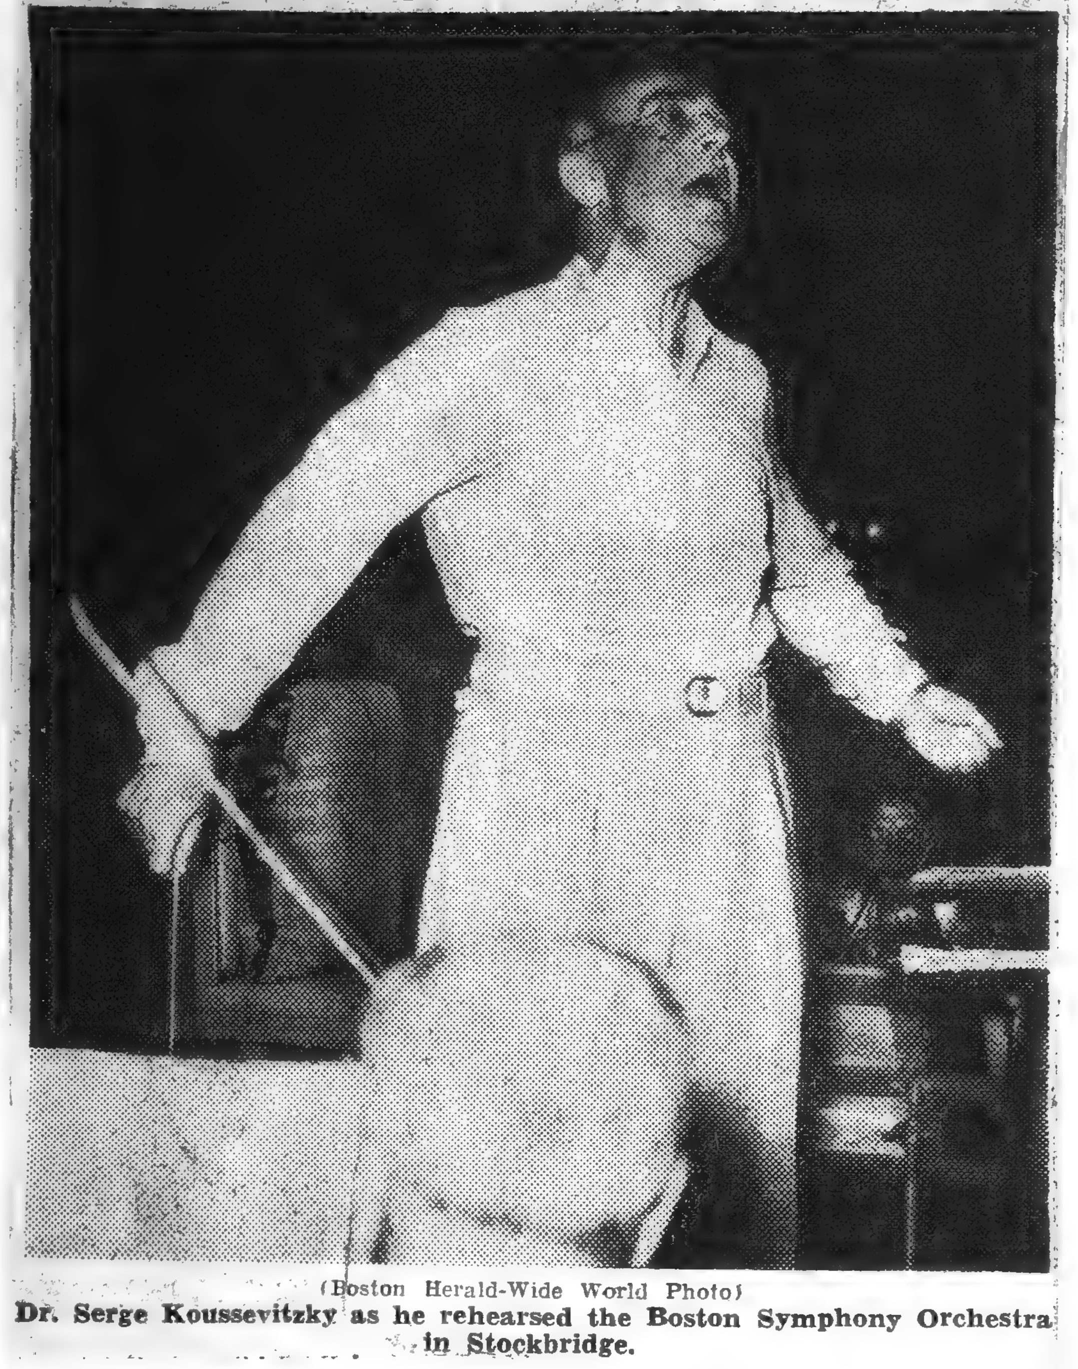
It has been the unique experience of those fortunate enough to hear a representative number of these concerts to find that not only their respect for the great orchestra and its fine conductor has been heightened, but, more importantly, their affection for music has been increased by the beauty and repose of Tanglewood's lovely surroundings. Wherefore it is well to know that plans are being energetically developed to raise the money needed to build an appropriate permanent home for future concerts. At a meeting yesterday afternoon in the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, it was the conclusion reached jointly by representatives of the festival and the orchestra that $100,000 must be raised as a building fund, with which to provide a structure of "simple design, open on the sides, which will harmonize with the surroundings at Tanglewood." Thursday night's experience was conclusive proof that the uses of a tent are largely confined to clear weather.

Certainly it has been amply demonstrated that neither time nor place are handicaps to the Bostonians, that their superb qualities of organization and direction are as accessible in August as in December. Particularly under the ideal conditions of the last two days they provided readings of the Haydn Symphony in G (No. 88), Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade" and the Brahms "Academic Festival" overture as memorable for sensitivity of direction and excellence of performance as anything they accomplish under winter routine. And the brilliance with which the closing chords of the Brahms First Symphony, which concluded the festival, were thundered forth left one with a feeling that a building which would no more than duplicate the excellent acoustic properties of this year's temporary shell would be indeed satisfying.

Though no plans more definite for the next festival than the bare information that it will duplicate the length of this year's have been announced, it is possible that a carefully studied performance of such an epochal choral work as the Bach "St. Matthew Passion" or the Brahms "Requiem" may be scheduled. That, at any rate, is the direction in which the thoughts of the sponsors turn, rather than to opera, which they regard as too complex for the resources at hand. It might be well, too, for the festival committee to consider the merits of a Sibelius cycle, which would present the symphonies, tone poems and violin concerto in a representative selection, particularly since Dr. Koussevitzky has done as much to popularize the works of the Finn as any conductor in this country. No impression has been left more strongly by the mounting tide of enthusiasm through the concerts of the last few years than that this is a chosen spot for a great musical activity to flourish.

ONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1937- B. Herald

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR IN ACTION



(Boston Herald-Wide World Photo)

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he rehearsed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stockbridge.

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
AUG 17 1937

MUSIC HEADS LAUNCH DRIVE

Permanent Home Sought for Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 17 (AP)—Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of Sunday's closing concert had been sounded, the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner — although Serge Koussevitsky, conducting his Boston Symphony continued the concert after rearragning the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, Sunday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Even if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building; some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitsky's desire that it be weatherproof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith, and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a simple structure, which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitsky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight sympothy concerts. Eliel Saarinen, of Cranbrook, Mich., the architect, already has inspected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all-Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all-Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt, consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

FESTIVAL ENDS IN BERKSHIRES

Boston Symphony Plays All-Brahms Concert as Last of Series

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The fourth Berkshire symphonic festival closed its two-week history today with a concert probably unrivaled in any festival of the world for splendor of conception, or for beauty of performance.

The largest audience of the two weeks filled the huge buff tent. As formerly, the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, the conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The crowd today brought the total attendance for six concerts to 27,000, and practically assured that the undertaking would pay its way again this summer.

THREE CONCERTS A WEEK

There is no other American summer music venture comparable, those who heard today's all-Brahms program realized. For one thing, and perhaps the most important, there is no other festival in America which is given wholly by one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, playing only under its permanent conductor.

This has produced a finish and brilliance entirely outside the usual slipshod summer standard.

For another reason, this festival is one of the very few which does not attempt to give concerts nightly. Instead of six or seven programs a week, only three are to be had here. The result of this is that each program is adequately rehearsed, and there is no relaxation of artistic standards, and no tiring of the audience either.

It is also true that there have been none of the stunts usually connected with such ventures—no "memorials," no "popular" nights, no great "names" engaged because of their movie prominence, though perhaps of different musical ability.

All six concerts have been straight symphony concerts, any one of which could be played in Symphony Hall, Boston, at the height of the winter season.

COLUMBUS, GA.
ENQUIRER
AUG 20 1937

THE SECOND BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival to be given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra and the ~~first to~~ be held in their new home came to an end last Sunday. Olin Downes writing in the New York Times says it is unique among American music festivals; unique in qualities of one of the greatest conductors of this time; in the excellence of the orchestra; unique in the wonderful site which is now the permanent endowment of the festival. He predicts for it fame, reputation and patronage.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
164 AUG 16 1937

BRAHMS PROGRAM IN THE BERKSHIRES

Koussevitzky Directs Boston Symphony as the Fourth Berkshire Festival Ends

5,000 ATTEND THE CONCERT

Campaign Opened for Fund of $100,000 for Music Shed—Dates for 1938 Set

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—As the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end at Tanglewood this afternoon a campaign was launched for a fund of $100,000 to be used for the construction of a permanent music shed. Next year's festival is contingent upon the success of this drive.

The music of Brahms, played superbly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, brought the festival to a close. First came the stately periods of the "Academic Festival" overture, then the glowing personal Third symphony and, as a fitting peroration, the sublimity and the grandeur of the First symphony.

A mellow, cloudless day, enveloping Tanglewood in a blend of green, blue and other sunlit hues, was the setting for the final concert of the series of six. An audience estimated at over 5,000 turned out to bid the orchestra and its conductor au revoir. Like the audiences at the previous concerts in the course of the past two week-ends, this assemblage responded to the performances with tumultuous approval.

The record for the festival is a total attendance of about 30,000, with the receipts about equal to the cost of the concerts. The final audit, to be made public later, will indicate a small sum one way or the other. The festival authorities are satisfied, however, that the doubling of the length of the festival, accomplished this year, was justified. Only bad weather at four of the six concerts prevented an easy balance of the budget.

Dates Set for Next Year

The dates set for next year's concerts are Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Boston Symphony and Mr. Koussevitzky will be back provided that the music shed is constructed. The sponsors of the festival hope that their campaign, which will be conducted on a nation-wide basis, will make the edifice possible.

The decision to conduct the campaign was made at a meeting of representatives of the Berkshire Symphony Festival, Inc.; and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, in Stockbridge. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Orchestra, and Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft, of the board of the orchestra; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey Jr., Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman of the festival group.

The joint group issued the following statement:

"Our groups are in complete accord. The building must be of simple design, completely open on the side, but with sides affording protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The festival group agrees to conduct a campaign for $100,000, with which to erect the music shed, the stage and the tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours, where a festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Any one interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Seventh Symphony Heard

The outstanding performance on last night's penultimate program was the Sibelius Seventh symphony. This is a work of searching simplicity and concentration. The clear night enabled the orchestra to play with all its brilliance of tone. The out-of-doors heightened the effectiveness of Sibelius's Northern voices. It was a spaciously designed interpretation, with one slow section, for example, building up with the abundance and incontrovertible logic of Bach in his noble pages.

It was encouraging to note that the Sibelius symphony, for all the problems its subtlety and tightness pose, was received most warmly last night. It was preceded by a vivid performance of a Haydn symphony and followed by the more familiar "Schéhérazade" of Rimsky-Korsakoff. Nevertheless, it won the evening's accolade.

There is little new that can be said of Mr. Koussevitzky's Brahms. He realized the rhapsodic, romantic nature of the music while making manifest the wonderfully wrought, solid foundation. The unsurpassed nobility of the last movement of the C Minor symphony was a fitting climax to a festival which looks to the future with high hopes and broad purpose.

GENEVA, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 17 1937

LAUNCH DRIVE FOR BUILDING FOR CONCERTS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—Directors of the Berkshire symphonic festival today launched a campaign for a permanent building to house concerts which in the past have been given either in the open air or under huge tents.

Before the final strains of yesterday's closing concert had been sounded, the directors, supported by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra, took steps to have the building erected at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the festival.

Although the acoustics at concerts staged this summer proved superb, partly due to the accidentally excellent qualities of the temporary wood stage, the canvas proved no protection against the noise of the rain.

The rain last Thursday even drowned out the bombastic Richard Wagner — although Serge Koussevitzky, conducting his famed Boston Symphony continued the concert after rearranging the program somewhat.

Despite the storm, yesterday's audience of 4,800 brought the total attendance up to approximately 27,000 for the six concerts. It practically assured the management that its $40,000 budget would be met.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the Festival board announced the first step had been taken toward a permanent building which will cost, it is estimated, about $100,000. Her announcement asked for money and help. Een if there should be a surplus from ticket receipts, she said, this must go into the music fund. The building must come from outside contributions.

It will be a simple building, some might even call it a "shed." It is Dr. Koussevitzky's desire that it be weather proof and its acoustics perfect. Miss Smith, and the others of the festival board, feel that in addition it must be a very simple structure which will fit perfectly into the quiet beauty of "Tanglewood," and be adaptable to any future extension of festival plans.

The festival will be repeated next year, six concerts scattered over two weeks. But Dr. Koussevitzky has hinted that large choral works, perhaps even opera, may be in the future, and for these a more ambitious stage would be needed than for straight symphony concerts. Eliel Saarinen of Cranbrook, Michigan, the architect, already has inspected the site.

This summer's festival began with an all Beethoven program, and ended last night with an all Brahms concert. It was kept, most of the many visitors felt consistently on as high a plane as any festival in the world.

Many with experience of Salzburg, Austria's famous summer musical venture, went farther and insisted that Koussevitzky's program bettered the Salzburg standard.

COURIER
AUG 19 1937

FINAL CONCERT IN STOCKBRIDGE

Koussevitsky In Last Appearance Of Season

The determination and fine showmanship of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony saved Thursday night's concert from being a disapopintment to those who traveled many miles to hear the all-Wagner program.

After three attempts to start the "Rienzi" overture, Dr. Koussevitsky had to give in to the torrent of rain which pelted down on the canvas. Finally, however, the number was completed and announcement was made by Richard Bergin, concertmaster, that the "Siegfried Idyl" would be substituted by "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," but this was no sooner begun than the downpour made it necessary to give up the concert temporarily. At this point the audience and orchestra enjoyed a temporary intermission. Presently Mr. Judd, manager of the Symphony, announced the program to follow.

Dr. Koussevitsky now attempted the furious whirlwind "Ride of the Valkyries" which turned out to be the most spectacular number of the evening with the rumble of distant thunder providing realistic accompaniment.

The "Tannhauser" overture was enjoyed in comparitive relief from the disturbing elements; after which announcement was made by Dr. Koussevitsky of a short intermission.

After intermission Dr. Koussevitsky offered the "Waldweben," defeated in the earlier program. This time it was played beautifully and without the slightest disturbance. This number was followed by the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the concert closed with the poignant "Prelude and Love-Death," from "Tristan and Isolde." Dr. Koussevitsky's interpretation of this ever-thrilling selection was extremely sympathetic and beautiful after the hectic difficulties the elements afforded earlier in the evening.

The only regret of the evening was the fact that the tender and serene "Idyl" had to be omitted.

Saturday evening's concert was favored with good weather and a "piece of a moon" which bathed the beautiful gardens and surroundings, making "Tanglewood" a truly glamorous setting for the performance. The delicate Haydn and the powerful Sibelius symphonies offered striking contrasts on the first half of the evening's program. The Sibelius work is tremendous and requires an untiring and talented group of musicians to play it. The concert closed with the colorful and exotic "Scheherazade" of Rimsky-Korsakov. Here, as in the Tchaikovsky work, Dr. Koussevitsky seemed to give us an insight into the great souls of these Russian composers. Richard Bergin, concertmaster of the orchestra, made the selection even more thrilling by his masterful handling of the solo violin passages. The audience cheered Koussevitsky after this number, just as they had done a week before after the Tchaikovsky work. The third movement of "Scheherazade" was especially thrilling with its familiar and tender love-song.

It would seem that Koussevitsky saved the best to the last for his enthusiastic audience in this memorable series, for I believe it is safe to say that Sunday's Brahms program will stand out in the memories of the music lovers who attended this year's festival, as the most exciting and thrilling program offered. Dr. Koussevitsky's reading of the Third Symphony with its broad and sweeping melodies, was truly a great experience for those who attended. More than one person left the concert that night humming the beautiful theme at the beginning of the third movement, which portrays the bourgeois, yet profound Brahms at his best.

Many times it has been disputed whether Brahms C Minor or Beethoven's C Minor Symphony is the greater, but after Sunday's concert, one is tempted to side with Brahms. Dr. Koussevitsky seemed to have been inspired by some heavenly muse during the playing of the great symphony. The powerful anthem-like theme in the last movement swept one into the clouds. The tremendous ovation Dr. Koussevitsky received at the close of the concert was as sincere and heartfelt as his rendition of the music.

Surely, one could wish for no more beautiful location than "Tanglewood" or any greater organization to interpret the truly fine music than we have been treated to this summer. It is hoped that next year's audience will be just as enthusiastic and appreciative in their tribute to Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Aug. 18/38 THE GAZETTE, MONTREAL

Koussevitzky Wildly Applauded At Berkshire Symphonic Festival

By THOMAS ARCHER.

Stockbridge, Mass., August 17.—Capacity audiences, including a number of Montrealers, were present on Saturday and Sunday at the two final concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood near Stockbridge. This is the beautiful estate in the midst of the Berkshire Hills presented as a permanent home for the festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

The festival as a whole consisted of six concerts given by the famous orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The house on the estate has been converted into offices including a press room, a telegraph agency and a music stall where scores and records of the music performed may be obtained.

The concerts themselves take place in a huge marquee erected in the vicinity and surrounded by tall pines and stately elms. It seats about six thousand people and every seat was taken at each of the concerts. Not only residents make up the audiences but also visitors from Boston, New York, Philadelphia and even as far west as California and as far south as Florida. Vast crowds contented themselves with sitting on the numerous benches scattered about the grounds or strolling on the lawns overlooking Lake Mahkeenac situated at the foot of the hill on which the estate lies.

The concert on Saturday consisted of a miscellaneous programme including Sibelius's Seventh Symphony, something of a novelty for many of those present. Sunday's concert was devoted entirely to the music of Brahms.

The playing was uniformly magnificent as would be expected of a great orchestra like the Boston. The sponsors are undoubtedly justified in claiming that there was never any question of the artistic success of the festival. And that success would appear to be such that the North American public has decided that there shall be no doubt about the practical issues at point. The cost of seats is about the same as is charged for similar concerts in the city during the winter season. The thousands pay it and are glad of the opportunity to do so.

Dr. Koussevitzky has always been for this interviewer one of the great conductors practising on this continent. He has the happy faculty, rare among ranking conductors, of identifying himself completely with the body of men he directs. He is captain of the ship and, at the same time, a member of the crew.

The features of his conducting consist in absolute precision and authority with a fine sense of the human values of a score. These qualities enable him to present the music exactly as it is written and with complete understanding of what is implied by the composer.

They are qualities which were particularly apparent in the Brahms programme on Sunday. It consisted of the Academic Festival Overture and the First and Third Symphonies. The symphonies are, of course, extremely familiar but there were several things in the Third in F major which the writer, for one, became aware of for the first time, notably the extraordinarily detailed and intimate performance of the slow movement. This was poetry of the Brahmsian twilight, melancholy and nostalgic just as the prevailing mood of the first movement embodied the heroic and wistful mood implicit in the Brahms motto "Frei aber einsam" (free but lonely).

Neither here nor in the performance of the First Symphony was there anything heavy and ruminating. The music was essentially lofty and often grave and sometimes tragic. But these penetrative readings showed Brahms lyrical and contemplative, serene and noble, romantic and even sentimental, but never pompous and turgid. If the composer ever seems to be guilty of the latter faults they may be attributed in reality to the mistakes of his interpreters. In this sense these festival performances were illuminating enough to be treasured as model ones.

One speaks with less ability to make comparisons in regard to the performance of Sibelius's Seventh Symphony on Saturday evening. That it was an outstanding one may be accepted on absolute grounds. It is the last of the composer's symphonies to be published so far dates from 1924, and is in one movement. The clear, concise, grand execution it was given here made it sound less austere and more conservative in its manner of expression than might have been expected. That it is one of the great works of the present epoch Dr. Koussevitzky and his men made very apparent beginning with the tremendous scalar passage with which it opens.

The execution generally stressed the tunefulness of the music, its slow but inevitable rise and fall and the vast plan of its structure. The impression was aided considerably by the wonderful work of the wind section of the Boston orchestra The various solo passages for the wind instruments showed that each leading instrumentalist is pretty much of a virtuoso in his own right. The interpretation was, generally speaking, a straightforward one. Dr Koussevitzky concentrated upon a directness of statement here which is peculiarly suited to the music just as in the Brahms music he paid special attention to the meticulous details although never at the expense of the shape of the whole.

In addition to the Sibelius work on Saturday night, and admirably in contrast to it, was Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, one of the Paris series. It was played with a lilt, with plenty of go and with a superb precision and the kind of balance without which Haydn would not be Haydn. It enforced the impression gained on previous occasions that Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretations are not Russian, German or French but simply musical and according to the intention of the composer.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" Suite was given as the concluding item on Saturday. Heard even under these ideal circumstances it seemed long for what it had to say. Indeed one still believes that it is at its best when heard as an accompaniment to a visual ballet. Nevertheless this performance, personally served as no other to display the colorful instrumentation so that the music glowed as it were like an oriental tapestry.

The huge audiences at both concerts greeted the orchestra with tremendous enthusiasm. At the end of the final concert on Sunday afternoon resident merchant prince and humble tourist alike shouted and waved hats as Dr. Koussevitzky and his men stood up and took their final bow.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is magnificently supported. An example of this was shown after the Wagner concert last Thursday when, due to storm and rain, the music was given under considerable handicap. The committee met at once and moved that a hundred thousand dollars be raised to construct a permanent "music shed" to be ready for the festival next year.

Canada plays its small part in the Berkshire festival, Sir Ernest MacMillan is a member of the advisory board. Canadians from Toronto and Montreal are showing their interest by attending and excellent provision has been made for the Canadian press. Montrealers present at the concerts over the week-end included Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Drinkwater, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Bryson, Mrs. Murray Williams and Mrs. W. G. Ross.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 19 1937

BOOK OF SKETCHES AT LIBRARY HERE

Charcoal Drawings of Boston Symphony Members

Much interest has been shown in a book of charcoal sketches of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra which has been on display at the North Adams Public Library. The book is now released for circulation.

Jerome Brush, the artist, with the strokes of his crayon and the sympathy of his pen has brought to light the individuality of the one hundred and nine members of the orchestra. Each musician sat for him in the little room that houses the Casadeus Collection; each played for him a solo in order to banish the last vestige of self consciousness, and from each he has drawn comments, bits of personal history, and the gleam of aspirations which are characteristic."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 17 1937

Fund Sought to House Berkshire Music Fete

Sponsors Prepared to Raise $100,000 for Shelter

In a joint statement made yesterday, the executive committees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra said ~~that they are~~ agreed upon the necessity of a permanent music shed to house next summer's festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and that the festival committee was prepared to move immediately to raise $100,000 for such a structure. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared that it would be impossible to conduct the festival for another season unless steps are taken to avoid interruptions by storms, such as those which upset last Thursday's concerts.

Tentative plans for next summer contemplate six concerts, as in the series which closed last Sunday, to be held on two Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays in the first half of August.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 19 1937

165

Boston Conductor Rehearses Here

Richard Burgin, concertmaster for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this morning conducted a rehearsal of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra, a unit of the Federal Music Project, will give a concert at the Bushnell Shell next Wednesday evening with Mr. Burgin conducting.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 19 1937

Festival Given $10,000 For Music Shed To Be Built at Tanglewood

Surprise Gift Made by "Friend of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith," President and Campaign Chairman—Donor Expresses Hope That Her Contribution Is but Forerunner of Others of Similar Amount, and Asks Everyone To Support Campaign

A surprise gift of $10,000 came to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today for its building fund, the forerunner of what Festival officials hope will be several others of similar amount.

"Friend of Miss Smith"

The gift is made anonymously by "a friend of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith," president of the Festival and chairman of the campaign for the music shed at Tanglewood.

Resides in West

The friend, who said she did not want her name mentioned at this time, resides in the west. In presenting the gift she expresses the hope that many others will rally immediately so that "there need be no doubt of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the concerts of exceptional artistic merit presented by the Boston Sym-

FESTIVAL GETS GIFT OF $10,000 FOR MUSIC SHED

Continued From First Page

phony Orchestra and its eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky."

America Is Ready

"America," she says, "is ready for just such a great music center as contemplated and we are fortunate that such a tremendous start has been made toward realization of the ideal.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1937

CHARCOAL SKETCHES ARE EXHIBITED

NORTH ADAMS, Aug. 20.—A book has been placed on display at the local library consisting of a number of charcoal sketches of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The sketches were on exhibition at the Berkshire Playhouse last season.

Jerome Brush, the artist, with the strokes of his crayon and the sympathy of his pen has brought to light the individuality of the one hundred nine members of the orchestra. Each musician sat for him in the little room that houses the Casadeus Collection; each played for him a solo in order to banish the last vestige of self consciousness, and from each he has drawn comments, bits of personal history, and the gleam of aspirations which are characteristic.

---

mouth Theater.

Her Sept 19

New Scores Listed For Symphony's 57th Season

Serge Koussevitzky announces the opening program and a number of notable new scores for the 57th season of the Boston Symyphony Orchestra. Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, and the second symphony of Sibelius in D major will be played at the opening concerts of the season to be given in Symphony Hall on Oct. 8 and 9.

Scores to be performed at the first six pairs of concerts will include the second suite from the ballet "Bacchus et Arianne," by Albert Roussel, together with the third symphony in G minor of the French composer who died last month. George Gershwin will be represented by a performance of his "An American in Paris." Two scores of Prokofieff still to be heard in this country are his cinema music, "Lieutenant Kije," and his overture on Russian themes. The second symphony of Francesco Malipiero will also have its first hearing in America. Other works are a suite from Domenico Scarlatti, orchestrated by Selvaggi, and Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta." Koussevitzky will make a notable revival—the fifth symphony of Gustav Mahler. There are also listed upon the first six programmes "Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, a symphony of Mozart, an orchestral concerto of Emanuel Bach, Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (with Walter Gieseking as soloist), Strauss' "Symphonia Domestica" and "Death and Transfiguration," Tchaikovsky's Fantasia "Romeo and Juliet," and "Tapiola" by Sibelius.

More scores of outstanding interest are announced to be heard during the remainder of the season. Pieces by American composers will include the new third symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill, Aaron Copland's "Statements," and a concerto for organ and orchestra by Leo Sowerby, in which the composer will play the organ part. New European scores will be Bela Bartok's music for strings and percussion; a concerto for orchestra by Michael Starokadomsky, a Soviet composer; a suite from Stravinsky's most recent ballet, "The Card Game," in concert performance. Prokofieff's new second violin concerto will be introduced by Jascha Heifetz. A posthumous violin concerto of Schumann will be played by Yehudi Manuhin, and the Rhapsody of Rachmaninoff, by its composer, for its first Boston performance. Two choral works of Sibelius, still unknown in America—"The Origin of Fire" and "Captive Queen"—will be performed by this orchestra in conjunction with the Helsinki University chorus.

A concerto for viola and orchestra, by Paul Hindemith, will be performed with the composer as soloist. Emma Boynet will appear in a pianaforte concerto in E flat, by Mozart. Nadia Boulanger, a distinguished visitor from France, will conduct Faure's "Requiem." There will be two guest conductors in midseason—Georges Enesco, the famous Roumanian composer and virtuoso, and Daniele Amfitheatrof, the conductor of Russian birth and Italian training who is about to make his first visit to America.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

AUG 20 1937

BERKSHIRE FUND LISTS GIFT OF $10,000

A surprise gift of $10,000 was received by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday for its building fund, the forerunner of what festival officials hope will be several others of similar amounts. The gift was made anonymously by a friend of Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival and chairman of the campaign for the music shed at Tanglewood.

Festival officials plan a building at Tanglewood of simple design to fit the surroundings. This year's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge [redacted] conductor, closed last Sunday. The concerts next year will be the first two weekends in August.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 20 1937

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival Group, is chairman of a committee composed of the board of trustees, in a campaign to raise funds for a permanent music shed at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra who present annual concerts at Tanglewood, are in complete accord with the movement. music shed of simple design with a sound-proof roof, open on all sides and with provision for closing the sides as a protection from storms, is planned by the committee. There is considerable interest in this state in the Berkshire group.

166

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 16 1937

MANY LOCAL PEOPLE ATTENDED BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM

For its last two concerts, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been favored with perfect weather, and on Saturday evening and yesterday afternoon every seat in the big tent and the benches outside of the tent were filled.

Saturday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting, gave an inspired rendition of each number on the program. the Sibelius Symphony No. 7 and the symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," of Rimsky-Korsakov, in particular calling forth applause which can only be described as tumultuous. Among those from this vicinity who were in Saturday evening's audience were Mrs. Wendover Neefus, Gerald S. Bliss and George B. Savitsky, of this city, Mrs. Ernest Hoes, Peter Hoes, and Jack Hoes, of Kinderhook; Mrs. Pauline Avery, of West Taghkanic; and Mrs. E. C. Miller, of New York city, who is spending the summer at Queechy Lake. James E. Leath, of Kinderhook, had as guests in his box, Mrs. Howard Peck Miss Julie Pruyn, Miss Edith Johnson, Harold Clapp and Alfred Gage, of Kinderhook, and Miss Mary Tate, of New York city.

At yesterday afternoon's concert, the final concert of the Festival, an all-Brahms program was presented, beginning with the "Academic Festival" overture which was composed in 1880 and first performed on January 4, 1881 at the University of Breslau. It is interesting to note that when the University of Breslau conferred upon Brahms, in 1879, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, the composer responded by making the institution the marvelous present of this overture on student airs. Following the overture came the Symphony No. 3 in F major, and after the twenty-minute intermission, with the orchestra's magnificent playing of the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, this year's Berkshire Symphonic Festival passed into unforgettable musical history.

Those from this vicinity at yesterday's concert were Gerald S. Bliss, the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Van de Bogart, Miss Doris Van de Bogart, of this city, Miss Van de Bogart's house guest, Miss Helen Bush of Elmira, and Mrs. Pauline Avery, of West Taghkanic. Guests of James E. Leath in his box were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Risedorph and Miss Carrie Allin, of Valatie; Mrs. H. A. Stinton of Bloomington, Ill., and David Strain of Philmont.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

AUG 20 1937

Miss G. R. Smith Heads Campaign Of Berkshire Fete

Simple Structure Planned To Fit Surroundings At Tanglewood

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, Mass. today agreed to head the campaign for $100,000 with which to erect a permanent music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She will be assisted by members of the Board of Trustees in perfecting details for the campaign.

In the interest of economy, the Festival group itself will endeavor to raise the funds.

"I hope there will be many voluntary subscriptions to the fund," said Miss Robinson Smith. "There have been many encouraging responses. We are not retaining any outside agency to assist us. We think there will be enough support to make it possible for us to do this job ourselves and thereby save a lot of money. We can do it ourselves if the citizens of this and neighboring regions lend support as they show every indication of doing.

"We plan no elaborate structure. We do not want to lose the charm of Tanglewood, with its beautiful trees, its gardens, its gorgeous view. We want a music shed of simple design with a sound-proof roof—a shed that will fit into surroundings, open on all sides with provision for closing the sides as a protection from storms. The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are in complete accord with us in this desire."

Many of the circulars distributed at the last two concerts of the recent Festival have been returned, all of them taking some kind of membership for 1938. A number of new patrons have signed up for both series of concerts in 1938, including former-Governor and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller of Boston, Mrs. Edward Davis of Philadelphia and Stamford, Vt., Daniel England of Pittsfield.

Of most interest to the Festival group, however, is the fact that 90 per cent of those returning circulars have stated their willingness to contribute to the fund and to help in the campaign. These circulars have been signed by residents of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, California, New York, New Hampshire, Boston, Springfield and the Berkshires, reflecting the national interest in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

NEW LONDON, CONN.
DAY

AUG 20 1937

MYSTIC

By George H. Griswold. Tel. 478

To Erect Bigger Main St. Building

The little red building on West Main street known as the Little Grotto and occupied for years by James Hopwood has been torn down by the new owner, George Fararro. A two-story building is to be erected to take its place, and will add greatly to the appearance of the south side of the community's main street.

O. E. S. Picnic Tomorrow

The annual picnic of Charity chapter, O. E. S., will be held tomorrow afternoon at the home of Miss Hazel Main at Lord's Point. A covered dish supper will be served at 5 o'clock and each one is asked to bring her own dishes and silver. Anyone desiring transportation from Mystic to the Point is requested to call Mrs. Elmer Duncklee, who will make the necessary arrangements.

Funeral of Exia Robert Held

Funeral services were held yesterday morning at 8:30 o'clock from the Flynn Funeral home, 22 East Main street, for Exia Robert of Ledyard. A 9 o'clock a requiem high mass was celebrated at St. Patrick's church by the Rev. Michael E. Kearney. During the service Mrs. William Tatro sang O Salutaris and as a waiting hymn, Beautiful Land on High. Burial took place in St. Patrick's cemetery with Father Kearney reading the committal service.

The bearers were Gideon Manchester, John Dennet, Lawrence Bagley, Harry Tatro, Charles Haupt and Quinto Basili. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The flag on the plant of the Rossie Velvet Co., where the deceased had been employed, was flown at half mast for the day.

Plan for Annual Fair

A committee called together by Miss Edna Wheeler, noble grand of Mystic Rebekah lodge, met at her home for the purpose of making plans for the annual Rebekah fair which it was decided to hold on Sept. 2, 3 and 4. Members of the committee present were Mrs. Harriet Ward, Miss Edna Wheeler, Mrs. Harriet Eccleston, Mrs. Hattie Grimes, Mrs. Susie Syben, Mrs. Alice Craig, John F. Meyer, William A. MacDonald and Charles C. Craig. The committee for the dessert bridge will meet Monday evening with Mrs. Ward at her home in Ocean View avenue.

Prominent Artists at Concert

It may be of interest to Mystic residents to know that Ludwig Juht, guest artist at tomorrow evening's concert at the Art gallery is a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra and that Melchiorre Mauro-Cottone, accompanist for Byron M. Hatfield, is a member of the Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, two of the outstanding orchestras in American today. Beatrice Hatton Fiske of New London will be the accompanist for Mr. Juht.

Carnival Doing Well

An estimated nightly average of 500 persons has attended the fifth annual carnival sponsored this week by Richard William Morgan post, American Legion, at Holmes lot in Holmes street, Joseph Belair, carnival chairman, announced today.

He said the carnival, which will end tomorrow night, has been well patronized every night since it was opened Monday. Post officials have been complimented on the manner in which the show has been run, he said.

Eight booths and four center attractions comprise the amusement. The booths were built by post members and under the supervision of Alfred Osborne, past commander, and are attended by members of the post, its women's auxiliary and drum corps. Three free awards are given on the grounds nightly.

The rides were furnished by the Mayo Amusement Co. of Worcester, Mass., and are under the supervision of Manager John C. Lemoine of Woonsocket, R. I. Mr. Belair stressed the statement that the rides are entirely safe and are tested daily.

DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat & Leader

AUG 22 1937

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

. . . ~~now in its~~ 57th season and the 14th under Koussevitsky will give 10 concerts in New York beginning Nov. 18. There will be five on Thursday and five on Saturday. This orchestra will also play at Brooklyn, the dates still to be announced.

B. Trans
Aug. 20/36

Music ar

Festival Is Again Planned For Berkshires

Last Week's Concerts Marked By Operation at a Profit; Other News of Music

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Berkshire Hills last week achieved the distinction, rare in American music, of having all its bills paid and yielding a slight surplus on the basis of its revenues, according to an announcement received from the Festival organization today.

The announced attendance at the three concerts of the Festival was 15,000, who came from twenty-five States, Europe and Canada. With reference to the audience, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival organization, says, "The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has proved conclusively that the American public is ready for the Festival idea and will support it."

Dr. Koussevitzky will go to the Berkshires on Sept. 20 to discuss plans for next year's Festival, according to the announcement. His visit will be preceded by the annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., on Sept. 15, when officers are to be elected.

Meanwhile the Festival organization is going ahead with plans for the 1937 Festival. Sustaining memberships and patrons are invited on the same basis as during the present year. A sustaining member's dues are five dollars, for which he is entitled to either one ticket or two for three concerts, depending upon the seat location. A patron is assessed seventy-five dollars, for which he receives a box, seating six, for three concerts.

The announcement states significantly that if there are more than three concerts next year, members and patrons will be permitted to buy tickets for the additional concerts at the same rate as their membership. The membership lists will be closed on Nov. 1.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 20 1937

$10,000 Gift To Berkshire Festival Shed

A surprise gift of $10,000 came to the Berkshire Symphonic festival today for its building fund, the forerunner of what festival officials hope will be several others of similar amounts.

The gift was made anonymously by "a friend of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith," president of the festival and chairman of the campaign for the music shed at Tanglewood. The friend, who said she did not want her name mentioned at this time, resides in the West.

In presenting the gift, the donor expressed the hope that many others will rally immediately so that "there need be no doubt of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic festival and the concerts of exceptional artistic merit presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra and its eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky."

"America is ready for just such a great musical center as contemplated, and we are fortunate that such a tremendous start has been made toward realization of the ideal," said the donor. "Isn't it about time we recognized that we have great music in America? Let us all get behind the sponsors of the festival, whether we live in Bangor Me., New York or St. Louis."

Festival officials plan a building at Tanglewood of simple design to fit the surroundings. This year's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, closed last Sunday. The concerts next year will be the first two week-ends in August.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 20 1937

HEADS MUSIC DRIVE

Miss Gertrude Smith Chairman of Berkshire Fete Fund

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of this city and Stockbridge, Mass., has agreed to head the campaign for $100,000 with which a permanent music shelter will be erected at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the annual Berkshire festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In planning details she will be assisted by members of the orchestra's board of trustees.

For the purpose of economy, the festival group will endeavor to raise the funds without the aid of any outside agency. Miss Smith believes that the project is receiving sufficient support to justify this procedure. An anonymous gift of $10,000 has already been received.

Miss Smith has been president of the festival since its inception in 1934. Her executive committee includes Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, Norval H. Busey Jr. of New York, Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge; Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, Mass.; Josef Franz of Stockbridge, and George W. Edman, county editor of The Berkshire Evening Eagle.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 20 1937

Tanglewood Music Shed Drive Gets Under Way

$100,000 Campaign Headed by Miss Robinson Smith

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Stockbridge, Mass., accepted yesterday the leadership of a campaign just launched to raise $100,000 for a permanent music shed on the Tanglewood estate, near Lenox, Mass., for the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The group sponsoring the festival, of which Miss Robinson Smith is chairman, will seek to raise the necessary fund.

"We plan no elaborate structure," Miss Robinson Smith stated. "We do not want to lose the charm of Tanglewood, with its beautiful trees, its gardens, its gorgeous view. We want a music shed of simple design with a sound-proof roof—a shed that will fit into the surroundings, open on all sides with provision for closing the sides as a protection from storms. The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are in complete accord with us in this desire."

Many of the circulars distributed at the last two concerts of this summer's festival have been returned with pledges of some kind of membership for 1938, and several new patrons have already signed up for both series of concerts planned for next summer's program. Ninety per cent of those returning circulars stated their willingness to contribute to the fund and to help the campaign.

The executive committee includes Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, New York and Lenox, Nowval H. Busey, Jr., New York and Lee, Mass.; Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge; Robert K. Wheeler, Great Barrington, Mass.; Joseph Franz, Stockbridge, and George W. Edman, Pittsfield, Mass.

21

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

AUG 21 1937

SEEK FESTIVAL FUND FOR BERKSHIRE MUSIC

Stockbridge, Mass. — Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, agreed today to head the campaign for $100,000 with which to erect a permanent music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She will be assisted by members of the Board of Trustees in perfecting details for the campaign.

In the interest of economy, the Festival group itself will endeavor to raise the funds.

"We plan no elaborate structure," said Miss Robinson Smith. "We do not want to lose the charm of Tanglewood, with its beautiful trees, its gardens, its gorgeous view. We want a music shed of simple design with a sound-proof roof — a shed that will fit into the surroundings, open on all sides with provision for closing the sides as protection from storms."

, N. Y.
S
20 1937
IC DRIVE

ith Chairman of ete Fund

obinson Smith of ckbridge, Mass.,
d the campaign which a permawill be erected between Stock-
Mass., for the festival by the Orchestra. In
she will be as-of the orchestees.
of economy, the endeavor to raise the aid of any Miss Smith beroject is receivpport to justify anonymous gift ready been re-een president of its inception in e committee in-

M. de Heredia
Lenox, Norval H.
York; Henry W. of the Housa-ank of Stock-
Wheeler of Great
Josef Franz of George W. Ed-
r of The Berke.

N. Y.
RIBUNE
20 1937

usic Shed
nder Way

Headed on Smith

Smith,
kbridge, Mass.,
he leadership launched to ermanent mu-lewood estate,
the annual Festival con-
Orponsoring the iss Robinson
l seek to raise orate struc-

Smith stated.
se the charm
its beautiful orgeous view.

Evening Eagle

Y, AUGUST 20, 1937.

LOCAL CHAMBER ENDORSES FESTIVAL SHED CAMPAIGN

Board of Directors Promise Full Cooperation in Drive To Raise $100,000 to Provide Permanent Home for Symphony Concerts at Tanglewood

A resolution, endorsing the financial campaign to provide a permanent building to house the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and promising full cooperation in it, was adopted by the Chamber of Commerce board of directors at a meeting last night.

The Resolution

The seven-paragraph text follows:

"Because with the conclusion of the recent successful Fourth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, it has become evident that there has been created for Berkshire County a musical event of national, if not ultimately, international repute, and

"Because this Berkshire Festival through the bringing of the finest in symphonic music to our own people at a reasonale price and the bringing to Berkshire County of thousands of desirable people for this event, and

"Because business activity, through the influx of these music loving visitors, in the past has been considerably stimulated and will be stimulated further in the future, and

"Because of the desirable publicity which the Festival has brought to Berkshire County and will bring in the future,

"Be it resolved that the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsfield, through its board of directors, assembled August 19, 1937, place itself on record as favoring the campaign to be launched by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Glendale to raise a sum sufficient to house future Festival performances in a permanent building;

"Be it further resolved that the Chamber of Commerce through its board of directors and membership will do all in its power to further the success of such a campaign;

"And be it further resolved that it be the sense of this Board of the Chamber of Commerce that the large vision and the tireless efforts of the officers and trustees of the Berkshire Festival be commended."

The resolution was proposed by a special committee appointed by President J. J. O'Connell, including George H. Cooper, chairman; Lawrence K. Miller and Edwin W. Holden.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE
AUG 21 1937

TANGLEWOOD, ST. LAURENT

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Compared With the Montreal Musical Festival—Money Talks But Quebec Has Advantages

By THOMAS ARCHER.

It was inevitable while the writer was attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last week-end that he should make some sort of comparison between it and the Montreal Music Festival which is given at St. Laurent annually. The two events, vastly different, implicitly and ultimately have yet one ground common to both.

Both are devoted to music in its higher manifestation. Both show that there exists along the length and breadth of this continent a stratum of society which is deeply in love with fine music. These people are prepared to spend money to indulge their love. And what is perhaps more important than spending money, they are willing to give their time to it. This is particularly so with the Berkshire Festival. Many members of the audiences last week and the week before came from distances of hundreds and sometimes thousands of miles. Stockbridge and Lenox, the villages lying on either side of Tanglewood, the magnificent estate presented to the Festival Group, lie well away from the beaten track. Accommodation is limited and there were people of considerable means who were content to occupy small rooms above stores.

You came for the whole festival, you had to stay for at least eleven days with a break of three days in the middle.

The Montreal Music Festival has so far occupied but two consecutive evenings. Its audience has consisted mostly of local music - lovers; it could never under present circumstances hope to draw the enormous audiences which come to Tanglewood. These audiences struck an average of 5,500.

Money talks. The Berkshire Festival has the support of wealth which Canada does not possess. A significant indication of this was given at the festival just ended. The Wagner programme last Thursday week was ruined by rain. The huge marquee in which the concerts have been given up to now, were found to be no sure proof against inclement weather. The festival committee met immediately afterwards and voted to raise a hundred thousand dollars to replace the marquee with a music shed.' Such financial enterprise is, perhaps of necessity unknown in Canada.

The Montreal Music Festival, notwithstanding, has won distinct advantage from a purely artistic point of view. It should not suffer the fate of Salzburg for many years to come. It can continue from year to year without becoming 'internationally famous.' The connotations of that ubiquitous term are importance, popularity and commercialism.

The Berkshire Festival is still altogether artistic. But its fame is spreading the reputation and magnificence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the performances which are, personally absolute models, the executive ability with which the festival is organized—these are all things which are going to make 'Tanglewood' and 'Stockbridge' as famous on this continent as 'Baireuth' and 'Munich' are musically famous in Europe.

In his editorial on the festival in The New York Times of last Sunday, Olin Downes, the distinguished music critic of that newspaper points out that "fame, reputation, patronage" are the inevitable concomitants of the Berkshire Festival. The Berkshire event can hardly avoid becoming a centre of the festival movement in the United States. And incidently this festival movement may ultimately become a serious challenge to American patronage of the festivals of Europe.

The Montreal Musical Festival, if it is conducted as heretofore, may maintain its exclusive idealism, its intimacy and its romantic atmosphere. It is the old story of uncompromising devotion to an ideal amidst adverse circumstances.

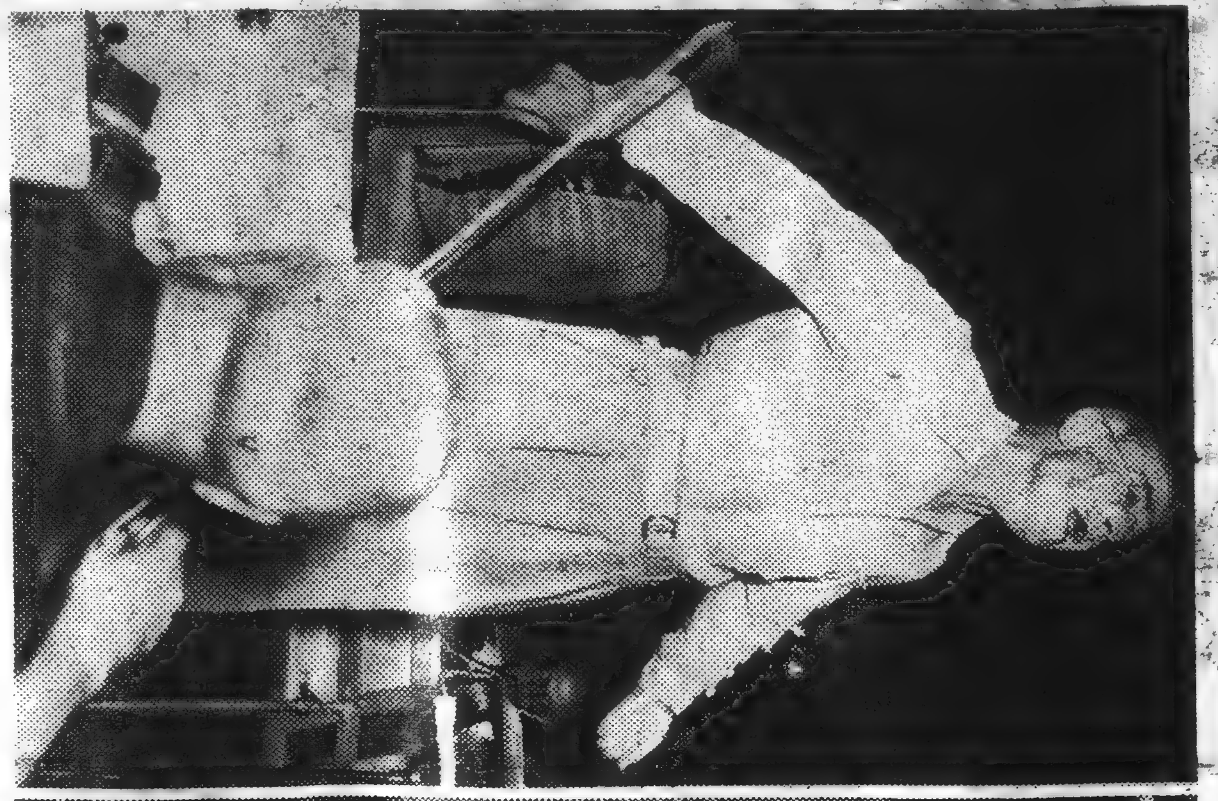
But if one of the present components of the St. Laurent festival withholds its co-operation the damage to the cause will be irreparable. Money, such as is unquestionably forthcoming in connection with the Berkshire Festival can always engage what it needs. St. Laurent is not in this favorable position, and must rely largely on voluntary effort. Consequently it should be the prayer of every music lover in Montreal that nothing shall be allowed to dislocate in any way whatever that wonderful French and English co-operation which gave those unique evenings of Bach and Beethoven. The whole is much greater than the part; the cause is paramount.

To turn to more immediate experiences, the writer would personally draw attention to the admirable efficiency of what might be called the Berkshire method.

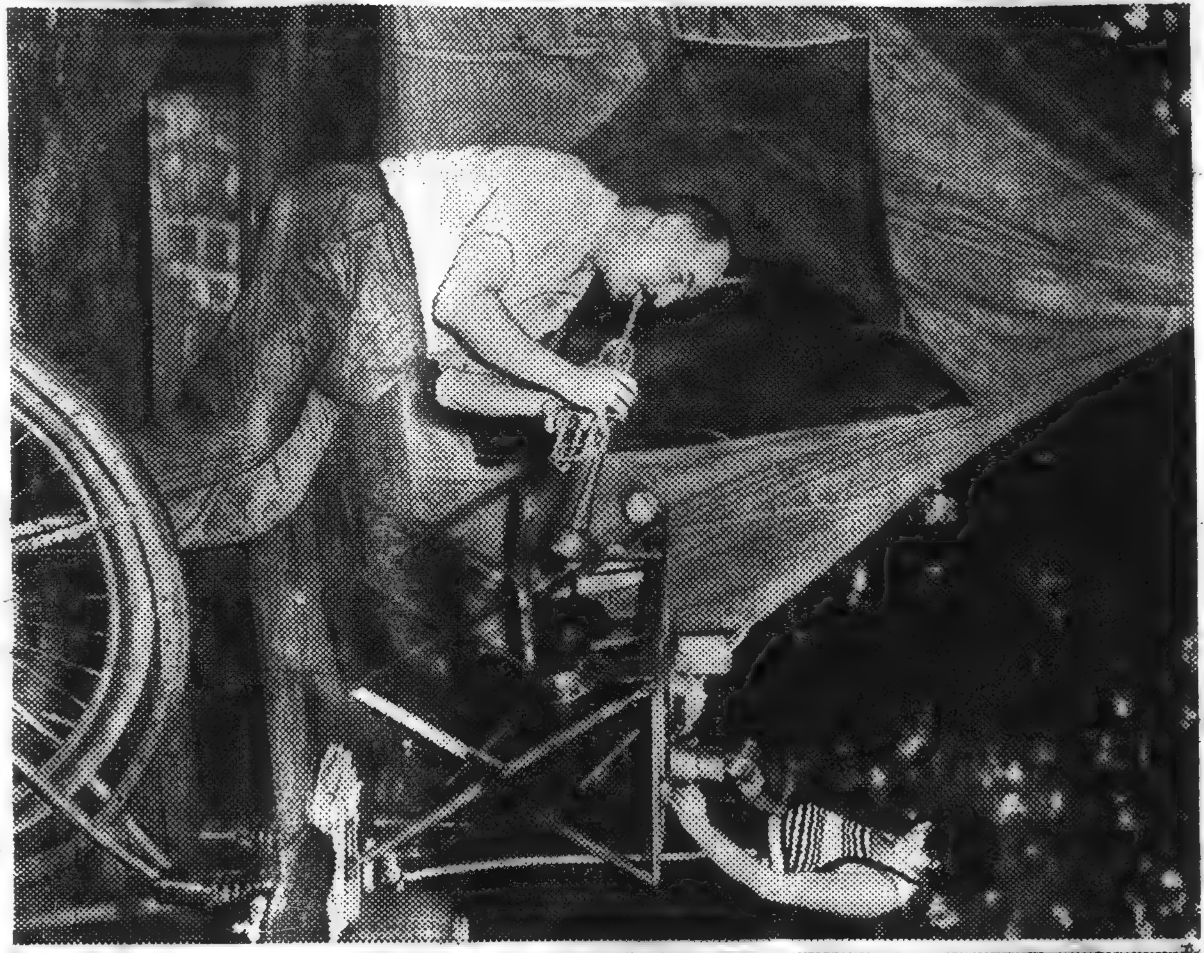
We arrived at Stockbridge with only newspaper information. We applied at the festival office. They found rooms for us. They looked after our mail. They saw to our excellent seats at the concerts. They helped with information about a thousand practical things. And they entertained us in princely style.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 21 1937

Music in the Berkshire Woods

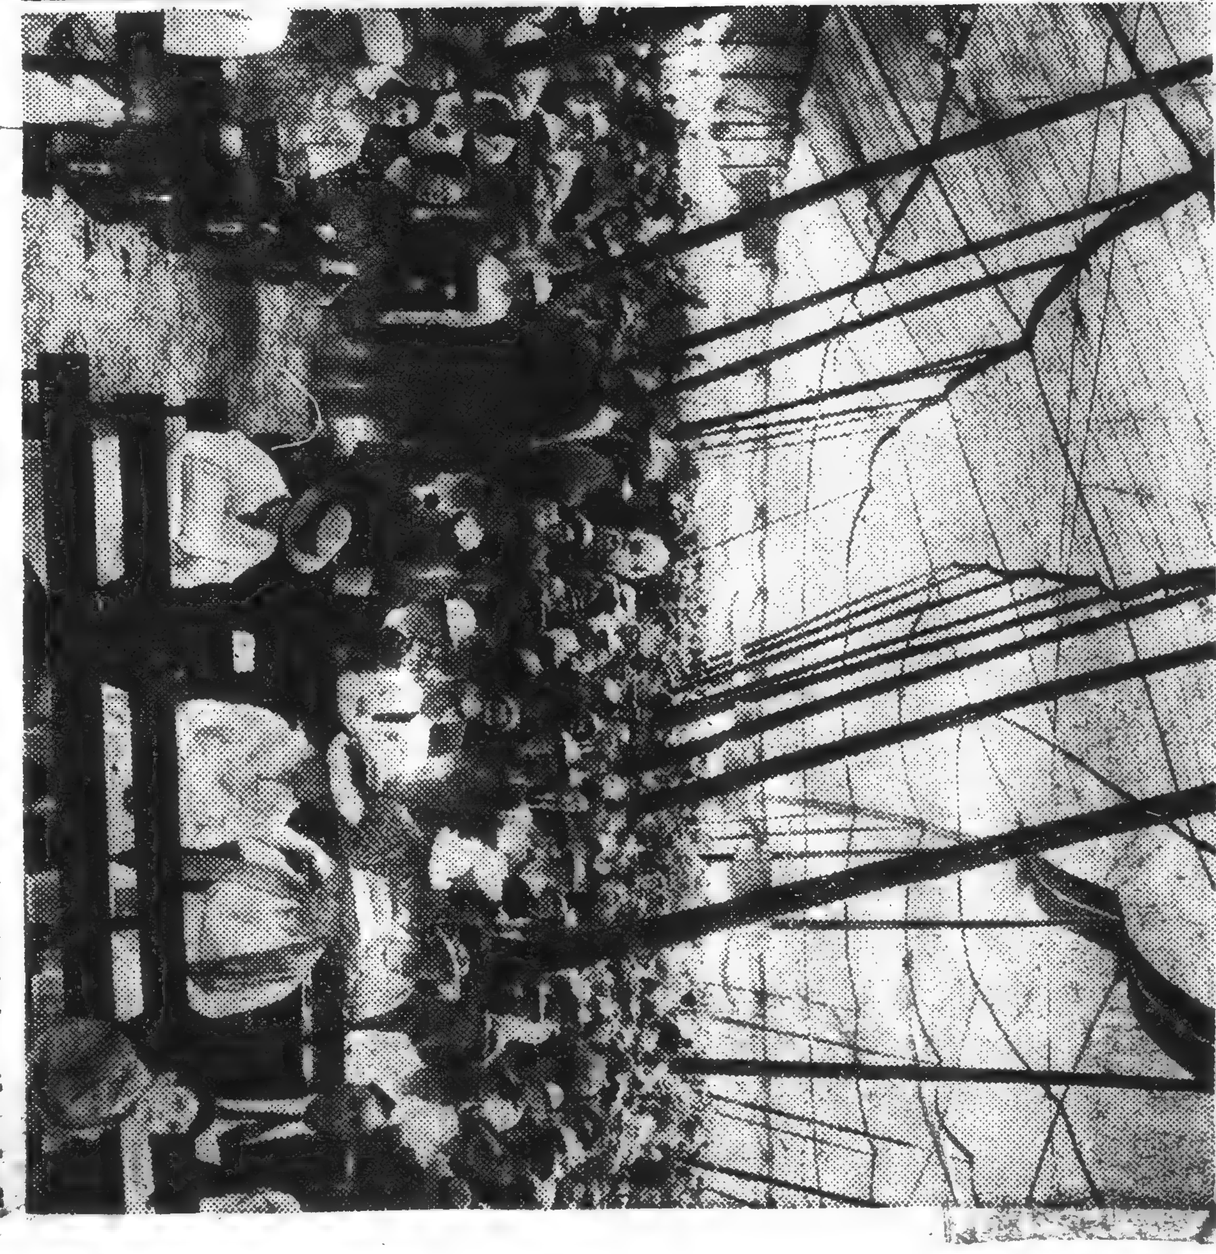


Once again this year Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, above, has conducted his Boston Symphony Orchestra in an amphitheater at Stockbridge, Mass., now an institution.



An orchestra player and his wife are "at home" on this pastoral Tanglewood Estate, owned by Mrs. Gordon Brooks. This year a shell the shape of Boston's Symphony Hall was installed at Tanglewood.

A stall in a horse stable is transformed for the summer into a rehearsal studio for the musicians, who find that the music they love gets the benefit in this sylvan concert hall of accoustics almost as good as those of their regular auditorium.



The audience at Stockbridge sits in a huge tent adjoining the shell which reflects the music. The Tanglewood site has now been permanently endowed for the Boston Symphony, one of the world's topflight concert orchestras.

—Photos by Wide World

168

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 21 1937

Serge Koussevitzky Condemns Europeans

Returning from a two-month visit abroad, spent largely in hearing new music, Serge Koussevitzky had some very positive remarks to make on the nature of modern European composition. "Most of the crop of younger European composers are turning out consistently bad music," said the Boston conductor in an interview with The New York Times.

"The jury which passes on the right of these composers to be heard has degenerated, too. Some of the pieces I heard at the fifteenth Festival of Contemporary Music in Paris were wretched, positively wretched! !The music was utter banality, simply dressed in a maze of modern harmony—utterly lacking in any creativeness. The composers simply have nothing to say. Our American composers are consistently better artists. They have greater inspiration."

Dr. Koussevitzky did hear two works that he liked well enough to bring back for performance in the Boston Symphony's Winter season. They are Malipiero's Second symphony and a "Concerto for Orchestra" by a young Soviet composer, Michael Starokadomsky.

The Boston conductor also spoke in further detail of his proposed academy for conductors at Tanglewood, Mass. "The only requisite for entrance," he said, "is an exceptional talent. This talent must consist not only of an impeccable knowledge of the theory of music and composition, and all-around technical equipment, but there must be inspiration, too.

"While there are thousands of conductors all over the world, only about a hundred or so are capable, and only four or five truly great."

One other item of interest is that Dr. Koussevitzky has already selected the members of the academy, faculty—that is, in his mind.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC

AUG 21 1937

Anonymous Gift Swells Fund For Berkshire Music

Committee Receives Check Of $10,000 From Unknown Giver

A surprise gift of $10,000 came to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today for its building fund, the forerunner of what festival officials hope will be several others of similar amounts.

The gift was made anonymously by "a friend of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith," president of the festival and chairman of the campaign for the music shed at Tanglewood. The friend, who said she did not want her name mentioned at this time, resides in the west.

In presenting the gift, the donor expressed the hope that many others will rally immediately so that "there need be no doubt of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the concerts of exceptional artistic merit presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky."

"America is ready for just such a great musical center as contemplated, and we are fortunate that such a tremendous start has been made toward realization of the ideal," said the donor. "Isn't it about time we recognized that we have great music in America? Let us all get behind the sponsors of the festival, whether we live in Bangor, Maine, New York or St. Louis."

Festival officials plan a building at Tanglewood of simple design to fit the surroundings. This year's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, closed last Sunday. The concerts next year will be the first two weekends in August.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 22 1937

The ruling powers of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival—the officials of the festival corporation and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—seem to be following the theory of slow but steady development. Last year the Boston Orchestra took part for the first time at the festival. This year the festival that was ended last Sunday was doubled in length. Next year the programs may be larger in scope, although the season will remain six concerts spread over two long week-ends. There is some talk of doing a large work like Bach's "St. Matthew Passion."

Whether Mr. Koussevitzky and the authorities decide to do other than purely symphonic works, the festival will take another step forward. It will have a permanent music shed. That is, assuming that $100,000 is raised. If that sum is not forthcoming, there will be no festival. There is little doubt that the money will be raised. Before the campaign had been launched in earnest, there were pledges of $16,000. A small start but a healthy one.

Here are a sheaf of retrospective impressions of the festival: The sustained ovation for Koussevitzky and his men at the end, with women waving handkerchiefs, men waving straw hats, people standing on wooden benches, and recurrent "Bravos." . . . The overflow in the hotels in a radius of twenty miles, providing the Berkshire hostelries with the best Summer since 1929. . . . The golden glow that the late afternoon sun imparted to the enormous canvas tent. . . . The natural grade on which the tent was placed, giving every one a view of the conductor and orchestra. . . . The impoverished young man who hitch-hiked to Lenox and persuaded the manager of the Curtis Hotel to let him serve as a bus boy so that he could earn his keep while attending the festival. . . . The scores of listeners lying on the lawns that surround the tent at Tanglewood; they seemed to find listening easier while reclining. . . . The chauffeurs who listened to swing on the radio in the cars in the parking field while their masters listened to classics. . . . The small boys who were brought to the concerts on Sunday afternoons. One sitting bolt upright beside his equally intent father. Another using a twig as a baton and trying to copy Koussevitzky's movements. . . . The night of the storm, with the program scrambled, people tense and uncomfortable, others gay and excited. One woman was overheard declaring, "I wouldn't have missed this experience for anything." . . . The pride of the year-round residents of the Berkshire communities in their festival. . . . The absence of Bach from the programs.

Lest one forgets, a word of praise is due two persons who labored mightily to make the festival at Tanglewood a success and who have not received their measure of commendation. One is Mrs. George W. Edman, who had the title of executive vice president of the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., and Mr. Edman, whose position as clerk of the board covered a multitude of duties. Mr. Edman managed to do two full-time jobs: his work for the festival and his tasks as county editor of The Berkshire Evening Eagle.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1937

$10,000 Gift Received For BerkshireMusicShed

Anonymous Donor Urges Aid for Next Summer's Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's officials announced yesterday that a surprise gift of $10,000 had been received for the $100,000 fund needed for constructing a music shed on the Tanglewood estate, near Lenox, Mass., for next summer's festival program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The donor, who made her gift as "a friend of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith," president of the festival, did not wish to have her name mentioned, but asked others to contribute to the campaign.

"America is now ready for just such a great musical center as is contemplated," she wrote, "and we are fortunate that such a tremendous start has been made toward realization of the ideal. Isn't it about time we recognized we have great music in America? Let us all get behind the sponsors of the Festival, whether we live in Bangor, Me., New York or St. Louis.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 22 1937

Shakespearean Discs By Symphonic Artists Lead Musical Records

America Advances in Preservation of Great Masters' Finest Works for Future Enjoyment

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Critic

No longer does America trail the world either in performance or reproduction of good music. Gone are the days when Europe looked askance—if not scornfully—at our strivings toward the artistic goals of accomplishment which in other days was arrogantly considered as the full birthright and possession of lands across the sea.

Mr. Lewando

No! Today America can hold its head high and be proud of its many talented people, its admirable and incomparable orchestras, and the intense interest and spirit of co-operation of many of its people being manifested in the founding and sponsoring of musical projects of real artistic significance. We have yet to produce composers of the stamp of Beethoven, Debussy, Tschaikowski Sibelius and Verdi, but then we are a comparatively young country, and it takes more than a century or two to evolve in this direction. But so far as real music making is concerned, as well as—in a measure—music study, too, this country has achieved wonders within the past three decades.

Notably meritorious is the marvelous advance made in the field of recorded music here in America. Both in reproduction of great music and music of lighter genre we lead the world not only in output but in the quality of that output.

Among leaders in the development of phonographic reproduction of all types of music, is the venerable RCA-Victor Corporation, an organization that long has pioneered in this particular arena of activity.

Recent RCA-Victor releases embrace a wealth of recordings to be treasured by discophiles. Leading these is the pressing of Tschaikowsky's Romeo and Juliet overture by the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in No. 347 of the Masterpiece Series. No other living director brings forth from Tschaikowsky's music the deep dramatism, the wistful sadness, the throbbing power and vitality as does Dr. Koussevitzky. And in the recording of this Shakespearean tragedy of enduring love and faith, this eminent leader and his great aggregation of musicians have given us something of stirring tonal beauty to be cherished. Five sides of six 12-inch discs are employed, and on the sixth side of the final record is Sibelius' "Maiden With the Roses" from the "Swan White" Suite.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 26 1937

NO DEFICIT FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival heard glowing accounts of the recent concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when they met Tuesday afternoon with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge, Mass. These glowing accounts included the incomplete financial report indicating that in all probability there will be no deficit this year.

Other glowing accounts were in the nature of letters received from all parts of the country expressing appreciation and enjoyment of the concerts. Many of these letters contained donations for the building fund.

Plans for conducting the building fund campaign were discussed by Miss Robinson Smith, chairman. She presented a number of suggestions advanced by the advisory committee, which met Monday at the Curtiss Hotel, Lenox, Mass.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

AUG 22 1937

Shelter Sought For Berkshire Music Festival

$100,000 Drive Planned to Provide Structure for Next Season.

The executive committees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra jointly announced today before the closing concert of the 1937 festival that they were agreed on the necessity for a permanent music shed to house next year's concerts and that the festival group was prepared to move immediately to raise $100,000 for such a structure.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared that it is impossible to conduct the festival another year unless steps are taken to avoid interruptions by storms such as occurred last Thursday night.

A building of simple design, open on the sides, which will harmonize with the surroundings at Tanglewood, is contemplated by the festival group.

The announcement followed a meeting of the two groups at the home of the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft, of the Boston board; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey, jr., Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman, representing the festival.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 2[illegible] 37

$30,000 GIVEN FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL SHED

$100,000 Sought—Plans For 1938 Concerts Being Made

Stockbridge, Mass. — Miss Mabel Choate of New York, daughter of the late Joseph H. Choate, opened her home, Naumkeag, in Stockbridge this afternoon for a gathering of summer and permanent residents, to discuss the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Particular emphasis was placed on the campaign to raise $100,000 for a music shed at Tanglewood. About $30,000 has been reported for the fund to date.

"Many of these gifts have come from widely scattered parts of the country, reflecting a national interest in what we are trying to do," said Miss Robinson Smith, president of the Festival. "We appreciate, and apparently so do our friends, that America is ready for a great symphonic festival. We are prepared to do our part, but we need the support of every music lover in the country who is interested."

Building Necessary

The high artistic standards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky have been maintained at our concerts. But the trying circumstances of a severe storm have convinced us that a permanent building is necessary."

She announced that for the second year in succession, the Festival had been self-sustaining. "There will be no deficit," she added. "I believe that is a record of which America may be proud, and it is possible because we cater to no particular group. Our audiences come from all strata."

She explained that gifts of more than $15,000 had been received since the last concert. They have come, she said, from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, New Jersey, California, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Hampshire. One was for $10,000. Added to this total is the more than $15,000 received during the winter and early spring.

Contributions may be mailed to Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank, Stockbridge, Mass., treasurer of the Festival. They also may be deducted from income tax returns.

1938 Concert Series

The 1938 concerts, six in number, will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the first two weekends in August. Membership lists covering admission to the concerts at reduced prices are now open. Fifty-five boxes have been sold for 1938.

For the sake of economy, the Festival officers themselves are trying to raise the funds for the music shed. These officers are: President, Miss Robinson Smith; vicepresidents, Mrs. de Heredia and Mr. Busey; treasurer, Mr. Dwight; executive vicepresident, Mrs. George W. Edman; clerk, Mr. Edman.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 26 1937

GIFTS FOR MUSIC SHED TOTAL $30,000

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 26—Miss Mabel Choate of New York, daughter of the late Joseph H. Choate, ambassador to the Court of St. James opened her home, "Naumkeag," in Stockbridge this afternoon for a gathering of summer and permanent residents for a discussion of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with particular emphasis on the campaign to raise $100,000 for a music shed at "Tanglewood." About $30,000 has been reported for the fund to date.

"Many of these gifts have come from widely scattered parts of the country, reflecting a national interest in what we are trying to do," said Miss Robinson Smith, president of the Festival. "We appreciate and apparently so do our friends, that America is ready for a great symphonic festival. We are prepared to do our part, but we need the support of every music lover in the country who is interested. The high artistic standards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky have been maintained at our concerts. But the trying circumstances of a severe storm have convinced us that a permanent building is necessary."

---

each year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The site, on the rustic Tanglewood estate of Mrs. Gordon Brooks, is now the permanent endowment of the orchestra

Boston players in a practice session. Later, during a concert, Dr. Koussevitzky permitted his men to play without coats barn and not music hall stalls. This stable at Stockbridge, is used as a rehearsal studio by the musicians

One of the Boston Symphony players runs over a few fast passages on the veranda of his "home" on the Tanglewood estate while his wife in informal garb prepares the evening meal

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
Sept. 26/37

Discuss Permanent Home For Symphonic Festival

Building of Vast Proportions is Envisioned by 15 Representatives of Various Berkshire Towns at Meeting in Pittsfield—Dr. Koussevitzky, During Visit to County, Offers Many Suggestions for 1937 Season—Holmwood Will be Again Available for Next Year's Concerts Which May Total Six.

At some date in the future a music building of vast proportions may be built as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic festival which during its third season this year drew more than 15,000 persons, more than half of whom came from outside of Massachusetts.

The future of the festival was pondered seriously and at length by 15 representatives from various Berkshire towns in Pittsfield yesterday but no definite action was taken although doubtless a committee of business men soon will be designated to sound out opinion with a view toward determining what is in the offing for the concerts which have already made musical history.

Dr. Serge A. Koussevitzky, who with the Boston Symphony orchestra was responsible for the festival's greatest season this summer, was down-county during the early part of the week and many of his suggestions for the 1937 season were reflected in the discussion of future plans. Because of his visit six concerts rather than three may be attempted next year.

Plans for the music shed are, according to the committee, in an exceedingly nebulous stage. Considerable financial backing would be necessary for the construction of such a home, with facilities to protect huge audiences from the elements and a shell for the musicians.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival served as chairman of the meeting. Professor Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown, a member of the festival board of directors, was the only North Berkshire representative in attendance.

It was reported during the meeting that Holmwood where the 1936 concerts were given will be available for the new year and other reports brought word of increasing interest in the series with each succeeding season.

The entire recreational picture in the Berkshires including the festival, is to be considered at a meeting in the Pittsfield Electric company's auditorium on Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock. A general invitation has been extended and the sponsors hope that every community as well as every branch of sport or artistic endeavor will be presented.

Among the speakers will be William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge; Ted Shawn, the dancer, of West Becket; Miss Smith as president of the festival; a delegate from Adams who will discuss plans for the Thunderbolt ski trail, and Charles Williams, representing the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad.

COURIER

AUG 26 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OPENS DRIVE FOR "TANGLEWOOD" CONCERT SHED

PLAN $100,000 STRUCTURE OF SIMPLE DESIGN TO FIT SURROUNDINGS.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, and Stockbridge, Mass., today agreed to head the campaign for $100,000 with which to erect a permanent music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She will be [redacted] by members of the Board of Trustees in perfecting details for the campaign.

In the interest of economy, the Festival group itself will endeavor to raise the funds.

"I hope there will be many voluntary subscriptions to the fund," said Miss Robinson Smith. "There have been many encouraging responses. We are not retaining any outside agency to assist us. We think there will be enough support to make it possible for us to do this job ourselves if the citizens of this and neighboring regions lend support as they show every indication of doing.

"We plan no elaborate structure. We do not want to lose the charm of Tanglewood, with its beautiful trees, its gardens, its gorgeous view. We want a music shed of simple design with a sound-proof roof... a shed that will fit into the surroundings, open on all sides with provisions for closing the sides as a protection from storms. The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are in complete accord with us in this desire".

Miss Robinson Smith has been president of the Festival since its inception in 1934. Campaigns are not new to her. In New York during the war she was active in raising hundreds of thousands of dollars and only a few years ago was one of the leaders of the drive for the unemployment fund in New York. Her executive committee includes Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Lenox, Norval H. Busey Jr., of New York and Lee, Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge; Robert K. Wheeler, Gt. Barrington; Joseph Franz, Stockbridge; George W. Edman, Pittsfield newspaper man.

Many of the circulars distributed at the last two concerts of the recent Festival have been returned, all of them taking some kind of membership for 1938. A number of new patrons have signed up for both series of concerts in 1938, including former-Governor and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, of Boston, Mrs. Edward Davis of Philadelphia and Stamford, Vt., Daniel England of Pittsfield.

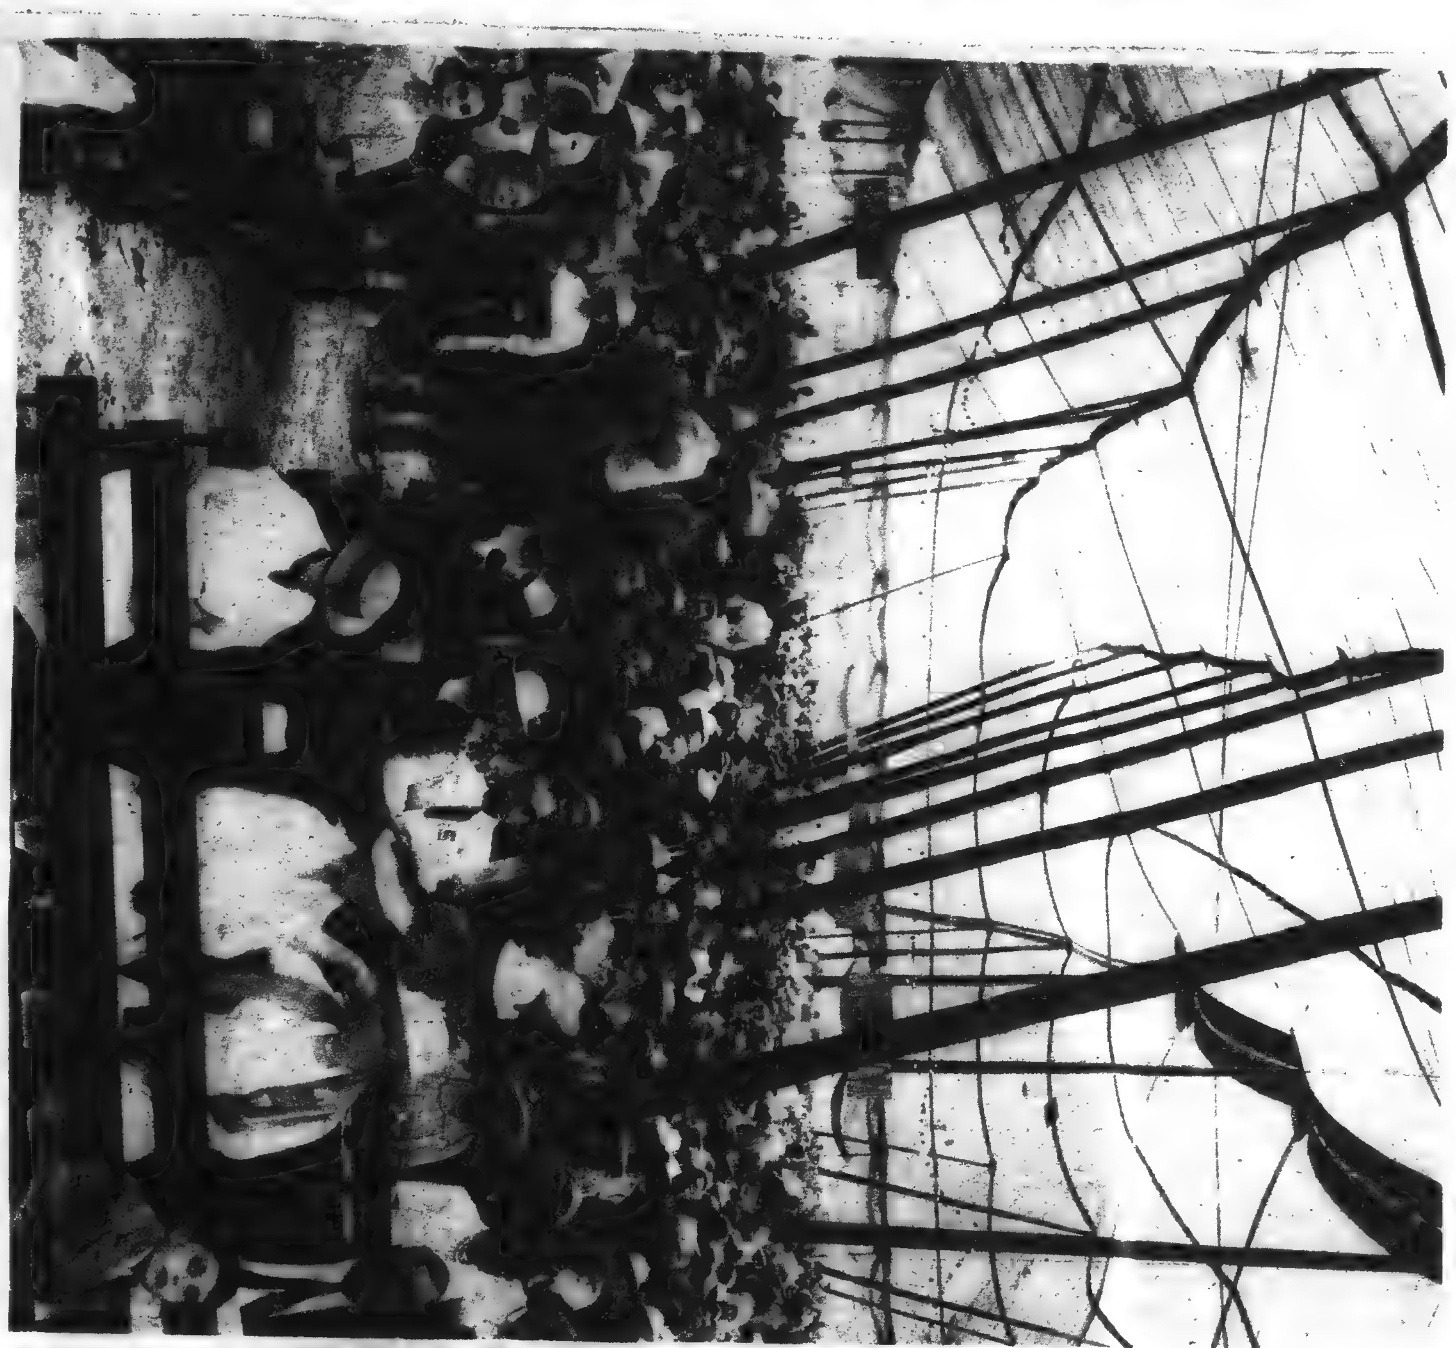
Of most interest to the Festival group, however, is the fact that 90 per cent of those returning circulars have stated their willingness to contribute to the fund and to help in the campaign. These circulars have been signed by residents of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, California, New York, New Hampshire, Boston, Springfield, and the Berkshires, reflecting the national interest in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

MORNING SUN

AUG 22 1937

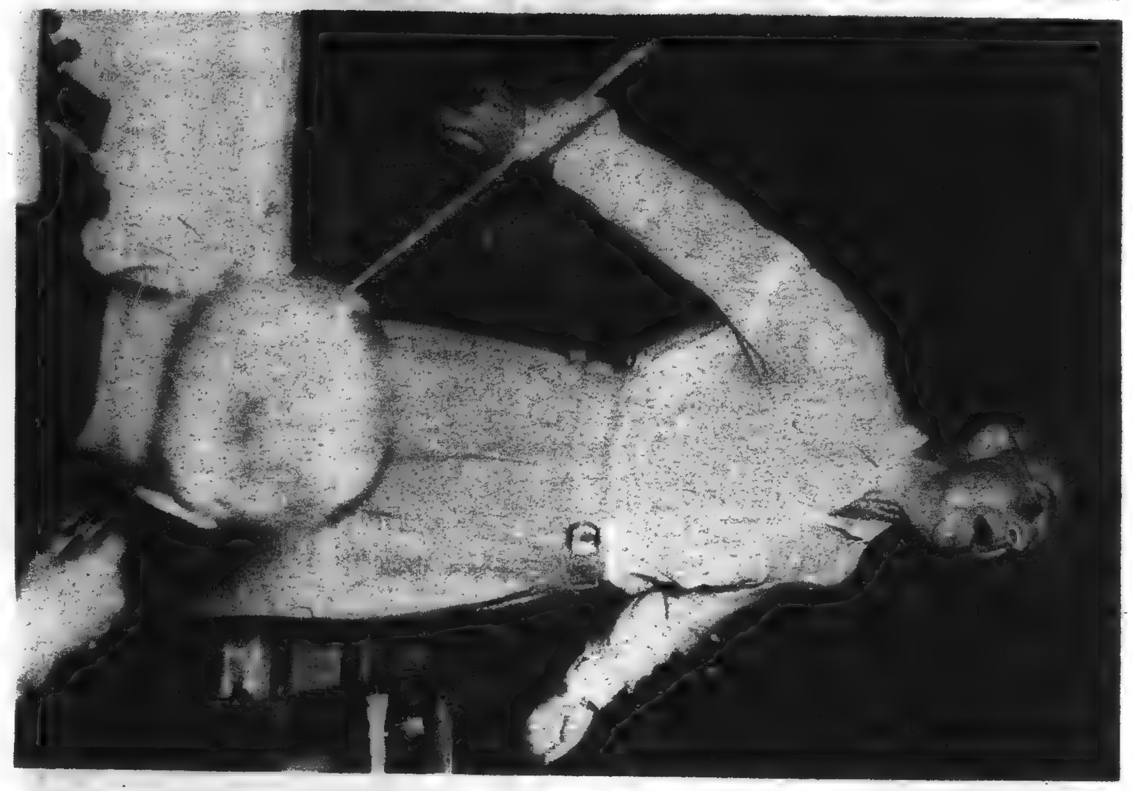
SUMMER SYMPHONY UNDER THE CANVAS

(Wide World)



UNDER THE BIG TOP

A section of the audience at one of the Berkshire Music Festival concerts given each year by the Boston Symphony [illegible] under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. [illegible] wood estate of Mrs. Gordon Brooks, is now the permanent endowment of the orchestra



REHEARSAL

Dr. Koussevitzky in shirt sleeves, leads the Boston players in a practice session. Later, during a concert, Dr. Koussevitzky permitted his men to play without coats

IN THE STALLS

But the stalls in this picture are barn and not music hall stalls. This stable at Stockbridge, is used as a rehearsal studio by the musicians

PASTORAL SCENE

One of the Boston Symphony players runs over a few fast passages on the veranda of his "home" on the Tanglewood estate while his wife in informal garb prepares the evening meal

WESTERLY, R. I.
SUN
AUG 23 1937

Many Attend Concert At Art Gallery

Ludwig Juht, Contra Bass, and Byron Hatfield On Program

Last of Series

Final of Three Entertainments Enjoyed by Enthusiastic Audience

The last of a series of three concerts was held Friday night at the Mystic Art Gallery with Ludwig Juht, contra-bass, and Byron Hatfield, bariton:, as soloists. In spite of the warm weather, the gallery was filled to capacity by an enthusiastic audience.

To most of the listeners the idea of a contra-bass as a solo instrument was most interesting and novel. As a matter of fact, having heard such a performance, it seems a pity that this instrument is so seldom used in that capacity. It was surprising to find that the tone of a bass viol is so similar to that of a cello, but with even more depth and vibrancy. However, it takes the hands and mind of an experienced and thoughtful musician such as Mr. Juht to create with the contra-bass a tone quality so lovely as to demand solo work.

The opening number was a "Sonata" by the eighteenth century composer, Henry Eccles, and was nicely calculated to show the scope of the instrument as well as the dexterity of the player. The first movement, "Largo," built up one deep, flowing melody after another, incomparable as to richness of tone. In the next two movements Mr. Juht played with feeling and finesse, while the last movement, "Vivace," was almost startling in its speed and technical difficulty.

Shows Fine Shading

His second number was a delicate "Pastorale" by Couperin, a gentle, quiet melody, with shading as fine and tone as soft as if it were from a violin instead of a massive contra-bass. Followed a dainty "Gavotte" by Lully.

Mr. Juht next played two numbers by Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which orchestra Mr. Juht is the bass soloist. Mr. Koussevitsky is himself an accomplished soloist on this instrument, and these two compositions were especially fitting.

One of the high spots of the evening was Grieg's "Ases Tod," its haunting melody intensified by the mellowness and depth of each note until the final whisper of the lament. Next Mr. Juht played the popular "Danse Espagnole" by Granados, and "Vidalita," Cimaglia-Padwa, and concluded with two numbers which he composed himself. The first of these two, a "Legend," showed again the performer's lovely legato in a simple yet thoughtful melody. The second was a whirlwind "Scherzo," brittle, captivating and brilliantly executed. The ensuing burst of applause persuaded the artist to play an encore, Rimsky-Korsikoff's famous "Flight of the Bumble Bee," indeed a feat on an instrument as unwieldy as a contra-bass. Mr. Juht's entire performance was sparkling yet accurate, spontaneous yet that of a thorough and creative musician.

(Continued from Page One)

Excellent Accompanist

Much credit should be given to Beatrice Hooton Fisk whose fine accompaniment so ably supported Mr. Juht. The casual listener seldom realizes how vitally important is an accompanist who not only is accurate but who also can sense the soloist's every move. Mrs. Fisk competently fulfilled these qualifications.

Mr. Hatfield's first group opened with a lusty song entitled "Good Ale" by Peter Wallach. His second number, Schubert's lovely "An Die Musik," was especially fine, showing great restraint and breath control, combined with the deeper feeling of the song. The third was a distinct contrast, the mad "Nightmare Song" from Gilbert and Sullivan's opera "Iolanthe." The words of this patter song, with their complicated rhyme scheme and aside remarks, are in themselves an accomplishment. But to sing them at top speed, making them music as well as comedy, is an even greater accomplishment, and one that Mr. Hatfield has mastered.

The first number of his second group was the passionate aria from Verdi's "La Traviata," "Di Provenza," sung with great intensity, brilliance of tone and perfect control. Following this came "Inter Nos" by MacFadden, and as a conclusion a sprightly number entitled "Long Ago in Alcala." As an encore, Mr. Hatfield, sang the ever popular Oley Speaks' "Sylvia."

In Excellent Form

Mr. Hatfield was in excellent form. Both groups were polished and smooth, carefully phrased and articulated, and yet lacking none of the spontaneity which is so essential to good singing.

Accompanying Mr. Hatfield was Dr. Melchiorre Mauro-Cottone, brilliant organist of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Dr. Cottone's performance was, as always, the perfect complement to his soloist, showing his fine musicianship.

Taken as a whole, the entire program was well balanced and deserved the enthusiastic reception accorded it.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD
AUG [illegible] 3 1937

THESE CHARMING PEOPLE

By MARTHA BLAIR
Reg. U. S. Patent Office

ROXBURY, Conn.—Although I rushed eastward as fast as my itinerary permitted, I arrived here just too late to attend the musical festival in the Berkshires given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But everyone is talking about the large audience of 5,000 who listened to the glorious Beethoven, Brahms, and Tschaikowsky and my mother tells me that seldom has she heard finer music.

Of course, I am not surprised for as everybody knows the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the best orchestra in the world with the possible exception of the Philadelphia group, and the Boston conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, is the finest conductor in the world with the exception of Toscanini.

Celebrities

My mother sat with Mrs. Koussevitzky and the president of the Berkshire Festival Association, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, and enjoyed all the celebrities who were brought up to her box . . . the movie star, fascinating Miriam Hopkins, with her blond hair blowing in the breeze and her brown legs unstockinged; the handsome blue-eyed Mrs. Edward Harkness, wife of the philanthropist; Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, sister-in-law of the most famous poet of modern Spain; Norman H. Davis, our Ambassador at large; Albert Spalding, America's well-known and loved violinist; Ted Shawn, famous dancer, and dozens of others.

But of all I have heard about this superb musical festival the most beautiful is the story about the night Koussevitzky was serenaded by local singers. This occasion was unique in the annals of American music. All of us have read how people of Europe have on occasion shown their affection for the great musicians of the past, sometimes unhitching the horses from the master's carriage and using their own horse-power to wheel him home amid cheers and hurrahs. This occasion was as thrilling as that.

* * *

It was the night the Doctor and Mrs. Koussevitzky were dining at Miss Robinson Smith's. As the maestro left the dining room to stroll across the gardens to a nearby pavilion where coffee was to be served, suddenly there was a burst of singing from a chorus of 80 voices. Astonished with delight, Koussevitzky stumbled backward a moment as if some heavenly choir had soared down to greet him.

But the singers half encircled him, each carrying a flashlight in the hand by which they were reading the notes of their Bach choral. You could see their fresh young faces in the reflected light, while in the master's face you could see the blood flushing crimson to the roots of his hair, so stirred was he by this sweetest of honors being paid him. He realized that this was the beautiful way in which Europe had at times feted her noblest musicians, and he knew that it was the first time it had ever occurred in America.

Gratitude

They were singing his praises and as their voices rose to a high crescendo which echoed back from the neighboring hills it was as if they were thanking him for the inspiration his music had brought them.

The song ended, the dinner guests broke into applause, and then the singers picked their way through the gardens to a spot near the front of the pavilion. Here Koussevitzky and his friends stood on the veranda while the singers stood below among the ferns and low laurel bushes. Behind them were curving beds of flowers dimly outlined in the darkness against the borders of a wandering mountain brook that twinkled along in the night as if nature, too, was eager to add her tribute. In the air was the scent of roses, heliotrope and nightflowering nicotiana. Those who saw and heard the spectacle tell me it was one of the most poetic occasions of their lives.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

PLAN 1938 FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 27.—(AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent buolding to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

SPRINGFIELD ,MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 27 1936

FESTIVAL HOPES TO ERECT SHED

Sponsors of 1937 Berkshire Event Want to Raise Fund of $100,000—Koussevitzky Dislikes Tent

Pittsfield, Sept. 26—Sponsors of the 1937 Berkshire Music Festival hope to raise a fund of $100,000 with which to purchase a tract of land, build a music shed and finance the festival over a period of years with a long range program in view. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which gave the three concerts at Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate, Lenox, in August, was dissatisfied with the tent and will not return unless a permanent home is established. He wishes to give six concerts next summer and nine in 1938. It is proposed to prolong the festival over two weeks next August. If the Berkshire promoters make arrangements that are satisfactory to Dr Koussevitzky he will make a contract over a number of years.

A committee of which William A. Whittlesey of this city is chairman is to hold a meeting Monday afternoon and outline a plan to be presented at a gathering of the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Pittsfield Electric company auditorium Wednesday night. It is proposed to make Berkshire the summer center of music in the United States. One of the most enthusiastic promoters of the festival project is Prof Philip Marshall Brown of Princeton, N. J., and South Williamstown, who believes that a festival can be developed in Berkshire that will surpass anything in Europe. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival association, is confident of the success of the larger undertaking.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 27 1937

FUTURE OF BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DISCUSSED

$100,000 Fund Being Raised for Music Shed

Special to the Telegram

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 26.—Miss Mabel Choate of New York, daughter of the late Joseph H. Choate, ambassador to the Court of St. James, opened her home, "Naumkeag," in Stockbridge this afternoon for a gathering of Summer and permanent residents for a discussion of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with emphasis on the campaign to raise $100,000 for a music shed at "Tanglewood." About $30,000 has been reported for the fund to date.

Miss Robinson Smith, president of the festival, said: "We need the support of every music lover in the country who is interested. The standards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky have been maintained at our concerts. But the trying circumstances of a severe storm have convinced us that a permanent building is necessary."

Miss Smith announced that for the second year the festival has been self-sustaining.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
AUG 27 1937

Berkshire Music Plans Discussed At Choate Home

Announcement Made Of $30,000 In Gifts For Music Shed

Miss Mabel Choate of New York, daughter of the late Joseph H. Choate, ambassador to the Court of St. James, opened her home, "Naumkeag," in Stockbridge yesterday afternoon for a gathering of summer and permanent residents for a discussion of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with particular emphasis on the campaign to raise $100,000 for a music shed at "Tanglewood." About $30,000 has been reported for the fund to date.

"Many of these gifts have come from widely scattered parts of the country, reflecting a national interest in what we are trying to do," said Miss Robinson Smith, president of the Festival. "We appreciate and apparently so do our friends, that America is ready for a great symphonic festival. We are prepared to do our part, but we need the suport of every music lover in the country who is interested. The high artistic standards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky have been maintained at our concerts. But the trying circumstances of a severe storm have convinced us that a permanent building is necessary."

Applause greeted the announcement by Miss Robinson Smith that for the second year in succession the Festival has been self-sustaining. "There will be no deficit," she added. "I believe that is a record of which America may be proud and it is possible because we cater to no particular group. Our audiences come from all strata. They come because first of all they are assured of artistry in performance and secondly, because of the beautiful surroundings."

Miss Robinson Smith explained that gifts of more than $15,000 have been received since the last concert. They have come, she said from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, New Jersey, California, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Hampshire. One gift is for $10,000. Added to this total is more than $15,000 received during the winter and early spring.

In answer to questions raised at the meeting, the following facts were made clear:

The Festival is a non-profit endeavor, whose purpose is to establish in America a great summer center of symphonic music. Through the generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., "Tanglewod," located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., has become the property of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. The property has been leased in perpetuity to the Festival.

To insure artistry of performance and protection for the audience against storms, the Festival believes a permanent music shed is necessary.

The Festival trustees and trustees of the orchestra are agreed that the music shed must be of simple design and must fit into the beautiful surroundings at 'Tanglewood." The shed must be open on all sides, but there will be an arrangement whereby the sides may be closed against storms. There will be a double roof to kill the noise of rain.

Contributions of any denomination are most welcome and may be mailed to Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank, Stockbridge, Mass., treasurer of the Festival.

Contributions to the fund may be deducted from income tax returns.

The concerts in 1938, six in number, will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the first two weekends in August. Membership lists covering admission to concerts at reduced prices are now open.

Fifty-five boxes have been sold for 1938. They are being assigned in the order of receipt of applications.

For the sake of economy, Festival officers themselves are endeavoring to raise the funds for the music shed. The officers are: President, Miss Robinson Smith; vice-presidents, Mrs. de Heredia and Mr. Busey; treasurer, Mr. Dwight; executive vice-president, Mrs. George W. Edman; clerk, Mr. Edman.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 27 1937

$30,000 FUND RAISED FOR BERKSHIRE FETE

Many Sections of the Nation Aid Contributions for Permanent Shelter for Concerts

At a meeting of Summer and permanent residents of the Berkshire communities held yesterday afternoon at the Stockbridge, Mass., home of Miss Mabel Choate, daughter of the late Joseph H. Choate, Ambassador to the Court of St. James, it was revealed that about $30,000 has been raised toward the erection of a permanent shelter for the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. A campaign for $100,000 is now in progress.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced that contributions have come from many sections of the country, indicating widespread interest in the project. She also said that for the second consecutive season the festival has been self-sustaining.

Contributions to the fund, which may be deducted from income-tax returns, may be mailed to Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank, Stockbridge, Mass. Mr. Dwight is treasurer of the festival.

Fifty-five boxes have already been sold for the six concerts of 1938 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the first two week-ends of August.

ALBA
Knickerb

Perman
Regar

Illuminat recent article
the past, prese
tival, its relati
and the terms
"Evidence tha readily forthcomi of a permanen Tanglewood, the
the Berkshire Sy is seen in the fa 000 had been any appeal wha
out," Mr. Lindst
"Not less tha needed, but the least an augury campaign.
"Only yesterd gift of $10,000 w
an anonymous p
Thus more than required sum is
"It might clari
ture of this uni
tion at Stockbr
the situation as the disastrous which if it serv brought the definition where up to that time
Separa
"In many min been made be Symphony Orch
shire Symphoni
they are separa
Mrs. Gorham estate Tanglewo
she made the
must be used f
If not, the esta
the hands of phonic Festival giving summer
years prior to
Dr. Serge Kou cumbent on th prosecute the certs also or terest in Tangle ties the two o
in a close mut sevitzky and 't
will continue a permanent
by next summe
"It had been torium would son but the purposely deli they might pla are depending ally famous F
Saarinen for not only serv purposes of th
Characte
"The charac
self has not
Although ther of opera, it is ever get bey version. That zky wishes to soloists would costs perhaps Anyway ther

SAN F
THE
A

Quee
All seven of
be given durin
Promenade Co direction of S
to word receiv
The series w certs given du and two of th entirely to wo to works of thirty-three E represented by for production
This will b
the symphonie been presente occasion took Koussevitzky
phony Orches
works.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

AUG 28 1937

Permanent Festival Home Regarded as Certain

Illuminating is the word to describe Carl E. Lindstrom's recent article in the Hartford, Conn., Daily Times regarding the past, present and future of the Berkshire Symphony Festival, its relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the terms of the Tanglewood gift.

"Evidence that money will be readily forthcoming for the erection of a permanent auditorium at Tanglewood, thereby perpetuating the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is seen in the fact that about $16,000 had been contributed before any appeal whatsoever had gone out," Mr. Lindstrom writes.

"Not less than $100,000 will be needed, but the present sum is at least an augury of a successful campaign.

"Only yesterday an additional gift of $10,000 was announced from an anonymous patron in the West. Thus more than a quarter of the required sum is already at hand.

"It might clarify the complex nature of this unique musical attraction at Stockbridge to summarize the situation as it existed prior to the disastrous storm of last week, which if it served no other purpose brought the issue into sharp definition whereas plans had been up to that time somewhat vague.

Separate Entities

"In many minds no distinction has been made between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Actually they are separate entities. When Mrs. Gorham Brooks donated the estate Tanglewood to the orchestra she made the stipulation that it must be used for festival purposes. If not, the estate would pass into the hands of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which had been giving summer concerts for two years prior to the participation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. It is incumbent on the festival trustees to prosecute the annual summer concerts also or else forfeit any interest in Tanglewood. The gift thus ties the two organizations together in a close mutual interest. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra will continue to participate only if a permanent auditorium is erected by next summer; and there you are.

"It had been hoped that the auditorium would be there for this season but the managers had been purposely deliberate in order that they might plan the better. They are depending upon the internationally famous Finnish architect Eliel Saarinen for a design which shall not only serve present but future purposes of the festival.

Character in Formation

"The character of the festival itself has not yet been crystallized. Although there has been some talk of opera, it is not likely that it will ever get beyond opera in concert version. That is as far as Koussevitzky wishes to go. Hiring of famous soloists would immediately increase costs perhaps to prohibitive figures. Anyway there is a strong feeling that the Tanglewood concerts should be kept instrumental in character.

"Among the other things Koussevitzky has in mind is an American school of conductors. He believes that there is much native talent which needs opportunity for development. If there are to be American conductors there must be a place for them to train. He also has thoughts regarding concerts for young people at Tanglewood. All of which goes to show that the whole cultural project is in a state of flux, but behind it all is a tremendous enthusiasm. The ultimate direction is yet to be fixed.

"Talking with the eager and busy people who are backing the festival reveals a tendency to get away from too close an approximation of European festivals. That would be the easiest way—the imitative way. There is a desire to make the Berkshire mecca unique. That is why they do not warm to the opera idea. They point out that close relations are maintained with such other cultural projects as the Berkshire Playhouse, the Ted Shawn dancers, the South Mountain and the Music Mountain chamber music projects.

"It has come to the point where these artistic attractions are radiating culturally from Tanglewood, the hub. The others were there first, of course, but relations are so close that publicity for all of them is handled by the festival office and friendliest co-operation obtains regarding the arrangement of calendars of events. If the Berkshire cultural community is regarded as a whole it can be seen that the festival already has a character which set it off from Salzburg and Bayreuth, to mention no others.

"Although the balance sheet for this season is not yet available it is believed that the festival made the ends of its $40,000 budget meet. This will then be the second financially successful year. Last year's budget was $18,500 and there was a small surplus which, of course, remained in the general fund and cannot go toward building operations."

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
THE ARGONAUT

AUG 27 1937

Queen's Hall Concerts

All seven of Sibelius' symphonies will be given during the current Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts in London, under the direction of Sir Henry Wood, according to word received recently.

The series will consist of forty-nine concerts given during an eight week season, and two of the concerts will be devoted entirely to works of Sibelius. In addition to works of the Finnish master, some thirty-three English composers will be represented by the compositions scheduled for production during the season.

This will be the second time that all the symphonies of the Sibelius cycle have been presented at the same time. The first occasion took place in Boston when Serge Koussevitzky directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the playing of all the works.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 27 1937

Berkshire Symphony Prepared for 1938

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27 (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 27 1937

Six Concerts Planned At Berkshire Next Year

STOCKBRIDGE (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

SEP 28 1936

PLAN TO DEVELOP MUSIC FESTIVAL IS BEING PUSHED

Berkshire Conference Held to Decide on Furtherance of Schedule Covering Several Years

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 27—Development of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, so successful in 1936, into a great festival that will make the Berkshires as outstanding as the great festival centers of Europe, is now being considered by the festival organization and a group of businessmen in the county.

Several representative businessmen of Berkshire met over the week end with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at her home in Stockbridge, to discuss the reactions to the 1936 festival, to consider whether the time is ripe for further development of the festival idea and to discover whether there is sufficient interest on the part of businessmen to support a plan covering several years. If there is sufficient sentiment in favor of the festival it will be continued.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George E. Judd, manager, were in the Berkshires last week and it was because of this visit that the conference was called.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky will come to Berkshire next year for six concerts instead of three, as given this year, as the beginning of the plan. Six concerts constitute the first condition of their returning. The second condition is that a shed be built to replace the tent. To meet these conditions, it is the consensus of the festival executive committee, which coincides with that of Dr. Koussevitzky, that a permanent home must be found and a long-range plan adopted to achieve the aim of making the Berkshire festival as outstanding in America as the great festival centers of Europe.

W. A. Whittlesey was named as chairman of a committee of five to canvass sentiment and to study plans for the future. This committee will meet Monday afternoon. On Wednesday evening at 7.30 at the Pittsfield Electric Company Auditorium, the Berkshire Hills Conference is sponsoring a meeting of businessmen and interested citizens of the country. At this meeting the future of the festival and the entire recreational picture as it applies to Berkshire will be presented.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

SEP 29 1936

Development of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival into one that will make the Berkshires as outstanding as the great festival centers of Europe was considered in Stockbridge over the week-end by several representative business men of the section. Dr. George Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and George E Judd, manager, were in the Berkshires earlier in the week and for that reason the conference was called.

The Boston Symphony with Dr Koussevitzky will go to the Berkshires next year for six concerts instead of three as given this year. Six concerts constitute the first condition of its returning. The second condition is that a shed be built to replace the tent. The hope is to find a permanent home.

The Festival committee must answer Dr. Koussevitzky on these proposals no later than Nov. 1. Subscriptions are being solicited now in order to learn whether or not such expenses can be undertaken.

The program for the opening concerts of the season by the Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 9 and 10, includes: "Haydn's Symphony in B-flat" (No. 102), Debussy's "La Mer" and Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony."

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

AUG 22 1937

Berkshire Festival Seeks Fund for New Pavilion

THE executive committees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra jointly announced yesterday before the closing concert of the 1937 festival that they were agreed on the necessity for a permanent music shed to house next year's concerts and that the festival group was prepared to move immediately to raise $100,000 for such a structure.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who through his concerts here has added to his many admirers, declares that it is impossible to conduct the festival another year unless steps are taken to avoid interruptions by storms such as occurred recently.

A building of simple design, open on the sides, which will harmonize with the surroundings at Tanglewood, is contemplated by the festival group.

The announcement followed a meeting of the two groups at the home of the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge, Mass. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft of the Boston board; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredio, Norval H. Busey, Jr., Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman, representing the festival.

The statement from the meeting follows:

"Our groups are in complete accord. The building must be of simple design, completely open on the sides, but with sides affording protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The Festival group agrees to conduct a campaign for $100,000 with which to erect the music shed, the stage and tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours where a Festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Anyone interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass."

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

SEP 1 - 1937

Music Views

Opportunity

BY EUGENE STINSON

ON HEARING Hans Lange conduct the Chicago Symphony at the Grant park band shell over last week-end, two performances struck me in particular. That of the prelude to "Meistersinger" was at least the third he had given here and it was at any rate the second under his hands in which this incomparably exuberant work did the amazing thing of failing to interest me.

I heard the remarkable pattern of the score and I observed Mr. Lange building it up like a true musician to an imposing climax. Its pulse and its excitement were gone, however, and I must conclude that Mr. Lange's restraining influence upon it comes from his permitting scholarly considerations to keep him from feeling the motivating and joyous excitement of Wagner's own purpose in this colossal demonstration of tonal energy.

Sibelius Symphony Satisfying.

The second symphony of Sibelius struck me in much the same terms though with considerably less force. It was a satisfying performance and only the accident of performances here by Koussevitzky and Harty would necessarily have led me to suspect there is more to be made of the work than what I heard from Mr. Lange. Each of these conductors had the insight or the knack sufficient to keep the final movement, with its remarkable rolling accompaniment, at a magnificent tension and charged with an illuminating unity. I don't know the secret of it, but I guess that it lies in the matter of tempo.

Lest it be thought gratuitous of me to qualify my admiration of Mr. Lange by these two instances, let me say that I do so on the basis of an opinion already stated here, that I think Chicago extremely fortunate to have him here and let me add that I think the two instances would undoubtedly be of interest to Mr. Lange himself, did he happen to agree with me. They are of importance, because Mr. Lange, with all his maturity and for all the distinction of his gifts, is as yet a young man at the threshold of a career that is certain of being eminent.

NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

AUG 27 1937

1938 BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PLAN

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27 (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscriptions of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 28 1937

Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass. — Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Stockbridge, Mass., has agreed to head the campaign for $100,000 with which to erect a permanent music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She will be assisted by members of the Board of Trustees in perfecting details for the campaign. In the interest of economy, the festival group itself will endeavor to raise the funds.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

SEP 1 - 1937

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL, which featured six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra during the past two weeks was a real musical feast according to Mrs. George F. Johnston of Buckingham Street, who returned on Saturday from New England. Mrs. Johnston who is one of the ardent supporters of the Rochester Music Association and a member of the Board of the Hochstein School of Music, has had a remarkable musical experience and her knowledge of this art is extensive and profound.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 27 1937

Six Concerts in 1938 for Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27.—(A.P.) — Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

171

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

AUG 28 193

Permanent Festival Home Regarded as Certain

Illuminating is the word to describe Carl E. Lindstrom's recent article in the Hartford, Conn., Daily Times regarding the past, present and future of the Berkshire Symphony Festival, its relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the terms of the Tanglewood gift.

"Evidence that money will be readily forthcoming for the erection of a permanent auditorium at Tanglewood, thereby perpetuating the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is seen in the fact that about $16,000 had been contributed before any appeal whatsoever had gone out," Mr. Lindstrom writes.

"Not less than $100,000 will be needed, but the present sum is at least an augury of a successful campaign.

"Only yesterday an additional gift of $10,000 was announced from an anonymous patron in the West. Thus more than a quarter of the required sum is already at hand.

"It might clarify the complex nature of this unique musical attraction at Stockbridge to summarize the situation as it existed prior to the disastrous storm of last week, which if it served no other purpose brought the issue into sharp definition whereas plans had been up to that time somewhat vague.

Separate Entities

"In many minds no distinction has been made between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Actually they are separate entities. When Mrs. Gorham Brooks donated the estate Tanglewood to the orchestra she made the stipulation that it must be used for festival purposes. If not, the estate would pass into the hands of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which had been giving summer concerts for two years prior to the participation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. It is incumbent on the festival trustees to prosecute the annual summer concerts also or else forfeit any interest in Tanglewood. The gift thus ties the two organizations together in a close mutual interest. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra will continue to participate only if a permanent auditorium is erected by next summer; and there you are.

"It had been hoped that the auditorium would be there for this season but the managers had been purposely deliberate in order that they might plan the better. They are depending upon the internationally famous Finnish architect Eliel Saarinen for a design which shall not only serve present but future purposes of the festival.

Character in Formation

"The character of the festival itself has not yet been crystallized. Although there has been some talk of opera, it is not likely that it will ever get beyond opera in concert version. That is as far as Koussevitzky wishes to go. Hiring of famous soloists would immediately increase costs perhaps to prohibitive figures. Anyway there is a strong feeling that the Tanglewood concerts should be kept instrumental in character.

"Among the other things Koussevitzky has in mind is an American school of conductors. He believes that there is much native talent which needs opportunity for development. If there are to be American conductors there must be a place for them to train. He also has thoughts regarding concerts for young people at Tanglewood. All of which goes to show that the whole cultural project is in a state of flux, but behind it all is a tremendous enthusiasm. The ultimate direction is yet to be fixed.

"Talking with the eager and busy people who are backing the festival reveals a tendency to get away from too close an approximation of European festivals. That would be the easiest way—the imitative way. There is a desire to make the Berkshire mecca unique. That is why they do not warm to the opera idea. They point out that close relations are maintained with such other cultural projects as the Berkshire Playhouse, the Ted Shawn dancers, the South Mountain and the Music Mountain chamber music projects.

"It has come to the point where these artistic attractions are radiating culturally from Tanglewood, the hub. The others were there first, of course, but relations are so close that publicity for all of them is handled by the festival office and friendliest co-operation obtains regarding the arrangement of calendars of events. If the Berkshire cultural community is regarded as a whole it can be seen that the festival already has a character which set it off from Salzburg and Bayreuth, to mention no others.

"Although the balance sheet for this season is not yet available it is believed that the festival made the ends of its $40,000 budget meet. This will then be the second financially successful year. Last year's budget was $18,500 and there was a small surplus which, of course, remained in the general fund and cannot go toward building operations."

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
THE ARGONAUT

AUG 27 1937

Queen's Hall Concerts

All seven of Sibelius' symphonies will be given during the current Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts in London, under the direction of Sir Henry Wood, according to word received recently.

The series will consist of forty-nine concerts given during an eight week season, and two of the concerts will be devoted entirely to works of Sibelius. In addition to works of the Finnish master, some thirty-three English composers will be represented by the compositions scheduled for production during the season.

This will be the second time that all the symphonies of the Sibelius cycle have been presented at the same time. The first occasion took place in Boston when Serge Koussevitzky directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the playing of all the works.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 27 1937

Berkshire Symphony Prepared for 1938

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27 (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 27 1937

Six Concerts Planned At Berkshire Next Year

STOCKBRIDGE (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

SEP 28 1936

PLAN TO DEVELOP MUSIC FESTIVAL IS BEING PUSHED

Berkshire Conference Held to Decide on Furtherance of Schedule Covering Several Years

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 27—Development of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, so successful in 1936, into a great festival that will make the Berkshires as outstanding as the great festival centers of Europe, is now being considered by the festival organization and a group of businessmen in the county.

Several representative businessmen of Berkshire met over the week end with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at her home in Stockbridge, to discuss the reactions to the 1936 festival, to consider whether the time is ripe for further development of the festival idea and to discover whether there is sufficient interest on the part of businessmen to support a plan covering several years. If there is sufficient sentiment in favor of the festival it will be continued.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George [illegible]dd, manager, were in the Berkshires last week and it was because of this visit that the conference was called.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky will come to Berkshire next year for six concerts instead of three, as given this year, as the beginning of the plan. Six concerts constitute the first condition of their returning. The second condition is that a shed be built to replace the tent. To meet these conditions, it is the consensus of the festival executive committee, which coincides with that of Dr. Koussevitzky, that a permanent home must be found and a long-range plan adopted to achieve the aim of making the Berkshire festival as outstanding in America as the great festival centers of Europe.

W. A. Whittlesey was named as chairman of a committee of five to canvass sentiment and to study plans for the future. This committee will meet Monday afternoon. On Wednesday evening at 7.30 at the Pittsfield Electric Company Auditorium, the Berkshire Hills Conference is sponsoring a meeting of businessmen and interested citizens of the country. At this meeting the future of the festival and the entire recreational picture as it applies to Berkshire will be presented.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

SEP 29 1936

Development of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival into one that will make the Berkshires as outstanding as the great festival centers of Europe was considered in Stockbridge over the week-end by several representative business men of the section. Dr. George Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and George E. Judd, manager, were in the Berkshires earlier in the week and for that reason the conference was called.

The Boston Symphony with Dr. Koussevitzky will go to the Berkshires next year for six concerts instead of three as given this year. Six concerts constitute the first condition of its returning. The second condition is that a shed be built to replace the tent. The hope is to find a permanent home.

The Festival committee must answer Dr. Koussevitzky on these proposals no later than Nov. 1. Subscriptions are being solicited now in order to learn whether or not such expenses can be undertaken.

The program for the opening concerts of the season by the Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 9 and 10, includes: "Haydn's Symphony in B-flat" (No. 102), Debussy's "La Mer" and Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony."

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

AUG 22 1937

Berkshire Festival Seeks Fund for New Pavilion

THE executive committees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra jointly announced yesterday before the closing concert of the 1937 festival that they were agreed on the necessity for a permanent music shed to house next year's concerts and that the festival group was prepared to move immediately to raise $100,000 for such a structure.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who through his concerts here has added to his many admirers, declares that it is impossible to conduct the festival another year unless steps are taken to avoid interruptions by storms such as occurred recently.

A building of simple design, open on the sides, which will harmonize with the surroundings at Tanglewood, is contemplated by the festival group.

The announcement followed a meeting of the two groups at the home of the festival's president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge, Mass. At the meeting were Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Henry B. Sawyer and Edward A. Taft of the Boston board; Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredio, Norval H. Busey, Jr., Henry W. Dwight, Robert K. Wheeler and George W. Edman, representing the festival.

The statement from the meeting follows:

"Our groups are in complete accord. The building must be of simple design, completely open on the sides, but with sides affording protection from rain. We must not lose the charm of Tanglewood.

"The Festival group agrees to conduct a campaign for $100,000 with which to erect the music shed, the stage and tuning rooms.

"The two groups are of the opinion that America is ready for a shrine such as ours where a Festival of significance and purpose may be developed. We wish the growth to be commensurate with public interest and support. We sincerely hope that funds will be forthcoming from many parts of the country. Anyone interested in the cause, we welcome, and checks may be addressed to the treasurer, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass."

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

Music Views

Opportunity

BY EUGENE STINSON

ON HEARING Hans Lange conduct the Chicago Symphony at the Grant park band shell over last week-end, two performances struck me in particular. That of the prelude to "Meistersinger" was at least the third he had given here and it was at any rate the second under his hands in which this incomparably exuberant work did the amazing thing of failing to interest me.

I heard the remarkable pattern of the score and I observed Mr. Lange building it up like a true musician to an imposing climax. Its pulse and its excitement were gone, however, and I must conclude that Mr. Lange's restraining influence upon it comes from his permitting scholarly considerations to keep him from feeling the motivating and joyous excitement of Wagner's own purpose in this colossal demonstration of tonal energy.

Sibelius Symphony Satisfying.

The second symphony of Sibelius struck me in much the same terms though with considerably less force. It was a satisfying performance and only the accident of performances here by Koussevitzky and Harty would necessarily have led me to suspect there is more to be made of the work than what I heard from Mr. Lange. Each of these conductors had the insight or the knack sufficient to keep the final movement, with its remarkable rolling accompaniment, at a magnificent tension and charged with an illuminating unity. I don't know the secret of it, but I guess that it lies in the matter of tempo.

Lest it be thought gratuitous of me to qualify my admiration of Mr. Lange by these two instances, let me say that I do so on the basis of an opinion already stated here, that I think Chicago extremely fortunate to have him here and let me add that I think the two instances would undoubtedly be of interest to Mr. Lange himself, did he happen to agree with me. They are of importance, because Mr. Lange, with all his maturity and for all the distinction of his gifts, is as yet a young man at the threshold of a career that is certain of being eminent.

NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

AUG 27 1937

1938 BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PLAN

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27 (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscriptions of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 28 1937

Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass. — Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Stockbridge, Mass., has agreed to head the campaign for $100,000 with which to erect a permanent music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She will be assisted by members of the Board of Trustees in perfecting details for the campaign. In the interest of economy, the festival group itself will endeavor to raise the funds.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

SEP 1937

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL which featured six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra during the past two weeks was a real musical feast according to Mrs. George F. Johnston of Buckingham Street, who returned on Saturday from New England. Mrs. Johnston who is one of the ardent supporters of the Rochester Music Association and a member of the Board of the Hochstein School of Music, has had a remarkable musical experience and her knowledge of this art is extensive and profound.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 27 1937

Six Concerts in 1938 for Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 27.—(A.P.) — Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

gland Bear the Heat Stoically and En

Symphony Season Opens Friday Afternoon, Oct. 8

Many Bostonians Have Held Season Tickets From Five to Fifty Years

For fifty years there have been two groups of Bostonians, many of the original members remaining, but gradually enlarging, until now they number in the thousands, one of whom devote twenty-four Friday afternoons of the year, the other, twenty-four Saturday evenings, religously to music.

Through change, wars, depressions and ordinary times they have clung to this custom, so that the Symphony concerts are now as much of a habit with them as eating three meals a day. They have seen a small orchestra of mediocre quality develope into one of world-wide fame, under the batons of several different conductors, sometimes retrogressing during the later years of one or another of them, only to be braced by the appearance of a younger, more brilliant director who brings them to a high standard of musical accomplishment.

On Oct. 8 and 9, Symphony Hall will again be filled to its doors with concert goers, who will thrill to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's first appearance on the podium, the hush that anticipates the first few barrs of his opening composition and the sharp down-stroke of his baton as he sets the tempo for his first surge of sound into the great hall.

In the list of names that follows are those of a few who have had season tickets, and probably the same seats, during the greater part of fifty years, as well as a very few of the hundreds who have held held them anywhere from that period down to five—in other words the Symphony's oldest subscribers.

Among the most long-standing of the Saturday evening season ticket subscribers, are: Miss Margaret D. Ackerman, Miss Katherine F. Adams, Miss Dora L. Adler, Mrs. Thomas Allen, Willard Allphin, Lloyd V. Almirall, Miss Elizabeth H. Andrews, Miss Elizabeth J. Andrews, Richard G. Appel, B. Earle Appleton, Mrs. Frances S. Appleton, George D. Appleton, Miss Sarah R. Armington, Dr. Avery A. Ashdown, Edward W. Atkinson, Richard S Atkinson, Dr. Joseph C. Aub, William G. Aurelio, Miss Ruth E. Austen, Elisha L. Avery, Miss Christine M. Ayars, Professor Hugh W. Babb, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Dr. George S. C. Badger, Mrs. T. T. Baldwin, Edward Ballantine, Miss Edith Bangs, Miss Mary R. Bangs, Samuel Barkin, Robert S. Barlow and S. J. Barnet.

Also Dr. Joseph S. Barr, Dr. Alice H. Bassett, Miss Eva M. Bath, Dr. Walter Bauer, Mrs. G. W. Becker, Miss Gertrude C. Belcher, Alan C. Bemis, Arthur T. Bent, Miss Gertrude Berkman, Miss A. Viola Berlin, Dr. Alice H. Bigelow, Miss Gladys M. Bigelow, C. C. Birchard, Miss Mildred E. Bixby, S. A. Block, Herbert R. Boardman, Richard P. Borden, Miss Evelyn M. Borofsky, William B. Bowers, 2d, Mrs. Frederick J. Bradlee, Professor S. Braslavsky, Dr. William B. Breed, Aaron Brest, Miss Eleanor M. Brodie, Miss Sarah Brodny, Miss Mary M. Brooks, Arthur M. Brown. Mrs. Capen Brown, Miss Bertha W. Bryant, Mrs. Melvin H. Bryant, Miss Ella N. Buck, Mrs. Charles S. Buell, Rowland Burdon-Muller, Mrs. H. R. Burgess, Miss Margaret M. Burnap, Miss Frances A. Burnham, Mrs. Walter G. Burns, I. Tucker Burr, Dr. Henry L. Cabitt, Stephen P. Cabot, Mrs. E. E. Campbell, Mrs. H. B. Campbell, Miss Cornelia P. Carr, Mrs. John P. Carr, Mrs. George T. Carter, Morris Carter, Miss Nellie M. Carter, Miss Rose and Miss Catherine M. Casassa.

Friday afternoon, long-time subscribers, are:

Mrs. George Abbot, John M. Abbot, Mrs. Amy Hubbard Abbott, Mrs. George M. Abbott, Mrs. Pennell N. Aborn, Mrs. Cecil Q. Adams, Mrs. Charles H. Adams, Miss Clara A. Adams, Mrs. Faneuil Adams, Miss Fanny M. Adams, Miss Sarah Adams, Mrs. Winthrop C. Adams, Mrs. Andrew Adie, Mrs. George R. Agassiz, Mrs. Max Agassiz, Mrs. Talbot Aldrich and Miss Martha A. Alford.

Others are Mrs. E. L. Allen, Mrs. Harry F. Allen, Miss Margaret E. Allen, Mrs. Philip R. Allen, Mrs. Thomas Allen, Jr., Mrs. Thomas E. Allen, Mrs. Ernest V. Alley, Miss Carolyn E. Alling, Mrs. Hobart Ames, Mrs. Richard Ames, Mrs. Robert R. Ames, Mrs. William H. Ames, Mrs. Charles B. Amory, Mrs. Charles F. Angell, Jr., Miss Margaret Anthony, F. W. Archibald, Mrs. James R. Armington, Joseph N. Ashton, Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs. Charles F. Ayer, Mrs. Frederick Ayer, Mrs. James B. Ayer and Mrs. W. P. F. Ayer.

Also Mrs. Roger W. Babson, Mrs. Louis F. Bachrach, Mrs. Paul Bacon, Mrs. James A. Bailey, Mrs. P. H. Bailey, Mrs. George Bramwell Baker, Mrs. Roland M. Baker, Miss Alicia H. Baldwin, Mrs. Edith A. Baldwin, Mrs. William H. Baltzell, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, Miss Mary E. Bancroft, Mrs. George W. Barber, Mrs. B. Devereux Barker, Mrs. James H. Barnard, Mr. William L. Barnard, Mrs. Charles B. Barnes, Mrs. Howard J. Barnet, Mrs. J. Dellinger Barney and Miss Laura M. Barr.

Still others are Mrs. Matthew Bartlett, Mrs. John W. Bartol, Mrs. Leon J. Barwood, Mrs. J. Colby Bassett, Mrs. Henry B. Batchelor, Miss Josephine B. Bates, Miss Katharine F. Baxter, Mrs. Charles H. Bayley, Miss Louisa T. Bazeley, Mrs. Ruth D. Beals, Mrs. Horace L. Bearse, Miss Edith D. Beck, Mrs. Harry H. Beckwith, Mrs. J. Oliver Beebe, Miss Sylenda Beebe, Mrs. Jaffrey deHauteville Bell, Mrs. Alan F. Bemis, Mrs. Frank B. Bemis, Miss Evelyn Benedict, Miss Frances Z. T. Benner, Mrs. Frank W. Benson, Mrs. Henry P. Benson, Mrs Jacob Berwin, Mrs. Edward H. Best, Mrs. Warren D. Bigelow, Mrs. Kenneth S. Billings, Mrs. Francis W. Bird, Mrs. Howard M. Biscoe, Jr., Miss Margaret G. Blaine and Miss Harriet E. Blair.

Genial Grandam of Music Talks of Past

Mrs. George H. Wilson Recalls Beginning of Boston Symphoy and Talks of Patti and Materna and Other Great Ones

BY REDFERN MASON

The other day in the old Major John Bradford House at Kingston, of all places in the world, I met a dear old lady who is a perambulating history of music in Boston and other parts of the country during the last sixty years. Her name is Mrs. K. de N. Wilson and she is the widow of George H. Wilson, the writer of the first notes ever written for the programs of the Boston Symphony.

Four score and odd years have passed over Mrs. Wilson's head; but mention B. J. Lang or Colonel Higginson and the years seem to drop away from her. I sat still while she thought aloud, occasionally interjecting a word to direct her mind to some subject or person that came into my mind.

"Oh yes," she mused, "I well remember how George wrote those notes for the Symphony. Then Mr. Apthorp took up the work and, after him Philip Hale. Never was such an erudite man as Mr. Hale; he literally oozed learning and, what is more, he never talked like a pedant. True, he sat down on the artist rather heavily now and then; but he mellowed with the years.

"George and I used to go to the concerts of the Handel and Haydn Society when B. J. Lang was director. He did more for the broad musical development of Boston than any other man. It was really he who put the idea of the Symphony into Mr. Higginson's head."

"Don't you think it was there already?" I suggest.

"Well, maybe it was; but I am sure that Mr. Lang encouraged him. And he needed encouragement, believe me, especially in the early years. The orchestra originally consisted of Boston musicians, you know, and they were such individualists that it was no easy matter for them to submit to direction, even from a man like George Henschel. But George eventually won them over. They could not but react to his wonderful geniality and, if they knew their Haydn and Mozart and Beethoven, they soon found out that he knew them much better. Today the Boston audience is steeped in such music; but think of its effect on a public to whom it came as a revelation. Every year Henschel gave us all the Beethoven symphonies. We loved the music and we loved the man who taught our players to play it so well."

The indomitable old lady thinks for a moment and then breaks out with increased vivacity.

"There were no pedagogues in those days to give lectures. If we wanted musical appreciation we had to look inside for it. Before the concert took place we would go over to Ruth Burrage's studio and we would play the symphony or overture in a four or eight-hand arrangement. We never went to an opera or oratorio without having studied it; we played it, we sang it; we pored over it till it had revealed the composer's secret. That is the way to enjoy music. Make it for yourself."

"Maybe you'd make an exception in favor of Dr. Damrosch," I insinuate.

"Yes, I would; but he's one in a thousand."

And then this "old lady eloquent," if I may dare to modify Milton's classic phrase, launches into recollections of the great ones of music she heard when her husband was with the Pittsburgh Orchestra, when he went on tour with Savage, when she herself was the leading spirit in the management of Carnegie Hall. It is like listening to a musical "Who's Who?"

"How it all comes back to me," she muses. "There was Josef Hoffman, that amazing boy who at eleven years of age played fifty-two concerts in seventy-four days. It was nothing short of cruelty. I could write a whole chapter about parents who have exploited their children to reap the profits.

"I can see them in my mind's eye, the great singers and players, passing by like the torch-bearers of Greek legend. There was Patti, the most perfectly placed voice in the world, a voice still sweet and clean after sixty years of singing. Not much temperament, I grant you, and she wasn't burdened with brains. What a difference between her and Etelka Gerster; Gerster had all the things Patti lacked.

"I was at the first performance of 'Lohengrin' ever given in Boston, with Emma Albani as Elsa and Annie Louise Cary as Ortrud. I heard Minnie Hauk, too, and, to my way of thinking, she was a better Carmen than Calve, better than Mary Garden or Geraldine Farrar.

"Who was the greatest? Frankly, I cannot make up my mind. Ask of the high gods and don't put unqualified confidence in any of the critics. Still Henderson was a fine man, though we did call him 'the bear with the sore back.' But that's an aside. We were talking about great singers. Amaelia Materna stands out in my memory as one of the leaders. What a glorious voice she had.

"And there was Frau Joachim. I shall never hear the 'Erlkonig' as she sang it as long as I live. She had a curious but effective thing in her singing which she learned from her husband's violin. It was not a tremolo; but she did with her lips the same thing that he did with his finger on the string, making a stronger, more vibrant tone. What a difference between women like Materna and Lilli Lehmann and Emma Eames, though Emma was as fine a frame on which to hang the beautiful clothes her artist husband designed for her as you could wish to see.

"And the men folk. When shall we have another David Bispham? When shall I see a 'Tristan' with such a hero as Jean de Reszke or such a Kurwenal as his brother Edward? Boston is familiar with the 'Ring' today, but think of the enthusiasm there was when it was first done and we had Lehmann, Kalisch and Alvary."

The reminiscences swing pendulum-like from past to present. Mrs. Wilson recalls John Knowles Paine; she laughs at the "intriguing mannerisms" of the "Chopinzee." She remembers how Theodore Thomas, when people found fault with his readings of the "Messiah," said that Handel had appeared to him in a dream and told him how to do it. Of Paderewski her impression is that of a great personality; she does not insist on his being an inspired artist; she recalls with a sense of shame how they had to refuse Kreisler an appearance—in Pittsburgh, I think. The venerable figure of John S. Dwight came to her mind, a man who was happy in his writings, but hated Wagner as a "blatant noise maker" and "a wrecker of musical tradition." Edward MacDowell she thinks of as "the simplest, most lovable man" and his death as a calamity to music.

More, much more, might be told. Perhaps one of these days Mrs. Wilson and I will meet again in the Bradford House and she will tell another story.

But she has an after-thought. "One of the rarest types of artist," she says, "is the accompanist of genius. I have known three of them: Andre Benoist, Carl Lamson and Conraad Bos."

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 27 1937

$30,000 SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Stockbridge. Mass., Aug. 27, (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire Symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1933 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
SEP 4 - 1937

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL IN APPEAL FOR MUSIC SHED FUNDS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 3—From the office of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., today went an appeal to thousands of music lovers all over the country calling attention to the proposal to erect a $100,000 music shed at "Tanglewood," permanent home of the Festival, presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline.

The concerts this year by the orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, like the concerts last year, were self-supporting. More than $35,000 already has been received for the building fund, according to the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Stockbridge.

The appeal asking for returns by September 15, emphasizes the national significance of the Festival, the storm threat making an adequate shelter necessary, the non-profit aspect of the venture, established for "the educational purpose of developing knowledge and appreciation of the finest music."

The subscription blank states that checks may be made payable to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass., and that contributions will be returned in full if the project is not realized. Contributions may be paid in full or in installments, October 15, January 15 and April 15. These contributions may be deducted from federal income tax returns and are deductible in many states.

"Contributions from the general public will be most welcome," said Miss Robinson Smith. "Naturally, our appeals will miss many people but we welcome general support. To economize, our trustees are attempting to raise the necessary funds themselves."

89-48

Genial Grandam of Music Talks of Past

Mrs. George H. Wilson Recalls Beginning of Boston Symphoy and Talks of Patti and Materna and Other Great Ones

Sept. 4 1937

BY REDFERN MASON

The other day in the old Major John Bradford House at Kingston, of all places in the world, I met a dear old lady who is a perambulating history of music in Boston and other parts of the country during the last sixty years. Her name is Mrs. K. de N. Wilson and she is the widow of George H. Wilson, the writer of the first notes ever written for the programs of the Boston Symphony.

Four score and odd years have passed over Mrs. Wilson's head; but mention B. J. Lang or Colonel Higginson and the years seem to drop away from her. I sat still while she thought aloud, occasionally interjecting a word to direct her mind to some subject or person that came into my mind.

"Oh yes," she mused, "I well remember how George wrote those notes for the Symphony. Then Mr. Apthorp took up the work and, after him Philip Hale. Never was such an erudite man as Mr. Hale; he literally oozed learning and, what is more, he never talked like a pedant. True, he sat down on the artist rather heavily now and then; but he mellowed with the years.

"George and I used to go to the concerts of the Handel and Haydn Society when B. J. Lang was director. He did more for the broad musical development of Boston than any other man. It was really he who put the idea of the Symphony into Mr. Higginson's head."

"Don't you think it was there already?" I suggest.

"Well, maybe it was; but I am sure that Mr. Lang encouraged him. And he needed encouragement, believe me, especially in the early years. The orchestra originally consisted of Boston musicians, you know, and they were such individualists that it was no easy matter for them to submit to direction, even from a man like George Henschel. But George eventually won them over. They could not but react to his wonderful geniality and, if they knew their Haydn and Mozart and Beethoven, they soon found out that he knew them much better. Today the Boston audience is steeped in such music; but think of its effect on a public to whom it came as a revelation. Every year Henschel gave us all the Beethoven symphonies. We loved the music and we loved the man who taught our players to play it so well."

The indomitable old lady thinks for a moment and then breaks out with increased vivacity.

"There were no pedagogues in those days to give lectures. If we wanted musical appreciation we had to look inside for it. Before the concert took place we would go over to Ruth Burrage's studio and we would play the symphony or overture in a four or eight-hand arrangement. We never went to an opera or oratorio without having studied it; we played it, we sang it; we pored over it till it had revealed the composer's secret. That is the way to enjoy music. Make it for yourself."

"Maybe you'd make an exception in favor of Dr. Damrosch," I insinuate.

"Yes, I would; but he's one in a thousand."

And then this "old lady eloquent," if I may dare to modify Milton's classic phrase, launches into recollections of the great ones of music she heard when her husband was with the Pittsburgh Orchestra, when he went on tour with Savage, when she herself was the leading spirit in the management of Carnegie Hall. It is like listening to a musical "Who's Who?"

"How it all comes back to me," she muses.

Josef Hoffman, that amazing boy who at eleven years of age played fifty-two concerts in seventy-four days. It was nothing short of cruelty. I could write a whole chapter about parents who have exploited their children to reap the profits.

"I can see them in my mind's eye, the great singers and players, passing by like the torchbearers of Greek legend. There was Patti, the most perfectly placed voice in the world, a voice still sweet and clean after sixty years of singing. Not much temperament, I grant you, and she wasn't burdened with brains. What a difference between her and Etelka Gerster; Gerster had all the things Patti lacked.

"I was at the first performance of 'Lohengrin' ever given in Boston, with Emma Albani as Elsa and Annie Louise Cary as Ortrud. I heard Minnie Hauk, too, and, to my way of thinking, she was a better Carmen than Calve, better than Mary Garden or Geraldine Farrar.

"Who was the greatest? Frankly, I cannot make up my mind. Ask of the high gods and don't put unqualified confidence in any of the critics. Still Henderson was a fine man, though we did call him 'the bear with the sore back.' But that's an aside. We were talking about great singers. Amaelia Materna stands out in my memory as one of the leaders. What a glorious voice she had.

"And there was Frau Joachim. I shall never hear the 'Erlkonig' as she sang it as long as I live. She had a curious but effective thing in her singing which she learned from her husband's violin. It was not a tremolo; but she did with her lips the same thing that he did with his finger on the string, making a stronger, more vibrant tone. What a difference between women like Materna and Lilli Lehmann and Emma Eames, though Emma was as fine a frame on which to hang the beautiful clothes her artist husband designed for her as you could wish to see.

"And the men folk. When shall we have another David Bispham? When shall I see a 'Tristan' with such a hero as Jean de Reszke or such a Kurwenal as his brother Edward? Boston is familiar with the 'Ring' today, but think of the enthusiasm there was when it was first done and we had Lehmann, Kalisch and Alvary."

The reminiscences swing pendulum-like from past to present. Mrs. Wilson recalls John Knowles Paine; she laughs at the "intriguing mannerisms" of the "Chopinzee." She remembers how Theodore Thomas, when people found fault with his readings of the "Messiah," said that Handel had appeared to him in a dream and told him how to do it. Of Paderewski her impression is that of a great personality; she does not insist on his being an inspired artist; she recalls with a sense of shame how they had to refuse Kreisler an appearance—in Pittsburgh, I think. The venerable figure of John S. Dwight came to her mind, a man who was happy in his writings, but hated Wagner as a "blatant noise maker" and "a wrecker of musical tradition." Edward MacDowell she thinks of as "the simplest, most lovable man" and his death as a calamity to music.

More, much more, might be told. Perhaps one of these days Mrs. Wilson and I will meet again in the Bradford House and she will tell another story.

But she has an after-thought. "One of the rarest types of artist," she says, "is the accompanist of genius. I have known three of them: Andre Benoist, Carl Lamson and Conraad Bos."

Part Four Sept 4 Trans

Music Makers of New E

Activities of Symphony Are Wide: Forty-Six Weeks of Music

Could School Music Teachers Hear Final Rehearsal? Scope of Berkshire Festival

"Next week we expect to send out Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's plans for the coming season of the Boston Symphony."

Thus George E. Judd, who, being manager of the orchestra, knows whereof he speaks.

"Dr. Koussevitzky is having a brief vacation in Maine and will probably complete it in the Adirondacks. The people of both regions are naturally interested in the Berkshire Festival. Of course, the Berkshire folks want to make it a celebration of national appeal, and doubtless we shall have many visitors from the South and the West. Success at Tanglewood will breed rivals, but we can reasonably calculate on patronage from places as far as Cleveland to the West and Philadelphia to the South."

"Of course," Mr. Judd continues, "it would be ideal if the Boston Symphony could be heard by the people in every important city of New England and in every county of Massachusetts; but, apart from the expense, the work already done by the orchestra is so great that it would be difficult to extend it. We give 110 subscription concerts; there are sixty "pops"; twenty-four concerts are given by members of the Symphony on the Esplanade, and there are six in the Berkshires. That is a total of two hundred concerts, spread over forty-six weeks. I question whether any symphony in America, or in the whole world, for that matter, can show greater activity, especially when you remember that each new program calls for four rehearsals.

"We would like to appeal to a larger field of society. But how can it be done? It has been suggested that the final rehearsal for each concert should be open, at a small admission charge, to the children in the Boston high schools. These young people, many of them at least, will form part of the future Symphony audience, and the better they are acquainted with good music the better for the general culture of Boston. The idea is deserving of study. We might even have an audience of music teachers from the schools. That would be genuine education. But then it would interfere with other studies, for the rehearsals are held in the morning. Of course, if the public really wishes it, the educational authorities will fall in line. But to bring that attitude of mind to the point of exercising political pressure calls for a popular conviction on the subject that at present does not exist.

"I do agree, however, with the idea that matters of this kind should be widely discussed. 'Out of the multitude of counsellors comes wisdom,' you know."

R. M.

NEW REPUBLIC
NEW YORK CITY

SEP 1 - 1937

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, gave a series of concerts between August 5 and 15, at Tanglewood, formerly a private estate, between Lenox and Stockbridge, in the Berkshires. The estate, presented by Mrs. Gorham Brooks as a permanent home for the Festival, takes its name from the fact that Nathaniel Hawthorne, author of "Tanglewood Tales," once lived in a cottage on the grounds. The concerts, a great success from the standpoint of attendance, consisted for the most part of works by the standard composers, Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert and Brahms, with a little sprinkling of the moderns, Stravinsky, Ravel and Sibelius. The performances were given under canvas, which kept out the rain, although when it poured, as on one occasion, the music was almost inaudible. Mr. Koussevitzky hopes for a real building at some later date for the Festival's permanent home, and some of the sponsors are already talking about the Berkshire Festival as "an American Salzburg." An interesting point is the comparatively low admission charge, set with the hope of obtaining wide popular support.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL

AUG 27 1937

Boston Symphony To Aid 1938 Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., Aug. 27 (AP)—Sponsors of the Berkshire symphonic festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 27 1937

1938 MUSIC FETE PLANS COMPLETED

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 27.—(AP) Sponsors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed plans today for a 1938 program of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while the festival's $100,000 building fund approached the one-third mark.

Subscription of $30,000 of the fund to erect a permanent building to replace the tent used this year was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES

SE

Ravel's "Bolero" By Boston Symphony

Ravel's "Bolero," which took the musical world by storm and has caused many subsequent storms because of the constant repetition, is presented this month by Victor in album M-352, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Koussevitzky. Gone is the maddening incessant drum beat.

The rhythm of the first part is given to the strings pizzicato, and the deadly drum beats are reserved until the final section when a climax is reached with the power of a drum corps.

The variety in rhythm and orchestration present this work in a new and interesting light.

In album M-351 Richard Strauss' famous tone poem, "Don Juan," is given a superb reading by Fritz Busch conducting the London Philharmonic Orchestra. The high lights of the erratic life of the character are gorgeously described in musical terms by one of the world's greatest orchestras. The British Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Sir Adrian Boult, contributes a vivid exposition of the overture to "Alceste," (Gluck) on one disc, 12041.

The return of Arturo Toscanini to this country this coming season lends further interest to album M-355 consisting of two discs devoted to Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn." Toscanini directs the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra in a masterpiece of the art of recording.

CARL L. BEMIES.

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

SEP 5 - 1937

Music Lovers Give $30,000

Berkshire Festival Seeks New Shed

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 4—Miss Mabel Choate of New York, daughter of the late Joseph H. Choate, ambassador to the court of St. James, opened her home, "Naumkeag," in Stockbridge, recently for a gathering of summer and permanent residents for a discussion of the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with particular emphasis on the campaign to raise $100,000 for a music shed at "Tanglewood." About $30,000 has been reported for the fund to date.

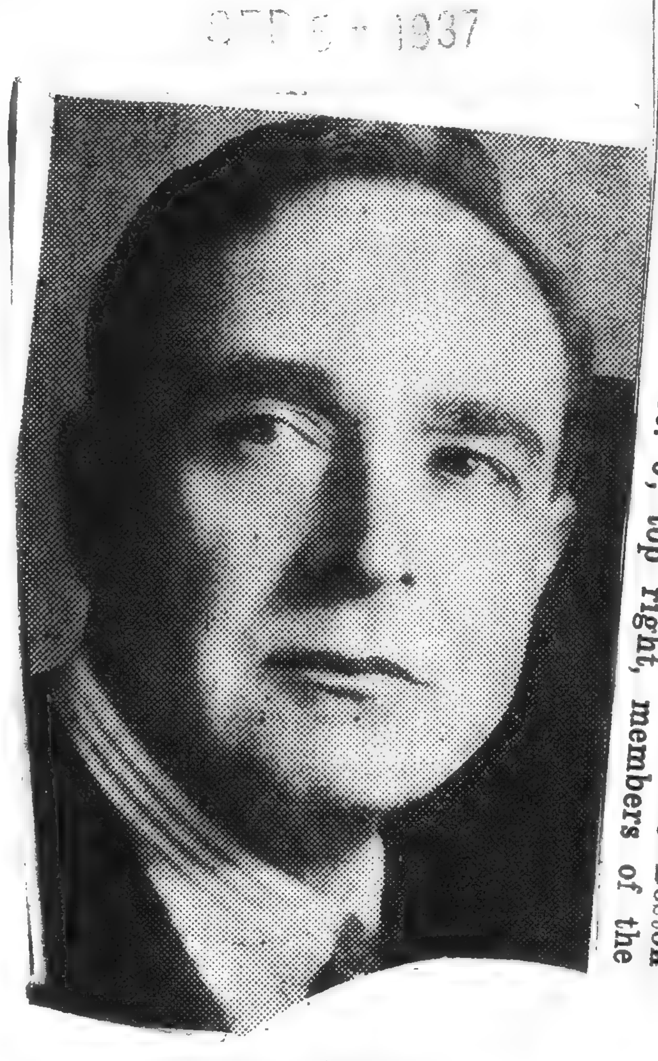
"Many of these gifts have come from widely scattered parts of the country, reflecting a national interest in what we are trying to do," said Miss Robinson Smith, president of the festival. "We appreciate and apparently so do our friends, that America is ready for a great symphonic festival. We are prepared to do our part, but we need the support of every music lover in the country who is interested. The high artistic standards of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky have been maintained at our concerts. But the trying circumstances of a severe storm have convinced us that a permanent building is necessary."

The festival is a non-profit endeavor, whose purpose is to establish in America a great summer center of symphonic music. Through the generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., "Tanglewood," located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., has become the property of the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival. The property has been leased in perpetuity to the festival.

To insure artistry of performance and protection for the audience against storms, the festival believes a permanent music shed is necessary.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

SEP 5 - 1937



Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, slated for Dec. 6; top right, members of the

---

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 7 - 1937

FORMER CONDUCTOR OF FESTIVAL DEAD

Henry K. Hadley, Foremost Composer, Had Written Five Symphonies

FUNERAL FRIDAY IN SOMERVILLE

Henry K. Hadley, dead composer-conductor, who directed the 1924 Music Festival.

(Special Dispatch to The Gazette)

CAMBRIDGE, Sept. 7.—Funeral services for Henry K. Hadley, 66, one of America's foremost conductors and composers, the Worcester Civic Music Festival conductor of 1924, who died yesterday at his New York home, will be Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock in Franklin Street Congregational Church, Somerville, the city of his birth. Burial will be in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge.

Mr. Hadley was the founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and its first conductor four years ago. From his prolific pen in a 40-year career in music, came five symphonies, 12 operas, many overtures and more than 250 songs. In 1935, he conducted the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the World's Fair.

Many and varied were Mr. Hadley's accomplishments in the field of music. In 1924, the year he was conductor at the Worcester Civic Music Festival, he also conducted in Queen's Hall London, with the London Choral Society, "Resurgam," a work of his own composition for double chorus, solos, children's voice and orchestra. Later that year he appeared as guest conductor in Amsterdam and Stockholm, producing his tone poem, "Ocean."

At various times he had been conductor or associate with the Seattle Symphony, San Francisco Orchestra, New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Manhattan Symphony and the Pennsylvania Orchestra of Philadelphia, and on several occasions he returned to Boston, where he studied music, as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directing his own music.

His Oriental suite, "Streets of Pekin," gained wide popularity through its many performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his direction and his opera "Cleopatra's Night," was produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company.

He was born in Somerville, in 1871. Early showing musical genius, at 12 he orchestrated a set of waltzes, which he had written, although he had received no instruction in harmony. His parents immediately planned for him an advanced musical education. He studied in Boston and from there went to Vienna. He returned in 1895, and for seven seasons, directed the music department of St. Paul's School, Garden City, L. I., N. Y. From 1905 to 1909, he toured Europe as a conductor, producing his "Salome" in many music centers.

On returning from his European tour he acted as conductor of the Seattle Symphony two seasons and then occupied a similar post in San Francisco four years. He returned to New York in 1915 and produced his opera "Azora" which appeared both in that city and Chicago. His one-act opera "Blanca," also was produced in New York.

In 1920 he toured the United States with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra as associate conductor, a position which he held for many years. In 1924 he again toured Europe. In that year he was made a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Inez Barbour Hadley, widely known concert soprano, and his mother, Mrs. Samuel Henry Hadley of Boston.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
SEP 9 - 1937

173

Woman To Lead Boston Symphony For First Time

BOSTON, Sept. 9, (AP)—For the first time in Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season, George E. Judd, orchestra manager, announced dast night.

Mr. Gershwin studied under Mlle. Boulanger, one of France's distinguished musicians, about the time he wrote his famed "American in Paris."

The visiting Frenchwoman who will be identified with the music departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe Colleges this Winter, will appear at Symphony Hall in February to conduct Faure's Requiem.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

SEP 9 - 1937

Engage Woman Conductor

BOSTON (AP)—For the first time in the Boston Symphony orchestra's 57-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season.

SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

SEP 9 - 1937

WOMAN TO USE BATON FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 8. (AP)—For the first time in the Boston Symphony orchestra's 57-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season, George E. Judd, orchestra manager, announced tonight.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

SEP 9 - 1937

WOMAN IS SCHEDULED TO DIRECT SYMPHONY

BOSTON, Sept. 9 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time in its 57-year history, will be conducted by a woman during the coming season, it has been announced by George E. Judd, orchestra manager.

Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, to be connected with the Music Departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe Colleges this Winter, will conduct Faure's Requiem sometime in February at Symphony Hall. Mlle. Boulanger taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin about the time he wrote his famous "American in Paris."

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

SEP 9 - 1937

174

Music and The Drama

$30,000 RAISED FOR BUILDING TO HOUSE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD

Gifts totaling $30,000 have been made thus far to the $100,000 fund for a building on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., for the fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August, according to an announcement made by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, at a meeting recently at Miss Mabel Choate's home, Naumkeag, in Stockbridge. The meeting, attended by permanent and summer residents of the Berkshire region, was held for the discussion of the festival's future. Of the amount raised up to now. $15,000 had been contributed last winter and spring, and the rest has been received since the last concert of this summer's festival on August 15.

Miss Robinson Smith also announced that for a second successive summer the festival had been self-supporting. "There will be no deficit," she said. "I believe that is a record of which America may be proud, and it is possible because we cater to no particular group. Our audiences come from all strata. They come, because, first of all, they are assured of artistry in performance, and, secondly, because of the beautiful surroundings."

Fifty-five boxes have already been sold for the 1938 festival, which will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction on August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Contributions for the building fund, which can be deducted in income tax returns, may be mailed to Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National Bank, Stockbridge, Mass., festival treasurer.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

SEP 9 - 1937

PRECEDENT TO BE SET

Womanto Conduct Boston Symphony for First Time.

BOSTON, Sept. 9 (AP).—For the first time in the Boston Symphony orchestra's 57-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season, George E. Judd, orchestra manager, announced today.

Mr. Gershwin studied under Mlle. Boulanger, one of France's distinguished musicians, about the time he wrote his famed "American in Paris."

The visiting Frenchwoman, who will be identified with the music departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe colleges this Winter, will appear at Symphony hall in February to conduct Faure's Requiem.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 9 - 1937

WOMAN TO LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY FOR FIRST TIME

Boston, Sept. 8.—(AP)—For the first time in the Boston Symphony orchestra's 57-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season.

Gershwin studied under Mlle. Boulanger, one of France's distinguished musicians, about the time he wrote his famed "American in Paris."

The visiting Frenchwoman who will be identifi l with the music departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe colleges this winter, will appear at Symphony hall in February to conduct Faure's Requiem.

She performed here several years ago as organ soloist with the Boston Symphony in Copland's symphony for organ and orchestra, and since has earned a reputation abroad as a conductor.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

SEP 1937

Nadia Boulanger to Lead BostonSymphonyPlayers

First Time a Woman Has Ever Directed the Orchestra

BOSTON, Sept. 8 (AP).—For the first time in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fifty-seven-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season, George E. Judd, orchestra manager, announced tonight.

The visiting Frenchwoman, who will be identified with the music departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe colleges this winter, will appear at Symphony Hall in February to conduct Faure's "Requiem." The performed here several years ago as organ soloist with the Boston Symphony in Copland's symphony for organ and orchestra, and since has earned a reputation abroad as a conductor.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

SEP 9 - 1937

Boston Symphony to Be Conducted by Woman, First Time in History

Boston, Sept. 8.—(AP.)—For the first time in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57-years history, a woman, Mlle. Nadai Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season, George E. Judd, orchestra manager, announced tonight.

Gershwin studied under Mlle. Boulanger, one of France's distinguished musicians, about the time he wrote his famed "American in Paris."

The visiting Frenchwoman who will be identified with the music departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe colleges this winter, will appear at Symphony Hall in February to conduct Faure's "Requiem."

WOMAN LEADER OF SYMPHONY

B. Post

Mme. Boulanger to Conduct Concert in February

Sept. 9/37

In the season which opens Oct. 8—its 57th—the Boston Symphony Orchestra will for the first time in its history be conducted by a woman, Nadia Boulanger. At one of the regular pairs of concerts in February this distinguished French musician, who has already appeared with the orchestra as organ soloist, will conduct the Requiem of Faure.

Mme. Boulanger, who is known in her native country as conductor as well as composer, organist and teacher, will be in Boston for several months next winter when she will be identified with the music departments of both Radcliffe and Wellesley colleges.

Tradition-Breaker

MLLE. NADIA BOULANGER

Sept 9

Mlle. Boulanger Will Conduct the Symphony

B. Trav.

Frenchwoman Breaks Tradition 56 Years Old; Noted Musician

Sept 9/37

By Moses Smith

Nadia Boulanger, French musician, is going to appear as guest conductor of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season, and she will be the first woman ever to do so. When Symphony Hall announced its plans today, it laid no special stress on the talents of the modest Frenchwoman whose visit will break a tradition fifty-six years old.

Mlle. Boulanger has been a pianist and organist as well as an occasional conductor. Faure's "Requiem," which she will present at Symphony, she conducted a few months ago in London and, before that, in France.

She has been in Boston before. Once, some years ago, she was organ soloist with the Boston Symphony. Last year she came, on an educational mission for the French government, to give concerts and lectures here.

She has done some composing, is an amateur musicologist and is highly regarded as such. But her principal importance is as a teacher of composers. A whole school of writers, particularly American ones, has grown up under her instruction and influence. Two of the leading American composers, for example—Roy

Continued on Page 12—Column 2

Cont. above

Woman to Conduct Boston Symphony

Continued from Page One

Harris and Aaron Copland—were her pupils.

Women conductors, almost unknown a generation ago, have made some headway in America in recent years. The first of any importance, Ethel Leginska, made her start in Boston. A gifted pianist, Miss Leginska took up conducting at a time when a woman conductor courted either ridicule or abuse. She established the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra — made up of men—here a decade and more ago, and gave concerts in Mechanics Building. Miss Leginska has also conducted opera in Boston.

Mlle. Boulanger probably doesn't care to be classed as a "professional" conductor. More likely she prefers to be regarded as a sincere musician who undertakes the direction of a world-famous symphony orchestra in the course of the day's work. It is unlikely that conducting, or anything else, could ever mean as much to her as her teaching.

Her principal reason for coming here next season is to conduct classes at Radcliffe and Wellesley. At Radcliffe she may have an opportunity to break a tradition far more rigid than any that prevails at the concerts of the Boston Symphony — the exclusively feminine character of the classes.

When the girls at Radcliffe, where the courses more or less duplicate those given at Harvard, want to pursue a subject not given at their own college they are permitted, under certain conditions, to enroll in the desired course at Harvard. Thus far the opportunity has never arisen for Radcliffe to reciprocate. But with Mlle. Boulanger teaching at Radcliffe and not at Harvard, there are bound to be some students in the Harvard music department who will be eager to study under her. They will have to go to Radcliffe to do it—if the faculty permits it.

Invited to Conduct Boston Symphony

MLLE. NADIA BOULANGER

WOMAN TO BE GUEST LEADER

B. Trav.

Mlle. Boulanger Will Conduct Boston Symphony

Sept. 9/37

Breaking 56 years of tradition, the Boston Symphony orchestra will have a woman as guest conductor next season for the first time in its history. She is Nadia Boulanger, noted French musician, who is coming to this country to teach at Radcliffe and Wellesley.

A pianist and organist, besides being a composer, Mlle. Boulanger is chiefly noted for being a teacher of composers. Many American writers who have known her well, such as Roy Harris and Aaron Copland, have been her pupils.

Some years ago she was organ soloist with the Boston Symphony. Last year she was in Boston on an educational mission fro mthe French government, giving concerts and lectures.

The People's Forum

Sept 10 1937

Berkshire Knack of Living

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I thought you might be interested in the editorial in the current issue of The Spur [illegible] tions Pittsfield and the Berkshire Museum—which, incidentally I, myself have visited, [illegible] been in Pittsfield many, many times, and always admired your city tremendously.

Here is the "tear sheet" from the September Spur, just out, and permission is fully given to reprint any or all of this.

J. R. BOLTON.
New York City.

Berkshire Eagle Sept. 10/37

* * *

Perhaps it's just the contrariness in us. At least that's the only way we can account for the fact that, when we went up to the Berkshires for the musical Festival last month, our mind kept returning stubbornly to thoughts apparently irrelevant to that place and occasion. While the printed program, the advertisements and the natives were forever reminding us that the big tent under which the Boston Symphony was playing was located on the grounds of "Tanglewood," the estate where Hawthorne wrote his "House of Seven Gables," our mental machinery kept doggedly turning out ideas and impressions of a new book we had just read which, for literary merit per se, can't hold a candle in the window of "The House of Seven Gables."

This persistent volume which kept haunting us is entitled "The Saga of American Society" and was written by one Dixon Wector, of whom, frankly, we had never heard before. It is a palatable concoction composed of two jiggers of history and one jigger of philosophy, sweetened with a dash of justice and stirred well before serving. Taken in moderation, it proved itself a pleasantly stimulating discourse upon the origins, development and present status of American aristocracy, society and plutocracy.

For a' that, however, we could not figure out why the book kept playing tag with our thoughts during that week-end in Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield. Then suddenly it came to us. This place, this setting, this living tradition—which comes to its fullest bloom in the Berkshires during the Symphonic Festival—were the very epitome of the thing Mr. Wector was writing about when he pointed out the difference between the essentially aristocratic and the purely social. Here were no fanfare, no self-conscious effort to impress the bourgeoisie, no ostentatious display of wealth, no studied rudeness calculated to keep the commoner in his place—all attitudes too often characteristic of society. Rather, here were graciousness, dignity and that brand of self-confidence, which never finds it necessary to be ill-mannered in the presence of anyone, high or low. Here, too, was quiet but determined ambition to live up to and excel tradition; to create something of permanent worth without stooping to dishonor or subterfuge. Here was the essence of aristocracy.

The result is that this little trio of towns is making a contribution to culture unique in America today. Nowhere else probably can you hear such good music in such idyllic surroundings; nowhere else in a town of its size find such modern, well-organized facilities for the presentation of art as at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield; perhaps nowhere else see such concentrated evidence of the knack of good living with charm.

If, as the pessimists predict, squeezing taxes, perfidious politics and Black justice eventually strangle plutocracy and put the brakes on the whirl of society, they cannot erase the mark which is being written across the green hills of the Berkshires. Nor can they make us sorry that our mind was just naturally contrary that week.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
TIMES (Semi-Weekly)

SEP 10 1937

Unity Institute Will Reopen Wednesday

Program for Concert, Travel Courses Announced.

Cont. above left

The Unity Concert Course for the present season includes four concerts and one extra event: Oct. 29, Harold Bauer and Albert Spalding in joint recital; Nov. 19, Gertrud Wettergren; Jan. 14, Elizabeth Rethberg and Ezio Pinza in joint recital; Feb. 9, Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting (extra event), and March 4, Georges Enesco.

SPRING
REPU
AUG

A vi

culation in New England—SEPTEMBER 12, 1937—

ans Add Dignity to

The New Symphonic Season in Prospect

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

ANNOUNCEMENTS made from Symphony Hall this week concerning the impending activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are designed to restimulate the music consciousness of sun-tanned and surf-ridden citizens and their air-conditioned brethren who return to assume their various roles as more or less responsible citizens in an essentially musical community.

Legends to the contrary, Boston's musical importance has consistently followed a sliding scale, depending solely on the state of its orchestra, that organization which from the beginning has formed the nucleus of music events in the city.

If in the last few years Boston has in reality been re-established as a "music center," it is due to the ever increasing prestige the Boston Symphony Orchestra has attained under the guidance of its unpredictable, but nevertheless invincible, conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA opens its 57th season with concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 8 and 9.

The personnel, which has showed but few changes in several years, remains intact with one notable exception. Henrich Lorbeer, distinguished horn player, has retired at the age of 72, having filled a term of unprecedented length (45 years) as a member of the orchestra. Paul Kearney, 25-year-old Boston musician, has been engaged to fill the vacancy.

Outlining his plans for this his 14th year as conductor of the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky lays special stress on the works of Mozart and Beethoven.

Though Dr. Koussevitzky has ever been a leading protagonist of the music of his times he confesses that in the immediate present he can find little creative writing of intrinsic worth.

From his European interim this summer, the conductor brought back but two contemporary works for performance here. One, Malipiero's Second Symphony, he designates as "finely written," the other a Concerto in D minor for orchestra by the young Russian composer, Starokadomsky, is neo-classic in style, and probably best listed under "novelties."

* * *

IT IS, accordingly, from the great literature of the classics that Dr. Koussevitzky will tend to draw for the most part in the programs of the coming season.

Soloists and guest conductors engaged form a brilliant assemblage.

Walter Gieseking will be heard in Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto," Sergei Rachmaninoff in his own Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra, Jascha Heifetz in the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D, and Emma Boynet in a concerto of Mozart.

Heifetz will also introduce a new violin concerto from the pen of that contemporary genius, Prokofieff. According to Mr. Heifetz the new concerto contains a rich vein of romantic lyricism, which would be more surprising if one had not grown accustomed to surprises from the same source.

Yehudi Menhuin, now approximating the age of 21, emerges from his two-year retirement this season. He will be heard with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto and, in addition, a posthumous concerto of Schumann—more of which later.

Other predominant attractions of the season include the appearance of Paul Hindemith as viola soloist in a concerto of his own making, and the advent of the Helsinki Chorus which will serve to introduce two works of Sibelius.

Among guest conductors announced are Nadia Boulanger, distinguished French musician who will be the first woman to conduct this orchestra in its entire history.

During the midseason Georges Enesco, Roumanian composer, conductor, and virtuoso, will assume leadership for a week with Daniele Amfitheatroff, Russian conductor, following during a second week in his first visit to America.

The season will be comprised of the usual number of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts (24 pairs), and the usual additional series of six Monday evening and six Tuesday afternoon concerts.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

SEP 12 1937

Music Ventures Can Smile After Fine Summer Season

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—(AP)—The living arts, especially music, have had a good summer. Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from five to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is, therefore, a surplus in St. Louis, and since Muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which consisted the fourth Berkshire symphonic festival—all played by the full Boston symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

The most curious music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

The audience of 4,000 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and radio star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS

SEP 12 1937

Music

400 United Singers of Philadelphia on Steel Pier Today; Music Had Good Summer

The United Singers of Philadelphia, under the baton of Leopold Syre, will give their annual concert in Atlantic City Sunday afternoon, September 19, at 3:30, in the Music Hall on the Steel Pier. This distinguished male chorus of four hundred chosen voices, embracing the personnel of seventeen prize-winning groups of Philadelphia, will present choruses with which they have won national recognition in competition with the foremost choral groups of the country. In addition, several of the units of the United Singers will sing choruses which won them prizes in eastern contests.

NEW YORK (AP)—The living arts, especially music, have had a good Summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from five to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures had paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the Summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last Summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St. Louis, and since Muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis, and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire symphonic festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next Summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

"Serious Opera" Waned

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this Summer. Excepting the Zoo Company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in Western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) pre-depression background by musicians anxious for their Summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

* * *

"Pinafore" At Sea

The most curious of Summer ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

The audience of 4000 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and radio star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening, the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

* * *

Philadelphia Orchestra To Tour

Changing times are reflected in the plans for the redoubtable Philadelphia Orchestra's 38th season.

The orchestra plans to tour more than in the past. It is beginning concert management outside its own immediate field; it is experimenting with a shift from Saturday to Thursday night for its regular concert—and it is getting only six weeks' work from Leopold Stokowski.

The Philadelphians will give their usual 10 concerts in New York and the series of 5 each in Washington and Baltimore.

In addition, the season will be broken for a one-week tour which will take the orchestra to Chicago on January 5, and on to Milwaukee, Toledo and Pittsburgh on succeeding days.

In February the orchestra will occupy Symphony Hall, Boston, for two days, while Serge Koussevitzky and his men are themselves on tour. Scattered dates are inserted through the Winter, and most of the month of May will be sent on the road, including participation in two festivals—Ann Arbor, Mich., May 11 to 14, and White Plains N. Y., May 20 and 21.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager, there may be even more out of town visits.

* * *

Feature Visiting Artists

Mr. Allen also announces that for the first time the orchestra will manage two recitals by visiting artists—one by Fritz Kreisler and the other by Sergei Rachmaninoff. This is in part an advertising scheme, since orchestra subscribers will have first choice for seats.

And fewer and fewer conductors are participating in the season. Stokowski will conduct from November 4 through December 11. Saul Gaston, the trumpeter who also waves a baton, will direct four concerts, and Eugene Ormandy will do all the others, beginning with the opening program October 8.

Special attractions appearing with the orchestra this Winter include Yehudi Menuhin and Albert Spalding, violinists; the young Californian, Eugene List, and Arthur Rubinstein, pianists; the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe, and the baritone, John Charles Thomas.

Paul Nordhoff's "Secular Mass" will also have its Philadelphia premier with the orchestra.

N Y Times

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1937.

WITH THE ORCHESTRAS

Boston Symphony Novelties—Soloists for National Ensemble—Other Items

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra enters its fifty-seventh season in Symphony Hall, Oct. 8. This will be Serge Koussevitzky's fourteenth year as conductor. The new season will include twenty-four pairs of concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and a double series of six Monday evenings and six Tuesday afternoon concerts. The orchestra will visit, for single concerts or series, the following cities: New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cincinati, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Providence, New Haven, Hartford, Rochester, Ann Arbor, Toledo, New Brunswick, Montclair (N. J.), Northampton, Springfield and Worcester.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that he will present many works of Mozart and Beethoven, and will introduce a number of important compositions, American and European.

Many novelties and much unfamiliar music figure on the lists. The Second suite from the ballet "Bacchus et Arianne," by the late Albert Roussel, will be among these, as will Prokofieff's music for the film "Lieutenant Kijé," that composer's "Overture on Russian Themes" and his Second violin concerto, the latter of which will be given with Jascha Heifetz as soloist. Also included among these new offerings will be Malipiero's Second symphony, Bartok's "Music for Strings and Percussion," a "Concerto for Orchestra," by Michael Starokadomsky, and a suite from Stravinsky's ballet "The Card Game."

American works to be presented include Edward Burlinghame Hill's new Third symphony; Aaron Copland's "Statements," and a concerto for organ and orchestra by Leo Sowerby. The Helsinki University Chorus from Finland will feature two little known works by Sibelius, "The Origin of Fire" and "The Captive Queen."

Among the soloists will be Walter Gieseking, in the Beethoven "Emperor" concerto; Sergei Rachmaninoff, in his own "Rhapsody"; Yehudi Menuhin, in the Brahms concerto and the newly unearthed concerto by Schumann. A concerto for viola and orchestra, by Paul Hindemith, will be played with the composer as soloist. Emma Boynet will perform a Mozart piano concerto.

Two guest conductors will appear in midseason. They are Georges Enesco, the Rumanian composer and virtuoso, and Daniele Amfitheatrof, a Russian of Italian schooling, who makes his first American bow this season. Each will take over the baton for one week. At one of the concerts Nadia Boulanger will conduct Fauré's "Requiem."

As its soloists this season at its regular Monday night concerts, the National Orchestral Association, under Leon Barzin, will present young American artists, most of whom have not appeared with orchestra in that auditorium. These include Muriel Kerr, pianist, Nov. 15; Stephen Hero, violinist, Dec. 13; William Hain, tenor, Jan. 24; Sascha Gorodnitzki, pianist, Feb. 28; Mack Harrell, baritone, and Anton Bilotti, composer-pianist, March 21, and Benno Rabinof, violinist, April 25.

Since the end of last season twenty-one of the association's graduates have signed with important orchestras. Four of these youthful musicians will be heads of sections.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

SEP 11 1937

Mrs. Mabel Cane, Patroness of Arts

Was Member of Brooklyn Institute for 31 Years

Services Today

Mrs. Mabel A. Cane, for 31 years a member of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, interested particularly in its music and literature departments, died Thursday in her home, 119 Kingston Ave.

Born at Palisade, N. J., she had been a resident of Brooklyn nearly 45 years. For many years, she and her late husband, Edward T. M. Cane, had been subscribers to the Boston Symphony, the Metropolitan Oper and other concerts at the Academy of Music. She was also a patroness and supporter of Poetry Week.

Funeral services will be conducted this afternoon in the Fairchild Chapel at 86 Lefferts Place. Interment will be in Green-Wood Cemetery. Surviving are two sons, Edward A. and Roger D.; a daughter, Elsie M.; three sisters, Eloise and Dora Anthony and Mrs. C. F. Taylor, and three brothers, Arthur J., Frederick and Benjamin.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

Millions Enjoy Summer Music Estimates Show

Artistically, Nation's Palm Belongs to Fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival

BY JOHN SELBY

New York, Sept. 11 (AP).—The living arts, especially music, have had a good summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from 5,000,000 to 25,000,000. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St. Louis, and since "Muny" opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the Festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo Company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in Western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertakings, continued out of a plush (but vanished) pre-depression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and bears and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

Pests Disturb Folks Who Attend Concerts With Noisy Conduct

Late Arrivals, Conversationalists and Generally Obnoxious People Add Up Annoyances

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Critic

What price concert-going!

After struggling with the family budget in order to acquire tickets to attend any of the hundred or more musical events offered here annually the worriments attendant upon concert-going are not yet at an end for Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public.

Mr. Lewando

For in addition to arduous stinting to pay for admissions, state and Federal taxes, and arguing with managers and ticket sellers for advantageous seat locations, not to mention the necessity of reckoning in car fare to and from the point of attraction, the average serious music enthusiast must yet be confronted with the fear of having to sit near that bogey of tonal enjoyment—the chronic interrupter.

No musical event is immune from the ravages of this pest. His kind knows no boundaries, whether political or social. He is apt to bob up in any concert hall or opera house at any time—and always at an inopportune moment.

His—or her (the genus homo interruptus also includes some of the fair sex) ruthless tactics are exemplified particularly by that form of expression made popular in drama by Eugene O'Neill, namely, the aside. Through this medium the nuisance is obnoxious, although the repertoire of distractions is by no means confined to disturbing mumblings.

Practically everything offensive to people has been more or less legislated against except this annoyance. Lawmakers, take notice!

And, in general, should you want to be different from the army of real music lovers:

Don't be on time at a music event; it is a sign of decadence.

Obtain seat locations in center of row! Thus, as a latecomer, you can be certain of disturbing a greater number of persons afflicted with the compulsion of being on time.

Don't leave your seat until a piece has begun! Waiting for its completion before departing is so bourgeois.

Don't cough or sneeze until the music tapers to a pianissimo! You will then receive maximum recognition.

Don't converse until the program has started! That is the best way to test your neighbor's concentrative powers—and patience.

Don't read program notes! People might think you ignorant.

Don't read music journals! These are for mere students and teachers.

Don't attend symphony concerts! These are for high-brows.

Don't go to chamber music events! These are for ultra high-brows.

Don't be seen at music lectures! You might learn something.

Don't support worthy music activity! That might reduce your weekly bridge stake—or golf bet. Selah!

* * *

With the founding of the Chatham Square Music School, 211 Clinton St., New York City, another worthy organization enters the family of significant music schools representative of high ideals.

Samuel Chotzinoff and Hedi Katz are to head the institution which is incorporated by the Board of Regents under the N. Y. Education Law. Operating entirely on a non-profit basis, this school is endowed for persons of limited means.

The curriculum embraces music study from the elementary to the most advanced grades. A permanent faculty and a visiting faculty of celebrated artists will be a feature. Scholarships will be available to talented persons of insufficient means, and valuable instruments will be placed at the school's disposal for especially gifted students.

The trustees are George Backer, Courtlandt D. Barnes Jr., Samuel Chotzinoff, David Sarnoff and Charles McKim Norton.

Registration of students is now in progress.

The faculty includes Roger Sessions, Samuel Chotzinoff, Rubin Heifetz, Samuel Barlow, Margaret Leddy, Josephine Schein, Fanny Lhevinne, David Sherry, Liev Rosanoff, M. Lichtenstein, Rebecca Davidson, Elsa Huston, Miriam Gideon, Hans Wiener, Fe Alf, Vera Maurina-Press, Beatrice Van Bergh, Pauline Apanowitz, William Kroll and Mosa Havivi.

The Chatham Square Music School will co-ordinate its work with the clinic for gifted children at New York University.

* * *

The appointment of Dmitri Mitropolous to succeed Dr. Eugene Ormandy as conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra for the next two years brings to the northwest city the foremost musician of Greece, who, besides being an eminent leader, is a ranking piano virtuoso and composer of distinction.

Mr. Mitropolous made his American debut as a guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Providence, R. I., last winter. His success was emphatic.

While Dr. Koussevitzky took his annual winter vacation Mitropolous was invited to direct the Boston Orchestra in several regular concerts. His consummate musicianship and capability as an orchestral general completely won the respect and affection of the players and evoked audience and press interest.

Lively in temperament and entirely bald, the famous Greek musician is a striking personality both on and off the podium.

He amazed the Boston Orchestra musicians at the very first rehearsal by appearing on the conductor's stand without a baton and without scores for the compositions to be rehearsed.

He proceeded to direct a grueling three-hour rehearsal, attending unfailingly to every minute detail of the music, with thorough knowledge of what it was all about.

Born at Athens, March 1, 1896, Mitropolous had his first studies at the Athens Conservatory, having been a pupil of Ludwig Wassenhoven in piano, and a student of composition with Armand Marsick. He completed composition studies with Paul Gilson at Brussells and with Busoni at Berin.

Whie in the German capital Mitropolous was made assistant conductor of the State Opera, a post he held until 1924, when he was called to Athens to direct the Conservatory Symphony Orchestra.

As a composer Mitropolous' first important work was an opera, "Beatrice," based on the Maeterlinck drama. He has also composed chamber music, piano pieces and songs.

Returning to Germany in 1930, Mitropolous' first appearance there since student days, he led the Berlin Philharmonic in February of that year. At this time his own Concerto Grosso was performed. His Paris debut as conductor was made with the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris. Mitropolous also conducted a three months' season at Monte Carlo.

* * *

Geradine Farrar, internationally famous soprano, will emerge from 10 years of retirement from professional appearances to sing at a garden party musicale at Ridgefield, Conn., on Saturday, Sept. 18. The occasion will mark the first concert to be given in the new private concert house on the estate of William Matheus Sullivan, lawyer and music patron, whose place adjoins Mme. Farrar's. The proceeds of the concert will go to the Danbury, Conn., Hospital.

* * *

The Musical Forecast, a monthly magazine devoted to the arts, published by David H. Light, its progressive managing editor, has been doing yeoman service in this vicinity for many years and thereby winning a wide circle of readers in the tri-state area. With the advent of the September issue a writer new to the Forecast family but nationally known as a writer, critic, poet and playwright, makes his debut. His name: George Seibel. He will conduct a page each month under the caption The Quiet Observer. Congratulations go forth to The Forecast for this editorial coup d'etat.

* * *

Pittsburgh Musical Institute will begin its twenty-third season tomorrow. Directors William H. Oetting and Dallmeyer Russell announce appointment of five new instructors. Theodore M. Finney, instructor of music appreciation and leader of orchestra, band and glee club at University of Pittsburgh, will conduct music history classes at the Institute.

Bert Diem, prominent author, composer and pedagogue, will teach composition and orchestration. Oscar W. Demmler has been appointed leader of the P. M. I. orchestra of 85 players. The new piano teachers are Grace Branning and Pauline Hopkins, and Florence McMichael, teacher of eurhythmics and folk dancing, takes the place of Loncy Dienes, who is on a year's leave of absence for study abroad.

* * *

At the last meeting of the Pennylvania School Music Assn. the following state officers were elected: Charles I. Aikey, Johnstown, president; Maurice Taylor, Montrose, vice president; Harod F. Hetrick, Irwin, secretary, and C. D. Thompson, Hollidaysburg, treasurer.

Elected officers of the Western District of the association are: Gordon F. Williams, Greensburg, president; R. H. Ruthhart, Bellevue, vice president, and Harold Hetrick, secretary-treasurer.

The state meetings for the coming season for the various musical units will bring the All-State Chorus to Irwin in November, with Mr. Hetrick as host; the All-State Orchestra being listed for assembly at Wellsboro Feb. 24-26, with Robert C. Grant as host, and the All-State Band will convene at Jersey Shore, May 12-14, with Frank L. Schoendorfer as host.

SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY,

Sept 9/37

Woman to Lead Boston Symphony

By Edm. Joallier, Paris

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Nadia Boulanger, Distinguished French Composer and Teacher, Who at the Invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky Will Conduct Fauré's "Requiem" With the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Coming Season. Never Before Has a Musician of Her Sex Been Thus Honored by This Orchestra. Mlle. Boulanger, Who Numbers Some of the Most Noted of the Younger Composers Among Her Pupils, Will Teach Next Winter at Radcliffe and Wellesley. Further Announcements of the Impending Boston Symphony Season Will Be Made Saturday

---

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

S[illegible] 37

Summer Season Beneficial to Living Arts

By JOHN SELBY

New York—(AP)—The living arts, especially music, have had a good summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from 5 to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standess, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St. Louis, and since Muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

* * *

Artistically, the music palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival—all played by the full Boston symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussvitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo Company in Cincinnati, and the Chatauqua group in Western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the Eel Grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

SEP 7 - 1937

HADLEY, FAMOUS COMPOSER, DEAD

Distinguished American Also Internationally Noted as Symphony Conductor.

NATIVE OF SOMERVILLE

Prolific Writer Turned Out 150 Songs, Overtures, Symphonies and Many Other Works

New York, Sept. 6.—(AP)—Henry Hadley, distinguished American composer-conductor, died at his home here today after a long illness.

Born in Somerville, Mass., in 1871, Hadley studied music in Boston with George W. Shadwick and Stephen A. Emery, later continuing the study of violin and other branches in Vienna.

He returned to this country in 1895 and began building a reputation as symphony conductor which brought him international fame. At various times, he was conductor or associate with the Seattle Symphony, San Francisco Orchestra, New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Manhattan Symphony and the Pennsylvania Orchestra of Philadelphia.

Hadley was also a prolific composer, turning out over 150 songs and piano pieces, three concert overtures, four symphonies, and many orchestral suites and miscellaneous works.

His Oriental suite "Streets of Pekin" gained wide popularity through its many performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the composer's direction, and his opera, "Cleopatra's Night," was produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Inez Barbour Hadley, widely-known concert soprano, and his mother, Mrs. Samuel Henry Hadley, of Boston.

Funeral services will be held here Wednesday, and burial will be in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge, Mass.

Boston, Sept. 6.—(AP)—Henry Hadley, composer and conductor who died today in New York, was one of the founders of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and conducted the first orchestra there four years ago.

Wallace Goodrich, director of the New England Conservatory of Music, tonight described Hadley as "one of the best known and ablest of American musicians."

Hadley came from a line of musicians. His father and grandfather were music teachers in Somerville schools and his mother was a concert singer.

He first showed his genius at the age of 12 when he wrote a suite of waltzes and orchestrated them, although he had not studied counterpoint.

When he was 20 years old, his overture, "Hector and Andromachi," was directed by Walter Damrosch at the concert of Manuscrip Society. Hadley conducted the Tokyo and the Buenos Aires Symphony Orchestras.

Honorary degrees of doctor of music were awarded him by Tufts College and Pennsylvania Music College.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday in New York and Friday at the First Congregational Church in Somerville where he played the organ when he was 16 years old and his mother sang.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

SEP [illegible] 1937

Living Arts Have Good Summer

Musical Ventures Set Records During Recent Season

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

NEW YORK, Sept. 11 (AP)—The living arts, especially music, have had a good Summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from 5 to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the Summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" Opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances — 25,000 over last Summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St. Louis, and since "Muny" Opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Berkshire Venture Pays

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next Summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this Summer. Excepting the Zoo company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in Western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

Most Curious

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) pre-depression background by musicians anxious for their Summer's work was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

The most curious of Summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the ell grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

he audience of four thousand sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and radio star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening, the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

MUSIC

Sun Globe Sep 5 37

Symphony Hall reports brisk activity at the boxoffice for new season tickets and renewal of seats for the regular Symphony season. The totals in both categories at this time show an increase over those a year ago. Doubtless the success of the Berkshire Festival may be credited with a portion of this encouraging increase. The Symphony Hall box office is open daily for season ticket applications.

Most recent Seattle arrival in the faculty group was Harriet Van Emden, distinguished lyric soprano, who with her mother, has been in Seattle only a few days. Miss Van Emden, a former associate teacher with Marcella Sembrich, was for eleven years a faculty member at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. She has been heard in recital in Aeolian Hall, New York City, and her concerts have received praise there and in Europe and the Orient. She has been soloist with orchestras directed by Karl Muck in Hamburg and The Hague; Mengelberg and Bruno Walter in New York City, Amsterdam and The Hague; Schneevoight in Holland and Stockholm; Koussevitsky in Boston; Frederick Stock in Chicago and Alfred Hertz and the San Francisco Symphony. Miss Van Emden was greeting newly-made friends last evening.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

Hub Symphony Season to Open Oct. 8

Koussevitzky Has Remarkably Colorful Program Planned

BOSTON, Sept. 11 (AP)—One of the world's outstanding protagonists of modern music, Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, will place special emphasis this year on the works of Mozart and Beethoven during the orchestra's 57th season opening Oct. 8.

While not overlooking new works, the orchestra will point to the classics, the annual announcement said tonight. To this end, Walter Gieseking will appear as piano soloist in the Beethoven Emperor concerto; Emma Boynet, in a Mazart piano concerto, and Pascha Heifetz in a Beethoven violin concerto.

On the other side of the ledger, however, the major innovations will be the first finale conductor in the orchestra's history—Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, of France—and the first performances in America of the Heisinki chorus, which will introduce two notable works of Sibelius.

Mlle. Boulanger, who taught the late George Gershwin orchestration in Paris nine years ago when the latter wrote his "American in Paris," will conduct only one selection, Faure's Requiem, in February.

And Rachmaninoff

Other soloists will be Serge Rachmaninoff, playing his own piano rhapsody; Yehudi Menuhin, who will give the recent Hindemith, German composer, who will play his own viola concerto.

Two guest conductors will appear for a week each in mid-season—Georges Enesco, Rumanian, and Daniele Amfitheatroff, Russian, who will make his first visit to America.

The personnel of the orchestra will show few changes. Heinrich Lorbeter, a 72-year-old horn player, has retired after 45 consecutive years, a record orchestra officials said was unsurpassed. He will be replaced by Paul Kearney, 25-year-old Boston youth. There also will be a new second harpist.

The orchestra will play concerts in New York, Broklyn, Rochester and Buffalo, N. Y., Ann Arbor, Mich; Toledo and Cincinnati, O.; Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, Pa., New Brunswick and Montclair, N. J., Northampton, Springfield, Worcester, and Cambridge, Mass.; Providence, R. I., and New Haven and Hartford, Conn.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
No Connection with any other ROMEIKE
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE
SEP 13 1937

Echoes From The Concert Hall

WILLIAM ROBERT ADAM

Interesting news comes from Dr. Ormandy's Orchestra in Philadelphia, news that music lovers have been waiting for and wish to know.

There has been such a demand in certain cities for concerts that the Philadelphia Orchestra has found it necessary to inaugurate or increase performances in those places where symphonic music is believed to be a necessary part of human pleasure. As is generally known, the orchestra will give ten concerts in New York city; with five each reserved for Washington and Baltimore with the usual roster of distinguished soloists, premieres, etc.

Beginning January. Fifth, the group will open a week's tour in Chicago; and will go from there to Milwaukee, Toledo, and Pittsburgh for the continuation and conclusion of the brief journey.

One of the highlights of the orchestra's out of town routine will be the pair of concerts to be given at Symphony Hall, Boston during the absence of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. The orchestra opens there on the eleventh of February. Other points to be included in the New England tour are Hartford and Northampton. During the greater part of March and April the orchestra will remain in Philadelphia; devoting the major part of their "At Home" to new works, revivals, and the standard repertoire.

Three conductors have been chosen to direct the orchestra and they will include Dr. Leopold Stokowski, the former director of the orchestra; Saul Caston, associate conductor of the Philadelphians, and Eugene Ormandy, former conductor of the Minneopolis Orchestra and present director of the Philadelphia group. The greater number of the concerts will be given to Ormandy.

An imposing list of soloists have been engaged, who include Eugene List, Arthur Rubenstein, Rachmaninoff, Kreisler, Menuhin, Spalding, John Charles Thomas, and others. The Monte Carlo Ballet Russe will dance with the orchestra on February twenty-eight in a program of French and Russian ballet. This will be the only Philadelphia performance of the troupe, during the 1937-38 season.

The Barrere-Salzedo-Britt Trio will participate in the world premiere of the new Wagenaar Trio Concerto for Flute, Harp, Cello, and Orchestra. The Novelty of this work alone should draw an overflowing house of "musical thrill seekers." The first hearing will of course be given in Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia premiere of Nordoff's "Missa Solemnis" and Mahler's "Das Lied von Erde" will be directed by Ormandy with Fnid Szantho, contralto and Charles Kullman, tenor as soloists, the latter has distinguished himself as a member of the Metropolitan and Salzburg Opera Companies.

There are many other plans and features too numerous to mention, but as the season moves on they will undoubtedly reveal themselves.

The formal opening of the orchestra takes place in the Quaker city on October eighth with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

Richard Crooks, the Vienna Choir Boys, Mme. Lucrezia Bori, and Moritz Rosenthal are a very few of the great artists to be presented in Washington next season with the National Symphony under Dr. Kindler.

Mme. Elena de Sayn, Washington violin and viola instructor, resumes her Washington instructing after having returned from Asheville, North Carolina where she participated in the Mozart Festival and other musical events in which she was favorably received by her audiences. Other composers whose works were played by Mme. de Sayn are Tchaikovski Debussy, Wieniawski Franck, and Beach.

The Virginia Symphony Orchestra under Maestro Bales will offer another concert later in September (The program and date will be announced later.)

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1937

LIVING ARTS HAVE A GOOD SUMMER; ESPECIALLY MUSIC

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Included Among Summer's Successful Musical Ventures

By JOHN SELBY

New York, Sept. 11—(AP)—The living arts, especially music, have had a good summer. Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from five to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records. And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St Louis's monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St Louis, and since Muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival—all played by the full Boston symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) predepression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Ct.

The audience of 400 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and radio star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening, the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
SEP 12 1937

Arts Editor

Of Associated Press Sums Up Summer Amusements And Pays Neat Compliment To Members Of Cincinnati Zoo Opera Orchestra.

BY JOHN SELBY.
New York—(AP)

THE living arts, especially music, have had a good summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from 5 to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records; 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is, therefore, a surplus in St. Louis, and since "Muny" opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constitute the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in Western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) predepression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

The audience of 4,000 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and radio star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening, the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

Stage—Music

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Plans for Boston Symphony Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 57th season Oct 8 and 9, with Dr Serge Koussevitzky returning for a 14th consecutive year as conductor. This is the longest term ever enjoyed by a conductor in the history of the orchestra.

Some of his plans for the four series of concerts in Symphony Hall have been made known. As usual, there will be 24 programs each on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, six concerts on Monday evenings and a like number on Tuesday afternoons during the season, which will end April 30, 1938.

Dr Koussevitzky will emphasize the music of Mozart, Sibelius and Beethoven in a considerable representation of masterpieces from the "standard" repertory. He also promises a number of significant new pieces, both American and from Europe.

Soloists for the Friday and Saturday series will include Walter Gieseking, pianist, in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto; Sergei Rachmaninoff in his own Rhapsody On a Theme of Paganini; Emma Boynet, in a Mozart concerto; Paul Hindemith, the noted German composer, who will play a viola concerto of his own, and Yascha Heifetz, who will offer the Beethoven Violin Concerto and will introduce to this country a new concerto by the Russian composer, Prokofieff.

Yehudi Menuhin will present on the same program the Brahms Violin Concerto and the unknown Violin Concerto by Robert Schumann. This work was created in the last year before Schumann fell victim to insanity and was intended for the great violinist Joachim. For many years the manuscript has been in possession of the Joachim estate and has been kept in a Berlin museum. It will be released to the world for the first time this Autumn.

The Helsinki Chorus, who come from Finland for an American tour, will appear with the orchestra, introducing to this country two compositions of Sibelius. Nadia Boulanger, the distinguished French composer, organist and teacher who enjoys a reputation as conductor in her own country, will conduct the Faure Requiem at a concert in February. She will be the first woman ever to direct this orchestra.

There will be two guest conductors, each of whom will appear during a week in mid-season, when Dr Koussevitzky departs on his customary vacation. One will be Georges Enesco, the distinguished Rumanian violinist, composer and conductor. He will surely include some of his own music during his visit. Daniele Amfitheatrof, the second guest, is a young Russian who is to make his first visit to the United States.

SYMPHONY HALL

57th SEASON OPENS OCT. 8 and 9

Boston Symphony Orchestra

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY—Conductor

UNSURPASSED PASSPORTS IN THESE PARTS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY Conductor
FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
1937 1938
$35
THE ESTABLISHED PRICE OF THIS SEASON TICKET IS TAX EXEMPT FLOOR
SYMPHONY HALL
0012

Soloists Appearing with the Orchestra include RACHMANINOFF
GIESEKING
BOYNET
HINDEMITH
HEIFETZ
MENUHIN

SEASON TICKETS NOW AT BOX OFFICE

Tel. Com. 1492

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SEP 4 1937

Notables Of Music World In Woolsey Hall Series

Opening Concert to Be Given by Rachmaninoff—Boston Symphony to Appear Twice

The Woolsey Hall Concert Series for the season of 1937-38, under the auspices of the Yale University School of Music, is to be the most ambitious in the long history of this annual group of distinguished musical presentations according to the schedule made public for the first time today.

The opening concert will be a recital by Sergei Rachmaninoff, Russian pianist, on October 20, and then in order will appear the Boston Symphony Orchestra on November 17; Yehudi Menuhin, 21-year-old violinist, December 8; Sigrid Onegin, Swedish contralto, January 11; Albert Spalding, violinist, Harold Bauer, pianist, and Gaspar Cassado, 'cellist, in joint recital on February 15, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra again on March 9 as the season's concluding offering. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will as usual conduct both concerts by the one hundred and ten piece Boston orchestra.

Rachmaninoff

The schedule of the Woolsey Hall Series each year is looked forward to with great interest by hosts of music-lovers throughout this section of the state, and the series announced today by Manager Daggett M. Lee should meet with all-around approval. Rachmaninoff is undoubtedly the most commanding figure among the great pianists of the day, and his coming at the start of the new season following his long summer vacation in Europe will naturally find him at his best.

Menuhin

The return of Yehudi Menuhin to the concert platform after an absence of almost two years was the most important concert news of the year when it was announced some months ago. The youthful violinist will play but forty-seven American concerts this season, although calls for his appearance number more than two hundred. That New Haven has secured one of the much sought-after dates reflects the importance of the Woolsey Hall Series, for Menuhin's schedule will include only the leading musical centers of the country.

Outstanding Trio

The newly-formed Bauer-Spalding-Cassado Trio will add a new and distinctive note to local concert activities, for it has been many years since artists of such note have combined their talents in order that the public might hear some of the music written by the masters for piano, violin and 'cello. Each player is a solo performer in his own right, and with the exception of a limited number of appearances together none of them will be heard in concert otherwise. Mr. Bauer and Mr. Spalding need no introduction to local audiences. Mr. Cassado is the brilliant Spanish 'cellist who scored such a sensation in New York last season, and who will return shortly for his first American tour, which will be of country-wide proportions.

Sigrid Onegin

It has been a long time since a contralto of the calibre of Sigrid Onegin has sung in Woolsey Hall, thus the presence of the Swedish songbird on the Woolsey Series roster adds much to the attractiveness of the season's schedule. The consumate musicianship of this operatic and concert star of two continents has given her an authoritative supremacy in the world of song, particularly in the realm of lieder singers, and her first local appearance should be an auspicious occasion.

Boston Symphony

To have the Boston Symphony twice a season is no longer news to local concert audiences. But the famous orchestra's popularity increases with each succeeding concert, and that New Haven is favored with two visits every year is a fine tribute to the city as a musical center, for many other cities must forego even a single appearance of the Bostonians, due to the lack of available time in which to fulfill the numerous dates requested of them.

The Woolsey Hall Series for 1937-38 should equal last season, when capacity audiences were the rule at each concert. Local music lovers naturally form the bulk of subscribers to the series, but the constantly increasing number of out-of-town patrons now augument the number of ticket requests to an extent that places a premium on nearly all seating locations in the large auditorium. It is estimated that more than three thousand people were unable to gain admission to Woolsey Hall during the series last season, and with the forthcoming schedule more attractive than ever another brilliant season is in prospect.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

[illegible]

Music Has Fine Summer

By JOHN SELBY.

New York, Sept. 11.—(AP).

THE LIVING ARTS, especially music, have had a good summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from 5,000,000 to 25,000,000. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis's monumental and incredibly popular "muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

Surplus in St. Louis.

There is, therefore, a surplus in St. Louis, and since muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire symphonic festival—all played by the full Boston symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

Little Opera.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) pre-depression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

"Pinafore" on Schooner.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

The audience of 4,000 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and Radio Star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

Noveltiess Again to Grace Boston Symphony Programs

New works by American and European composers announced for forty-seventh season opening Oct. 8-9.

The Arts in Boston

Wide World THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Above—Serge Koussevitzky, director, as he appeared at a rehearsal of the orchestra at Stockbridge, Mass., last August. Right, above—Bust of Georges Enesco, one of the guest conductors for this year. Lower left—Yehudi Menuhin, who will play the newly published Schumann Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. Lower right—Emma Boynet, French pianist, who will be heard in a Mozart concerto.

Novelties once more rear their problematical heads in the list of compositions just announced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its impending season. By this token, Dr. Koussevitzky is reverting to the practice which distinguished his programs for the first 11 years of his Boston incumbency. Classics, of course, retain their place, and revivals are promised. The season will be opened, Oct. 8-9, with Beethoven's "Eroica" and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

For the last two seasons, novelties have been rare in Boston Symphony concerts. Last year, only one work was performed for the "first time anywhere"—Werner Josten's Symphony in F; but it was conducted by the composer. The season before, there were two: Chavez's "Sinfonia India" and Roy Harris's Symphony No. 2. Again, the composer directed the first of these. (There is a belief among symphony listeners that when a composer is allowed to conduct a première, the conductor is not enthusiastic about the work.) In short, Dr. Koussevitzky has himself introduced only one new composition in the last two years, whereas formerly his programs bristled with novelties.

♪ ♪ ♪

Whatever the reasons for this reversal of policy in the last two seasons, it apparently is to be abandoned now. Three new compositions by Americans are announced: the Third Symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill, Aaron Copland's "Statements" and a Concerto for organ and orchestra by Leo Sowerby (with the composer playing the organ part, not conducting).

European novelties announced include Bartók's Music for strings and percussion, a Concerto for orchestra by the Soviet composer Michael Starokadomsky, a Suite from Stravinsky's "Card Game" Ballet and Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto, to be played by Heifetz. If we are not mistaken, Starokadomsky's will be the first work by a Soviet composer to be played by Dr. Koussevitzky in Boston.

All these are in addition to the Schumann Violin Concerto which Yehudi Menuhin will play. There will also be some works new to America, including the Second Symphony of Malipiero, Prokofieff's cinema music for "Lieutenant Kijé" and his Overture on Russian Themes and two choral works by Sibelius, "The Origin of Fire" and "Captive Queen," in which the Helsinski University Chorus will take part.

Early in the season two scores of Albert Roussel will be performed in his memory, and tribute will be paid to George Gershwin by a performance of "An American in Paris."

♪ ♪ ♪

Dr. Koussevitzky will revive the Fifth Symphony of Gustav Mahler, unheard here since Dr. Muck's day. Other works mentioned are a Suite from Domenico Scarlatti, orchestrated by Selvaggi; Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta"; Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, an unidentified symphony of Mozart; an orchestral concerto of Emanuel Bach; Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (with Walter Gieseking as soloist); Strauss's "Symphonia Domestica" and "Death and Transfiguration"; Tchaikovsky's Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," and "Tapiola" by Sibelius.

As previously announced, a Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, by Paul Hindemith, will be performed with the composer as soloist. Emma Boynet will appear in a Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, by Mozart, and Nadia Boulanger will conduct Fauré's "Requiem." There will be two guest conductors in midseason—Georges Enesco, the Roumanian composer and virtuoso, and Daniele Amfitheatrof, the conductor of Russian birth and Italian training, who is about to make his first visit to America.

L. A. S.

—Melbourne, Australia—

nized that more wave was the sit

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
No Connection with any other ROMEIKE
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHELSEA, MASS.
EVE. RECORD

SEP 13 1937

Symphony Seats Hub Heirlooms

Although to Serge Koussevitzky and his 110 master musicians, the Boston Symphony Orchestra season ~~does not begin~~ until the eighth of October, this is the height of the season to one department of the orchestra's organization.

Day in and day out, now, people come to Symphony Hall from every point in Boston, and from more than 200 other communities scattered through New England, although not a note of any musical instrument may be heard in the building. They peer into the deserted expanse of the famous auditorium, seek out certain seats, and occupy them with animated interest as they survey the empty stage this way and that.

These visitors who keep the concertless hall busy these days are intent on assuring themselves of season tickets. Some of them are merely paying for their reservations. They may have had the same seat for many seasons before. But they like to go in and sit a moment in the familiar location, while in fancy they review memorable performances they have heard there by Koussevitzky and his men.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 14 1937

BRUCE CRANE HEADS GROUP TO HELP RAISE FUNDS FOR SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL SHED

Laurence R. Connor, President of Agricultural National Bank and Festival Trustee, Assisting Mr. Crane—Monroe B. England Heads Committee To Solicit Businessmen—Preliminary Meeting Held Last Night

Bruce Crane of Dalton will be general chairman for Pittsfield and immediate vicinity for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's solicitations for $100,000 with which to build a music shed at Tanglewood.

Laurence R. Connor, president of the Agricultural National Bank and a Festival trustee, will asist Mr. Crane while Monroe B. England will be chairman of the committee to solicit businessmen.

Pittsfield supported the concerts generously in attendance having more than 500 members alone. It is hoped by the committee that those who are in a position to help will do so as generously as possible.

Preliminary Meeting

Members of Mr. England's committee had a preliminary meeting last night at which plans for the campaign were discussed. The great musical attraction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was stressed as lending a definite character and prestige to the Berkshires. The many economic advantages of the Festival which permeate eventually to all parts of the county were also discussed.

It was planned to complete the work in Pittsfield by the end of next week to avoid conflict with other campaigns that will be in progress this Fall.

The Agricultural National Bank will be the depository for all funds collected in Pittsfield and vicinity. Already a few sizeable gifts have been pledged as well as a number of smaller ones. The committee emphasized today that the smaller gifts were equally welcome as an indication of genuine interest.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

SEP 14 1937

Noted Music Group To Open 57th Season

Boston Symphony Plans Tour of Many Cities, Toledo Included

THE Boston Symphony orchestra, heard by thousands in unusual surroundings at the Symphonic festival in the Berkshires last month, will begin the fifty-seventh season of its illustrious history in its own home, Symphony hall in Boston, on Friday, Oct. 8.

This will be the fourteenth successive year of the conductorship of Serge Koussèvitzky. The season will include twenty-four pairs of concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and a shorter double series of six Monday evenings and six Tuesday afternoons.

The orchestra will also visit the following cities for series or single concerts: Cambridge, New York, Brooklyn, Providence, New Haven, Hartford, Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New Brunswick and Montclair, N. J., Northampton, Springfield and Worcester.

Great Masterpieces

The Friday and Saturday series will include a large representation of the great masterpieces of the symphonic repertory. Dr. Koussevitzky announces a special emphasis upon the works of Mozart and of Beethoven. The conductor, who is also a tireless proponent of what is important in the music of our own day, will bring forward a number of new and significant compositions, both European and American.

Soloists for the Friday and Saturday series will include Walter Gieseking (in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto), Sergei Rachmaninoff (in his own Rhapsody), Emma Boynet (in a concerto of Mozart), Jascha Heifetz (in Beethoven's Concerto), and Yehudi Menuhin (in the concerto of Grahms).

New Concerto

Heifetz will also introduce to this country the new concerto of Prokofieff, and Menuhin will present a posthumous concerto of Schumann now released to the world for the first time. Paul Hindenmith, the noted German composer, will appear as viola player in a concerto of his own. Nadia Boulanger, the distinguished French musician, will also conduct. The Helsinki chorus, journeying from Finland to America for the first time, will appear with this orchestra in Boston and New York, introducing to this country two notable works of Sibelius.

There will be two guest conductors, each for a week in midseason—Georges Enesco and Daniel Amfitheatroff.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

Tudor Hall Opens Sept. 22 With Four New Faculty Members

A bubble of excitement is evident among Tudor Hall school girls when they huddle together over tea tables or meet for informal chats now that school is just about to begin for them.

If you happen to be a good guesser you will know that it is the subject of new teachers which has them all agog.

When Tudor Hall opens Sept. 22 there will be four new faces among the faculty members and that always add zest to a new school year!

Wedding bells have rung for two former Tudor teachers this summer, another announced her wedding date for early fall and the fourth plans to study abroad this year.

Miss Elizabeth Stigall, who formerly was in charge of the music department, was married Sept. 5 to William Karl Wittausch and is to make her home in Washington. Mrs. T. Baxter Rogers was Miss Margaret Smart, third and fourth-grade teacher, before her recent marriage to Mr. Rogers. She is not lost to Indianapolis friends however as the Rogers have taken up housekeeping in a lovely new home in Golden Hill.

Goes to Vienna

Miss Peggy Bucher, former dramatic teacher, soon is to have the new name of Mrs. Charles Brunelle and will reside in Hartford, Conn. Vienna, Austria, has beckoned Miss Helen Hartinger, last year's art department head, who plans to study this year at the Emmy Zweibruck School of Art in Vienna.

The new faculty members, supplanting the former teachers, come here from various parts of the country.

Miss Nellie McCaslin, dramatic instructor, is from Cleveland. She has had experience in instructing and has acted in several productions of the Cleveland Playhouse. She has served as assistant to Prof. Mildred Throne, Mather College drama department head, and has been drama director at Cold Springs Camp, Austinburg, O., and at the Goodrich Settlement, Cleveland. She is a graduate of Flora Stone Mather College, and has a master's degree in drama and theater from Western Reserve University.

The new head of the art department will be Miss Daty Healy, also of Cleveland. She has the distinction of being the author and illustrator of two children's books, "Cat Tales From Many Lands" and "Funny Friends." The books are collections of animal stories for which she wrote the text. She has taught at Texas State College for Women, at Lake Erie College and at the Child Education Foundation in New York City. She is a graduate of Lake Erie College, with a master's degree from Columbia University.

The music department is to be in charge of Miss Gladys Heathcock, Lowell, Mass. As winner of the Frank Huntington Beebe scholarship, Miss Heathcock studied abroad for a year with Tobias Phillip in Paris, and has given many recitals both here and abroad. She graduated with honors from the New England Conservatory of Music and holds a soloist diploma in piano from the same school. While in college she appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and her European concerts include recitals at Windsor Castle, St. James' Court, Salzburg, Cologne and Paris.

Miss Dorothy S. Fleer, Evanston, Ill., who has been previously introduced as the new teacher of the third and fourth grades is holder of an honorary teaching scholarship.

Newly decorated classroom walls at Tudor will greet teachers and pupils this fall. Other faculty members are to remain the same as last year, it has been announced.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

SEP 17 1937

New Music from Boston

Compositions new to the repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will find prominent places on its forthcoming programs both in Symphony Hall, Boston, and in Carnegie Hall, New York.

The works include the second suite from the ballet, "Bacchus et Arianne," by Albert Roussel; "An American in Paris," by George Gershwin; music from the film, "Lieutenant Kije," an overture on Russian themes, and a violin concerto, all by Prokofieff; the second symphony of Malipiero; "Statements," by Aaron Copland; the third symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill and a concerto for organ and orchestra by Leo Sowerby.

* * *

Opera at Hippodrome.

Two performances by the Hippodrome Copera Co., "The Barber of Seville," next Saturday evening, and "Il Trovatore," next Sunday evening, will make up the third weekend series of the Salmaggi company at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. In the Rossini opera Lucrezia Sarria, Lawrence Power, Claudio Frigerio and John Ciccia will be the principals, with Eugene Plotnikoff to conduct, and in the Verdi opera Norina Greco, Lillian Marchetto, Pasquale Ferrara and Arturo d'Amico will sing the leading roles. Gabriele Simeoni will conduct.

* * *

The Knabe pianoforte is celebrating its one hundredth anniversary. A century ago the first Knabe piano was made by the first William Knabe. Since then the instrument has been constructed in a father-to-son chain to the present day, and even now the factory is filled with the grandsons and great-grandsons of the original artisan.

As one of the features of the celebration, the Knabe company has put out a bronze coin, showing on one side a head of Kirsten Flagstad, the famous soprano of the Metropolitan, in order to "perpetuate her great Isolde in Wagner's 'Tristan und Isolde,'" and on the other the shield of Knabe.

Eugene Plotnikoff will conduct the Federal Symphony Orchestra in the Theater of Music next Sunday evening in another all-Tschaikowsky 3, in C major, opus 55, and the sixth symphony

* * *

Madge E. Wit, contralto; Ferol Teed, soprano, and Lillan Brewer, second soprano, who compose the championship trio of the National American Legion Auxiliary, will defend their crown next Monday afternoon at the Times Square Theater.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FORT WORTH, TEX.
Morning Star-Telegram

SEP 12 1937

Music Sets Records for Summer

BY JOHN SELBY.
Associated Press Arts Editor.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11 (AP).—The living arts, especially music, have had a good Summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from five to twenty-five millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the Summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last Summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St. Louis, and since muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted fourth Berkshire symphonic festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next Summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this Summer. Excepting the Zoo Company in Cincinnti and the Chautauqua group in Western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) predepression background by musicians anxious for their Summer's work was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 15 1937

FESTIVAL'S MUSIC SHED FUND SWELLED BY $5000

Many Small Contributions Raise Total to More Than $45,000—Pittsfield Group Meets—Eliel Saarinen, Architect, Coming Friday

Since Monday more than $5000 has poured into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed fund swelling the total to more than $45,000, just short of the halfway mark. The Festival trustees seek to raise $100,000 for the projected building at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, so that the annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be continued.

Bruce Crane, general chairman for Pittsfield and vicinity; Laurence R. Connor who is assisting him and Monroe B. England who is chairman of the committee to solicit business men, met yesterday afternoon to go over lists of music lovers and others who might be interested. Also meeting with the group was Mrs. Henry A Francis of this city, a trustee of the Festival.

Cheered By Returns

Cheered by the returns since Monday, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, president of the Festival, said today:

"The returns in one day totaling $5000, mostly in small subscriptions led the executive committee which met yesterday to once more urge eyeryone to send in subscriptions immediately. This is important because the committee has invited the architect, Eliel Saarinen, of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., to meet with them Friday, to discuss plans for the shed. If everyone will go to their desks immediately and send in their checks or let us know when they will send them, it will be of tremendous help.

"The amounts of contributions will be held in strictest confidence."

Pittsfield contributions may be left at the Agricultural National Bank. Others should be sent directly to the Festival office in Stockbridge.

Further Plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Season

Sept 16

Trans

There will be a far more liberal budget of new or unfamiliar music on the programs of the coming season for the Boston Symphony Orchestra than was revealed in the first releases from Symphony Hall last week. The latest announcement, now at hand, also reveals that the opening program of the season, to be played on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 8 and 9, will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

The first six programs of the season have evidently been mapped out fairly completely by Dr. Koussevitzky. They will include, in addition to the above, testimonials to two recently deceased, distinguished composers: Albert Roussel and George Gershwin. The Frenchman will be represented by the Second Suite from the ballet, "Bacchus and Arianne," and the Third Symphony in G minor. For the Gershwinites there will be a more modest offering—"An American in Paris." Two works of Prokofiev, the cinema music for "Lieutenant Kije" and the Overture on Russian Themes, will be presented in what are said to be first American performances. The same thing is true of the Second Symphony of Malipiero.

Dr. Koussevitzky will revive the Fifth Symphony of Mahler, which has not been heard here since Karl Mucks' day in 1914. This is the Symphony of uncertain key, for it begins in C-sharp minor and ends in D; and it is in two long parts, each of which is subdivided. Another quasi-novelty will be a suite of Domenico Scarlatti's music, orchestrated by Selvaggi.

Other music to be heard in the first quarter of the season will be Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta", Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, an unidentified symphony of Mozart, an orchestral concerto of C. P. E. Bach, Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (with Gieseking as soloist), "Symphonia Domestica" and "Death and Transfiguration" by Strauss, 'Tapiola" by Sibelius and Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

Later in the year there will be a number of other novelties. From the Americans, there will be the new Third Symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill, Aaron Copland's "Statements" and Leo Sowerby's Concerto for organ and orchestra, with the composer as soloist. From overseas Dr. Koussevitzky will bring Music for Strings and Percussion by Bela Bartok, a relatively neglected composer hereabouts; a Concerto for Orchestra by Michael Starokadomsky, Soviet composer, and a suite from the recently produced Stravinsky ballet, "The Card Game."

The two choral works of Sibelius in which the Helsinki University Chorus will take part and which were unspecified in the previous announcement will be "The Origin of Fire" and "Captive Queen", both said to be new to America. Other unfamiliar music mentioned in the earlier release, to be played this season will be the posthumous Violin Concerto of Schumann, with Menuhin for soloist; Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto, with Heifetz for soloist; Rachmaninov's "Rhapsody," with the composer assisting, and Hindemith's Viola Concerto with the composer again doing the honors.

M. S.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE

SEP 13 1937

REHEARSING IN A STALL: Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians practicing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a stable on the Stockbridge, Mass., estate given to the orchestra and Festival as a permanent home by Mrs. Gordon Brooks. The performances were held in a huge tent on the grounds.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

TALENTED YOUNGSTER. At five years of age little Alen Reed-Tokman, of Dorchester, Mass., executes the most difficult pieces on the violin with the dexterity of highly talented musicians. His father, and teacher, is Lewis Reed-Tokman, former member of Boston Symphony orchestra, and his mother is a practising attorney. —Wide World photo.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

37

Rachmaninoff, Menuhin, for Woolsey Hall

DESIGNED for reading by lorgnette, 4,000 opulently printed booklets were mailed last night through Fairfield county heralding the new music season at Woolsey Hall in New Haven under auspices of Yale School of Music.

This represents the most strenuous appeal to the elite of this county in the history of the series, according to Daggett M. Lee, the director. Should any readers be non-elite, or elite but overlooked, here are the six dates:—

Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist, Wednesday evening, Oct. 20.

Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Wednesday evening, Nov. 17.

Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, Wednesday evening, Dec. 8.

Sigrid Onegin, contralto, Tuesday evening, Jan. 11.

Albert Spalding, violinist; Harold Bauer, pianist; Gaspar Cassado, cellist; joint recital, Tuesday evening, Feb. 15.

Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor; Wednesday evening, March 9.

The series this year appears to stand beyond criticism. Rachmaninoff, who opens the season, is to appear about a month later in Norwalk, under auspices of the Wednesday Afternoon Musical club. Menuhin, 21, is obviously a super feature; the trio is composed of virtuosos and is an innovation for Woolsey where solos or symphony are the numeric tradition; the Swedish contralto is known to be a magnetic personality who for this reason as well as her singing is quite alone on her concert summit; and Woolsey is the closest opportunity for Fairfield county to hear "the Boston" and the grandeurs that evolve under Koussevitzky's finger-tip direction.

Adv Sept 19

TISER—Largest Sunday Circulation in New England—

American Talent, But

Music Events for Boston Loom Large

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

ONE OF the most arresting announcements to be found thus far among the somewhat heterogeneous assortment which heralds the approach of the new music season, is that of the Symphony Hall Series of concert attractions to be presented under the management of Aaron Richmond.

This series, to open on November 21, will consist of five divers events—all of major importance in their respective categories.

First on the list is a pair of concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. Jan Smeterlin, the Polish pianist, will be guest artist in these programs which, incidentally, represent the first appearance of the celebrated orchestra in Boston under its present conductor.

Mr. Smeterlin has already established a large following here. Popular as an exponent of Chopin as well as the nebulous wares of various "moderns" of the virtuoso school, he is, to our mind, not less eloquent and of infinitely rarer worth in the music of Mozart.

Be that as it may, it is always with pleasure that one anticipates his return—program, or, as in this case, absence of it notwithstanding.

* * *

SHAN-KAR and his ensemble of Hindu dancers will also appear in a pair of recitals—the program in this case to be compiled of dances and music as exotic as they are authentic in their adherence to Oriental tradition.

The Don Cossacks, that steadfastly dynamic chorus of erstwhile Russian warriors, have been enlisted for a single performance in the series.

Kirsten Flagstad, than whom there is no more celebrated Wagnerian diva today, will make one of her first concert appearances of the season in the same series. (Mme. Glagstad's itinerary over a twelve-month is such as to cause the more ordinary among mortals to gasp with amazement. Upon her return to this country after a summer spent in Europe, she is scheduled to sing with four opera companies, including the San Francisco, before rejoining the Metropolitan.)

The series is concluded with the single Boston appearance of the phenomenally gifted negro contralto, Marion Anderson.

* * *

FROM Symphony Hall is issued further announcements concerning the Boston Symphony Orchestra season, which opens with a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 8 and 9.

For the opening program Dr. Serve Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, and the Second Symphony of Sileblius.

During the course of the first six pairs of concerts Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct performances of the Second Suite from the ballet, "Bacchus et Ariadne," as well as the Third Symphony in G minor by Albert Roussel, the distinguished French composer who died last month; Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta," and a Suite by Domencio Scarlatti orchestrated by Selvaggi.

Works to be presented for the first time in this country during this period include the Second Symphony of Malipiero, and two of Prokofieff's cinema scores: "Lieutenant Kije", and Overture on Rusian Themes.

Also listed upon the first six programs are Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, Strauss' "Symphonia Domestica" and "Death and Transfiguration," Tchaikovsky's Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," and Sibelius' "Tapiola."

Walther Geiseking will appear in the early part of the season as soloist in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto.

Other new scores of interest to be performed during the season will be announced later.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

SEP 12 1937

Music Experiences A Notable Summer

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK (AP).

THE living arts, especially music, have had a good summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from five to twenty-five millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

RECORDS BROKEN

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is, therefore, a surplus in St. Louis and, since muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

OPERA "WANING"

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo Company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The Zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) pre-depression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of fifty Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

FEET GET WET

The audience of 4,000 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and Radio Star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening, the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

Post Sept 12

DRAMATIC PAGE

SEASON

FIRST WOMAN TO CONDUCT SYMPHONY

The News of the World of Music

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE most arresting item in the announcement of the Symphony Orchestra's plans for the forthcoming season has already been made public, namely, that Nadia Boulanger will conduct at a pair of concerts in February. Women pianists, violinists and singers are, of course, familiar figures at the Symphony concerts, which have on numerous occasions honored the woman composer. Several years ago Mme. Boulanger appeared as organist with the orchestra, playing the solo part in the Concerto of Aaron Copland, then fresh from her tutelage in Paris. But the woman conductor is a novelty, so far as the Symphony concerts are concerned.

Not an entire concert will fall to Mme. Boulanger, however, but merely the conducting of the Requiem of Faure, a composer who for a time was one of her own teachers and for whose music she has an especial regard. The Requiem itself was heard for the first time in Boston last season, when the Bach Cantata Club presented it at Jordan Hall with Richard Burgin conducting.

To turn to the less sensational details of the orchestra's 57th season, as now divulged, there will be two regular guest-conductors in mid-season, one of them world famous, the other now mounting the ladder of success. The first of these masters of the baton is Georges Enesco, the most prominent composer yet produced by Rumania, and known to the Symphony concerts not only as a music maker of skill and individuality but as violin virtuoso. Last year he was one of the guest-conductors of the New York Philharmonic, and as such became a familiar name to the hosts of radio listeners. His companion at Symphony Hall, while Dr. Koussevitzky takes his regular winter holiday, will be a young Russian about to make his first visit to America, by name, Daniele Amfitheatroff. After the impression made two years ago by the equally unknown Dimitri Mitropolous we have no reason to be suspicious of a "dark horse." It is from the ranks of these younger men that the Koussevitzkys and Toscaninis of the future will emerge, and we have discovered that, as a class, they have a knack of making the old music sound new.

To turn from conductors to soloists, an imposing list of the latter is presented. At the head, since they are composers as well and will be heard in their own music, should be placed Paul Hindemith, a newcomer to Symphony Hall and, so far as public performance is concerned, to Boston, and Sergei Rachmaninoff, who needs no introduction. Mr. Hindemith, at present "in wrong" with the Nazis because of his modernist leanings, will play his Concerto for viola, an instrument of which he is a far-famed master. Mr. Rachmaninoff will play his Rhapsody for piano and orchestra. Both works will be new to Boston.

A posthumous Violin Concerto of Schumann recently released to the world through the medium of Yehudi Menuhin, who obtained the performing rights from the composer's heirs, will be played for the first time in Boston by that gifted young man, who will also be heard in the Concerto of Brahms. Of the history of the Schumann work there will be time to write later. Another novel Concerto will be the Second of Prokofieff, which will be played by Jascha Heifetz along with the Concerto of Beethoven. Walter Gieseking will repeat his outstanding version of Beethoven's "Emperor" Piano Concerto. Emma Boynet, who made a striking impression last season in a Concerto of Saint-Saens, will this year turn her attention to Mozart.

The orchestra will also be assisted by a visiting chorus, the Helsinki of Finland, which will appear with Dr. Koussevitsky's forces both in Boston and New York and will introduce to America two important works of Sibelius, a composer whom Dr. Koussevitsky will otherwise also stress. Beyond this emphasis upon Sibelius and upon Beethoven and Mozart, as well, and the soloists' pieces listed above, no mention has yet been made of the season's repertory. That it will be catholic and widely representative may be taken for granted.

Puccini's "Tosca" will be presented in concert form at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Wednesday evening, by the forces of the Federal Music Project. Ernst Hoffmann will conduct, and Norma Jean Erdmann, as Tosca; Midhat Serbagi, as Cavarodossi, and Henry Kelly, as Scarpia, will head a cast of singers which also includes Norman Arnold, Howard Stevens, Thomas O'Neil and Eva Brahms.

Program for Symphony Season

Serge Koussevitzky announces the opening program and a number of notable new scores for the 57th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius in D major will be played at the opening concerts of the season to be given in Symphony Hall on Oct. 8 and 9.

FIRST SIX PROGRAMS

Scores to be performed at the first six pairs of concerts will include the Second Suite from the ballet "Bacchus et Arianne," by Albert Roussel, together with the Third Symphony in G minor of the French composer who died last month. George Gershwin will be represented by a performance of his "An American in Paris." Two scores of Prokofieff still to be heard in this country are his cinema music, "Lieutenant Kije," and his overture on Russian themes. The Second Symphony of Francesco Malipiero will also have its first hearing in America. Other works are a suite from Domenico Scarlatti, orchestrated by Selvaggi, and Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta." Koussevitzky will make a notable revival—the Fifth Symphoy of Gustav Mahler. There are also listed upon the first six programs Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, a symphony of Mozart, an orchestral concerto of Emanuel Bach, Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (with Walter Gieseking as soloist), Strauss' "Symphonia Domestica" and "Death and Transfiguration," Tchaikovsky's Fantasia "Romeo and Juliet," and "Tapiola" by Sibelius.

MORE NEW SCORES

More scores of outstanding interest are announced to be heard during the remainder of the season. Pieces by American composers will include the new Third Symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill, Aaron Copland's "Statements," and a concerto for organ and orchestra by Leo Sowerby, in which the composer will play the organ part. New European scores will be Bela Bartok's music for strings and percussion; a concerto for orchestra by Michael Starokadomsky, a Soviet composer; a suite from Stravinsky's most recent ballet, "The Card Game," in concert performance.

Prokofieff's new Second Violin Concerto will be introduced by Jascha Heifetz. A posthumous violin concerto of Schumann will be played by Yehudi Menuhin, and the Rhapsody of Rachmaninoff, by its composer, for its first Boston performance. Two choral works of Sibelius, still unknown in America—"The Origin of Fire" and "Captive Queen," will be performed by this orchestra in conjunction with the Helsinki University chorus.

A concerto for viola and orchestra, by Paul Hindemith, will be performed with the composer as soloist. Emma Boynet will appear in a Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, by Mozart. Nadia Boulanger, a distinguished visitor from France, will conduct Faure's "Requiem."

Amusements

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

SEP 12 1937

Checkup Shows Summer Opera Attracted Many

NEW YORK, Sept. 11 (AP)—The living arts, especially music, have had a good summer.

Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from five to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years, and some have set records.

And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes.

This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

There is therefore a surplus in St. Louis, and since muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) have already been given a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded the six remarkable performances which constituted the Fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival—all played by the full Boston symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the zoo company in Cincinnati, and the chautauqua group in western New York, there was little opera and it was not important.

The zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush (but vanished) predepression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and bears and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame, and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

The most curious of summer music ventures probably was a performance of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Pinafore" on a real schooner, anchored in the eel grass alongside a golf and swimming club in Westport, Conn.

The audience of 4,000 sat on shore, some with feet hanging over the water. These last became so absorbed as the performance advanced, and radio star James Melton sang in the intermission, that the rising tide escaped notice.

Before anybody knew what was happening, the tide had wet several hundred pairs of feet.

Even after the decks had been cleared of most sailing equipment, space aboard the floating "Pinafore" was rather limited. A number of bets that chorus members would fall overboard were lost.

MARLENE DIETRICH
"KNIGHT WITHOUT ARMOR"
UPTOWN and BOWDOIN SQ.

Globe

MUSIC AND

More News About the Boston Symphony Season

Dr Serge Koussevitzky has announced the program for the opening concerts of the 57th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall Friday and Saturday, Oct 8 and 9. For this program he has chosen the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

During the first six weeks of the season Dr Koussevitzky plans to present the Second Suite from "Bacchus et Arianne," a ballet by the French composer, Albert Roussel, who died a few weeks ago; Roussel's Third Symphony; the late George Gershwin's "An American in Paris," in memory of the composer; two scores of Prokofieff new to this country—the cinema music, "Lieutenant Kije," and an Overture on Russian Themes; the Second Symphony of Malipiero, likewise unheard in the United States; a Domenico Scarlatti suite orchestrated by Selvaggi, and Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta."

In the same period Dr Koussevitzky plans a notable revival, that of Gustav Mahler's Fifth Symphony, last played by this orchestra under Dr Karl Muck in 1914. Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, a Mozart symphony, an orchestral concerto by K. P. E. Bach, Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto with Walter Gieseking as piano soloist; Richard Strauss' "Symphonia Domestica" and "Death and Transfiguration"; Tchaikovskys overture-fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," and the tone poem, "Tapiola," by Sibelius, are also scheduled.

Dr Koussevitzky's list of new works to be heard later on includes three American scores, the Third Symphony by Edward Burlingame Hill; Aaron Copland's "Statements," and Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Orchestra and Organ, in which Mr Sowerby will play the solo part. From Europe, Dr Koussevitzky has brought the Hungarian Bela Bartok's "Music for Strings and Percussion"; an orchestral concerto by Michael Starokadomsky, young Soviet musician; a suite from Stravinsky's latest ballet, "The Card Game," and Prokofieff's Violin Concerto (in which the soloist will be Jascha Heifetz.)

The two Sibelius choral works to be presented by the orchestra and the Helsinki University Chorus from Finland are "The Origin of Fire" and "Captive Queen." These are said to be unknown in America.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
No Connection with any other ROMEIKE
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM WELLSVILLE, N. Y.
REPORTER
SEP 14 1937

FIVE CONCERTS TO BE PRESENTED

Distinguished Musicians Will Appear on Houghton College 1937-38 Program.

The big feature of the social and cultural activities of Houghton college campus for the 1937-38 season will be the Artist Series—a group of five concerts by distinguished musicians.

The world-renowned pianist, Harold Bauer, will open the season, playing a recital on October 22. Mr. Bauer has long been considered one of America's best-loved pianists, and his wide popularity has been enhanced by his broadcast appearance to millions during the past year. A sell-out is expected for this splendid opportunity to hear Mr. Bauer.

Probably the most spectacular concert on the series and the one having the widest appeal for both the musicians and laymen will be that of the Don Cossack chorus under Serge Jaroff. So colorful has been their career and so brilliant their presentation that they are making their eighth American tour and are still on the crest of their popularity. They will appear in Houghton on November 15.

On December 8, the Marianne Kneisel String quartet, four charming and talented young women, will give a recital. This is the outstanding string quartet in the world made up exclusively of women.

Stephen Hero, violinist, comes on January 6, with heraldings of success from Rochester, Chicago and Cincinnati symphony orchestras where he was hailed as one of the most promising of the younger violinists.

Elizabeth Wysor, noted concert and radio contralto, who will close the series on March 10 has recently signed for several appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

Several from this community have already made arrangements to attend the entire series.

---

monitor

SEPTEMBER 11, 1937 —New England News—

Symphony Season Prospects

The Arts in Boston

Conservatism will again rule the Boston Symphony programs this year, to judge from the preliminary announcement of the fifty-seventh season, just made public. According to this, Dr. Koussevitzky will assemble "the great symphonic works of the past and present—those which are familiar by the warrant of their greatness, and those which deserve more familiarity by the qualities they possess."

This sounds as if the policy of the last two seasons were to be continued, which of course does not mean dull concerts. Not only will the conductor "bring forward a number of new and significant compositions, both European and American," but those who know his way with music know that they may depend upon vital and refreshing interpretations of standard works. Special emphasis, it is announced, will be placed on the works of Mozart, Beethoven and Sibelius.

Moreover, the list of guest conductors and of soloists holds much interest. Daniele Amfitheatrof, the Russian-Italian who has been engaged as associate conductor (with Dmitri Mitropoulos) of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, will direct one pair of concerts. This will be his first visit to America. The other pair left open by Dr. Koussevitzky's midwinter vacation will be led by Georges Enesco.

Of lively interest in the announcement of soloists is the return of Yehudi Menuhin, both because of eagerness to see what two years of study have done by way of maturing this artist and also because of curiosity about the Schumann Violin Concerto which he is to play, and its thematic relation to the Brahms Concerto, which he will play on the same program. The violinist is said to have been struck by the extraordinary resemblance of Brahms's themes to Schumann's.

Other distinguished soloists will be Jascha Heifetz, in the Beethoven Concerto; Walter Gieseking, in the "Emperor"; Rachmaninoff in his own Rhapsody which we were to hear last season but did not; Emma Boynet, French pianist, in a Mozart concerto, and Paul Hindemith, who will play the solo part in a viola concerto of his own.

As already announced in these columns, Nadia Boulanger will conduct Fauré's "Requiem" at one concert. She will be the first woman ever to lead this orchestra.

The Helsingfors University Chorus, visiting America for the first time, will appear with the orchestra in Boston and in New York, introducing two works by Sibelius. L. A. S.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Daniele Amfitheatrof

New Associate Conductor of the Minneapolis Orchestra, Who Will Direct a Pair of Boston Symphony Concerts This Winter

---

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

SEP 9 - 1937

Frenchwoman to Conduct Boston Symphony in Fall

BOSTON, Sept. 8.—(AP) For the first time in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57-year history, a woman, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, who taught orchestration to the late George Gershwin in Paris, will be a guest conductor during the coming season, George E. Judd, orchestra manager, announced tonight.

Gershwin studied under Mlle. Boulanger, one of France's distinguished musicians, about the time he wrote his famed "American in Paris."

The visiting Frenchwoman who will be identified with the music departments of Wellesley and Radcliffe colleges this winter, will appear at Symphony Hall in February to conduct Faure's requiem.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
OLEAN, N. Y.
Times-Herald

SEP 15 1937

Book Five Concerts At Houghton

HOUGHTON—A group of five concerts by distinguished musicians will feature the social and cultural activities at Houghton College during the 1937-38 season, it has been announced.

The world-renowned pianist, Harold Bauer, will open the season, playing a recital on October 22. Mr. Bauer has long been considered one of America's best-loved pianists, and his popularity has been enhanced by his broadcast appearances to millions during the past year.

Probably the most spectacular concert on the series and the one having the widest appeal for both the musicians and laymen will be that of the Don Cossack chorus under Serge Jaroff. So colorful has been their career and so brilliant their presentation that they are making their eighth American tour. They will appear in Houghton on November 15.

On December 8, the Marianne Kneisel String quartet, four talented young women, will give a recital. This is the outstanding string quartet in the world made up exclusively of women.

Stephen Hero, violinist, comes on January 6, with heraldings of success from Rochester, Chicago and Cincinnati symphony orchestras where he was hailed as one of the most promising of the younger violinists.

Elizabeth Wysor, noted concert and radio contralto, who will close the series on March 10 has recently signed for several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

SEP [illegible] 1937

SUMMER VENTURES IN MUSIC HAVE PAID

St. Louis' Popular 'Muny' Opera Again Breaks All Records in Attendance.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—(AP) The living arts, especially music, have had a good summer. Music has attracted audiences estimated (somewhat uselessly) at from 5 to 25 millions. A higher percentage of ventures has paid out than for many years and some have set records. And they have produced a number of oddities.

Of the summer music ventures perhaps St. Louis' monumental and incredibly popular "Muny" opera is the most important so far as public pleasure goes. This has once again broken all records: 774,958 people saw its 86 performances—25,000 over last summer. This figure was reached without including standees, of which there were many.

A Surplus In St. Louis

There is therefore, a surplus in St. Louis and since Muny opera may not make a profit, this must be put into productions, into plant, or into salaries. Chorus boys and girls (they still draw these from St. Louis and they are first class) already have received a bonus.

Artistically, the musical palm probably should be awarded to the six remarkable performances which constituted the fourth Berkshire Symphonic Festival—all played by the full Boston Symphony, all conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, all given in a huge tent on the festival's new home estate, "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Oddly, this venture also paid its way. Next summer a simple but permanent shelter probably will replace the tent.

Berkshire Venture Paid

So-called "serious opera" began one of its perennial "wanings" this summer. Excepting the Zoo company in Cincinnati, and the Chautauqua group in western New York, there was little opera and it was not important. The zoo undertaking, continued out of a plush, (but vanished) pre-depression background by musicians anxious for their summer's work, was likewise successful. Unique because of its setting among the birds and beasts and twisting reptiles, it also was of artistic interest.

No great quantities of cash changed hands, but productions were kept carefully and tastefully within their modest frame and the accompanying orchestra of 50 Cincinnati Symphony men would make the Metropolitan's orchestra do a little blushing.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
SEP 13 1937

Philadelphia Orchestra's Plans Change With Times

Philadelphia (AP) — Changing times are reflected in the plans for the redoubtable Philadelphia orchestra's 38th season.

The orchestra plans to tour more than in the past. It is beginning concert management outside its own immediate field; it is experimenting with a shift from Saturday to Thursday night for its regular concerts—and it is getting only six weeks work from Leopold Stokowski.

The Philadelphians will give their usual 10 concerts in New York and the series of five each in Washington and Baltimore.

In addition the season will be broken for a one-week tour which will take the orchestra to Chicago on Jan. 5, and on to Milwaukee, Toledo and Pittsburgh on suceeding days.

In February the orchestra will occupy Symphony Hall, Boston, for two days while Serge Koussevitzky and his men are themselves on tour. Scattered dates are inserted through the winter, and most of the month of May will be spent on the road, including participation in two festivals—Ann Arbor, Mich., May 11 to 14, and White Plains, N. Y., May 20 and 21.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager, there may be even more out of town visits.

Mr. Allen also announces that for the first time the orchestra will manage two recitals by visiting artists—one by Fritz Kreisler and the other by Sergei Rachmaninoff. This is in part an advertising scheme, since orchestra subscribers will have first choice for seats.

The prevalence of the five-day week is one reason why the traditional Friday-Saturday pairs of concerts will be changed in eight instances. On these weeks the Saturday concert will be given Thursday night. The season might be changed entirely.

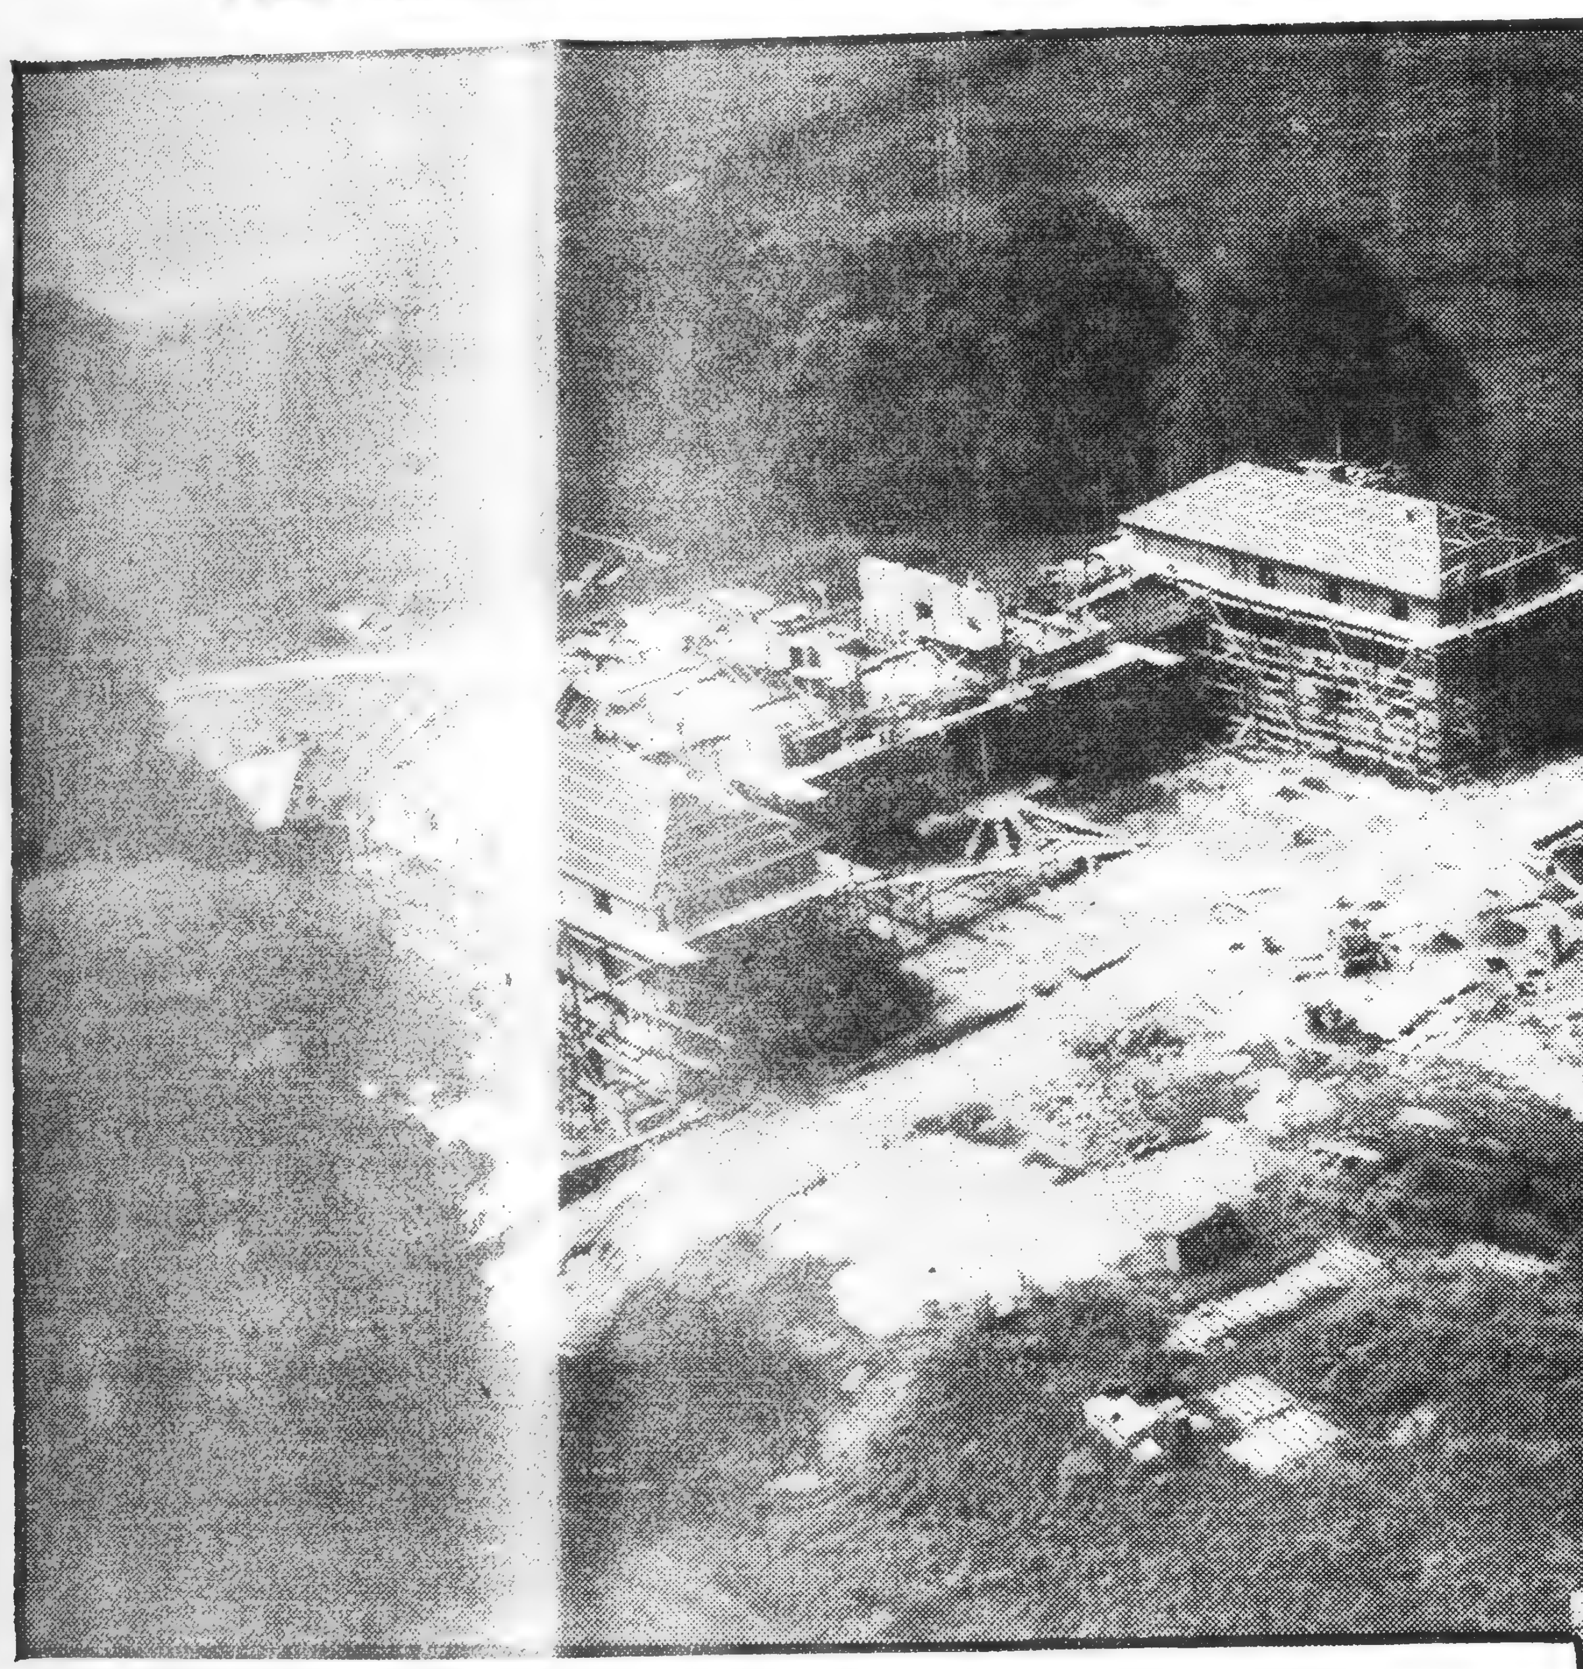
And fewer and fewer conductors are participating in the season. Stowkowski will conduct from Nov. 4 through Dec. 11. Saul Caston, the trumpeter who also waves a baton, will direct four concerts, and Eugene Ormandy will do all the others, beginning with the opening program, Oct. 8.

Special attractions appearing with the orchestra this winter include Yehudi Menuhin and Albert Spalding, violinists; the young Californian, Eugene List, and Arthur Rubinstein, pianist; the Monte Carlo ballet russe, and the baritone, John Charles Thomas.

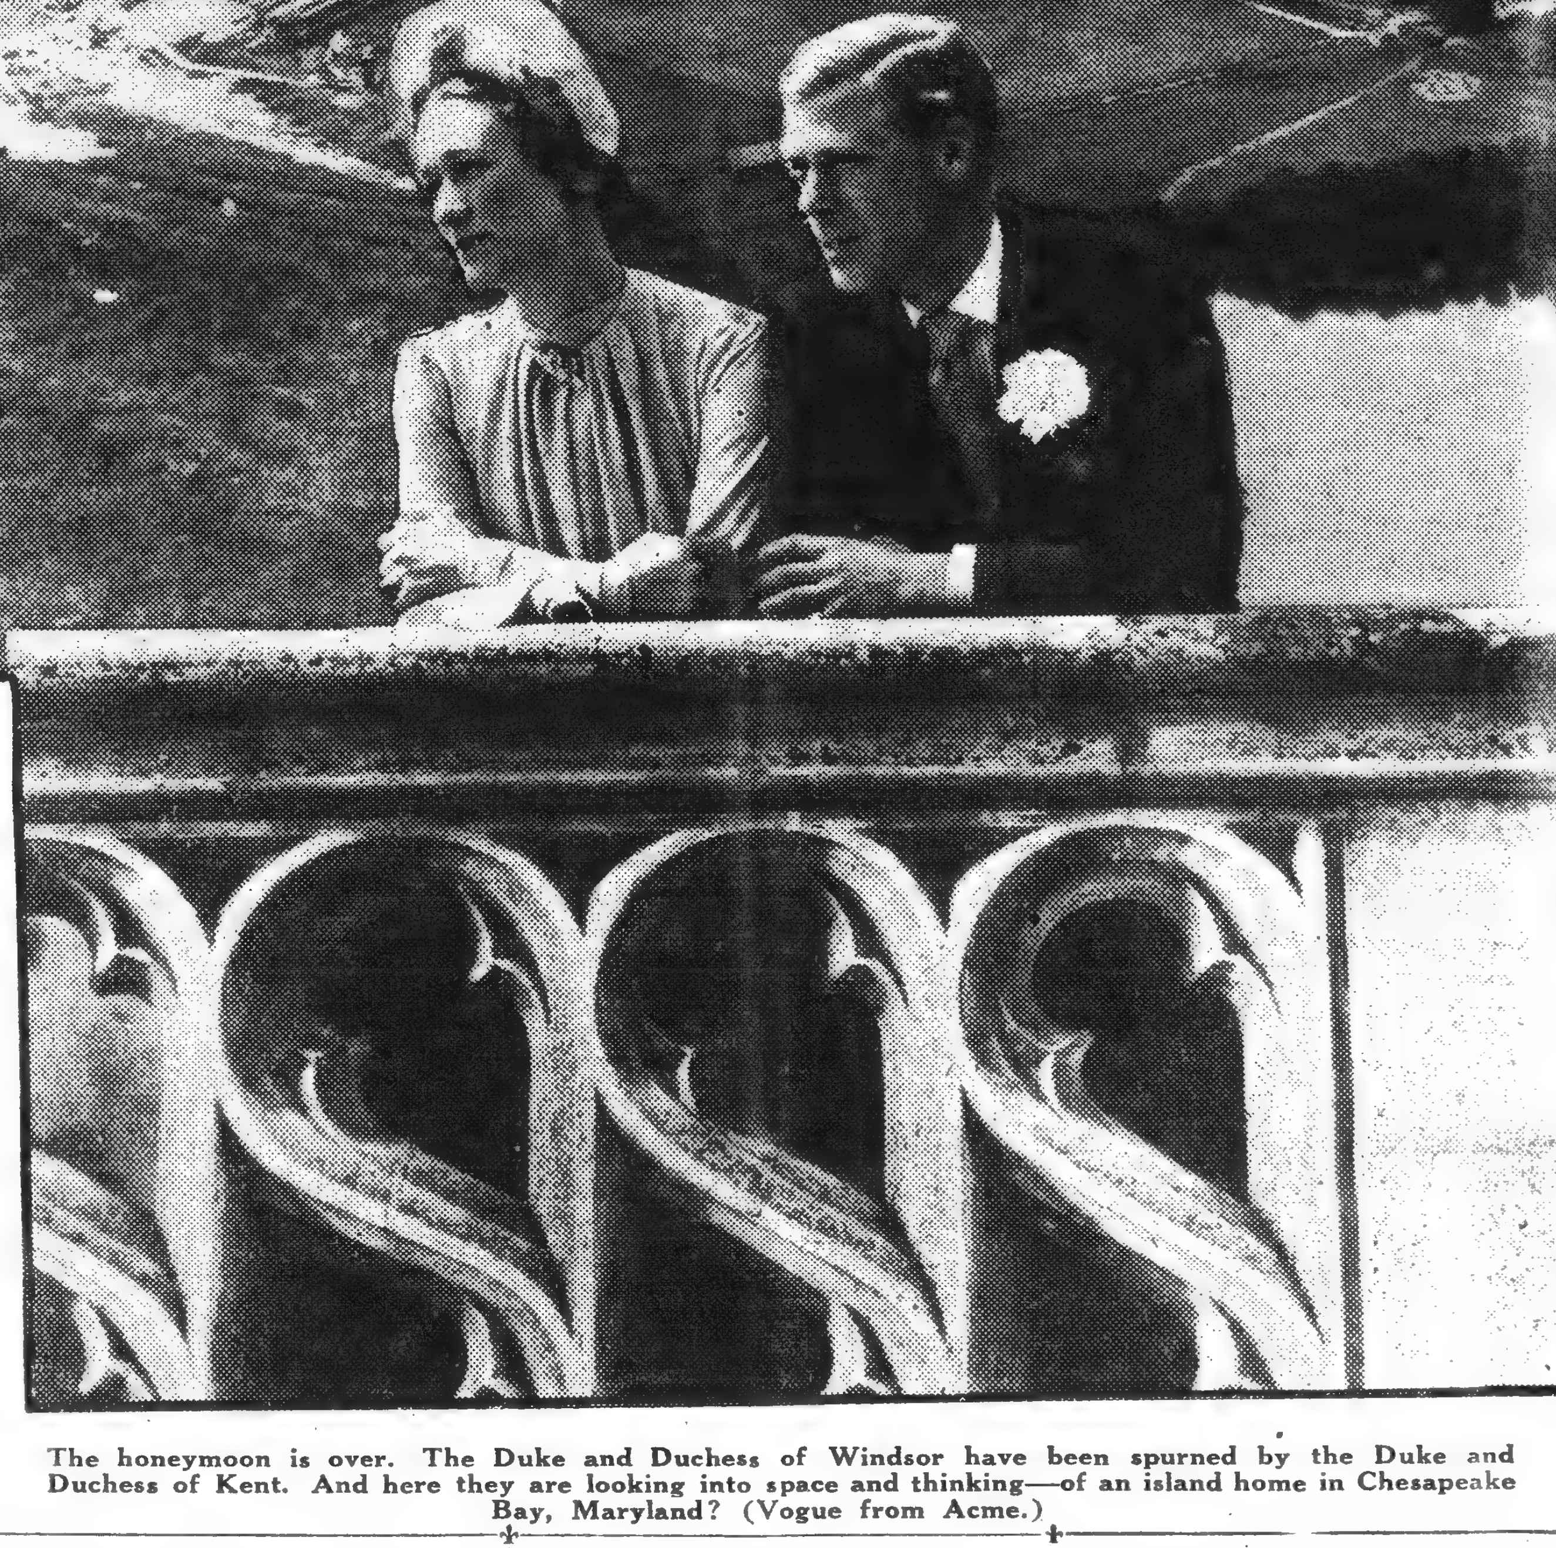
Paul Nordhoff's "Secular Mass" will also have its Philadelphia premier with the orchestra.

Will Wally and Windsor Set Up Housekeeping Here?

Exclusive—The Inside Story of House of Mystery Which Is Being Refurbished in Style Fit for King (Or Ex-King!)—Belief Spreads That Romantic, Far-Famed Couple Will Come to Historic Mansion Which Duchess Knew When She Was Lovely Baltimore Belle



If they come—and down in Mary[illegible] nearly everyone is expecting them—the Duke and Duchess of Windsor will live in this magnificent house, built in 1790 by the White House architect, and now being recon[illegible]cted at a cost of $350,000. (Acme.)



The honeymoon is over. The Duke and Duchess of Windsor have been spurned by the Duke and Duchess of Kent. And here they are looking into space and thinking—of an island home in Chesapeake Bay, Maryland? (Vogue from Acme.)

An airplane view of Wye House, Wye Island, Talbot county, Maryland, believed to be the future home of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. Visitors are barred from the island and workmen on the estate are told to say nothing. (Acme.)

The Duke of Windsor and his Wally may come to the castle being furbished on the Island of Wye, but if they do, they will be thereby very displeasing to the British government, according to good authority. And they hold the purse-strings.

The ex-King and his American wife, it is said, may not visit any British dominion, the United States, Germany or any Scandinavian country for fear of their embarrassing England in her continuing efforts to build up George VI. as the best of all possible kings.

BY PATRICK SULLIVAN

(Staff Writer, Boston Sunday Post)

If they do come—and day by day [illegible] "if" sounds more like "when"—they will live on an island, [illegible]se to the heart of the nation and not very far from the bride[illegible] girlhood home.

And the Duke of Windsor will o[illegible]e again be the "Prince of Wales"—reigning over a tiny kingd[illegible]. And his bride will be such a lady as America has not known [illegible] more than 100 years. They should be very happy.

Across the seas in the homeland [illegible] which he may not yet return; in Wales, over which he was [illegible] so many years Prince and heir-apparent to the throne, two [illegible]iet streams, the Severn and the Wye, flow undisturbed by the things which have happened to [illegible] ruler.

Here, too, in Maryland, in Ameri[illegible]—there flow the rivers Severn and Wye. They, too, are qui[illegible]. And where the Wye splits an island juts up out of the wate[illegible]. And when once again the branches meet, the waters rush ou[illegible] into Chesapeake Bay to mingle eventually with the waters of [illegible] Severn and thus with these other rivers across an ocean.

By the Wye

S[illegible]e can be "Prince of Wales" again at the confluence of two streams. [illegible] where he can [illegible]. And where his [illegible] life which will merge [illegible]andeur of a bygone era with [illegible] glory of a new day.

For i[illegible] when they come, the Duke and Du[illegible]ss of Windsor will live here in Wye Hall, Wye Island, Talbot County, Maryland.

But [illegible] they come?

Does [illegible] answer lie in these facts? Can th[illegible] sequence give you a clue?

W. L. Stillwell of New York and Chicago last year purchased Wye Hall. Last spring he started to restore the magnificent Southern colonial house to all its former grandeur. Before he is done, he will have spent $350,000 on the mansion.

Stillwell is abroad and has not seen the house since restoration work began. Is this the conduct of a man who is building himself a house? Rumors have reached his ears. Rumors say that the Duke and Duchess of Windsor will occupy the mansion.

Stillwell denies the rumors. But Herman L. Rogers has not denied them. And Mr. Stillwell and Mr. Rogers are intimate friends. Furthermore, Mr. Rogers is the Duke's American spokesman. You may remember that it was from his pen—syndicated to the press of the world—that the story of the ex-King's romance officially came.

Now can you say that the Duke and Duchess are coming?

In Baltimore they think so. In Wye Mills, Maryland, they think so. In Washington there are many who think so.

William Paca, twice Governor of Maryland and Chief Justice of the State's Supreme Court, asked the architect of the White House to build the mansion in which the Duke and Duchess of Windsor may now live. That was back in 1790.

Wally Knows It Well

They say that Wallis Warfield Simpson Windsor would have it so. She knows the island. She knows of the house. She knows—as does every resident of Maryland—of William Paca who built it. Built it for a son whom he loved. Built it a few short years before he died.

Paca? Take a dash of Cabot, a jigger of Lowell, a spray of Sam Adams, a slice of John Hancock. Pour them into the glass of life. That is Paca—William Paca, suh—signer of the Declaration of Independence, twice Governor of Maryland, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Maryland.

Paca? He it was who invited the entire Congress of the newly born United States of America to his mansion in Annapolis (now one of the town's showplaces). There, in his presence, General Washington gave up his commission as Commander-in-Chief of the army.

Paca? A member of a committee appointed to relieve the distress of Boston after the Stamp Tax. A man who, after Lexington and Concord, dug into his own ample funds to outfit a regiment. A man who insisted upon independence for two years before Maryland was ready to agree.

Paca? Well-born son of a well-born father and of a mother whose beauty and fame were such that Marylanders still sing the little song which was written in her honor because she could not choose from the multitude of beaux:

Pretty Betty Martin
Tip-toe fine
Could not find a lover
To please her mind.

Those lines are Mother Goose rhymes in Maryland.

Paca? Do they know Paca in Maryland? Does the Duchess of Windsor remember Paca?

As if she could forget. As if any Marylander could forget.

William Paca sleeps in the narrows of Chesapeake Bay, not far from the house which the Windsors may occupy. Sleeps under a little mound which his slaves erected when they landscaped the estate. Sleeps in a little garden overlooking the Rivers Severn and Wye.

The Y of Wye Island

It is a beautiful island, reedy at the water's edge, gently rolling, filled with stately trees—3500 acres of land, shaped in the form of the letter "Y." (Some believe that is why it is called Wye Island.)

More plausible reason for the name is traced back to Evan Lloyd, old Welsh king who ruled the land lying between the Severn and Wye Rivers. William Paca married a descendant of these Lloyds, Mary Chew Lloyd. An uncle, Philemon, gave him half the island, gave the other half to another Lloyd, the Bordleys.

William Paca, born Oct. 31, 1740, died Oct. 27, 1779—a short life but one into which he crammed a dozen ordinary careers—was brought up in the Cavalier tradition. To him a woman (in his station) was a thing apart, a being midway between man and the angels, vastly better than one and almost as good as the other.

He believed that no woman should perform the slightest service for herself. His son, John Philemon, had a small valet to follow at his heels, to receive his orders and to bask in the smiles or the tyranny of "Little Marse."

William Paca could not understand his son. William was a graduate of the College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania. He had studied law at Middle Temple, London, and had begun the practice of law in Annapolis. At 21 William was anti-English. He was a rebel when the first Yankee outbursts took place.

He built himself, after the war, Wye House (not to be confused with Wye Hall) across the narrows. He couldn't understand his son. He couldn't understand why his son was not like himself.

The truth of the matter is that John Philemon was a chip of the old elm. But there were no wars to fight. There were no new horizons to cross. The father had done too well, had made life too easy for the boy. He couldn't understand why the lad chafed for action.

Pater Prayed and Raged

There were a number of youthful scrapes. The father raged, prayed for dignity (which it had taken him years to acquire) to settle suddenly upon the lad. The boy threatened to run away to sea.

Thoroughly frightened now, the father sought to establish peace at any price.

He went to Washington to find James Hoban. Hoban is "the forgotten Irishman," to whose career the attention of patriotic Irish-American societies is herewith directed. Hoban, born in Ireland, raised in Charleston, S. C., was the architect of the White House and builder of the original State, Treasury, War and Navy buildings in Washington.

"Hoban," William Paca said, "I want you to build me the finest mansion in America."

Hoban, who had already done that very thing with the White House, must have smiled.

"For my son," said Paca.

No expense was to be considered. The architect was to have a free hand.

Gradually Wye Hall came into being. Paca's slaves carted top soil from the mainland, built the terraces about the estate.

Wye Hall rang with joy from the day it was finished in 1790. Belles and beaux from both eastern and western shores were brought to the island. Paca constructed a huge barge, propelled by "10 velvet-capped blacks," and had guests ferried from his in-law's estate (the Lloyds) to the island.

He had sold his Annapolis mansion "with arcades and porticoes, niches and pedestals for statuary, battlements and pinnacles for roof and tower." Sold the palatial in-town house which the British had once looted and from which they removed all lead to be melted into bullets for use against the Americans. Sold the house in which his dear friend, George Washington, had resigned from the army.

Going to Take It Easy

Paca didn't mind that. His world was now an island. He would rule in Wye House; his son, in Wye Hall. Some day the son would reign over all. In the meantime, he would grow old, gradually, comfortably, peacefully. He wanted to grow old. He wanted his declining years to be as gentle as his early days had been tumultuous.

One day he walked over to the John's house to visit. There, suddenly, painlessly, quietly, he died.

And the Pacas lived on.

Four years ago Clifford Rasin, last surviving heir of the Paca dynasty, sold the island and estate to Edward Morgan, Jr., of Long Island. Morgan made plans to restore it to its former glory but somehow never got around to it.

He sold it last year to Mr. Sullivan.

Since the ex-King's abdication, there have been reports that his residence in Austria is only temporary. Rumors began to fly.

"He is going to buy the estate of William B. Leeds at Cove Neck, Long Island."

"He is going to buy Sumner A. Parker's castle, near Brookland, Maryland, 10 miles from Baltimore."

"He is going to buy the 1200-acre North Wales club near Warrenton, Virginia."

Rogers has denied some of the stories but has never denied that the Duke and Duchess are looking for a place in America.

But is this the place?

Fit for a King

The house is situated on the eastern end of Wye Island, overlooking two branches of the Wye River. When the restoration is complete, the residence will be suitable for either a king or for an ex-king. On this point observers agree.

It is built in three sections and will have 25 rooms. It was partly destroyed by fire in 1879 and is now being built to conform with Hoban's original plans. The mansion is 154 feet long and 64 feet deep at the ends of the wings.

The structure contains some enormous living rooms and a magnificent dining room. When completed the appointments will be such that a nobleman could entertain his friends there comfortably, completely.

One reason for the belief that Wye Hall is "the" place lies in the fact that it is an island. There the Duke and Duchess could have nearly absolute freedom.

The only "hitch" is that the Duke and Duchess are afraid of American adulation. The ex-king, reports say, was tired of being "the front" for an empire. For years now, he has wanted peace and privacy—and the right to live as a normal human being.

Would Americans permit this?

Wally and Windsor are now permitting themselves to be photographed frequently. They are going places. They are trying to make the public "bored" by their presence and by their pictures.

In Europe they are beginning to feel that their presence is being taken for granted; that the stares and the "ooh lookits" are dying down.

And His Glamorous Duchess

But would America, could America, remember to forget this handsome duke and his glamorous duchess?

The king's friends are said to have mentioned the case of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to prove that it can be done. They point out that when F. D. first went to the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt's activities were chronicled completely. Mrs. Roosevelt hopped all over the country. She was here today—there yesterday.

A cartoon showing some miners in a coal dungeon was the highlight of the affair. The miners, standing in the semi-darkness, their lamps piercing the vault are staring. The caption read, "Well, if it isn't Mrs. Roosevelt!" Afterwards Mrs. Roosevelt actually did visit a mine.

Today Mrs. Roosevelt's goings and comings are as numerous as ever—perhaps more so. But the public has decided to let her alone. She has made America accustomed to her presence. She is no longer the big news she once was.

Some of the ex-king's friends believe that America could learn to accord the Windsors the same sort of treatment. They are suggesting that the Windsors come to America and go places—to many places and to keep on going until the nation is surfeited with news of their presence.

Then you will be left alone, they are told.

At Wye Hall, Wye Island, Talbot County, Md.?

How They Make Wet Water Much Wetter

BY LEO J. RABBETTE

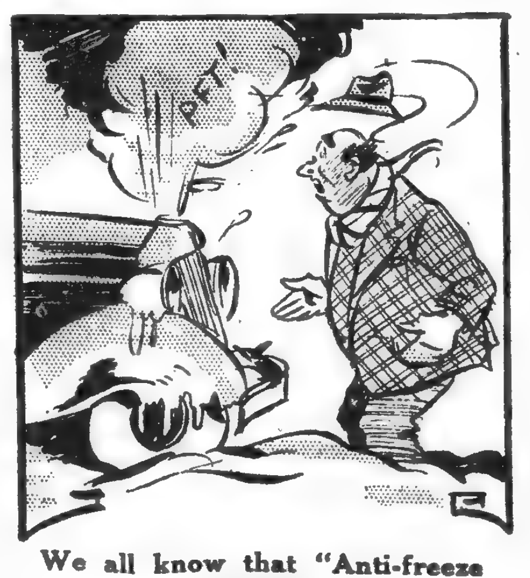
Little Drops of "Wetter Water"—as produced in the laboratory by B. G. Wilkes, of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, and J. N. Wickert, of the Carbide and Carbons Chemical Corporation—are going to work wonders, these gentlemen announced to the American Chemical Society meeting at Rochester last week.

Take dust out of the air, and the hay-fever producing pollen, for example, slicker than anything has ever done that before — accelerate the soaking of materials such as yarns—enhance the deadly effect of insect sprays—peel off old wall-paper and act as a general speeder-up in many processes involving ordinary H-2-O.

I set out to find out what does the trick, for it is an alcohol—and I learned several things.

I thought there were only two kinds of alcohol; the kind in Omar Kayyam's "Jug of Wine," and the "wood" alcohol which, if you made a cocktail of it, landed you in the hospital on the danger list.

He smiled a little when I betrayed my ignorance of alcohols; Dr. Gustavus J. Esselen, Ph. D., Harvard, director of the American Chemical Society and president of the chemical research and development corporation which bears his name. He had just come from the Rochester conference and graciously tried to make the matter clear to me.



We all know that "Anti-freeze alcohol."

Hundreds of Alcohols!

"The two alcohols best known to the public," he said, "are ethyl alcohol, or what is known as grain alcohol, and the popularly known 'wood' alcohol called technically ethanol. The material used by Messrs. Wilkes and Wickert is a new alcohol, but there are literally hundreds of other alcohols, hundreds of them.

"It is a new 'synthetic' alcohol which does not exist in nature. And perhaps I can make it clear by telling you that there have been many of these materials sometimes referred to by chemists as 'soapless soaps.'

"The material used from time immemorial to make water 'wetter' is, of course, soap. For some years now chemists have been making chemical substances similar which contain no soap but are far more effective than soap in making water 'wetter.' And now, it seems, another excellent agent has been added to this collection of 'soapless soaps.'

"Soapless Soaps"

"Put a drop of oil on a piece of wood, for example," went on Dr. Esselen, "and water simply won't wet it, but apply this new alcohol, or any of the 'soapless soaps' and water will penetrate the wood at once.

"If there is on any substance a film of oil even one molecule thick—and there is no way of expressing in ordinary language the infinitesimal thinness of such a layer—it will keep water from penetrating.

"In air-conditioning of buildings and homes water sprays are used for filtering out the dust. Now the air in cities carries dust which is very likely to contain oil from oil-burners, so the 'soapless' soap is the material to clear it at once."

"To put it simply," said I, "this new alcoholic water cuts the grease and goes straight through where ordinary water just glances off?"

"Exactly," he replied. "Undoubtedly it will be widely used in the textile industry, as for scouring yarns to get the oils and fats out of them, and in the laundry industry, too, for washing and re-inforcing the soap."

"Do you suppose this was just a lucky chance discovery?" I asked Dr. Esselen.

The Magic of Hard Work

"On the contrary," he replied, "they have been working on this, as a part of a general programme of research, for many years now. There are still now and then a few accidental discoveries of value, but most of the 'miracles' are the result of years-long, carefully-planned-out laboratory research.

"People read in the newspapers of the magic of modern chemistry. The real magic lies in hard, and, of course, intelligent work. The real alchemist is one who is willing to put in 24 hours a day, and keep it up relentlessly for years. The brilliant achievements you hear of in chemistry today are the results of very carefully organized and planned studies."

"This new alcohol is made from waste gas," I said. "Can you think of any other valuables made from waste things?"

"They are now making all sorts of valuable things from the waste gas of oil refineries," said Dr. Gustavus J. Esselen. "Ordinary alcohol, anti-freeze mixture used in auto-radiators, synthetic resins, solvents for the lacquer industries. In fact, the waste gases of oil refineries furnish the most important raw materials in the entire chemical industry.

A Happy Accident

"There was one happy accident which led to the abrupt and final synthetization of indigo, as distinguished from the natural indigo, from the Chinese plant," Dr. Esselen recalled.

"This German chemist had been trying for a long time to 'make' indigo, and one day started to stir a container of materials with his thermometer—very bad practice, of course—when the thermometer broke, as they will.

"The mercury spilled into the retort, and the chemist found, for the first time, the reaction going as he had wanted it. He was a bit surprised himself. He had indigo! Of course such a happening is most unusual," said Dr. Esselen.

Just a Little "Alky"

A few drops of this new "alky" is all that is necessary to make a gallon of ordinary water much, much "wetter." B. G. Wilkes of Pittsburgh and J. N. Wickert of South Charlestown, W. V.a., got together on a spectacular dust-laying experiment.

THIS SOAPLESS SOAP DOES WONDERS ON CLEAN SHEETS AND DISHES!
B. G. SOAPLESS SOAP
K

Will it come to this?

In a workroom where the dust was hazy thick and breathing risky, and ordinary water-spray fell through the air without relief. Said Mr. Wilkes, "wetter water made the air almost entirely clear, and solved the health hazard. The wet water simply soaked instantly every dust particle it touched where ordinary drops had been 'glancing off'."

It might interest you to know that the outstanding feature of this new alcohol is the giant size of its infinitesimal molecules.

Early Coins

In the reign of William and Mary copper coins were struck in England for New England and Carolina. Lord Baltimore had silver shillings, 6 pence and 4 pence made in England to supply the demands of his province of Maryland. Vermont and Connecticut established mints in 1785 for the issue of copper coin. New Jersey followed a year later.

But Congress had under advisement the establishment of a mint for the confederated states, and in this same year agreed upon a plan submitted by Thomas Jefferson. The act went into operation, on a small scale, in 1787. After the adoption of the Constitution in 1789 all the state mints were closed.

Guest Artists to Appear With Boston Symphony This Season

Very soon now the leaves will be turning brown, and some of them will be whisked down Huntington av past Symphony Hall, where another season of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin Friday afternoon, Oct 8. These concerts, by an orchestra and conductor famous the world around, are as much a part of Boston as "Brimstone Corner," the Public Gardens and "Newspaper Row." They are attended not only by Bostonians, but by many from the suburbs and other cities. At the Friday afternoon concerts, in the old days called "public rehearsals," the audiences are traditionally composed of socialites. On Saturday evenings the intelligentsia and those who merely like music fill the august hall which was patterned after the Gewandhaus in Leipsic, Ger, and which was acoustically the first scientifically designed auditorium in the United States. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the famous Russian musician who came to Boston in 1924 and who two years ago applied for United States citizenship, returns for a 14th season as conductor. As usual, a number of internationally-known artists will be guest soloists through the season. The accompanying pictures show some of them.

De Bellis N.Y.

YEHUDI MENUHIN is only 21, but he has already had a fabulous career. Ten years ago he was a "child prodigy"; today he is a fine young artist. He returns to the concert hall after two years of rest at Los Gatos, Calif. He will play the Brahms Violin Concerto here, and he may perform the concerto by Robert Schumann, a totally unknown work which has been locked up in a Berlin museum for many years.

EVERYBODY knows of Sergei Rachmaninoff, the great pianist. He is best known as an artist of the keyboard, though he has composed much, and was conductor at the Moscow Opera some years ago. With the Boston Symphony, he will play his Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini.

YASCHA HEIFETZ, one of the world's great violinists, plays the Beethoven Violin Concerto superbly. He'll do it again this season, together with a new Violin Concerto by Prokofieff.

DR SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A MOZART concerto is the piece which Emma Boynet, French pianist, will perform.

WALTER GIESEKING, pianist, is a favorite in Boston. He'll play Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto.

PAUL HINDEMITH is among the foremost modern composers. He plays the viola, too, and will be heard in his own Viola Concerto.

GEORGES ENESCO, of Rumanian birth, is a conductor, a composer and a violinist. He was one of the teachers of Yehudi Menuhin. Mr Enesco will be guest conductor at a pair of concerts during the mid-season vacation of Dr Koussevitzky.

PALL MALL
FAMOUS CIGARETTES
IN HOC SIGNO VINCES
THE MODERN BLEND

"He who doth not smoke hath either known no great griefs, or refuseth himself the softest consolation, next to that which comes from Heaven."
EDWARD BULWER-LYTTON
1803-1873

For three hundred years literature has praised the pleasures of tobacco. Today you get the full pleasure of smoking from Pall Malls. For the new Pall Mall, alone among popular blended cigarettes, offers you the natural, unadulterated flavour of fine, straight tobaccos . . . without artificial flavouring or sweetening. Enjoy the new Pall Mall's Straight Tobacco Flavour.

NO ARTIFICIAL FLAVOURING

15 CENTS FOR 20

They're Better... Naturally!

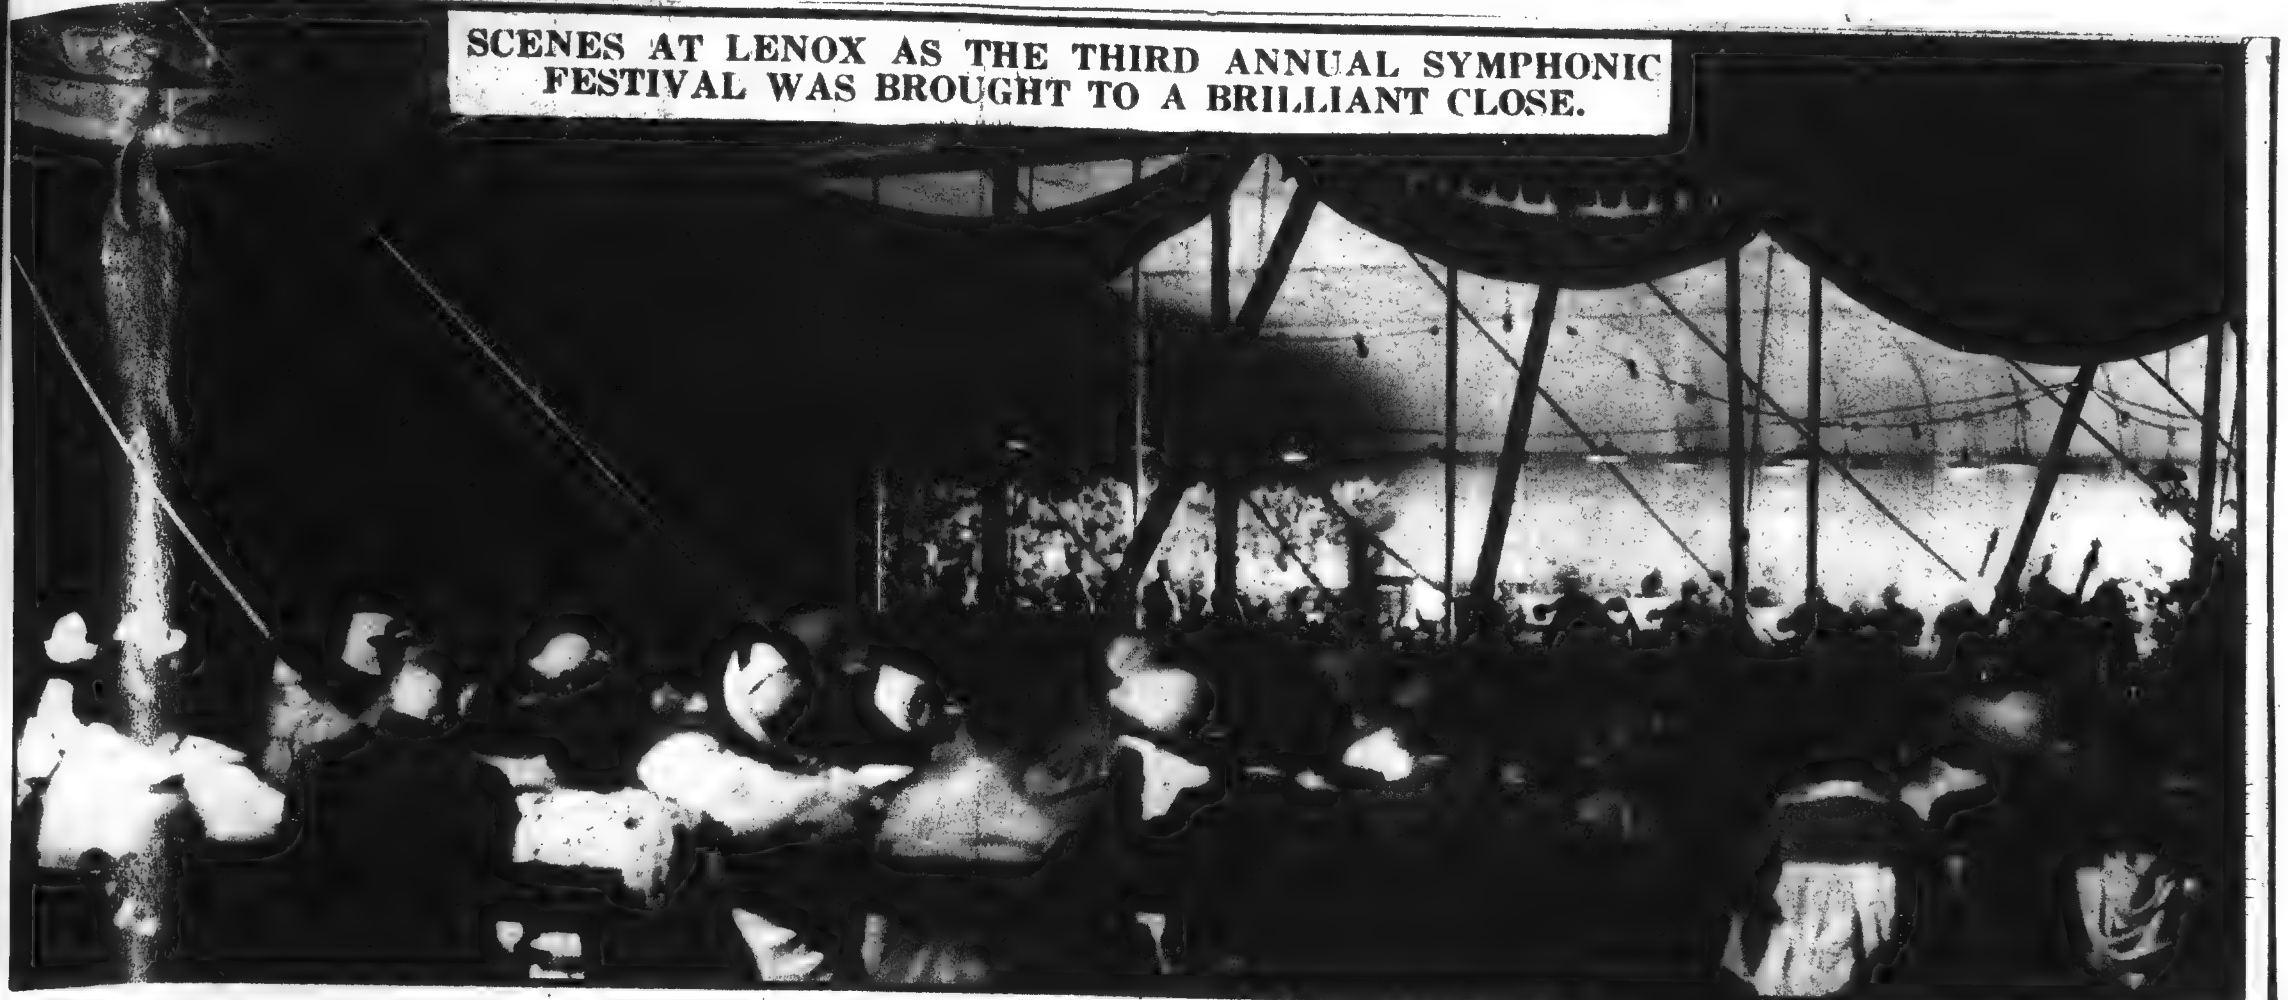
PALL MALL
THE MODERN BLEND

AMERICAN CIGARETTE & CIGAR CO. INC., MANUFACTURERS
Listen to DOROTHY THOMPSON each Friday night at 10:45 E.D.S.T. over station WNAC and Red Network

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 23 1936

SCENES AT LENOX AS THE THIRD ANNUAL SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL WAS BROUGHT TO A BRILLIANT CLOSE.



A view from outside the huge tent which housed the hundreds of music lovers who filled the spacious place far beyond the expected attendance.

Made from the stage just before the concluding number was presented by Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, this photo shows a section of the highly enthusiastic audience.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

SEP 11 1937

Renew Drive For Festival Home Fund

As the Boston Symphony Orchestra prepares to open its 57th season in Boston's Symphony Hall, Oct. 8, a renewal appeal for funds to provide adequate shelter for the orchestra and audience at the Berkshire Festival went forth this week from Stockbridge, Mass.

To date $35,000 of the $100,000 required for the concert shed to be erected in Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been subscribed.

The appeal asking for immediate returns emphasizes the national significance of the festival, the storm threat making an adequate shelter necessary, the non-profit aspect of the venture established for "the educational purposes of developing knowledge and appreciation of the finest music."

The subscription blank states that checks may be made payable to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass., and that contributions will be returend in full if the project is not realized. Contributions may be paid in full or in installments Oct. 15, Jan. 15 and April 15. These contributions may be deducted from federal income tax returns and are deductible in many states.

"Contributions from the general public will be most welcome," said Miss Robinson Smith. "Naturally our appeals will miss many people but we welcome general support. To economize, our trustees are attempting to raise the necessary funds themselves."

BLANK PAGE

Chicago Ill

RADIO WRONGS

COMMENTS ON THE ILLS THAT BESET THE HAPLESS LISTENER WHO HAPPENS TO LIKE MUSIC

By CARLETON SMITH

YOUR loudspeaker, believe it or not, will bring you a greater variety of good music superlatively played than you could hear if you spent the entire season in any metropolis on this or the other side of the Atlantic. There are more programs of good symphonic music, of opera, of great songs, and of chamber music on the air today than at any time in the last ten years.

The local program, which is certain to be inferior in quality, takes precedence over the sustaining symphonic broadcast. The former being sponsored by a merchant or firm, brings in revenue to the station, the symphony brings in nothing. Since radio stations pay dividends, though they are alleged to be operated also in the "public interest, convenience and necessity," the paying program is a welcome guest, no matter what the calibre of its entertainment.

And, surprising as it may seem, there are nearly twice as many locally sponsored programs over Chicago stations as over those in any other city in the United States. Nearly all the broadcasting time of the key stations in New York is purchased by national advertisers; and, since there is practically no local advertising, what time remains is filled at the expense of the networks with excellent sustaining broadcasts, of which the Boston Symphony is one.

There isn't much to be done about it except to tune in stations in other cities when possible. And to complain vigorously when flagrant omissions occur. The outstanding insult to Chicago music-lovers occurs each spring when the baseball season starts. WBBM, the station that carries the New York Philharmonic-Symphony concerts through the winter, then abruptly interrupts the final four or five broadcasts to carry a sponsored account of baseball. This would not be so insufferable, if Columbia furnished another outlet for the concert, but they do not. And the attitude taken is: you ought to be glad to have any good music. It doesn't pay us any dough.

The result is that three of four stations simultaneously broadcast the same baseball game for dough, and no station carries the complete concert of the Philharmonic-Symphony. You could help prevent it, by calling attention to it. Write a few letters, and, whenever you hear a great broadcast write a "thank you" note.

But, you ask, "Do letters to radio stations ever do any good? No intelligent person ever has the time to write . . ." Unfortunately, fan mail is the only tangible evidence a broadcaster has that his program was heard. And he naturally exaggerates the mail's importance. Now, it is perfectly true that intelligent letters don't wield much influence . . . and we assume that if you read this, you are intelligent. The reason is that they don't reach the executives who count.

Therefore, address your letters personally to a man high in authority. Write the president of station WBBM, or of the Columbia Broadcasting System, if you want to know in advance what is going to be done this spring about the final Philharmonic-Symphony broadcasts in Chicago. If he has sufficient protest about cutting off the Symphony, something will be done about it.

While we are in the letter-writing mood, let's inform WMAQ that it isn't necessary to have their announcers interrupt the Scherzo of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony or Elsa's Dream in "Lohengrin," or any other music, for that matter, to tell us: "This is WMAQ, The Chicago Daily News Station." In the first place, we don't give a damn. In the second place, it makes us mad. And, in the third place, it's absolutely unnecessary.

WMAQ should be informed that the Communication Commission's regulations have been made elastic enough to allow an uninterrupted performance of a work which lasts longer than a half-hour.

If an act at the Metropolitan lasts one hour and fifteen minutes, station identification need be made only at the beginning and at the end of the act, not in the middle. If the station identification were necessary, there are always moments when it could be made with a minimum of annoyance; but the musically ignorant announcers, with characteristic dumbness, prefer choosing the wrong moment.

While we're on the subject of announcers, is it necessary for them to be so affected and high-hat when they mention serious music? Listen, and note the patronizing, far-removed tone of our commentators. They speak of the compositions, especially better ones, as if they were something apart. They seem to have no intimate personal knowledge and certainly no love for the music that is to be played. Love comes from understanding. Can't we have a few announcers who understand the essence of the musical experience? Or, is that asking the impossible?

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

"St Matthew Passion"

J. S. Bach's "The Passion According to St Matthew," was performed at Symphony Hall yesterday for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A second performance will be given this afternoon and evening.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducted. The choruses were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club. The soloists were as follows: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; Keith Falkner, bass; Frederick Jagel, tenor, and David Blair McClosky, bass. Harpischord accompaniments were played by Dr V. Ernst Wolff. Prominent instrumental parts, by custom allotted to modern instruments approximating those for which Bach wrote, were taken by Louis Speyer and Henry Stanislaus upon the English horn in substitution for the oboe da caccia. Portions for oboi d'amore were played by Mr Speyer and Jean Devergie and for viola de gamba, by Alfred Zighera. The orchestra, of course, was composed of a small number of Symphony men. Albert W. Snow was organist.

Though an acknowledged masterpiece of church music, "The Passion According to St Matthew" has suffered neglect in this city for some years. An obvious reason is its extreme difficulty. The Boston Symphony presented the work in 1918 and it was given by the Handel and Haydn Society in 1929 and 1934. The present performances divide it into two sections, the first of which began at 4, the second at 8. Save for unimportant condensation of two numbers, no cuts were made. Thus the final chorus was ended a little after 10.

The Boston Symphony and the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses may be congratulated upon their achievement in so well preparing and executing this formidable score. As they have repeated the B minor Mass with notable success in recent years, one hopes they will be able in subsequent seasons to make the "St Matthew Passion" familiar to local concert-goers.

Bach's church music offers many difficulties to singers and conductor, not only technical, but expressive. Since the Passions and the Mass were composed for actual services and not for the concert room, as were Handel's oratorios, Bach's masterpieces require simplicity of interpretation. G. Wallace Woodworth, who long assisted and has now succeeded Dr Davison as leader of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, trained his singers remarkably well in this respect. While they did not always enunciate the text clearly, their tone was good and they carried off the involved counterpoint admirably.

But seldom nowadays are a group of soloists so individually capable and well adjusted as the five on this occasion. Mr Falkner is a born musician. Many an older singer could learn from him the simple eloquence of style demanded—but so rarely experienced!—by religious music. His sonorous bass voice is flexible and he uses it with unusual skill. His singing of the arias and of the recitatives of Christ will stand in memory.

Mr Jagel is also a skilled and a sensitive singer, but much of the music of the Evangelist lay too high for him. Small wonder that he simply could not avoid breaking a few phrases of sustained figuration. As it was, he met his problems valiantly. Miss Meisle's vocalizing was thoroughly enjoyable. Her voice has gained, the last few years, in depth and clarity. Miss Vreeland, long a familiar figure in Boston, is known for the light purity of her voice, but she invariably gives an impression of superficiality in such music as this. It is wholly a matter of style. Mr McClosky exhibited some shortcomings in this regard, though he sang adequately.

Bach's chorales will always excite wonder at their poignancy. It was advisable that they were sung by the full choruses on the stage. After all, no matter how they were treated in Bach's day, this procedure is probably the most practical even if not historically exact.

The harpsichord sounded very thin in such a large hall, but one rejoiced at Dr Wolff's accurate playing of it. Invariably he produced chords for the recitatives at just the proper time. The orchestra played and Dr Koussevitzky conducted eloquently. In short, the whole performance was memorable. At the end, all concerned were applauded and cheered to the echo.

There was some misunderstanding about the hour for the first section. This reviewer, having consulted only the official copy for the concerts—which by error stated 4:30 and not 4—arrived at 4:25 to find a considerable number of persons in the same predicament. The time of 4:30, taken from that copy, was unfortunately printed in the musical columns of the Sunday Globe. To eliminate further confusion, let it be repeated that the afternoon session today will begin at 5. The concert will be resumed at 8:30.

C. W. D.

BOSTON POST, MONDAY, APRIL 27, 1936

PERFORM "MATTHEW PASSION"

Bach's Great Work by Symphony, Soloists and Chorus

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

When Dr. Koussevitzky took it upon himself to revive Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," unheard at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1918, though presented here more recently under other auspices, he determined to do it properly. And in the case of a 200-year-old work, cast in an outmoded form, with not a few archaisms, much, too much in fact, depends upon the performance.

IN TWO SESSIONS

Part of the justness and correctness was the presenting of the work in its entirety, and that necessitated two sessions at each of the two projected concerts, which was given in aid of the orchestra's pension fund. The first of these took place yesterday afternoon and evening, the second follows today.

Another and even more important feature of this rectitude in performance is the engaging of genuinely able rather than merely competent solo singers. In the matter of chorus, in view of the numbers he desired, the conductor was virtually restricted to the choirs of Harvard and Radcliffe, and they served him yesterday, as it seemed, better than they have ever served him before.

An Uplifting Performance

The solo singers aforesaid were, or rather, are Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; Frederick Jagel, tenor, and Keith Falkner and David McClosky, basses. Dr. Ernest Wolff presided capably, even imaginatively, at the harpischord. Add to these forces an orchestra, that we now have good reason to believe unequalled, led by Dr. Koussevitzky in one of his rarer moods of inspiration and devotion, and the fortunate result was a singularly moving and uplifting performance of a work that may so easily prove a partly mitigated bore.

One of the best safeguards against the impression of monotony that a full performance of the "Matthew Passion" may engender is beauty of tone. From a purely musical standpoint, the recitives of the Evangelist that carry the burden of the narrative are, for the most part, tiresome. Mr. Jagel saved them yesterday as they have never been saved in this listener's experience. Besides tonal beauty, Mr. Falkner brought a noble dignity and pathos to the words of Jesus. Beauty, too, characterized the singing of Mmes. Vreeland and Meisle and of the chorus, which shone particularly in the chorales.

Gains Orchestral Color

Determined upon an historically accurate performance, so far as was possible, Dr. Koussevitzky made the proper divisions of his strings, added oboes "da Caccia" and "d'Amore," and in one obligato the viola da gamba. Bach's orchestral color, when reproduced with such faithfulness and set forth with such skill became not merely picturesque, but an enhancing factor in the performance.

Unfortunately there were a few empty seats on the floor yesterday. There should be none this evening. Ideally, there should be no applause during or after such a work as this. But surely all concerned deserved the plaudits that rewarded them at the conclusion of each session.

In this demonstration of approval the valiant young men and women of the chorus took part, especially when G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of both the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, was escorted to the stage by Dr. Koussevitzky.

And so ended the first of two performances that should take high rank among Dr. Koussevitzky's and the orchestra's achievements.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
No Connection with any other ROMEIKE
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3 - 8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

MAY 5 - 1936

CAN'T WASHINGTON DO IT?

WE REFUSE to admit that there isn't any civic pride in Washington, because we know there is. And we refuse to admit that Washington is indifferent to the fate of its own National Symphony Orchestra, because too many thousands of persons have demonstrated that they are interested.

But the fact remains that the orchestra has been trying for two months to raise $100,000 for its sustaining fund, and only slightly more than half of it has been subscribed.

This has resulted in the orchestra's management being forced to just about abandon the idea of giving summer concerts, which more than a hundred thousand persons attended last season. And this has resulted in an out-of-town movie conductor proposing to take over the site of last year's concerts, organizing an orchestra, and putting on concerts.

It would seem that if there are to be summer concerts, our own orchestra, well trained and seasoned, should be the logical organization to put them on. Doubtless, if there was a sudden and gratifying spurt in the raising of the sustaining fund, the orchestra's management would find a way to put them on.

We feel certain that Washington could, if it wanted to, do as well by its orchestra as Boston did with its organization this spring. Despite being heavily endowed, the Boston Symphony ended its season with a deficit of $120,000. One announcement was made of that fact. Two weeks later, 700 Bostonians had made up the deficit.

MUSIC

ST. MATTHEW PASSION

by ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

A performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion was given yesterday evening in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The chorus was that of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The soloists were as follows: Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; Frederick Jagel, tenor; Keith Falkner, bass; David McClosky, bass. The accompaniments to the recitatives were played by Dr. V. Ernst Wolff, harpsichord, and Albert W. Snow, organ. The concert was given for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

The St. Matthew Passion of Bach contains some of the most movingly sorrowful music that has ever been composed. There may be more magnificent music in the B minor Mass, more dramatic music in the St. John Passion; but for the expression of grief and pity one must go to the St. Matthew. For a modern audience the length of the recitatives of the Evangelist is the stumbling-block in the way of complete enjoyment. It is hard to become accustomed to the interruptions into the listening mood.

Naturally, then, an enormous responsibility is placed on the singer who takes the role of the Evangelist. It says much for Mr. Jagel that he performed this task with unfailing competence, even if his voice was occasionally severely strained. The melisma on "and wept bitterly" was a precarious moment, and there were others. But as the evening went on Mr. Jagel became surer and on the whole did an extremely creditable job. Dr. Wolff, at the harpsichord, apparently chose the simplest course, that is to leave the soloist practically unsupported. There is some evidence that Bach, himself, provided rather full accompaniments to the recitatives. Unquestionably Dr. Wolff took the opposite view.

The orchestral playing and the singing of the chorus were exceedingly good. Mr. Woodworth had obviously done a splendid piece of work in the preparation of the latter. Mendelssohn, in the famous performance of the St. Matthew Passion in 1829, established the use of a large chorus which all too often destroys the balance with the orchestra. Last night there were several times when this balance was so destroyed, but far fewer than is usually the case. The singing of the chorales, except for some dragging of the tempo, was excellent.

Mr. Falkner sang progressively better as the evening progressed. In the second part of the Passion his performance was one of great beauty. If he began coldly, he amply atoned for this fault later. Miss Vreeland was also good. Her singing of "From love unbounded" was one of the finest moments in the whole work. Neither Miss Meisle nor Mr. McClosky was entirely satisfactory in their parts. In her arias Miss Meisle seemed to know what she wanted to express but to lack the power. Mr. McClosky was inclined to overdo his role. Very little space remains to commend the admirable work done by the instrumental soloists, Messrs, Snow, Zighera, Laurent, Gillet, Burgin, Speyer and still others. Without their artistic skill the performance would have been lost indeed. After all is said, our thanks are most emphatically due to Dr. Koussevitzky for the care and zeal which he has exercised in this important revival of the St. Matthew Passion.

There will be one more performance of this work by the same artists this afternoon and evening in Symphony Hall.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER 911
ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE

REWIND